 community consciousness, public housing residents, Taipei, Taiwan; 88T3037
- Social Control
 age embeddedness, sociology/society, social control aspects; 88T2444
 British policing models/practices, colonial setting, Victorian era; 88T2444 delinquency, age/gender differences; parental attachment; 88T1453 gang violence, Chicago, Illinois, crisis/surveillance intervention, approach; 88T3004 juvenile delinquency, societal social bond, socioeconomic influence, national survey; youths, US; 88T1453 language as social control, Basil Bernstein's symbol control concept, George Orwell's Newspeak; 88T2219 mental patients, compulsory outpatient treatment evaluation, 6-m follow-up; 88S20120 penitentiary Christmas festival, prison social structure, southern Italy, interviews/observations/official records, 1981/82; 88T2460 pregnancy intervals, family formation, Polynesian migrants vs nonmigrants, social control patterns, interviews, life-table analysis, 1961 Tokelau birth cohorts; 88T2573 public disorder, Brixton (London, England), collective behavior compared; 88S20119 trust, impersonal relationships, social control mechanisms; 88T2119
- Social Criticism
 television science program, "Tomorrow's World," format limitations, popular conservatism, GB; 88T1853
- Social Democracy
 labor movement theory vs corporatist theory, labor political power, capitalism, Social Democratic Sweden; 88T1936
 West German Social Democratic Party, environmental/economic policy; 88T1982
- Social Determination of Meaning body, social conceptions, journal issue introduction; 88T1333 doctor-cystitis patient relationship, symptom construction/explanation, models; literature review, participant observation, interviews, University of Wales College of Medicine; 88T2842 election campaigns, political symbolism aspects, liminality concept; 88T1941 fictional images, production cycle, modern society; 88T1844 gay/lesbian movements, social constructionism vs practical politics, US; 88T1808 human essence, social determination, Karl Marx's views; 88T3180
 image enhancement, digitalization, reality construction; 88T2511 language structure theory, social distribution facts' relevance; 88T2511 lexical construction, surrogate motherhood, masculine codes; 88T2511
 optic image production techniques vs digital technologies, image reality changes; 88T3209 real societies, social fiction's impact; 88T1294 social constructions of masculinity, homosexual males; heterosexual feminist researcher's perspective; 88T3134 social science, nonabsolutist/reflective conceptions; 88T1079
 socialization/reality construction, social work graduate students' views; 88T2334 socially constructed meanings, photographs; feminist analysis; 88T1381 sociological practice, phenomenological/social construction of reality, theories, case study; human relations course, hospital; 88T2792
 suicidal behavior, interpersonal contexts/social reality construction, letters/newspaper analysis, interviews; 88T1360
 visual images, verbal environment/captions, constructivist approach; 88T3211
- Social Development
 black middle class formation/development, US, community perspective; 1899-1981; 88T2006
 computerization; 88T2508 development progress, social vs economic gains, less developed countries; 1960-1980; 88T1721 development, theoretical/conceptual problems, paradigms; 88T174
 German Democratic Republic, social/economic development; 88T2503 income/employment/growth, worldwide distribution; information technology; 88T2501

Social Planning

future societies, desirable/undesirable aspects, critical long-term planning 88T3040

alternative forecasting, research methods, 88T3039

phenomenological analysis/planning, research/methodological issues 88T3045 planning theory/practice conflicts, critical theory applications, 88T3056

Social Policy

institutionalized thought structure/social policy/rape legislation relationship, interaction model, 1975 Illinois rape act, 88T1948

social policy development, statistical/quantification issues, 88T1145

Social Power

sexuality/body sensitivity/social power, women, economic/political/social change, interviews, unemployed female laborers, 88T1467

social power relations, pre-1760 AD human societies, book review essay, 88T1322

traditional health care, black magic beliefs/white magic practices, curandera's role, questionnaire, Mexican-American women, Brighton, Colorado, 88T2858

Social Problems

social economic situation, young people, Liverpool, England, interviews, 88T2644

Social Programs

elderly social program eligibility, chronological age vs variable marker, US, 88T2964

national health program, 1986 campaign, Massachusetts, 88T1824

Social Progress

development progress, social vs economic gains, less developed countries, 1960-1980, 88T1721

Vin Simran contemplation practice, Sikh religion, 88T2389

postmaterialism, Western industrialized nations, Ronald Inglehart's value change theory critiqued, 88T1107

scientific/ideological progress, socialist society, 88T1314

socioeconomic/scientific-technical progress, subjective/objective factors, socialist society, USSR Communist Party's 27th Party Congress report, 88T1087

Social Psychiatry

social psychiatry, systems theory/holistic concepts, philosophic-integrative perspective, 88T2876

Social Psychology

interactional experiences, everyday life, first-time thoroughness phenomenon, textual readings, Under the Influence film, 88T1469

physiologically vs socially grounded emotions, 88T1290

social psychological theory/research, Jacob Levy Moreno's contributions, 88T1208

social psychology, unified theory proposed, 88T1455

social psychological self concept, George Herbert Mead's theories vs Martin Heidegger's dasein concept, 88T1409 social-psychological theories, methodological/conceptual issues, article discussion, 88T1392 sympathizer-sympathizee emotional flow, etiquette rules, observation/interviews/other data, adults, New Jersey, 88T1374

Social Reality

gender equality perceptions, sex differences, symbolic (television) vs social reality realms, interviews, questionnaire, adult Jews, Israel, 88T1862

social reality, logico-hermeneutic foundation, social science research implications, 88T1075

Social Reform

economy restructuring/social scientists, USSR, conference report 88T1177

scientific rhetoric, B. F. Skinner's Beyond Freedom and Dignity/Jeremy Rifkin's Entropy: A New World View, 88T2492 social reform movement, middle-class Christian community groups' involvement, Brazil, questionnaires, interviews, observations, São Paulo, 88T2373

Social Relations

black/Jew relationships, US, early 1960s, primary data; garment industry, 88T1491

computer/communications technologies, decentralization/centralization effects, social integration implications, 88T3028

conflict management, organizational compensatory liability, modern trends, literature review, 88T2406 images, societal role/importance, technical media's impact, 88T1836 working class social groups, rural India, fieldwork, Dhanbad, Bihar State, 88T2012

Social Reproduction

family reproduction, egalitarian course, Canada, secondary data, families, Saguenay region; 1842-1911; 88T1530

physical education performance, gender differences, social construction of gender vs biological/behavioral explanations, interviews, participant observation, document analysis, Canadian university; 88T3165

sex segregation, physical education programs, GB, interviews; male physical education teachers, 88T2336

socialization processes, social reproduction approach; 88T1727

Social Response

caregiver burden assessment/measurement, socially desirable response tendency, literature review, interviews, scales, 88S20124

Social Responsibility

public relations practitioners, social responsibility commitment, questionnaire, 88T1774

Social Revolution

peasant communities, rebellion/social revolution source, 19th-/20th-century El Salvador, 88T2137 relative deprivation, political development model, theoretical issues, 88T1306

revolutionary process, Nicaragua, management's/managers' role, interviews, survey, 88T1799

Sandinista revolution, Nicaragua, Reagan administration interventionist policies, 88T1967

Social Science Education

economic reform efforts, public opinion/social science education, USSR, 88T1204

Latin American/Brazilian studies, Saint Anthony's College, Oxford University, England, seminar, July 1984, 88T2344

social science grade criteria, working party proposals, GB, 88T1162

teaching quality, university social science departments, USSR, 88T1179

Social Science Research

economic development/social structure, scientific research's effects, 88T2493

historicism/social sciences, theoretical issues, 88T1096

legal studies, USSR, socialist development goals, 88T2420

modernization, Dutch universities, characteristics/problems, 88T2299

social science controversy, GB, Cyril Lodowic Burt defended, 88T2480 social science methods/theories, Marxist-Leninist philosophy's impact, 88T1085 social science theory, Third-World indigenization processes, 88T1207 social sciences of religion, belief/reason themes; special journal issue introduction, 88T2379

Social Sciences

ecological problems, social/natural sciences' collaboration, 4-book review essay, 88T3061 economic restructuring, university social science department chairperson role, USSR, 88T1169 formal model development, sociology/other social sciences, case examples, 88T1318 induction problems, social sciences, statistical applications critiqued, article/comments/reply, 88T1141

publication process/editorial decisions, social science literature, US, American Sociological Review submissions, 1977-1981, 88T1163

scientific information, formal/informal exchange mechanisms, Yugoslav sociology, 88T2478

social science, nonabsolutist/reflective conceptions, 88T1079

social sciences, imperfect empiricism, 88T1097

social sciences, principles/agenda, humanist perspective, 88T2298

socialist development, social sciences' role, USSR, 88T1127

theoretical authority/organizational norms, social sciences, 88T1089

Social Scientists

academic social scientists, South Africa, structural position, 88T2097

applied social science, US/GB, Elton Mayo's influence, 88T1245

article publication, Scandinavian social scientists, citation analysis, international/Nordic periodicals, 88T1176

economy restructuring/social scientists, USSR, conference report; 88T1177

Social Security

aging baby boom generation, fiscal reform measures' inequalities, Canada, 88T2547

elderly social program eligibility, chronological age vs variable marker, US, 88T2964

social security system, inferior services/benefits, rural workers, Brazil, 88T2146

Social Services

chronic mental illness, social work service provision, 88T2884

fiction writers, network structure/social position, Köln, West Germany, questionnaire interview, 88T2065 funding decision processes, social services for women, US; interviews, case study, battered women's shelter program administrators; 88T2993

forecasting accuracy, Delphi methods, general election predictions; experiment; university students, California; 1980; 88T3043
 household behavior economic models, intrahousehold resource distribution implications; surveys; India/Philippines/Indonesia; 88T2737
 international conflict resolution/technology use, US-USSR cooperation potential, Mexican-Central American arena, 88T1892
The Second Self: Computers and the Human Spirit by Sherry Turkle, review essay; 88T2517
 social accounting field, sociology of knowledge perspective, literature review; 88S20073 tribal individuals' achievement orientation, Kenya, Protestant ideology, psychometric tests, questionnaires, Quaker/non-Quaker Abaluyia, 1971; 88T1304

Social Inequality

judicial sentencing disparities, 20th-century US, historical research methodology/data source changes, 88T2472
 membership recruitment patterns, social inequalities, Socialist Workers' Party, Hungary, survey, 1977; 88T1979 opportunity/status inequalities, white-collar occupations, Hungary, 88T2036 social inequality, Chicago school's human ecological perspective, 88T1282 social inequality, GIB, earnings/income tax changes, 88T2039 social inequality, philosophical/sociological viewpoints, 88T2017
 social stratification/inequality, 4-book review essay, 88T2000
 subordinate social groups, India, 4-book review essay; 88T1334 uneven regional development, advanced capitalist nations, reply, 88T1803

Social Institutions

political administrative institutional changes, socioeconomic/territorial factors, Western Europe, 88T1717

Social Integration

Arab-American community, political power, 1880s to present, 88T1503
 divorce suicide relationship, US, social integration, church membership, county level data, LISREL approach, 88S20099 drinking behavior/euthanasia-suicide attitudes, age/gender variations, social integration, 1962-1978, 88T1273 residential/organizational dispersal, Japanese community, Montreal, Quebec, secondary data, 1942-1952, 88T1508

Social Interaction

television viewers characters, parasocial interaction relationship process, questionnaire, undergraduates, 88T1429
 turn disruption, interactional dynamics, group/individual effects, videotaped data, special education classes, 88T2240

Social Isolation

loneliness/isolation, older people's subjective experience, cultural/subcultural value systems, 88T2943
 personal orientation, English settlers, South Africa, psychosocial isolation, experiment, 88T1712

Social Justice

judicial sentencing disparities, 20th-century US, historical research methodology/data source changes, 88T2472
 justice concepts/claims, theoretical issues, 88T2405 sentence variation, felony offenders, Alaska, courtroom social organization/discourse processes; 88T2422 social justice literature, research agenda, 88T2446

Social Life

everyday life/role/identity, immigrant Israeli women, US, 88T1501
 well-being, elderly, Sydney, Australia; social interaction quality/quantity, structured interviews, 88T2934

Social Mobility

black immigrants/black Americans' relationship, subordinate social position, case study, Haitian immigrants, midwestern city, 88T1527
 children's social mobility, mothers' social position/schooling, Hungarian perspective, 88T1996 class circulation/status change variations, dominant vs subordinate classes, sociocultural variables, biocultural model, 88T2008 demographic interpretation, social mobility research, demology proposed, 88T1265 opportunity/status inequalities, white-collar occupations, Hungary; 88T2036 social mobility model, Anglo-Saxon England, 88T2031 social mobility, Hungary, 88T1999 status/educational attainment, intergenerational class mobility, Japan vs US, social surveys, 88T2014

Social Movements

class consciousness/formation, conceptual issues; 88T1816
 domestic science movement, Australia, 1880-1914, 88T1309

feminist movement origins/development/political activities, Italy, 1970s-1980s; 88T3149

gay/lesbian movements, Minneapolis, Minnesota, strategies; consequences; 88T1814 group processes, encounter vs spiritualist groups; participant observation, interviews; Staffordshire, England; 88T1352 homosexual movement, Netherlands; 1911-1986; 88T2660

Indian societies' status, government policies/social movements, Latin America, 88T1519 innovative social movements, developmental rules; 88T1800

kibbutz social movements, Israel; 88T1741 national health/energy policy, interest groups/social movements, government organizations alliances, mathematical models, 88T2222

 public disorder, Brixton (London, England), collective behavior, compared, 88S20119 women's movement, changing resource mobilization trends, US, feminist group relations, social environment, participant observation interviews, 1966-present, 88T3144

Social Networks

algorithm, social network clique determination, response, 88T1706 cardiovascular risk status improvement, social support network characteristics, longitudinal analysis, 88T2840
 elderly social networks, public housing residents, Norway, 88T2942
 fiction writers, network structure/social position, Köln, West Germany, questionnaire interview, 88T2065 genealogical organizations, network relations/activities, midwestern US, 1972-1984, 88T1531 informant social network, name generation methods, 88T1128
 Italian stonecutters, US, migration paths/social networks, historical data, 1879-1915, 88T2044 job-seeking behavior, manufacturing laborers, Taichung, Taiwan, social ties, 88T1611 missing network data problems, survey methods, national survey, US, 1985, 88T1129 network analysis, formal mathematical techniques, 88T1848
 occupation access; social ties, interviews, 1975, 88T2088 organization formation/members' interrelationships, small community-based voluntary organizations, case study, real estate clubs, Chicago, Illinois, 88T1770 protest activities, women's participation, pre-1800 Holland, judicial archives, 88T3124 relationship strength response categories, quantitative intervals, network analysis, General Social Survey, US, 1985, 88T1104 social network support studies, measurement instruments, 88T1708 social networks/recreation patterns, adolescents, neighborhood sociomix characteristics, housing type, gender, minority status, census data, interviews, low-income housing residents, Toronto, Ontario, 88T1702 social networks/strong ties, homeless women, England, fieldwork, Manchester, 88T1706 survey item reliability, ersatz density items vs sociometric items, national survey, US, 1985, 88T1130

Social Order

employee role performance, emergency circumstances, Beverly Hills Supper Club disaster, Southgate, Kentucky, police investigation interviews, archival data; 88S20090

Social Perception

Cities Perceived: Urban Society in European and American Thought 1820-1940 by Andrew Lees, book review essay, 88T2169 civilian/military spheres boundary perception, immigrant vs nonimmigrant military draftees, Israel; questionnaires, 88T1657 entitlement/justice conceptions, psychological/sociocultural origins, 88T1406
 epidemic/disease perception changes, acquired immune deficiency syndrome, 19th-/20th-century US, 88T2846 friends, theoretical concepts vs individuals' reports, Netherlands, interviews, adults; 88T1380 law/lawyer images, popular culture, legal theory proposed, 88T2467 perceived acquaintanceship/interpersonal trust, Hong Kong/China, questionnaire, 88T1704 personal/societal future orientations, male/female adolescents, Singapore/Australia, questionnaire, 88T2635 social distance toward homosexuals, scale, university students, Louisiana; 88T1384 survey research, public opinion, critical exchange points; 88T1113 time/communication patterns, modern information society, 88T1845 Social Philosophy
 nostalgia, evolution/characteristics, Western history, 88T1443
 social philosophy, Henri Bergson's thought, 88T1236

minist social theory, US Socialist Party, biological/social evolutionism, late 19th century-WWI, 88T3141

ture economic performance, Club of Rome predictions, socialist critique, 88T3041 teligentsia's role/influence, capitalist/socialist societies, scientific/technological revolution, Eugen Lobl's analysis critiqued, 88T1213 ass consciousness, socialist societies, social activity, 88T1417

cans of production, nationalized socialist ownership, Poland, 88T1783

ew Left social movements, North America/Western Europe, post-1960s emergence, 88T1813

iginal accumulation, capitalist Taiwan vs socialist China, official statistics, secondary data, 1950s, 88T1785

ialist development, social sciences' role, USSR, 88T1327

5 defense/foreign policy, democratic-socialist approach, 88T1924 women's equality, socialist government's impact, Cuba, interviews, women, 88T3118 ist Parties

minist social theory, US Socialist Party, biological/social evolutionism, late 19th century-WWI, 88T3141

ist Societies

ually existing socialism, USSR, Marxist analyses, review essay, 88T1778

ture, environmental impacts, Western vs socialist societies, historical perspective, 88T1546

onomic recessions, socialist countries, international interpretations, literature review, 88T1786

ucation, sex/class differences, capitalist/noncapitalist countries, theoretical issues, secondary data, 88T2310

ucation/population mobility, socialist societies, USSR conference proceedings, 88T2274 ryday consciousness development, working class, socialist societies 88T1471

k culture, Marxist analysis, 88T1543

edom, bourgeois vs socialist democracy, Czechoslovakian 1968/69 crisis, 88T1929

arning society" concept, bourgeois ideology, critique, 88T2283 ss consciousness, socialist societies, social activity, 88T1417

blic funds consumption, socialist countries, centralized approaches, conference proceedings, Sofia, Bulgaria, 88T1790

ection process, sports-talented youth, socialist society, 88T1883

ial crisis, Warsaw Pact nations, structural factors, 88T1787

ial interaction research, Soviet psychology, 88T1366

ial structure investigations, socialist societies, symposium proceedings, 88T1534

ial/ideological progress, socialist society, 88T1314

rker alienation, socialist states, bourgeois critique refuted, 88T1631

ilization

ialization processes, social reproduction approach, 88T1727

ort socialization/participation, gender differences, empirical studies 88T1879

ilization Agents

pulation socialization role, public university students, Jakarta, Indonesia, questionnaires, 88T2643

obiology

ss circulation/status change variations, dominant vs subordinate classes, sociocultural variables, biocultural model, 88T2008

man sociobiology/genetic determinism, theoretical issues, 88T2598

biocultural evolution, biological theory, 4-book review essay, 88T1193 biology research, sociobiology's vs biology's relevance, 88T2597

ultural Factors

ortion attitudes, pro-life vs pro-choice worldviews, ideological social determinants; General Social Surveys, 1977-1985, 88T1829

olescent suicide, female Hispanics, psychosocial/cultural factors, literature review, 88T2646

icultural production relations, governing institutions, rural areas, behavioral/technological factors, 88T2127

mputer images, sociocultural perception/interpretation differences, France, experiments; 1985-1987, 88T1432

nitrceptive use, ethnic differences, Sri Lanka, socioeconomic/cultural/accessibility factors, national survey, 1975, 88T2566

te acquaintance rape increase, US college students, sociocultural causes/effects; 88T3100

ucation, social structural/cultural influences, 88T2278

mily lifestyles, US blacks, sociocultural factors, 88T2747 reign immigration, Italy, worldwide migration patterns' implications, official statistics; 88T2533

terosexual relationship types, dependency characteristics, interviews, previous research; 88T2674 human pain perception/response, cultural influences, biocultural model; 88T2785 occupational structure/residential patterns, New Orleans, Louisiana, racial/cultural factors, 1900 census data, 88T2121 schizophrenia symptoms/origins, sociological factors, case records, hospital patients, Harvana State, India, 88T2877 self-esteem, preadolescent males vs females, biological/sociocultural factors, 88T1370

social class structure/culture changes, New Right's reactions, GB, 88T1925

sociocultural experience, psychological reproduction mechanisms, USSR economic reform, 88T1549

The Transformation of Virginia 1740-1790 by Rhys Isaac, review essay, 88T1541

US basketball players, Finland, sociocultural problems, questionnaire, interviews, 88S20066 water-borne disease transmission (schistosomiasis), control schemes, St. Lucia, sociocultural/ecological factors, participant observation; 1950s-present, 88T2805 wife abuse, psychosocial factors, US, questionnaire, women, Florida; 88T3101

youth suicide, psychosocial perspective, cross-cultural analysis, 88T2625

Sociodemographic Factors

alcohol consumption, whites, South Africa, interviews, 1982, 88T2914

crime rate, 20th-century US, population's age structure; surveys; 88T2984

divorce rates, US, church membership/population change/urbanity; census data, 1980, 88T3048

divorce, Guyana/Jamaica/Trinidad & Tobago, sociodemographic factors, World Fertility Survey data, 88S20101

electoral support, Populist Party, Arizona, economic/ethnocultural/occupational factors, census data, voting records, 1896, 1900, 88T1916

fertility attitude behavior consistency, US women, social/psychological/demographic factors, 1941 Indianapolis Fertility Survey reanalyzed, 88T2593

heterosexual cohabitation patterns, never-married women, US, national interview survey, 1983, 88T2587

immigrant populations, demographic variables identification, methodological problems, 88T2544

internal migration trends, provincial level, Iran, economic conditions, urbanization, censuses, 1956-1976, 88T2576

morbidity/mortality data, sociodemographic variations, artefact explanations, secondary/census data, 88T2793 population growth surge, 18th-century England, economic/social factors, historical statistics, 88T2595 public amenity desegregation attitudes, white South Africans, demographic/psychological variables, questionnaire, university students, 1985, 88T1524

schizophrenic patients, Poland, sociodemographic characteristics, 88T2869

second-/third birth timing, black US women, socioeconomic/demographic variables, Current Population Survey, 88T3159

suicidal attempts, causes/methods, Cracow, Poland; 1960-1974; 88T2872

urban to rural amigration, USSR, sociodemographic/motivational factors, questionnaire, young adults, Kuybyshev; 88T2131

voting behavior, party preference, residential/gender/age/occupational factors, panel survey, Lisbon, Portugal, 1976-1982, 88T1977

white long term residents, US, sociodemographic characteristics; 1977-1980 national surveys, 88S20135

women's migration, political/economic/social issues, UN panel discussion 88T3160

Socioeconomic Factors

academic performance/pupil-teacher relationships, low status/minority first graders, teachers' status, interviews, questionnaires, school records, Baltimore, Maryland, 1982, 88T2273

adolescent marriage, socioeconomic/marital consequences, US males; national interview survey 1980 88T2642 career aspirations/success perceptions/self-concepts, young black adults, Toronto, Ontario, socioeconomic conditions, racism; interviews, 88T2629

death rate inequalities, occupational social class effects, methodological issues, UK census data, 1921-1972, comment/reply; 88T2078

downtown revitalization, urban marketplaces, Virginia, 88T2162

economic well-being, independent vs other farmers, male- vs female-headed farms, US, social class/family characteristics; Farm Women Survey, 1980, 88T2151

economic/social problems, Brazil/Argentina/Uruguay/Chile; 88T1991

- social service access, elderly Asian Americans, structural/historical/cultural barriers, mid-1800s-present; 88T2947
- social service provision, elderly rural Americans, policy issues, 88T2142
- social service utilization determinants, causal model applicability, elderly Mexican Americans, interviews, 1979/80, 88T2963
- social services delivery, current issues, GB, 88T3199
- Social Space
- people-home relationship, psychological research, bibliography, 88T2197
- room/design density tolerance, Asians vs British vs southern European residents, Toronto, questionnaire adolescents, 88T1490
- social space/room labeling, inhabitants' reference models, Italy, interviews, Rome, 88T2177
- Social Status
- children's social mobility, mothers' social position/schooling, Hungarian perspective, 88T1996
- intensified alcohol consumption, status/positional/situational roles, surveys, Limburg/Rotterdam, Netherlands, 88T2908
- well-being, white working males, social status mobility, survey, 1978, 88T2528
- women's societal status, social reality paradigms/theoretical traditions, 88T3139
- Social Stratification
- distributional conflicts/social hierarchy structure relationship, modern GB, 88T1335
- occupational status, economic/cultural dimensions, measures proposed, 88T2063
- rural-urban migration, segmented labor markets, Iran, differential land access, census data, 1966/1976, 88T2140
- social differentiation research, data collection/processing issues, 88T2013
- social stratification systems, rural Kipsigis/Kikuyu males, Kenya, age, occupation, landownership, interviews, 88T2020
- social stratification, blacks, US, residential segregation, official data, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 88T1502
- social stratification, educational/occupational systems, US/Poland/West Germany, 88T2019
- social stratification, empirical vs intuitive approaches, 88T2033
- social stratification, lower-level white-collar workers, USSR vs US, 88T2021
- social stratification/inequality, 4-book review essay, 88T2000
- social structure investigations, socialist societies, symposium proceedings, 88T1534
- stratification/self-placement images, formulation/distortion processes, status-labeling model tested, interviews, Japan, Australia, 88T2018
- Social Structure
- behavior of law, D. Black's theory, 88T2416
- class structure, property relations systems, preindustrial Europe, reply, 88T1718
- economic development/social structure, scientific research's effects, 88T2493
- penitentiary Christmas festival, prison social structure, southern US, interviews/observations/official records, 1981/82, 88T2460
- social crisis, Warsaw Pact nations, structural factors, 88T1787
- social organization, agency-social structure dichotomy, Erving Goffman's interaction order, 88T1230
- social structure, preindustrial Europe, Roland Mousnier's theory, 88T1997
- socioeconomic formation concept, social change research, historical materialist/Marxist/sociological theory, 88T3171
- technological institutionalization, digital computer community, US/UK, social norms, 88T2514
- Social Support
- anxiety during pregnancy, social support networks, interviews, nonprobability sample, Indiana females, 88T2767
- childhood social support deficits, alcoholic women, interviews, southeast Michigan, 88T2917
- elderly social networks, public housing residents, Norway, 88T2942
- employed women's spousal support, path model developed, 88T1614
- end-stage renal disease victims' social world/identity, longitudinal interview data, northeastern US metropolitan area, 1978-1982, 88T2830
- gang violence, Chicago, Illinois, crisis/surveillance intervention approach, 88T3004
- maternal-handicapped infant attachment, stress, social support, interviews, questionnaires, observation, 88T2675
- senior centers' development, supportive/inhibiting factors, rural Iowa, participant observation, interviews, 1979, 88T2144
- social support, spouseless/childless elderly women; interviews, 88T3128
- social support/mental health relationship, preschool children, ind, 88S20059
- socially supportive relationship capacity, adults; childhood attachment experiences; questionnaires, medical students, University of Ill, 88T1382
- Social Theories
- feminist social theory, empirical focus critiqued, 88T3145
- Social Unrest
- ethnic conflict/social protest, US, immigration flows, economic conditions, event history analysis, New York Times articles, 1877 in 88T1509
- Islamic fundamentalism, social/political problems, Sudan, 88T24
- Social Values
- decision making, values/rationality, philosophical viewpoints, 88T
- distribution of goods, social preferences; interviews, men, Warsaw land, 1979, 88T1833
- incest taboo's validity, industrial societies, 88T1560
- postmaterialism, Western industrialized nations, Ronald Inglehart value change theory critiqued, 88T1107
- society's dominant ideas, Canada, dominant age group, linguistic analysis, representative texts, 1960s-1980s, 88T1825
- structural characteristics/values, economically disadvantaged families, Oscar Lewis's subculture of poverty thesis tested, interviews, black/white/Hispanic female homemakers, 88T2708
- Social Welfare
- case-wise policy information systems, social welfare policy development, 88T3080
- international social welfare field, systematic computer networking, 88T1703
- social welfare system, Kuwait, technology/modernization, 88T250
- social work spending, public attitudes, US, survey, 1976-1982, 88T3077
- Social Work
- elder mistreatment, social work definition, 88T2965
- knowledge base, social work practice, psychological/psychoanalytic theory, 88T1403
- knowledge classification, social work, 88T3014
- law/order politics, social work response, New Zealand, 88T2980
- library holdings, social work journals, Hong Kong universities, citation analysis, 88T2487
- occupational social work, industrial settings, US-Mexico border regions, 88T2066
- social work concerns, individual treatment/social reform, feminist integration, 88T3136
- social work history, professionalization process, 88T2994
- social work practice, feminist perspective, 88T3119
- social work practice, individualism vs membership model, 88T205
- social work practice, influence strategies, attitude formation/changes, 88T2111
- social work practice, rituals' use, 88T3196
- social work research, significant tests' validity/limitations, reply/response, 88T1133
- social work training program, peer reinforcement techniques, experiment; income maintenance workers, 88T2995
- social work, epistemological issues, 88T2988
- social workers' practice adaptation, Hong Kong vs West Germany, 88T2064
- socialization/reality construction, social work graduate students' views, 88T2334
- Social Workers
- chemical dependency counseling, recent developments, 88T2922
- group behavior, internal/communicated empathy identification, role play ratings, social work students, Indiana, 88T1350
- interpersonal interactions, professional social workers, analysis framework, 88T2113
- job preferences, clinical social workers; client social class, job re-questionnaires; Massachusetts, 88T2085
- public social work positions, declassification policy, administrative pact, US, 88T2099
- small group research, methodological issues, 88T1348
- social service provision, hospices, US, interviews/scales; directors/employees, 88T2829
- social work practitioners, religious/professional values integration/mediation/conflict resolution strategies, 88T2054
- social worker's in-session behaviors, theoretical orientations, client problems, scales; clinical social workers, 88T2050
- Socialism
- absence of socialism, US, reply, 88T2011

sociology subspecializations, male vs female representation, American Sociology Association data, 88T1178

Sociology: Education

candidate's degree, 88T1170

postgraduate career histories, sociology students, Federal Republic Germany, questionnaire, University of Mannheim, 1981-1985, 88T1175

social science grade criteria, working party proposals, GB, 88T1162

Sociology of Education

cardiovascular risk status improvement, social support network characteristics, longitudinal analysis, 88T2840

educational-sociological research, paradigm selection, theoretical issues, 88T2271

sociology of education, 3-book review symposium, 88T2348

sociology of schooling, definition/historical perspective, 88T2331

Sociology of Knowledge

metaphysical philosophy/sociology of knowledge, Hans Gadamer's/Karl Mannheim's works, 88T3010 social sociology, Stephen Pepper's root metaphor method, 88T3201

sociology analysis, language considerations, 88T3017

"information state" vs "belief" term, empirical/methodological issues, 88T1073

journal's history, Past & Present, 88T3026 legitimation concept, assent vs consent problem, 88T1272

modern intellectual, ideal type, class consciousness sociology of knowledge, 88T1263

modernity critique, 19th-century Germany, cultural values issues, 88T3011

radical relativism, David Bloor's "strong program" critiqued, 88T1071 religious prophecy claims, public interpretation/evaluation, interviews, participant observation, small Arkansas town residents, sociology of knowledge perspective, 88T2391

social accounting field, sociology of knowledge perspective, literature review, 88S20073

social sciences, imperfect empiricism, 88T1097

sociological theory, knowledge/law development, 88T1229

sociology of knowledge, theoretical issues, 88T3006

Sociology of Law

adoption/child support law, sociological research, 88T2461

sociology legal science, 88T2428 critical family law, family's power relations imbalance, legal implications, 88T2435

Ehrmann, Niklas, generalized sociology of law, Hungarian perspective, 88T1308 sociology of law, Emile Durkheim's writings, 88T1281

Sociology of Leisure

leisure activity variation, theoretical problems, 88S20092

tourism research, Yugoslav sociology, 88T1866

Sociology of Religion

attending nonmembers, Protestant congregations, membership barriers, minister intervention, interviews, secondary survey data analysis, 88T2368

sociology of religion, Antonio Gramsci's theories, 88T2363

sociology of religion, research trends, Europe vs US, content analysis journal articles, 88T2362

sociology of religion, scientific practice, 88T2354

sociology of religions, definition of religion, theoretical issues, 88T2372

Weber, Max, India/China essays, 88T1194

Sociology of Science

economics discourse, axiomatic method's introduction, citation/content analysis; 1933-1983 Econometrica/American Economic Review journals, 88T2491

ideological controversies/science concepts, early 1900s European sociology, Roberto Michels's work, 88T1947

philosophy of science, non-Marxist theories critiqued, 88T2500

scientific information, formal/informal exchange mechanisms, Yugoslav sociology, 88T2478

social study of science, social role/institutional developments, Latin America, 88T2499 specialization/fragmentation, basic/applied science, universities vs interdisciplinary institutes, US, 88T2485

Sociology of Sports

bodybuilding institutions/values, feudal/capitalist social traits, 88T1882

free communication session trends, annual meetings, North American Society for the Sociology of Sport, 1980-1986, 88T1885

sport sociology growth/development, North American Society for the Sociology of Sport's role, 88T2070 sport sociology's development, West Germany, 88S20141

Sociology of Work

procedural justice, work organizations, literature review, 88T1674

time/work experiences, public sector workers, organizational behavior approach; interviews, questionnaire, document analysis, 88T2115

Sociometric Analysis

social psychological theory/research, Jacob Levy Moreno's contributions, 88T1208

Solidarity Movements

Solidarity movement, Poland, collective identity formation, 88T1801

Solidarity movement, Poland, social science explanatory limitations, 4-book review essay; 88T1809

Sons

alcohol-related problems, heavy drinkers' sons/daughters, interviews, adults, Detroit, Michigan, 1978, 88T2610

South Africa

academic social scientists, South Africa, structural position, 88T2097

alcohol consumption, whites, South Africa, interviews, 1982, 88T2914

apartheid practice, South Africa, Boers' mentality/attitudes, 88T1496 balance of payments structure, South Africa, foreign exchange control/rate policy, 88T1893 birth control policy changes, political implications, 20th-century South Africa, 88T2529 black militancy/consciousness, ideological roots, Azania (South Africa), Frantz Fanon's/Siege Biko's philosophies, 88T1968 domestic monetary/interest rate policy, South Africa, 88T1776 energy production, environmental/social costs, South Africa, literature review, statistics, 1982, 88T3052 family/intellectual functioning, Indian preschool children, South Africa, tests, drawings, interviews, Chatsworth; 88T1410 forced labor systems' origin, 1880s gold mining, Witwatersrand, South Africa, 88T1629

Fulbright international educational exchange program, South Africa, 88T2288 import replacement policies, South Africa vs other industrializing countries, office data, 88T1714 indigenous plant medicinal remedies, elderly blacks' use, South Africa; interviews, Cape Province, 88T2814 industrial decentralization, apartheid system support, Bantustans, South Africa, 88T1652 industrial development, South Africa, structure features, official statistics, 88T1716

militancy, blacks/Coloureds/Indians/whites, South Africa, relative deprivation, 88T1797

paternal responsibilities, father's perceptions, South Africa, urbanization, questionnaire, 1983, 88T2681

personal orientation, English settlers, South Africa, psychosocial isolation, experiment, 88T1712

photographic/sound recordings ban, South Africa, US media coverage/public opinion, newspaper/television news reports, 88T1856

pronuclear/militaristic attitudes/activism, college students, Australia/Northern Ireland/white South Africa, authoritarian attitudes, sociocultural/demographic factors, questionnaire, 88T1390

public amenity desegregation attitudes, white South Africans, demographic/psychological variables, questionnaire, university students, 1985, 88T1524

religious service experience, church members, South Africa, personal religiousness, questionnaires, Dutch Reformed Church, Orange Free State, 88T2388 security law detainees, physical/psychological abuse, South Africa, interviews, 88T2413

socioeconomic crisis vs transformation, South Africa, 88T1753

South African social anthropologist Agnes Winifred Hoernle, academic/political work, book review essay, 88T1555

Tshidi culture, Botswana/South Africa, colonial encounter, book review essay, 88T1553

ultra-Right organizations, constituencies/origins/policy differences, South Africa, 88T1906

South Asia

foreign scholars/researchers, Middle East/South Asia, 88T2329

South Carolina

dependent urbanization effects, 18th-/19th-century Charleston, South Carolina, official data, pre-American Revolution trade flows, England/colonies, 88T2201

South Korea

elderly morbidity/disability patterns, Korea/Philippines/Malaysia/Fiji; surveys; 88T2559

network analysis, formal mathematical techniques, 88T1848

Southern States

- elderly black Americans, family caregiving patterns, socioeconomic factors, literature review, 88S20061
- familism, black/Mexican-American elderly, cultural/economic causes, census data, 1984/85, 88T2935
- foreign language instruction, U.S. suburban middle class high school/junior high students' attitudes, parental background, sex factors, questionnaire survey, 88T2251
- French pronouns, discourse based pragmatic account, vector product/sliding scale hypothesis, 88T2250
- household fixation, rural villages, Iran, wage labor opportunities, field-work, Kalardasht, 1977/78, 88T2722
- hypertension, middle-aged residents, St. Lucia, survey, 1982, 88T2809
- income distribution/educational levels, Brazil, class/urban-rural/gender/regional differences, 88T1332
- Indian students, white family foster placement, socioeconomic consequences, southwestern U.S. interviews, questionnaire, Indian students/parents/foster parents, 1982, 88T2285
- institutionalized elderly, level of care, socioeconomic factors, national survey, residents, nursing homes, U.S., 1977, 88T2944
- marital rape sanctions, males' vs females' attitudes, survey, adults, Columbus, Ohio, 88S20139
- mortality trends, Netherlands/Belgium, regional/socioeconomic/ethnic differences, 88T2590
- occupational/earnings attainments, Japanese vs Mexican immigrants, U.S., historical/structural factors, census data, 88T1515
- political administrative institutional changes, socioeconomic/territorial factors, Western Europe, 88T1717
- relative deprivation, political development model, theoretical issues, 88T1106
- retirement satisfaction, social workers, Israel, income/health/work status, questionnaire, 1979/80, 88T2966
- rural outmigration plans, Third World countries, microlevel/socioeconomic factors, questionnaire/interview/life history data, villagers, Thailand/Egypt/Colombia, 88T2561
- sex role orientation changes, gender differences, U.S., life circumstance/value changes, questionnaire, University of Montana students, 1975-1980, 88T1411
- shrimp fishermen's dealer selection, social vs economic reasons, Bayou La Batre, Alabama, questionnaires, dealers, fishermen, 88T1768
- social strata/language use relationship, Dutch/Frisian/Groningen dialect, Groningen Frisian border region, linguistic survey, 88T2228
- social/economic situation, young people, Liverpool, England, interviews, 88T2644
- socioeconomic characteristics/societal value structure, India, demographic changes/projections, census/other official data, 1901-1982, 88T2591
- socioeconomic crisis vs transformation, South Africa, 88T1753
- socioeconomic growth, material/intellectual factors, USSR, 88T1254
- suicide rates, secular/seasonal trends, Japan, socioeconomic conditions, official statistics, 1950-1982, 88T1361
- urban rental markets, rent levels, social factors, literature review, census data, U.S., 1980, 88T2176
- Socioeconomic Status
- contact frequency, mature women-kin members, national longitudinal survey, 88T1311
- occupational/intergenerational mobility, West Germany vs U.S., socioeconomic status/entrepreneurial-bureaucratic dimension, various surveys, 88T2016
- old aged pensioners, support system, Haryana State, India, interviews, 1981, 88T2948
- schizophrenia symptoms/origins, sociological factors, case records, hospital patients, Haryana State, India, 88T2877
- self-actualization goals/values, Canadian adults, family background, socioeconomic attainment, survey, 88T1387
- violent behavior-socioeconomic status relationship, class-vs ecological-level theories, literature review, 88T3105
- Sociolinguistics
- conversation, assimilative/accommodative devices, gender differences, children's dyads, age, age/friendship/status factors; conversation analysis, preschool/third/sixth graders, 88T2600
- Japanese sociolinguistics, background/theoretical basis, 88T2226
- Japanese sociolinguistics, research in English reviewed, 88T2231
- Sociological Associations
- discussion topics, 11th International Sociological Association World Congress, New Delhi, India, 88T1174
- Eleventh World Congress of Sociology, New Delhi, India, participants/highlights, congress documents, observation; 88T1243
- Sociology of Urban & Regional Development session, Eleventh World Congress, New Delhi, India, contributions reviewed; 88T1259
- Sociological Research
- alimony/child support law, sociological research; 88T2461
- Committee on the Status of Black Americans, National Black Research Council, history/structure; 88T1494
- culture-boundedness, US vs British sociological research, context analysis, journal articles, 1965, 1985; 88T1187
- extended Croatian peasant household, sociology's vs ethnology's definition, 88T2736
- library/information resources, sociological research; Hungarian perspective, 88T1117
- National Research Council's study on status of black Americans, theoretical/methodological weaknesses, political bias; 88T1483
- postmodernist writers/work, Norman K. Denzin's theory, 88T1266
- research on US blacks, National Black Research Council's concerns, 88T1166
- sociological research, quantitative/qualitative methodologies, 88T1166
- sociological theory, idealized/unified model, 88S20074
- suicide research, methodological problems, 88T1436
- theory/research duality/complementarity, sociology knowledge development, 88T1226
- Sociological Theory
- artistic revolutions, Thomas S. Kuhn's concept applied; book review essay/response, 88T2262
- class theory, Slovene Catholic sociological thought; 88T2009
- culture, central perspective of sociology, theoretical implications, 88T1220
- economic sociology vs neoclassical economics, principle/premises, 88T1317
- ethnology, theory/research issues, book review reply, 88T1222
- historical sociology, GB, 2-book review essay, 88T1196
- history/sociology discipline convergence, theory/narrative dialogue, 88T1184
- human emotions, individual behavior/historical changes, 2-book review essay, 88T1433
- Max Weber Gesamtausgabe, 2-volume review essay, 88T1247
- political systems, structural-functionalist analyses, literature review, 88T1917
- religion, Hjalmar Sundén's role theory, symposium, 88T2404
- sales techniques, market pitchers, GB, research issues, 88T1761
- sociological theory, idealized/unified model, 88S20074
- sociological theory, knowledge/law development, 88T1229
- sociological theory/philosophical traditions, Pierre Bourdieu's work, 88T1283
- sociology of culture, turn-of-the-century Germany, Max Weber's & Georg Simmel's intellectual relationship, 88T1237
- sociology's new ideological trends, politicization critiqued, 88T1210
- sociology's "Strong Thesis," Ludwig Wittgenstein's analysis; 88T1094
- temporality, sociological theory, journal issue introduction, 88T1300
- theoretical/methodological trends, US sociology, content analysis, American Sociological Review articles, 1979-1987, 88S20070
- theory/research duality/complementarity, sociology knowledge development, 88T1226
- wife assault, criminal justice system response, US/Canada, surveys, 88T3094
- Sociologists
- academic women sociologists, midwestern U.S., employment status, professional participation, sociological societies' records/programs, 88T1172
- classic sociological thinkers, reexamination importance, Max Weber, current relevance, 88T1251
- ideology, Marxist-Leninist approach, Czechoslovakian A. Siracky's views, 88T1319
- Italian sociologist Roberto Michels, work/influences, 88T1200
- Italian sociology, Roberto Michels's work, 88T1219
- political parties, Roberto Michels's work, German sociologists' reactions, 88T1993
- Schelsky, Helmut, personality/intellectual development, 2-book review essay, 88T1213
- Schelsky, Helmut, political/sociological thought, 3-book review essay, 88T1224
- societal development, USSR, sociologists' contributions; 88T1758
- sociologists' emigration/return collective characteristics, Germany, 1933-1945; 88T1218
- van Heek, F., sociological work/theories, memorial tribute; 88T1259
- Yugoslav sociologist Vera Stein Erlich; bibliography/biography, 88T1183
- Sociology
- sociology as academic vs applied discipline, Yugoslavia; 88T1255
- sociology education, audiovisual vs traditional lecture method, faculty/student perceptions, experiment, survey; 88T1181

social partnership/neocorporatism as domination mechanism, Austria, 88T2448

State-Society Relationship economic underdevelopment, internal/external causes, Third World, cross-national data; 1965, 1975, 88T1736 industrial policies, railroad/military/electronics industries, GB/US/France, 88T1725 means of production, nationalized socialist ownership, Poland, 88T1783 political change processes, Philippines vs Poland, 88T1959 state lotteries, Canada, state-society relations, 1970s-present, 88T1984 state vs society power, less-developed peripheral nations, cross-national statistics; 1960-1980, 88T1734 welfare state development, organizational structure/function, Saudi Arabia, quantitative/other data, 88T1792

Statistics

configural frequency analysis, description/applications, 88T1139 ethicopolitical sciences, statistics'/stochastics' role, 88T1082 feminist research, use of statistics, 88T3143
industrial development, South Africa, structure features, official statistics, 88T1716 semiorbits/interval/partial orders, multidimensionality threshold concepts, methodological issues, 88T1134 sociological statistics, theory vs method, theory construction problems, 88T1320
The History of Statistics: The Measurement of Uncertainty before 1900 by Stephen M. Stigler, review essay, 88T1142

Status

social differentiation research, data collection/processing issues, 88T2013

Status Attainment

age-heterogamous marriages, spouses' status/income contributions, US, panel study, 1976, 88T1446 living room decoration style, Italy, status, consistency/mobility, photographs, interviews, 88T2154
occupation access, social ties, interviews, 1975, 88T2088
status/educational attainment, intergenerational class mobility, Japan vs US, social surveys; 88T2014 success/achievement value decline, West Germany, age group, educational level, longitudinal surveys, 1956-1981, 88T2025

Statutes

coverage scope, US Civil Rights Act, plaintiff's racial status vs defendant's actions' racial content, 88T1499
current public health statute's outdatedness, model statute guidelines, US, 88T2415

Stem Family

stem family structure, marriage/inheritance/residence patterns, Northern Irish gentry, participant observation/interview/other data, 88T2741

Stepfamily

child sexual abuse, intact/stepfamilies, risk factors, questionnaire, mothers; 88T2611

Stereotypes

obesity, day-to-day social experiences, gender differences, interviews, Overeaters Anonymous attendees, 88T1464 racial stereotypes, male vs female college freshmen, in-class questionnaire survey, 88S20113 social stereotypes of Americans, Taiwan/Mexico, US television programs, questionnaires; university students, 1985, 88T1521

Sterilization

tubal ligation sterilization, women's attitudes, Canada, interviews, sterilized women, Montreal, Quebec, 1985, 88T2769

Stigma

homosexuality, heterosexuals' attitudes, heterosexual-homosexual interaction; questionnaire; university students, southeastern US, 88T1402
stigma exploitation strategies, exchange process; 88T1388
"stumbling disease," social/cultural stigmatization processes, California vs island Azorean-Portuguese populations, interviews, 88T2794 unemployed youths, marginalization/stigmatization, Belgium, secondary data; 88T1578

Stochastic Models

spatial orientation model, designed environmental classification, 88T3072
stochastic error process consequences, large nonlinear forecasting models, methodological issues; 88T1150

Storytelling

European fairy tales, family relationships theme, content analysis, 88T2268

Strategies

capital expansion scenarios, executives' strategic decisions, decision style, experiment, 88T1690 strategic management/business policy, ideological burden, theoretical issues, 88T3207

Stress

community residing aged, family caregiver strain, elder impairment, instrumental support, longitudinal interviews, family caregivers; 1984/85, 88S20062 stressful events, husbands' vs wives' perceptions, scale/questionnaire data, 88S20137

Strikes

miners' strike, 1984/85, GB, 10-book review essay; 88T1610

Structural-Functional Analysis

political systems, structural-functionalist analyses, literature review; 88T1917
psychotherapist Salvador Minuchin's work, structural-functionalist/symbolic-interactionist approaches, 88T3195

Structural Models

covariance structure models, goodness-of-fit approach assessment, 88T1160 family interaction patterns/influence directions, structural models; 88T2744 linear structural equation models, total/direct/indirect effects, applicable computer programs, 88T1158
loosely coupled school model, structuralist approach, 88T2339 revolution sociology, social structural approach/women's liberation, 2-book review essay, 88T1796
social mobility model, Anglo-Saxon England, 88T2031
structural modeling, covariance analysis, methodological issues, 88T1127

Structuralism

loosely coupled school model, structuralist approach, 88T2339
structuralist epistemological paradigms, social anthropology, 88T1532

Student Attitudes

black university student apathy, race/academic class/gender, psychometric test, 88T2287 classroom experiences explication, typified knowledge vs habit theory; 88T2324 mentally retarded offenders, law students' attitudes; instructional programs, questionnaires, University of Alabama, 88T2332 public amenity desegregation attitudes, white South Africans, demographic/psychological variables, questionnaire, university students, 1985, 88T1524

Student Behavior

unreasonable search/seizure, schools, 1985 US Supreme Court decision implications, 88T2317

Student Teacher Relationship

academic performance/pupil-teacher relationships, low status/minority first graders, teachers' status, interviews, questionnaires, school records, Baltimore, Maryland, 1982, 88T2273 engineering education, US, operation/quality, high proportion of foreign students, survey, chairpersons/faculty, 88T2277 management training, case study method, 88T1671 sociology of schooling, definition/historical perspective, 88T2331

Students

brain drain, Third World student emigration to US, questionnaire surveys, 88T2309 foreign student/foreigner presence, Italy, interviews, Umbria, Perugia, 1985/86, 88T1479 gifted student programs, anti-intellectual trends, 88T2304
Indian students, white family foster placement, socioeconomic consequences, southwestern US, interviews, questionnaire, Indian students/parents/foster parents, 1982, 88T2285 individual achievement, social interaction, longitudinal data, pupils, 88T2024

Sub-Saharan Africa

cultural struggles, neocolonialism, Tswana chiefdom, rural southern Africa, book review essay, 88T1550 economic dependence-development relationship, sub-Saharan Africa; center-periphery relations, secondary sources, 1960-1980, 88T1730 historic land law rights, formal legal embodiment, 12th-/13th-century England vs 20th-century East African Busoga tribe; primary/secondary data, 88T1312
Marxist anthropology, Africa, book review essay, 88T3181
urban growth, Africa, export activity; maps; 1980; 88T2209
urban growth, Africa; export agriculture/mining, maps; 1970; 88T1756

Subcultures

- crime prevention activism, urban blacks, southern U.S. selection/mobilization variables, interviews, questionnaire, 88T2974
- family lifestyles, U.S. blacks, sociocultural factors, 88T2747
- homosexuality, heterosexuals' attitudes, heterosexual-homosexual interaction, questionnaire, university students, southeastern U.S., 88T1492
- legislator responsiveness, black voters, urbanization, race, voting records, Ninety First through Ninety Seventh U.S. Congresses, 88T1989
- northern based elites/sponsored southern organizations, colonial-like relationship, 20th century U.S., 88T1820
- sharecropping/wage labor transition, southern U.S., internal/external socioeconomic factors, official statistics, secondary data, 1930-1950, 88T1737
- sitting location, rural southern U.S. black aged, Protestant/Catholic churches, status differentiation implications, questionnaire, 88T2038
- Space Technology
- space exploration, international collaborative ventures, strategies/risks, 88T1901
- Spain
- agrarian/anti state rebellion, 16th /17th century France/England/Spain, historical data, 88T1804
- building democracy, Spain, national vs ethnic/regional identity issues, election/survey data, 88T1910
- family history research, Italy/Spain/Portugal, 88T2699
- ingroup/outgroup influence, abortion/contraception opinions, experiment, female high school students, Spain, 88T1512
- teacher dismissal, private educational center, institutional/individual rights issues, Spanish labor laws, case study, 88T2098
- Spatial Analysis
- interstate migration patterns, Mexico, socioeconomic factors, statistics, 88T2541
- Islamic city design, spatial analysis, case study, Cairo, Egypt, 88T2153
- living room arrangement, culture specific rules, Italy vs France, content analysis, photographs, Paris/Rome, 88T2161
- living room decoration style, Italy, status consistency/mobility, photographs, interviews, 88T2154
- open-/single minded public space, political/cultural factors, U.S. cities, 88T2207
- public space, historical context, precapitalist origins, comment, 88T2198
- social equality/socialist integration goals, Cuba, government spatial policies, 88T3075
- spatial imbalance, economy/geography, Norway, literature review, 88T3071
- spatial orientation model, designed environmental classification, 88T1072
- uneven regional development, advanced capitalist nations, reply, 88T1803
- verbal directional instructions, interaction structure, 88T2238
- Specialization
- physician specialty advertising, telephone directory Yellow Pages, Hartford, Connecticut, 88T2844
- sociology subspecializations, male vs female representation, American Sociology Association data, 88T1178
- Spectators
- sports fans, categories, origins/meaning, interviews, 88S20083
- Sports
- high school teacher coaches' role strain, occupational attitudes/multiple role demands, U.S. observations, interviews, 1985, 88T2105
- media/sport ideological relationship, patriarchy/capitalism support, Australia, 88T1851
- pain valorization, sportive play, cultural discourse/feminist analyses, 88S20072
- selection process, sports-talented youth, socialist society, 88T1883
- sport identity measurement, role identity salience/role involvement, questionnaire, male students, Ohio State University, 1985, 88T1376
- sports, feminist transformations, case study, female recreational softball league, 88T1876
- sports, masculine hegemony maintenance/female marginalization, Australia, 88T1877
- Sports Participation
- female athletic participation research, focus group interviewing technique, 88S20128
- female sport subcultures, role conflicts/models, participant observation, interviews, adolescent Ragnette players, 88T1888
- female sport/leisure participation, England, interviews, Milton Keynes, 88T1863
- female sports participation, biologically-based evolutionary justifications, feminist critique, 88T1875
- masculine behaviors, sports case, feminist theory, 88S20118
- participation motivations, joggers vs slow runners, Vienna, Austria, questionnaire, 88T1421
- sport socialization/participation, gender differences, empirical studies, 88T1879
- sports fans, categories, origins/meaning, interviews, 88S20083
- sports involvement as escapism, quality of life issues, interviews, 88S20126
- Sports Teams
- blacks' positional distribution, sports teams, economic hypothesis critiqued, statistics, article/reply, 88T1528
- decision making, sport politics, reference group influence, 88T1888
- home field advantage, major league baseball teams, dome/artificial turf effects, won & loss records, 88S20142
- soccer players' individual/team performance, egocentrically biased tribulations, questionnaires, Giessen, West Germany, 88T1880
- Sports Violence
- sports violence legitimacy, soccer coaches' perceptions, questionnaire, 88S20096
- Spouse Abuse
- battered wives' return home, psychological-social causes, interviews, women, shelters, Texas, 88T3090
- husband-to-wife violence, U.S., race, social class, questionnaire, women, 1982, 88T3102
- spousal violence, incestuous vs other families, questionnaires, interviews, 88T2753
- wife abuse theories/stereotypes, 88T2734
- wife abuse, psychosocial factors, U.S., questionnaire, women, Florida, 88T3101
- wife abuse, husband's drunkenness/socioeconomic status, interviews, families, U.S., 88T3099
- wife assault, criminal justice system response, US/Canada, surveys, 88T3094
- Spouses
- attitudes toward women's role, sex differences, divorced vs married people, General Social Survey data, 88S20102
- conjugal life transformation, preindustrial Europe, 88T2673
- employed women's spousal support, path model developed, 88T1614
- informal divorce settlement, party satisfaction, interviews, parties, lawyers, divorce cases, Wisconsin, 1982, 88T2683
- spouses' purchasing situation assessment, marital satisfaction, interviews, scales, husbands/wives, Linz, Austria, 88T2701
- separateness-connectedness, balance, dual-earner married couples, marital communication, gender-role attitudes, job stress, survey, 88T2684
- stressful events, husbands' vs wives' perceptions, scale/questionnaire data, 88S20137
- Sri Lanka
- contraceptive use, ethnic differences, Sri Lanka, socioeconomic/cultural/accessibility factors, national survey, 1975, 88T2566
- published research, Sri Lankan anthropologists, 88T1559
- Stability
- management cadres, stabilization levels, Poland, economic/employment factors, literature review, 88T1676
- Stalinism
- Stalinism, historical-materialist alternative, book review essay, 88T3172
- Standard of Living
- household behavior economic models, intrahousehold resource distribution implications, surveys, India/Philippines/Indonesia, 88T2737
- State
- state autonomy/economic policy, U.S., neo-Marxist approach, 88T19
- state, Karl Marx's early views, 88T3183
- State Intervention
- coal mining labor relations, state intervention's role, GB/US/West Germany/France, 1970s-1980s, 88S20088
- water pollution control legislation, political/economic interests, class struggle perspective, testimony, US Senate hearing witnesses, 88S20134
- work relations/collective bargaining, union's legitimacy, US coal industry, state disciplinary involvement, 88S20132
- State Power
- intellectual/state relationship, China vs India, 88T2035
- legal/medical authority, commodification effects, 88T1927
- urban systems' growth/character, cross-national analysis, 19th/20th centuries, 88T2175
- State Role
- government's role, Austrians' attitudes, sampling bias, questionnaire survey, 88T1111 census data, official statistics, 1970s/1980s, 88T2774

Switzerland

divorce resolution, judicial principles, case records, Geneva, Switzerland, 88T2441

gender-specific occupational segregation, Switzerland, census data, 1980, 88T1584

humanization of work, professional identity improvement, Switzerland, survey, white-collar workers, 88T1613

residential treatment, Swiss drug addicts, neighbors' reactions, interviews, 88T2907 women's opportunities, leadership/management positions, Switzerland, census data, survey, residents, Geneva, 88T2047

Symbolic Interactionism

knowledge base, social work practice, psychological/psychoanalytical theory, 88T1403

psychotherapist Salvador Minuchin's work, structural-functionalist, symbolic-interactionist approaches, 88T3195

residential child treatment facility, conflict resolution, case study, 88S20122

symbolic interactionism, theory development, 88T1262

white-collar crime, capitalist societies, symbolic motivational patterns, 88T2972

Symbolism

advertising, intentional hidden sexual references denied, response, 88T1839

advertising, multiple interpretation levels, reply, 88T1861

election campaigns, political symbolism aspects, liminality concept, 88T1941

our symbolism, UK/US/Canada, 88T1440

intervention, group metaphorical/symbolic imagery therapy, 88T1347 magazine advertisement, semiotic analysis decoding issues, 88T1837 political heroism/villainy, symbol manipulation, collective value reaffirmation, Ollie North case, 88S20117 religious symbols, psychoanalytic interpretations, Gananath Obeyesekere's work, review symposium, 88T2402

emotives/advertising's visual symbol use, historical background/interrelationship, 88T1843

temporality, social/symbolic meanings, semiotic perspective, case studies, 88T1324

Ta

middleman minorities' competitive interaction, late Ottoman Syria, 88T1529

Items Theory

business organizations, general systems theory approach, 88T3197

dialectical materialism, systems approach, 88T3173

political systems, structural-functionalist analyses, literature review, 88T1917

unction, systems approach, 88S20082

2000s hygiene/behavior, cultural norms/taboo, 3-book review essay, 88T1557

Taipei, Taiwan

community consciousness, public housing residents, Taipei, Taiwan, 88T3037

Taiwan

environmental vs economic values, public opinion, Taiwan, survey, 88T3063

job-seeking behavior, manufacturing laborers, Tainchung, Taiwan, social ties, 88T1611 marriage attitudes/roles, men vs women, Taiwan, questionnaires, scales, university students, 1984, 88T2676 modernization process, People's Republic of China/Taiwan/Hong Kong/Singapore, 88T2205

original accumulation, capitalist Taiwan vs socialist China, official statistics, secondary data, 1950s, 88T1785

social stereotypes of Americans, Taiwan/Mexico, US television programs, questionnaires, university students, 1985, 88T1521

sociology of sex, Taiwan vs US, transvestite sexual classification, 88T1248

urban ecological structure, Taiwan, city size, economic development, 88T2167

women's fitness for managerial roles, US vs Taiwanese business students' perceptions, sex stereotypic attitudes, questionnaire, scale, 88T2318

Task Oriented Groups

equity/satisfaction interaction, task-oriented groups, conflict management strategies, questionnaire, undergraduates, 88T1357 interpersonal influence, task groups, nonverbal cues, dominance behavior, competence perceptions, experiment, female college students, 88T1642

task-integrative leadership compatibility, small groups, task leader performance, questionnaires, 88T1460 interpersonal processes, industrial management, task structure, questionnaire, supervisors/workers, Polish factory, 88T1680

Tasks

Taxation

federal/province resource distribution, federal copartition, Argentina, official statistics, 1935-1984, 88T1743

peasant resistance, tax noncompliance, 18th-century France/20th-century Malaysia, case studies, 88T2148 social inequality, GB: earnings/income tax changes, 88T2039

taxpaying behavior, decision making process/context, conceptual framework, 88T1976

Teacher Attitudes

South Asian (ethnic minority) students, teachers' perceptions/opinions, UK schools, interviews; teachers, middle school, 88T2335

Teacher Evaluation

teachers' societal status/role/students' behavior, teachers' perceptions, Finland, interviews, 88T2323

Teachers

cross-cultural tobacco consumption patterns, school teachers vs general population, role model impact; research review, 1966-1983; 88T2885

high school teacher-coaches' role strain, occupational attitudes/multiple role demands, US; observations, interviews, 1985, 88T2105

labor migration, teacher training institute graduates, 88T2542 professional socialization, beginning teachers, Israel, school environments, professional concerns, interviews, public/private high schools, 88T2084 school adjustment, academic success, US first graders, parents'/teachers' behavior standards, school records, interviews, parents'/teachers, 1982, 88T2272

social class orientations, teachers vs other occupations, Sweden, questionnaire, employed adults, 1980, 88T2089

teacher dismissal, private educational center, institutional/individual rights issues, Spanish labor laws, case study, 88T2098

teacher strategies research, cumulative approach proposed, 88T2333

verbal competence gains, urban 1st graders, Maryland, child/teacher/family characteristics, interviews, test scores, questionnaires, parents/students/teachers, Baltimore, 1981/82, 88T2325

Teaching

social epidemiology, teaching/research directions, 88T2553

Teaching Methods

small group processes training, trainer intervention ratings, scales; observer/participant graduate students, 88T1342

sociology education, audiovisual vs traditional lecture method, faculty/student perceptions, experiment, survey, 88T1181

teacher strategies research, cumulative approach proposed, 88T2333

urban sociology, videotaping teaching technique, 88S20075

Teamwork

physician/nurse team patient relationships, person-orientedness, Netherlands, team social relationships, interviews, physicians/nurses/patients, hospitals, Randstad area, 88T2839

Technical Assistance

Peace Corps volunteer experience, Ghana, subsequent life/career effects, case study, 88T1747

Technicians

career changes, technical professionals/managers, early career factors, interviews, scientists/engineers, chemical industry, 88T2092

technical/engineering work, males' vs females' subjective experience, questionnaire, 88T2046

unemployment stress, engineers/scientists, transitional vs transactional coping models, interviews, 88T1612

Technocracy

nuclear safety institutionalization, France, political/social/international market factors, documentary evidence, interviews, 88T1697

scientific technical rationalization/technocratization, US, class/ideological/state organizational factors, case study National Labor Relations Board's Economic Research Division's elimination, 88T2434

Technological Change

pharmacists' job satisfaction, drug production technological changes; questionnaire, pharmacists, South Australia, 88T2077

technological institutionalization, digital computer community, US/UK, social norms, 88T2514

unions, new work organization impacts; literature review, case study; Shell Sarnia Chemical Plant local union; 88T1641

- consumer behavior, subcultural/intraethnic group variations, questionnaire, Hispanics vs Anglo-Americans, Texas, 88T1762
- deinstitutionalized chronic psychiatric patients, informal/deviant subcultures, Canada, participant observation, interviews, Ontario, 88T1463
- ethical dynamics, heroin addict subculture, U.S., life histories, criminal heroin addicts, Delaware, 1980/81, 88T2896
- Grateful Dead music group subculture, personal characteristics/realities, participant observation, 88T2260
- prisoners' subculture/interactions, Nigeria, observations, interviews, questionnaires, prisoners, guards, 1983, 88T2464
- structural characteristics/values, economically disadvantaged families, Oscar Lewis's subculture of poverty thesis tested, interviews, black/white/Hispanic female homemakers, 88T2708
- technological institutionalization, digital computer community, US/UK, social norms, 88T2514
- violent subcultures, regional differences, gun ownership, general social surveys, males, 88T3093
- youth culture, rock & roll music, media technology's role, 88T1873
- youth subculture development processes, "Star Trek" fan club case participant observation, document analysis, 88S20095
- youth subcultures, qualitative/quantitative methods, 88T2622
- Subjectivity
- The View from Nowhere* by T. Nagel, review essay, 88T1086
- Subordination
- subordinate social groups, India, 4-book review essay, 88T1334
- women's subordination, social welfare labor process, literature review, census data, US, 1920-1984, 88T2057
- Substance Abuse
- health status/service utilization, young adults, adolescent substance use, questionnaire, 88T2910
- stress/substance use, masculine role/gender personality attribute impact, questionnaires, male/female university students, 88T2918
- Suburbs
- political participation/incorporation, black newcomers, racially changing neighborhoods, survey, Washington, DC, suburb, 88T1939
- urban rural movement, Japan, social/economic effects, 88T2163
- Success
- home field advantage, major league baseball teams, dome/artificial turf effects, won & loss records, 88S20142
- Sudan
- Islamic fundamentalism, social/political problems, Sudan, 88T2412
- personality traits/self-esteem, juvenile- vs nondelinquent boys, Sudan, 88T3000
- Suicide
- adolescent suicide, female Hispanics, psychosocial/cultural factors, literature review, 88T2646
- divorce-suicide relationship, US, social integration, church membership, county level data, LISREL approach, 88S20099
- drinking behavior/euthanasia suicide attitudes, age/gender variations, social integration, 1962-1978, 88T1273
- suicidal behavior, interpersonal contexts/social reality construction, letters/newspaper analysis, interviews, 88T1360
- suicide attempters, adult females, adolescent social/psychological profile, life histories, 88T1438
- suicide fluctuation, holiday periods, US, official statistics, 1973-1979, 88T1423
- suicide rate explanations, US counties, urban vs rural environment, government statistics, 1970s, 88T2768
- suicide rate, southwestern Greek province, official statistics, police records, 1979-1984, 88T2521
- suicide rate, US, gun ownership/availability, statistics, 88T1408
- suicide rates, official statistics' underreporting, sociological/organizational factors, statistical analysis, 88T1427
- suicide rates, physicians vs academics vs general population, Sweden, census data, official statistics, 1970s/1980s, 88T2774
- suicide rates, secular/seasonal trends, Japan, socioeconomic conditions, official statistics, 1950-1982, 88T1361
- suicide research, methodological problems, 88T1436
- suicide, female labor force participation's impact, theoretical issues, 88T1435
- suicide, mass media's effects, research issues, 88T2473
- suicide, US Army, epidemiological/temporal aspects, official statistics, 1910-1982, 88T1663
- suicide/homicide rates, US adolescents/adults, epidemiologic patterns, prediction potential, mortality data, 1933-1982, 88T2550
- suicidal attempts, causes/methods, Cracow, Poland, 1960-1974, 88T2872
- urban suicides rates, 19th-century GB/Wales, industrialization; statistics, 88T1537
- violent death rates, regional differences, US; official statistics, 1939-1979; 88T3097
- youth suicide, psychosocial perspective, cross-cultural analysis, 88T2625
- Superior Subordinate Relationship
- management control, labor process theory, "monism" concept critiqued, 88T1596
- managerial style, gender differences, interviews, male/female managers/their secretaries, 88T3170
- newscaster/management relationship, digital images' impact, French television news programs, 88T1840
- power/disciplinary methods, work organizations, 88T1574
- subordinates' job performance/personal problems, industrial middle managers' intervention, interviews, tests, 88T2071
- trade union movement, employers' acceptance, Brazil, interviews 1983, 88T1566
- Supernatural
- "contacts with the dead," widows/widowers, national survey, 1984 88T2776
- Support Networks
- anxiety during pregnancy, social support networks, interviews, nonprobability sample, Indiana females, 88T2767
- familial assistance patterns, Hispanic/Portuguese/Vietnamese immigrant elderly-their children, US, interviews, 88T2929
- friendship growth/development, exchanged resources' type/similarity, questionnaire, female nursing students, Sweden, 88T1442
- informal supportive networks, Surinam Creoles, Netherlands, kinship's/religion's role, participant observation/ethnographic data 88T1525
- job search outcomes, distant vs close friends as contact persons 88T1449
- kinship bond strength, nonproximity indicators, survey, elderly residents, New York City/Fort Lauderdale-Miami, Florida, 1978 88T1533
- old aged pensioners, support system, Haryana State, India, interviews 1981, 88T2948
- social network changes, postdivorce men/women, literature review 88T2720
- social network support studies, measurement instruments, 88T1708
- social networks, Lisbon immigrant community-inland Zona do Pinh, residents, Portugal, 88T2580
- Surrogate Parents
- lexical construction, surrogate motherhood, masculine codes, 88T2733
- Surveys
- data collection, foreign immigrants, methodological issues, 88T2531
- poverty level changes, Australia; government surveys, 1970s-1981/82 88T3078
- recall ability, survey respondents, cognitive psychology explanations 88T1103
- social survey paradigm, natural sciences, 88T1234
- Survival
- net migration estimation, survival-rate vs time-series techniques, Florida/New York, vital statistics, 1960-1980, 88T2549
- Sustenance Organization
- migration/population size/sustenance means interrelationship, Sierra Leone, 1974 census data; 88S20098
- Sweden
- child custody laws/concepts, Norway/Sweden, US, 88T2752
- friendship growth/development, exchanged resources' type/similarity, questionnaire, female nursing students, Sweden, 88T1442
- government popularity, Sweden, lagged unemployment/inflation effects, methodological issues, case study, 88T1154
- health care beliefs/systems, cultural adaptation, Kulu Turkish women in Sweden, participant observation, informants, Kulu/Swedish physicians, Tensta, Sweden 1976-1981, 88T2849
- housing aspects evaluations/preferences, Swedish adults, beliefs/values, questionnaire, 88T2181
- labor movement theory vs corporatist theory, labor political power/capitalism, Social Democratic Sweden, 88T1936
- pulp industry plant closure, family economic problems/adjustment strategies, Sweden; interviews, official records; 88T1635
- sex/love attitudes, US vs Swedish adults; gender, marital status, sexual preference; experiment, 88T1383
- social class orientations, teachers vs other occupations, Sweden, questionnaire; employed adults, 1980; 88T2089
- social democracy-state relationship, labor/school reform policies, Sweden, case studies, 88T1644
- strong vs soft welfare states, historical divergence, Sweden/Netherlands; post-1975; 88T1337
- suicide rates, physicians vs academics vs general population, Sweden

theoretical Problems

alcohol abuse, tension-reduction theory; experiment, 88T1115 alcohol problems, mechanistic vs systems perspectives, 88T2901 anthropology of gender, Yugoslav sociologist Vera Stein Erlich's work; 88T3140 utopias processes, social systems, Niklas Luhmann's paradigm, 88T1269
 Black Americans, status study controversy, structural focus weaknesses; 88T1489
 Black scholar participation, Study on the Status of Black Americans' planning, National Black Research Council, 88T1475
 Blacks' positional distribution, sports teams, economic hypothesis critiqued, statistics; article/reply, 88T1528
 capitalist urbanism, theoretical issues, 2-book review essay, 88T2173 career choice patterns, organizational factors, theoretical/methodological issues; 88T2102 Cartesian-Lockean-Kantian philosophical canon/contemporary philosophers, Richard Bernstein's work, 88T1188 child custody decisions/legislation, divorce cases, social science data's utility; literature review, comment/reply, 88T2685
 class circulation/status change variations, dominant vs subordinate classes; sociocultural variables; biocultural model, 88T2008
 classic sociological thinkers, reexamination importance, Max Weber's current relevance; 88T1251 clinical medicine, theoretical/methodological models/issues/problems, 88T2479 computer simulation modeling, methodological/theoretical issues, 88S20077 concept of culture, anthropological definition, theoretical issues, 88T1547 consumer behavior research, critical relativist vs positivistic approach, case study; 88T1760 consumer culture definition, theoretical issues, 88T1766 crime causation/prevention/control, communities' role; 3-book review essay, 88T2977 cultural/artistic preferences, USSR, theoretical/empirical methodological issues; 88T2258
 culture, central perspective of sociology, theoretical implications, 88T1220
 development, theoretical/conceptual problems, paradigms, 88T1745
 deviance, contextual analysis; 88S20111
 dichotomies/polarities, social ecology; fieldwork, Friuli-Venezia Giulia region, Italy; 88T1246
 economic sociology vs neoclassical economics, principle/premises, 88T1317
 economics/sociology convergence, theoretical/empirical content compared, 88T1284 education, sex/class differences, capitalist/noncapitalist countries, theoretical issues; secondary data, 88T2310 educational-sociological research, paradigm selection, theoretical issues, 88T2271 migration/immigration, analytical issues, 88T2586 ethics issue, contemporary social science; 88T1209
 ethnic identity/autonomy, ideological constructs, 88T1485
 ethnicity/nationalism, theoretical perspectives, 88T1323
The Ethnomethodological Foundations of Mathematics by Eric Livingston; review essay; 88T2475 ethnoscience theory, Marxist framework, 88T1285 ethnoscience, theory/research issues; book review reply, 88T1223 family historian's duties, Immanuel Kant's ethical philosophy, 88T2711 family therapy approaches, intervention goals/methods framework, 88T2748 friends, theoretical concepts vs individuals' reports, Netherlands, interviews; adults; 88T1380
 future societies, desirable/undesirable aspects, critical long-term planning; 88T3040
 graduate student employee unions, organizing difficulties, theoretical issues; 88T2117
 historical science, reforms, USSR; 88T3023
 human emotions, individual behavior/historical changes, 2-book review essay; 88T1433 human historical change, postmodernist vs Marxist theory, 88S20138 human sociobiology/genetic determinism, theoretical issues, 88T2598 ideology/legitimation, conceptual problems, Jurgen Habermas's work; 88T3012
 justice concepts/claims, theoretical issues; 88T2405
 labor productivity, USSR; conference proceedings, L'viv, Ukraine, 88T1623 language maintenance/shift, English dispersion, social sciences approach; 88T2218 Lebenswelt (daily life) concept; book review essay, 88T1190 legitimation concept, non-Marxist vs Marxist sociological theory, 88T1943

 leisure activity variation, theoretical problems, 88S20092 life-course/household analyses, conceptual/research approaches, literature review; 88T2682 life-cycle analytical framework, French family/peasant culture research; 88T2739 male homosexuality, classical psychoanalytic theory's weaknesses, 88T2653
 management control, labor process theory, "monism" concept critiqued, 88T1596
 Marxian critical theory/Darwinism analogy, 88T1250
 Marxism-Leninism, existentialist-anthropological revisions, Czechoslovakia, 88T3187 micro- vs macrosociology, theoretical/conceptual polarities, 88T1197 morality, Karl Marx's views; book review essay, 88T3186 multinational corporations/cultural diffusion theory, methodological/theoretical issues, 88T1775 music-body relationship; 88T2255 nationalism as autonomous social force, concept critiqued, 88T1954 naturalistic epistemology, theoretical issues; 88T2488 oligarchic inevitability, Roberto Michels's theory critiqued, 88T1310 organizational change, advanced industrial countries, structural-functional analyses; secondary data; 88T1669
 physiologically vs socially grounded emotions; 88T1290 planning processes, Third World societies, conceptual issues; 88T3044 Polanyi, Karl, economic theories critiqued; 88T1077 political science, rational actor approach, theoretical issues, 88T1078 popular religion, "referential" concept, case study; Brittany, France, 88T2380
 postmaterialism, Western industrialized nations, Ronald Inglehart's value change theory critiqued, 88T1107
 Protestant theology, John Calvin's theories, discourse analysis; 88T2398 psychoanalysis, Jurgen Habermas's interpretations, drive/object relations theories, 88T3019 relative deprivation, political development model, theoretical issues, 88T1306 religious history, change evaluation, methodological issues; 88T2381 role definition/interaction, individual/group psychology; 88T1437 rural youth, Poland, sociological research problems; 88T2632 scholarly argument, knowledge institutionalization/textual rationalization, 88T3013
 scientific-technical rationalization/technocratization, US, class/ideological/state organizational factors, case study, National Labor Relations Board's Economic Research Division's elimination; 88T2434 semiotics, recommendations/goals, international semioticians' views; 88T3016 sensitivity to black concerns, Study on the Status of Black Americans, National Black Research Council, reply; 88T1495 social change, social structural regularities/functional integration; 88T1280 social estates theory, Max Weber; 88T1214 social gerontology theoretical/methodological issues; 88T2925 social integration, modern society, systems theory approach critiqued, 88T1295 social norms, empirical analysis methods; 88T1677
 social power relations, pre-1760 AD human societies, book review essay, 88T1322
 social psychiatry, systems theory/holistic concepts, philosophic-integrative perspective, 88T2876
 social psychology, unified theory proposed, 88T1455
 social sciences, imperfect empiricism; 88T1097
 social stratification, empirical vs intuitive approaches, 88T2033 social theory-research relationship, Robert K. Merton's work; 88T1192 social/economic well-being, postindustrial US society, case study, time-series data, 1850-1980; 88T1749 social/ideological progress, socialist society, 88T1314 social/moral relations, self-interest construct, 88T1315
 sociological statistics, theory vs method, theory construction problems; 88T1320
 sociology of knowledge, theoretical issues; 88T3006
 sociology of religion, scientific practice; 88T2354
 sociology research, sociobiology's vs biology's relevance; 88T2597 sociology's current isolation/fragmentation, semiotic revitalization proposed; 88T1217

Technological Innovations

- agricultural innovation, prairie vs Palouse regions, Illinois, kinship ties, 88T2152
- automation/new technology, West German garment industry, international division of labor implications, 88T1789
- economic expansion, technological innovation/human factor, USSR, 88T1307
- health problems, video display unit operators, gender differences, questionnaire, U.K. 1985, 88T1593
- image enhancement, digitalization, reality construction, 88T2511
- image monopolization, computer technology, 88T2513
- image structuralization, computer-based technologies, 88T2507
- innovation diffusion process, generalized models, 88T1157
- labor market, new technologies impact, US, conference report, 88T2506
- new technology adoption, public attitudes, US, interviews, residents, Texas, 88T2512
- optic image production techniques vs digital technologies, image reality changes, 88T1209
- social welfare system, Kuwait, technology/modernization, 88T2504
- technological risk assessment, Third World countries, hazards theory, case study, industrial accident, Bhopal, India, 88T3058
- youth culture, rock & roll music, media technology's role, 88T1873

Technological Progress

- technical systems introduction, political/social contexts, 19th-century Germany, 88T2516
- urban development cycles, technological development, post-WWII GB, 88T2159

Technology

- income/employment/growth, worldwide distribution, information technology, 88T2501
- man-made disasters, irrational behavior response portrayal, print media's perpetuation, content analysis, news magazine stories, US, 1945-1985, 88S20079
- technological curricula, role components/articulation, Israel, textbook analysis, 88T2081

Technology Assessment

- economic development/social structure, scientific research's effects, 88T2493
- international conflict resolution/technology use, US-USSR cooperation potential, Mexican Central American arena, 88T1892
- retiree technoguides, new products/services evaluation, US, 88T2961
- The Second Self: Computers and the Human Spirit* by Sherry Turkle, review essay, 88T2517
- unemployment, high technology innovations; secondary data; 88T2107

Technology Transfer

- engineering education program transfer, Canada-Africa, case study, Ecole Polytechnique de Thies, Senegal, 1970s-1980s, 88T1891

Telecommunications

- computer/communications technologies, decentralization/centralization effects, social integration implications, 88T3028
- mass media communications messages, national/local cultural education vs internationalization, France, 88T1852
- social science information, librarian/public access, telecommunications technology, 88T1144
- television's cultural impact, 3-book review essay, 88T1871

Television

- alcohol problems, US television's portrayal, cooperative consultation intervention method's impact, 88T2894
- career obstacles, female television news anchors' perceptions, US, questionnaire, 1984, 88T2060
- gender equality perceptions, sex differences, symbolic (television) vs social reality realms, interviews, questionnaire, adult Jews, Israel, 88T1862
- newscaster/management relationship, digital images' impact, French television news programs, 88T1840
- television news programs, US, discourse analysis approach; 88T1846
- television's cultural impact, 3-book review essay, 88T1871

Television Viewing

- media use, cable television subscribers, social/psychological factors, questionnaire, midwestern US, 88T1841
- religious knowledge, US, Bible reading, church attendance, radio/television use, national survey, 1978, 88T2364
- religious television viewing patterns/motives, cable subscribers; questionnaire, 88T2350
- social stereotypes of Americans, Taiwan/Mexico; US television programs, questionnaires, university students, 1985, 88T1521
- television soap operas, viewing motivations, questionnaire; undergraduates; 88T1835

- television viewers-characters, parasocial interaction relationship process; questionnaire; undergraduates; 88T1429
- television viewing habits, skilled/unskilled metalworkers, Austria, workplace control; experiment, verbal reports; 88T1859

Tennessee

- public school curriculum, religious pressure, US, court cases, Alabama/Tennessee, 88T2366

Terminal Illness

- life support termination, intensive care nursery, decision-making process, personal experience; 88T2848

Termination of Treatment

- care givers/parents' prognostic conflicts, neonatal intensive care unit; participant observation, interviews; sociology of knowledge perspective, 88T2781
- catastrophically ill newborns, treatment decision making issues, participant observation, interviews; neonatal intensive care unit; 88T2834
- life support termination, intensive care nursery, decision-making process, personal experience; 88T2848

Territoriality

- territory maintenance/small group seat taking, college faculty meetings, Japan; status; participant observation; 88T1355

Terrorism

- international terrorism, US government's support, 88T3109
- state terrorism as US foreign policy tool, Chile/Brazil/El Salvador, 88T3111
- terrorism/information accuracy, television media vs law enforcement agency, New York City; content analysis, interviews, 88T3108

Testimony

- children's testimonial competence, legal proceedings, examination rules/propriety; 88T2609
- competency to stand trial, insanity defense, psychotropically-medicated criminal defendants, constitutional rights violations, US; 88T2868

Tests

- computer-aided instruction, testing/other applications, problems setting up university-level microcomputer lab; 88S20112
- human immunodeficiency virus antibody status, testing results, safe sex strategies, 88T2819

Texas

- community assistance program characteristics, elderly's preferences, San Antonio, Texas; 88T2967
- consumer behavior, subcultural/intraethnic group variations, questionnaire, Hispanics vs Anglo-Americans, Texas, 88T1762
- disciplinary infractions, prison inmates, Texas; prison academic program participation; interviews, experiment, 88T2457
- household immigration, cultural/work-related aspects, Mexicans, southern Texas; ethnographic research; 88T2671
- inmate legal assistance programs, paralegals' effectiveness, Texas, 88T2462
- real estate investment/surplus capital flow, Houston, Texas; economic data, 88T2174
- well-being correlates, Vietnamese women, Texas/Oklahoma, questionnaire; Dallas/Fort Worth, Oklahoma City; 1985; 88T1445

Textbooks

- technological curricula, role components/articulation, Israel, textbook analysis, 88T2081

Thailand

- breastfeeding patterns, ever-married women, Thailand, interviews, 1979, 88T2703
- Buddhism, Southeast Asia, Stanley Jeyaraja Tambiah's works, review symposium, 88T2403
- family planning services/supplies, accessibility measurement issues, rural Thailand; surveys; 1969-1983; 88T2532
- family size preferences, central Thailand; women's economic/work status, 1979; survey; 88T2563
- foreign aid-economic development relationship, Thailand; dependency world systems perspectives; 88T1744
- host language acquisition styles, expatriates, Thailand; longitudinal study; 88T2214
- prostitution, Bangkok, Thailand, cross-cultural cognitive mapping, fieldwork; 88T1462
- rural outmigration plans, Third World countries; microlevel/socioeconomic factors; questionnaire/interview/life history data, villagers, Thailand/Egypt/Colombia; 88T2561

Theater Arts

- traditional theater, women's exclusion, Japan; 88T3116

Theology

- feminist theology, social function/context, US; 88T2385
- Protestant theology, John Calvin's theories; discourse analysis; 88T2398 educational achievement, ethnogenational variation, young adults, Toronto, Ontario; native vs foreign parentage, occupational ambition, parental educational level, survey, 1982, 88T1514 family membership/boundary definitions, postdivorce remarriage families, Toronto, Ontario, 1982, 88T2690 language behavior, Toronto Ukrainians, recordings, interviews, mother 3-year-old child dyads, 88T2213 social networks/recreation patterns, adolescents, neighborhood social mix characteristics, housing type, gender, minority status, census data, interviews, low-income housing residents, Toronto, Ontario, 88T1702 structure security law detainees, physical/psychological abuse, South Africa, in interviews, 88T2413

totalitarianism

political philosophy/totalitarianism, Hannah Arendt's work, 5-book review essay, 88T1992 totalitarian potentialities, 1960/1970s countercultural movements, 88T1806

tourism

foreign students, Italy, university files, interviews, Marche region, 88T2564 tourism research, Yugoslav sociology, 88T1866

towns

federal Community Development Block Grant program, project participation/types, nonmetropolitan settings, evaluation data, 88T3033 toxic worlds/disruption resolution, escape/control issues, nonnative residents, Gillam, Manitoba, participant observation, interviews, 88T3032 toxic substances

inadequate drug testing, drugs prescribed for women, US/Canada/Third World countries, secondary sources, 88T3098

making health hazards, public's perceptions, US mass media's influence/censorship, 88T1874

technological risk assessment, Third World countries, hazards theory, case study, industrial accident, Bhopal, India, 88T3058

voluntary preventive evacuation, potential chemical emergency, public's emergency responders' reactions, survey, interviews, statistics, 88S20125

traditional Medicine

childbirth management, Malay(Malaysia)/Cuna (Panama) societies, myth incantation, tape recording, 88T2832 illness experience, metaphysical/traditional/occult healing groups participation, participant observation, interviews, 88T1412

indigenous plant medicinal remedies, elderly blacks' use, South Africa, interviews, Cape Province, 88T2814

menstruation, doctors'/women's/societal attitudes, 17th century GB, medical records, diaries, 88T3121 modern vs traditional medicine, health care quality, Nepal, 88S20130

traditional health care, black magic beliefs/white magic practices, curandera's role, questionnaire, Mexican-American women, Brighton, Colorado, 88T2858

women ritual healers, Roman Catholic values/women's roles/prestige, Minas Gerais, Brazil, 88T2857 traditional Societies

childbirth management, Malay(Malaysia)/Cuna (Panama) societies, myth incantation, tape recording, 88T2832

childlessness beliefs/childless elderly's status, Tiriki (Kenya) vs Iripwe (Nigeria) tribal groups, fieldwork, 88T2957 circumcision, Masai, Africa, feminist defense, 88T1564

cultural struggles, neocolonialism, Tswana chiefdom, rural southern Africa, book review essay, 88T1550 culture/ultimate reality, anthropologist/subject relationship, Tuba, Sankadi tribe, Zaire, 88T1563 ethnological inquiry, methodological/theoretical issues, 88T1554 female virtue, publicly supported moral values, traditional Chinese state, 88T3126 female's household confinement, Negev Bedouin groups, Israel, 88T3133 historic land law rights, formal legal embodiment, 12th-/13th-century England vs 20th-century East African Busoga tribe primary/secondary data; 88T1312

native religion plausibility, coastal Niwok Indians, California, environmental variation, 88T2392 life definition/interaction, individual/group psychology, 88T1437

social stratification systems, rural Kipsigis/Kikuyu males, Kenya, age, occupation, landownership, interviews, 88T2020

stumbling disease, social/cultural stigmatization processes, California vs island Azorean-Portuguese populations, interviews, 88T2794

Tshidi culture, Botswana/South Africa, colonial encounter, book review essay; 88T1553

Western medical service access, Nigeria, social status; observation, interviews, 88T2779

Traditionalism

age-mating gradient, traditional patterns/current trends, marriage records, Florida county, 88T1452

classic sociological thinkers, reexamination importance, Max Weber's current relevance, 88T1251

conventional household economic theories, feminist critique, 88T2686 family stability preservation, religious/ethnic traditions, US Mennonites, family correspondence, 1874-1901, 88T2954 humor, sexist/nonsexist cartoons, funniness perceptions, male/female college students, traditional/nontraditional attitudes toward women; attitude scale, experiment, dispositional theory of humor tested, 88T1414

Jewish Diaspora/Zionism vs traditional communities, 2-book review essay, 88T1500

The Transformation of Virginia 1740-1790 by Rhys Isaac, review essay, 88T1541

traditional theater, women's exclusion, Japan, 88T3116

traditional/political identities relationship, Israeli Arabs, questionnaire, 1977, 88T1504

Traditions

domestic division of labor, Norway, gender/social class factors; interviews, men, women, 1982, 88T2668

Training

international exchange/training programs, US, 88T2314

Transference (Psychology)

transference/countertransference problems, anthropological fieldwork, psychoanalytic approach, case study, Filipina woman, 88T1074

Transportation

innovation adoption, transportation co-op case, Lafayette, Indiana, census statistics, 88T2509 subway crime, location patterns, Montreal, Quebec, official statistics; 88T2189

Transvestism

sociology of sex, Taiwan vs US, transvestite sexual classification; 88T1248

Treatment

alcoholism concepts/treatment, public opinion, US; interviews, residents Contra Costa County, California, 88T2891

catastrophically ill newborns, treatment decision making issues, participant observation, interviews, neonatal intensive care unit, 88T2834

Treatment Compliance birth control discontinuance, female first-time users, Dominican Republic, communication factors, social characteristics, interviews; diffusion of innovations model, 88T2574 chronic illness adjustment, treatment regimen adherence, diabetic adults, self-care training program; texts, interviews, 88T2802 life-sustaining treatment decision making, elderly, US, court rulings/legislation; 88T2780 life-sustaining treatment decision making, medicine/law partnership, 88T2823 medical problems/care utilization, criminal offenders, identification issues, questionnaire, 88T2879

Treatment Programs

alcohol abuse intervention, treatment modalities; literature review, 88T2921

Alcoholics Anonymous, development/organization/culture/ideology, life histories, 88T2920 alcoholism recovery program, Mariel Cuban refugees, client selection/intervention procedures, 88T2900 diabetes experience, everyday management, interviews, ethnographic research, patients, spouses, 88T1422 drug use, college students' vs drug treatment center residents' attitudes, questionnaire, 88T2911

Gamblers Anonymous, dropout characteristics, Scotland; interviews; program dropouts/continuing members, 88T2890

gang violence, Chicago, Illinois, crisis/surveillance intervention approach, 88T3004

juvenile delinquency/ self-esteem, treatment issues, 88T3193

medical staff/service differences, methadone programs, US; interviews, staff, 88T2887

men's domestic violence treatment programs, court linkage component variability, NC, interviews, program directors/court liaisons; 88T2973 mental patients, compulsory outpatient treatment evaluation; 6-month follow-up, 88S20120 nutritious food behavior, social learning theory model tested; 88T2902

pathological gamblers, personality organization; scales; gamblers, treatment program, Cleveland, Ohio; 1983/82; 88T2919

- Solidarity movement, Poland, social science explanatory limitations, 4-book review essay, 88T1809
- Stalinism, historical-materialist alternative, book review essay, 88T3172
- state, Karl Marx's early views, 88T3183
- stratification/self-placement images, formulation/distortion processes, status-labeling model tested, interviews, Japan, Australia, 88T2018
- stress concept/pathology/process, information model, 88T2865
- suicidal behavior, interpersonal contexts/social reality construction, letters/newspaper analysis, interviews, 88T1360
- temporality, sociological theory, journal issue introduction, 88T1300
- Tshidi culture, Botswana/South Africa, colonial encounter, book review essay, 88T1553
- unemployment consequences, institutional theory, literature review, 88T1622
- urban sociology/culture, 14-book review essay, 88T2202
- war's social origins, sociological analysis, 88T1664
- welfare state development, organizational structure/function, Saudi Arabia, quantitative/other data, 88T1792
- white-collar crime, capitalist societies, symbolic motivational patterns, 88T2972
- wife assault, criminal justice system response, US/Canada, surveys, 88T3094
- women's societal status, social reality paradigms/theoretical traditions, 88T3139
- Theory Formation
- age embeddedness, sociology/society, social control aspects, 88T2955
- citizenship concept, social theory, T. H. Marshall's analysis, 88T1969
- community development theory/activation concept, verbal/graphic model, Poland/US, 88T3038
- complementarity principle, William James's vs Niels Bohr's concept, 88T1098
- Culture, Thought and Social Action: An Anthropological Perspective* by Stanley Jeyaraja Tambiah, book review essay, 88T1540
- economics/sociology convergence, theoretical/empirical content compared, 88T1284
- entitlement/justice conceptions, psychological/sociocultural origins, 88T1406
- ethics issue, contemporary social science, 88T1209
- historicism/social sciences, theoretical issues, 88T1096
- "information state" vs "belief" term, empirical/methodological issues, 88T1073
- job satisfaction, dual factor theory tested, scales, questionnaire, elementary school principals, Israel, 88T1599
- job search outcomes, distant vs close friends as contact persons, 88T1449
- legitimation concept, assent vs consent problem, 88T1272
- machine politics/democracy, Roberto Michels's work, 88T1227
- male vs female adolescent marijuana use, gender-specific origins, deviance theories tested, questionnaire, high school students, US, 1981/82, 88T1466
- national songs/patriotism, Roberto Michels's theory, 88T1201
- nationalism as autonomous social force, concept critiqued, 88T1954
- occupational certification process, societal contract theory framework, GB, participant observation, public health visitor certification program, 88T2055
- role concept, sociology, scientific vs ideological aspects, 88T1538
- semiotics/phenomenology integration, theoretical issues, 88T1271
- social gerontology, theoretical/methodological issues, 88T2925
- social inequality, philosophical/sociological viewpoints, 88T2017
- social justice literature, research agenda, 88T2446
- social sciences, imperfect empiricism, 88T1097
- sociological theory, idealized/unified model, 88S20074
- sociological theory/methodology, micro-macro dilemma, 88T1268
- sociology of religion, Antonio Gramsci's theories, 88T2363
- symbolic interactionism, theory development, 88T1262
- Weber, Max, India/China essays, 88T1194
- Theory Practice Relationship
- actually existing socialism, USSR, Marxist analyses, review essay, 88T1778
- community mental health movement, applied sociology theory, 88T2989
- dichotomies/polarities, social ecology, fieldwork, Friuli-Venezia Giulia region, Italy, 88T1246
- fertility attitude-behavior consistency, US women, social/psychological/demographic factors: 1941 Indianapolis Fertility Survey reanalyzed, 88T2593
- human historical change, postmodernist vs Marxist theory, 88S20138
- knowledge base, social work practice, psychological/psychoanalytical theory, 88T1403
- knowledge classification, social work, 88T3014
- managerial practice, choice/control issues, GB insurance company branches, technological change: interviews, observations, documents, 88T1695
- medical practice systems/psychiatry, monistic therapies' origins, weaknesses, 88T3021
- ordinal time series analysis, ordinal/longitudinal data use, industry applications, 88T1156
- participatory research, epistemology/characteristics, 88T3191
- planning theory/practice conflicts, critical theory applications, 88T3056
- postgraduate career histories, sociology students, Federal Republic of Germany, questionnaire, University of Mannheim, 1981-1985, 88T1175
- social reality, logico-hermeneutic foundation, social science research implications, 88T1075
- social science, nonabsolutist/reflective conceptions, 88T1079
- social theory-research relationship, Robert K. Merton's work, 88T1156
- social work concerns, individual treatment/social reform, feminist integration, 88T3136
- social work practice, feminist perspective, 88T3119
- social work practice, influence strategies, attitude formation/change, 88T2111
- social work practice, rituals' use, 88T3196
- social worker's in-session behaviors, theoretical orientations, clients' problems, scales, clinical social workers, 88T2050
- social workers' practice adaptation, Hong Kong vs West Germany, 88T2064
- socialist development, social sciences' role, USSR, 88T1327
- sociological practice, phenomenological/social construction of reality theories, case study, human relations course, hospital, 88T2792
- sociology as academic vs applied discipline, Yugoslavia, 88T1255
- sociology of religion, scientific practice, 88T2354
- strategic management/business policy, ideological burden, theoretical issues, 88T3207
- Therapists
- social psychological theory/research, Jacob Levy Moreno's contributions, 88T1208
- Time
- duration experience, multiple realities, 88T1276
- temporal worldview differences, males vs females, life history interviews, university students, 88T2633
- temporality issues, Georg Simmel's work, 88T1303
- temporality, social/symbolic meanings, semiotic perspective, case studies, 88T1324
- time, rural community's experience/conceptualization, US, interview, 88T2410
- time/communication patterns, modern information society, 88T1845
- time/transactions, Emile Durkheim's theory, 88T1289
- Time Series Analysis
- female alcoholics, long-term outcome aspects, Norway, interviews, medical/police records, 88T2898
- interactional experiences, everyday life, first-time thoroughness phenomenon, textual readings, Under the Influence film, 88T1469
- ordinal time series analysis, ordinal/longitudinal data use, industry applications, 88T1156
- time-series data nonlinearity test proposed, different approaches compared, 88T1131
- Time Utilization
- experiential time organization, elderly widowers, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, interviews, 1981, 88T2956
- men's vs women's time allocation, nonmarket section, US; published data, 88T3129
- Tocqueville, Alexis de
- psychological analyses, historical figures, source texts' semantic/rhetorical features, semiotic analysis, Alexis de Tocqueville's Recollections, 88T3022
- Tokyo, Japan
- Japanese new dialect forms users, sociopsychological characteristics, metropolitan Tokyo pupils; computational analysis, 88T2227
- Tools
- machine tool industry, constrained development, South Africa, interviews, producers, 88T1732
- Toronto, Ontario
- career aspirations/success perceptions/self-concepts, young black adults, Toronto, Ontario, socioeconomic conditions, racism; interviews, 88T2629
- deprivation perceptions, nonwhite female domestics, definition/management issues, interviews; Toronto, Ontario, 88T1586 paranoid disorders, Russian-language psychiatric literature, US comparisons, literature review, 1974-1983, 88T2882 physician assistant profession's viability, history/current status, US vs USSR, 88T2101 political/social outlook, USSR youth, public opinion polls, 88T2627 post WWII Soviet arms build-up, national economic consequences, 88T1956 production organization/innovation, West Germany/USSR/Yugoslavia, 88T1655

 secondary school education reform, vocational/practical vs classical curricula, USSR, 88T2327 social development/scientific/technological growth, economic policy change impact, USSR, 88T2481 social interaction research, Soviet psychology, 88T1366 social policy development, statistical/quantification issues, 88T1145
 social stratification, lower-level white-collar workers, USSR vs US, 88T2021 social-economic development, working collectives' role, USSR, conference proceedings, 88T1740
 socialist development, social sciences' role, USSR, 88T1327
 societal development, USSR, sociologists' contributions, 88T1758
 sociocultural experience, psychological reproduction mechanisms, USSR economic reform, 88T1549
 socioeconomic growth, material/intellectual factors, USSR, 88T1254 socioeconomic reform, human factor/social norms, USSR, 88T1274
 socioeconomic/scientific-technical progress, subjective/objective factors, socialist society, USSR Communist Party's 27th Party Congress report, 88T1087 Soviet social/political/economic system, Mikhail Gorbachev's reform efforts, article/comments, 88T1458
 teaching quality, university social science departments, USSR, 88T1179
 traditional cultural value/role changes, family policy implications, USSR vs US, 88T2697
 urban to rural migration, USSR, sociodemographic/motivational factors, questionnaire, young adults, Kuybyshev, 88T2131 working class radicalization, Russia, 1905-1917, 9-book review essay, 88T1965 youth ideological formation, USSR, round-table discussion, 88T2647
unionization
 class conflict/collective action, 1918/19 labor revolt, Vancouver, British Columbia, historical case study, 88T2003 coal mining industry unionism, Yorkshire/Nottinghamshire, England, 1980s, Thatcher government labor policy, reform effects, 88S20091 college/university faculty, remuneration, US, unionization, official statistics, 1985/86, 88T2079 graduate student employee unions, organizing difficulties, theoretical issues, 88T2117 unions craft unions, race-based exclusionary practices, political protest, program admission records, apprentice program, 1967-1973, 88T1649 grievance procedures, US postal carrier union members' perceptions/attitudes, questionnaire developed/applied, 88T1585 industrial relations, offshore sectors, union adaptation, GB/Norway, 88T1568 miners' union, reform movement, US, 1972-present, 88S20069 trade union movement history/future development, Chile, 88T1582
 trade union movement, employers' acceptance, Brazil, interviews, 1983, 88T1566
 trade unionism/national characteristics, Canada vs US, 88T1620 trade unions' declining strength, industrialized countries, deregulation, GB/US/Japan/France, 88T1618
 union members/nonmembers, gender/personal characteristics/perceptions/attitudes, US, questionnaire, employees, social service organization, 1979-1984, 88T1650
 unions, new work organization impacts, literature review, case study, Shell Sarnia Chemical Plant local union, 88T1641 unions, public policy, 20th-century Brazil; debate/discussion, 88T2210 white-collar trade unionism, Gujarat, India, democratic structure/functioning, field interviews, 88T2082 women's leadership characteristics, Peruvian/Bolivian labor unions, field research, 1960s-1970s, 88T1602
United Kingdom
 alcohol misuse, policy studies, UK, case study, 88T2886 employment termination dispute adjudication, legal/industrial relations models, UK vs Republic of Ireland, interviews, members, adjudication commissions, Ireland, 88T1632
 hair symbolism, UK/US/Canada, 88T1440
 health problems, video display unit operators, gender differences, questionnaire, UK, 1985, 88T1593

nontraditional careers, female's social/psychological problems, training program implications, UK, 88T1588 police crime detection, use of prison confessions, UK, official data, Merseyside, 88T2452 pornography debate, feminist position, UK, 88T2651
 South Asian (ethnic minority) students, teachers' perceptions/opinions, UK schools, interviews, teachers, middle school, 88T2335
 technological institutionalization, digital computer community, US/UK, social norms, 88T2514
 women's educational opportunities, policy change impact, UK, 88T3122
United States of America absence of localism, US, reply, 88T2011 acquired immune deficiency syndrome, control measures' failure, US, 88T2828 acquired immune deficiency syndrome, virus research, US databank, 88T2784 Afro-American anthropology, disciplinary development, US, 88T1482 aggregate self-employment, US, foreign-born labor force percentage, census, 88T2556 acquired immune deficiency epidemic, coercive state power/educational control responses vs reason/public discourse, US, 88T2786
 Arab-American community, political power, 1880s to present, 88T1503 attitudes toward Americans/US, Jordanian males, information source usage, Q-sort, 88T1902 automobile advertising, industrial workers vs housewives as marketing focus, critique/reply, 88T1767 baby boom generation, future old age needs, US, 88T3046 battered women syndrome, expert testimony admissibility, US trends, 88T3117 beliefs/norms surveys, vignette technique use, GB vs US, 88T1106
 black Americans, status study controversy, structural focus weaknesses, 88T1489
 black immigrants'/black Americans' relationship, subordinate social position, case study, Haitian immigrants, midwestern city, 88T1527
 black scholar participation, Study on the Status of Black Americans' planning, National Black Research Council, 88T1475
 black/Jew relationships, US, early 1960s, primary data, garment industry, 88T1491 black/white racial definitions, US, school desegregation implications, 88T1506 bourgeois nuclear family, modernization impact, US, book review essay, 88T2695 brain drain, Third World student emigration to US, questionnaire surveys, 88T2309 breast cancer, US females, alcohol consumption, longitudinal questionnaire, 88T2859 breast cancer, US women, alcohol consumption, longitudinal interview survey, medical records, 88T2850 business incentive provision, city governments, US; local economic development organizations' survey, official data, local officials, Illinois, 88T3036
 capitalist urbanism, theoretical issues, 2-book review essay, 88T2173 career advancement, male vs female engineers, US, role conflicts, survey, 1981, 88T2080
Casino Capitalism by Susan Strange, review essay, 88T1784
 Catholic priests, social involvement/doctrinal rejection, France/Peru/US, questionnaire surveys, 88T2370 Central American refugee work, Sanctuary Movement, organizational development/strategies/conflicts, US, case studies, 88T1817 changes in fertility plans/expectations, US young adults, 1979-1983, family formation/sociocultural/socioeconomic factors, interview survey data, 88T2649
 child custody laws/concepts, Norway/Sweden, US, 88T2752 cigarette advertising/marketing trends, health promotion program implications, 1974-1985, 88T2807 city planning/working-class housing, reformist approach/urbanism, early 20th century, 88T2182 Class Awareness in the United States by Mary R. Jackman & Robert W. Jackman, book review critique/reply, 88T2015
 class consciousness/formation, conceptual issues, 88T1816
 coal mining labor relations, state intervention's role, GB/US/West Germany/France, 1970s-1980s, 88S20088
 Committee on the Status of Black Americans, National Black Research Council, history/structure, 88T1494
 community mental health movement, applied sociology theory, 88T2989 contraceptive failure rates/abortion underreporting, US women, methodological issues, national survey, 88T2548

- residential child treatment facility, conflict resolution; case study, 88S20122
- residential treatment, Swiss drug addicts, neighbors' reactions, interviews, 88T2907
- violence toward children, US, national surveys, 1975/1985, 88T3096
- Trends
- military spending, public opinion trends, US, age/gender/other factors; national surveys, 1937-1985, 88T1827
- sociology of religion, research trends, Europe vs US, content analysis, journal articles, 88T2362
- Trials
- battered women syndrome, expert testimony admissibility, US trends, 88T3117
- gender discrimination, criminal court trial outcomes, defendants' familial situation, interviews, court records, defendants/court officials, New York City, 1974/75, 88T2408
- Trinidad And Tobago
- divorce, Guyana/Jamaica/Trinidad & Tobago, sociodemographic factors, World Fertility Survey data, 88S20101
- Troeltsch, Ernst
- intellectual dialogue, Max Scheler/Ernst Troeltsch, 88T1221
- Trust
- perceived acquaintanceship/interpersonal trust, Hong Kong/China, questionnaire, 88T1704
- trust, impersonal relationships, social control mechanisms, 88T2110
- Twentieth Century
- black middle class formation/development, US, community perspective, 1899-1981, 88T2006
- Caribbean immigration, US, direct investment's role, official statistics, 1970s, 88T2578
- civil religion, voluntarism, 20th-century US presidents' addresses, 88S20058
- French collective action, 17th century-1984, book review essay, 88T1326
- ideological controversies/science concepts, early 1900s European sociology, Roberto Michels's work, 88T1947
- labor force concentration changes, industrial nations, secondary data, 1920-1970, 88T1746
- modernity critique, 19th-century Germany, cultural values issues, 88T3011
- national development inequality, core/periphery countries, unequal exchange model tested; panel study, 1960, 1975, 88T1794
- new life-course pattern, post-WWII Japan, extrafamilial existence characteristic, 88T2726
- peasants' pluriactivity, France, census/survey data, 1830-1950, 88T2028
- political imagery, 19th century vs 20th century, 88T1909
- population control policy's future effects, alternatives proposed, 20th-century China, primary/secondary data, 88T2546
- radical rightist Julius Evola, lifework, 20th-century Europe, 88T1930
- rural-urban migration, employment patterns, Iran/Egypt, hyperurbanization, 1800-1970s, 88T1752
- social change/urban development, structural/behavioral perspectives, São Paulo, Brazil, official statistics, previous research, 20th century, 88T2208
- social/economic well-being, postindustrial US society, case study, time-series data; 1850-1980, 88T1749
- urban machine politics, 19th-/20th-century US, 88T2797
- urban systems' growth/character, cross-national analysis, 19th/20th centuries, 88T2175
- Typology
- scientific explanation/taxonomy, book review essay, 88T1102
- Uganda
- agrarian crisis/social class formation, accumulation types, Africa, land-holding records, interviews, village households, Uganda, 1983/84; 88T3185
- Underemployment
- black male underemployment, urban underclass, advanced capitalist political economy, post-WWII US census data; 88T1643
- underemployment, metropolitan-nonmetropolitan differences, US; demographic/educational/industrial composition, Current Population Survey; 1980; 88T2138
- Undergraduate Students
- undergraduate admissions procedures, bias against Asian-Americans, elite US universities, official data, 88T2284
- Underground Movements
- totalitarian potentialities, 1960/1970s countercultural movements; 88T1806
- Undocumented Immigrants
- illegal migration, bibliography, 88T2588
- immigrant populations, demographic variables identification, methodological problems, 88T2544
- undocumented Central American immigrants, Houston, Texas, interviews, observations, 88T2581
- undocumented immigration estimation, methodological problems, 88T2570
- Unemployment
- crime rates, US blacks, family disruption-male unemployment relationship, official data, 88T3104
- economic forecasts/unemployment trends, state intervention prop, 88T1640
- employment, youth aged 16-19, GB, family employment characteristics, surveys, 1980/81, 88T2732
- family dynamics, young adolescents' development, parental unemployment, longitudinal survey, families, 88S20081
- global unemployment problem, worldwide economic slowdown/interdependence, journal issue introduction, 88T1636
- government popularity, Sweden, lagged unemployment/inflation effects, methodological issues, case study, 88T1154
- pulp industry plant closure, family economic problems/adjustment strategies, Sweden, interviews, official records, 88T1635
- unemployment conditions/poverty, Italy, 88T1639
- unemployment consequences, institutional theory, literature review, 88T1622
- unemployment insurance system, US, fiscal abuses/other threats, economic analyses since 1935, 88T1580
- unemployment stress, engineers/scientists, transitional vs transaction coping models, interviews, 88T1612
- unemployment/health/mortality, postwar Netherlands, comment, 88T2764
- unemployment, high technology innovations, secondary data, 88T work values/psychosocial development, black adolescents, head-of-household unemployment, questionnaire, midwestern US city, 88T2628
- world unemployment/financial crisis, international debt problem, 88T1777
- Unification Church
- psychological well-being/distress, married Unification Church members, sect-mandated marriages, affiliative ties, questionnaire, interviews, 88T2365
- Union of Soviet Socialist Republics
- confirmed bachelors, USSR, content analysis, letters, 88T2751
- consumer behavior, USSR, questionnaire, adults, Leningrad, 88T cooperative projects, Finland/USSR, 88T1904
- cultural/artistic preferences, USSR, theoretical/empirical methodological issues, 88T2258
- economic expansion, technological innovation/human factor, USSR, 88T1307
- economic reform efforts, public opinion/social science education, USSR, 88T1204
- economic restructuring, university social science department chair son role, USSR, 88T1169
- economy restructuring/social scientists, USSR, conference report, 88T1177
- education reform, 18th-century Russia, Ivan Ivanovich Betskys's work, 88T2286
- education/population mobility, socialist societies, USSR conference proceedings, 88T2274
- ethnosocial processes, nation-building issues, USSR, 88T1522
- family life/parenting, variation/stabilization, USSR, 88T2700
- fictional literature, demand factors, USSR, 88T1847
- Fulbright international educational program, US/USSR, 88T2308
- geographic/professional mobility, youths, Balkan Republics, USSR questionnaire, 88T2631
- group dynamics, bureaucratic agencies, economic reform's impact USSR, 88T1755
- historical science, reforms, USSR; 88T3023
- labor productivity, USSR, conference proceedings, L'vov, Ukraine, 88T1623
- legal studies, USSR, socialist development goals, 88T2420
- means of production/economic reform, social structure's influence USSR, 88T1216
- mental asylum's social functions, peasant economy, late imperial Russia; 88T2866
- national homogamy/heterogamy, USSR; census data, demographic search data; 1959-1979; 88T2709
- nonprofessional legal education, USSR; 88T1850

- lottery ticket buyer characteristics, Canada/US, survey statistics, winners/buyers; 1974-1978; 88T2889
- marital bond, US: changing male/female relationships, questionnaire, scales, married couples; 88T2738
- marriage practices, male-female age differences, US; 88T2677
- masculine/feminine personality attribute clusters, exclusivity, US vs Yugoslavia, psychometric test, university students; 88T1359
- mate selection criteria, gender differences, Indians, US vs India, content analysis, newspaper matrimonial advertisements, 1974-1980; 88T2743
- medical profession organization, history/characteristics, France vs US; 88T2860
- medical staff/service differences, methadone programs, US, interviews, staff; 88T2887
- menopause, medicalization models, US, content analysis, medical specialists' papers; 88T2788
- men's vs women's time allocation, nonmarket section, US published data; 88T3129
- mentally retarded, public policy debate, mid-19th-century US; 88T2871
- migration/psychological stress, West Indian immigrants, US, secondary data; 88T2557
- military spending, public opinion trends, US, age/gender/other factors, national surveys, 1937-1985; 88T1827
- modern North-South international relations, ideological phases, Reagan administration's impact; 88T1890
- multinational corporations, cultural/social structural aspects, US vs Israel, participant observation, interviews, questionnaires; 88T1699
- national opinion consolidation, nuclear-capable ships controversy, New Zealand, national surveys, 1983-1985; 88T1895
- National Research Council's study on status of black Americans, theoretical/methodological weaknesses, political bias; 88T1483
- nationalization decision, British/US/Italian immigrants, Canada, interviews; 88T1935
- negative affirmative action myths, US, federal law, case law review; 88T1575
- New Christian Right movement, resource mobilization explanation critiqued, comment/response; 88T2355
- New Religious Right, US vs Canada, nationalism/body symbolism issues; 88T1975
- New Right's rise, US politics, 1980s; 88T1958
- new technology adoption, public attitudes, US, interviews, residents, Texas; 88T2512
- news media, public attitudes, US, interviews; 88T1858
- nuclear weaponry, development/politics US/GB, 2-book review essay; 88T2515
- occupational social work, industrial settings, US-Mexico border regions; 88T2066
- occupational/intergenerational mobility, West Germany vs US, socioeconomic status/entrepreneurial-bureaucratic dimension, various surveys; 88T2016
- open-/single-minded public space, political/cultural factors, US cities; 88T2207
- osteopathy's divergent evolution, US vs GB; 88T2045
- patriarchy/culture, Yugoslav sociologist Vera Stein Erlich's concepts, US anthropology's influence; 88T3154
- pay inequalities, male-female state/local government employees, political context, official statistics, 1983; 88T2119
- pharmacy careers, motivational factors, native- vs foreign-born students, US/Australia/Canada, questionnaire; 88T2292
- physician assistant profession's viability, history/current status, US vs USSR; 88T2101
- political alienation, US, neo-Marxian models, national survey/census/other data; 88T1940
- political beliefs/behaviors, doctrine- vs denomination-defined fundamentalist Christians, US, CPS National Election Study, 1980; 88T1990
- population growth, 18th-century US cities, social/political impact; 88T2188
- pornography, public controversy, social functions; literature review, US/Canada; 88T2656
- postmaterial values/new environmental paradigm, cultural differences, Japan vs US, surveys; 1983/84; 88T1818
- poverty, rural US counties, geographic factors, census, 1970, 1980; 88T3089
- poverty, social involvement distinctions, Israel vs GB vs US; 88T3087
- practical policy objectives, Populists, US, content analysis, roll-call votes, Kansas State Senate; 1894; 88T1798
- presidential voting, married vs unmarried persons, US, National Election Studies, exit polls; 88T1988
- prison labor markets, inmates' incentive to work; sociodemographic/psychological/institutional characteristics, official statistics, US; 88T2459
- prison rehabilitation programs, inmates' perspectives, US, questionnaire; 88T2449
- problem prisoner management, concentration vs dispersal model, Marion federal penitentiary, Illinois; 88T2463
- Professional Powers. A Study of the Institutionalization of Formal Knowledge* by Eliot Friedson, review essay; 88T2104
- professional role orientation-professional behaviors, US universities, questionnaire, faculty/administrators; 88T2052
- public policy agenda setting, US, 3-book review essay; 88T1960
- public policy strategies, Canada vs US; 88T3054
- public school educational basis, radical diversity/militant pluralism proposed, US; 88T1915
- public view of history/professional history, progressive era vs present, US; 88T3009
- public's image perceptions, newspapers, US, telephone interviews; 88T1805
- qualitative research, computer use, survey; US; 88T1165
- quarantine inefficacy/social control function, acquired immune deficiency syndrome control implications, US; 88T2426
- race issue, Committee on the Status of Black Americans' directorship/research control, National Research Council, US; 88T1526
- racial prejudice, US; authoritarianism-related attitudes, 1982 General Social Survey; 88S20114
- racial prejudice, whites vs blacks, American Creed's moral precepts; survey, 1942-1985; 88T1517
- radical history, future agendas, US/GB perspectives, symposium proceedings; 88T3025
- radical US Protestant thought, language issues; 88T2396
- rape myth beliefs, restrictive beliefs about women's social roles, scales; US, England, Israel, West Germany, 1981-1983; 88T1092
- rape myths, US, questionnaire, college students; 88T1385
- religious vs political legitimization processes, Japan/US; 88T1914
- research on US blacks, National Black Research Council's concerns; 88T1166
- Sandinista revolution, Nicaragua, Reagan administration interventionist policies; 88T1967
- school dropout trends, US; 88T2293
- school system decentralization, community/organizational changes, US, literature review, case studies; 88T2146
- schooling processes/systems, US, 3-book review essay; 88T2328
- second-/third-birth timing, black US women; socioeconomic/demographic variables; Current Population Survey; 88T3159
- sensitivity to black concerns, Study on the Status of Black Americans, National Black Research Council; reply; 88T1495
- sex/love attitudes, US vs Swedish adults; gender, marital status, sexual preference, experiment; 88T1383
- sexual crimes, public panic cycles, 20th-century US; 88T2652
- single family homeownership, American preferences, racial/socioeconomic factors, survey, residents, Syracuse, New York; 88T2199
- single persons, sexual swinging vs lonely stereotypes, US/Australia/New Zealand, questionnaire; 88T1372
- social mobility (observed vs circulation), national patterns; national macrostructural characteristics, data reanalysis, 1962-1978; 88T2034
- social protests, Christian vs nonreligious groups' success rates, post-Civil War US; organizational characteristics; 88T1807
- social service access, elderly Asian Americans, structural/historical/cultural barriers, mid-1800s-present; 88T2947
- social stereotypes of Americans, Taiwan/Mexico, US television programs, questionnaires, university students, 1985; 88T1521
- social stratification, educational/occupational systems, US/Poland/West Germany; 88T2019
- social/economic well-being, postindustrial US society, case study, time-series data; 1850-1980; 88T1749
- social/personal resources, older unmarried persons, US, official statistics, 1987/83; 88T2945
- sociological ambivalence, Eastern European immigrants, 19th-/20th-century US, primary/secondary data; 88T1415
- sociology as religious substitute, US; 88T1339
- sociology of religion, research trends, Europe vs US, content analysis; journal articles; 88T2362
- sociology of sex, Taiwan vs US, transvestite sexual classification; 88T1248
- sociology subspecializations, male vs female representation; American Sociology Association data; 88T1178
- specialization/fragmentation, basic/applied science, universities vs interdisciplinary institutes, US; 88T2485

- contraceptive use patterns, religious/racial group differences, US, surveys, 1955, 1973, 1976, 88T2565
- corporate research laboratories, history/development, 19th-/20th-century U.S., 88T2477
- corporate violations, oil firms, media coverage, archival data; television, newsmagazines, The Wall Street Journal, 1975/76, 88T1854
- coverage scope: US Civil Rights Act, plaintiff's racial status vs defendant's actions: racial content, 88T1499
- crime rate, 20th century U.S. population's age structure, surveys, 88T2984
- criminal behavior, life cycle effects, US, crime rate data, 1964-1978, 88T2975
- criminal offenses/punishment, political context/influences, Norway vs US, 88T2992
- cultural/social vs political/economic pluralism, US, 88T1340
- culture boundedness, US vs British sociological research, context analysis, journal articles, 1965-1985, 88T1187
- current (1984) political beliefs/attitudes, 1960s activists, US, panel data, 88T1957
- current public health statute's outdatedness, model statute guidelines, US, 88T2415
- data collection, foreign immigrants, methodological issues, 88T2531
- decision making, incompetent elderly, ethical issues, 88T2798
- Derrida, Jacques, legitimation process, France/US, 88T2086
- divorce rates, US, church membership/population change/urbanity, census data, 1980, 88T3048
- early fertility decline, US, religious/ethnic/economic group membership, 88T2772
- ecology/science policy, International Biological Programme, US contribution: literature review, 88T3064
- economic well being, independent vs other farmers, male- vs female-headed farms, US, social class/family characteristics, Farm Women Survey, 1980, 88T2151
- economic well being, whites/blacks/Puerto Ricans/Mexicans/Cubans, US, household living arrangement, census, 1970s, 88T1510
- elder abuse, legal protection/enforcement, US, 88T2930
- elderly abuse/neglect, incidence estimation, questionnaire, service providers, Illinois, 88T2953
- electric utility industry, organizational developmental/competition, US, secondary sources, 88T1738
- employment sex discrimination, federal policy development, US, census/statistical data, Marxist feminist approach, 88T1577
- epidemic/disease perception changes, acquired immune deficiency syndrome, 19th-/20th-century US, 88T2846
- equal status, student religious groups, US public schools, court cases, 88T2421
- everyday life/role/identity, immigrant Israeli women, US, 88T1501
- familial assistance patterns, Hispanic/Portuguese/Vietnamese immigrant elderly their children, US, interviews, 88T2929
- family change, media representations, women's magazines vs social science journals, US, content analysis, demographic data, 1935-1975, 88T1857
- family history, naming patterns, US, archival data, Mormons, Utah, 88T2717
- family income differentials, ethnic immigrant groups, US, census data, 1970-1980, 88T1497
- family income distribution, US, 1973-1984, 88T2555
- family medicine, psychohistory/identity, US, participant observation, literature review, 88T2852
- family medicine, research/teaching development, US, 88T2804
- family planning, US, unplanned reproductive events, secondary data, 1970-1973, 88T2525
- family practice, career specialty development, US, 88T2853
- family sex communication, children's attitudes, scale, undergraduates, 88T2757
- fascist movements' profamily ideology, US's susceptibility; literature review, 88T2667
- federal Community Development Block Grant program, project participation/types, nonmetropolitan settings, evaluation data; 88T3033
- female employment/decision-making power, immigrant Iranians, southern California, empirical data, 88T2661
- feminist social theory, US Socialist Party, biological/social evolutionism, late 19th century-WWI, 88T3141
- feminist theology, social function/context, US, 88T2385
- feminization of poverty, US black population, black male earning/employment problems, census data; 1959-1983, 88T3086
- fertility attitude-behavior consistency, US women; social/psychological/demographic factors; 1941 Indianapolis Fertility Survey reanalyzed; 88T2593
- fertility behavior, community-level analysis, US; economic/demographic/social change, post WWII-present, 88T2164
- foreign language instruction, US suburban middle class high school junior high students' attitudes; parental background, sex factor; questionnaire survey, 88T2251
- founding statement, Students for a Democratic Society, US; arch comments; 88T3055
- Fulbright international educational exchange program, multiple sharing relationship, US/Japan; 88T2347
- Fulbright international educational program, US/USSR, 88T2311
- hair symbolism, UK/US/Canada, 88T1440
- health care commercialization, social control mechanisms, US, b. review essay, 88T2854
- health care efficiency/quality, uninsured poor, public vs private hospitals, US, 88T2856
- heterosexual cohabitation patterns, never-married women, US, national interview survey; 1983, 88T2587
- heterosexual relationship types, dependency characteristics, interprevious research, 88T2674
- higher education, ideology transmission vs legitimating phenomena, US, 88T2343
- homeless, US political/policy sources/types/choices, US interview, 1984, 88T2193
- household composition choice, gender differences, income, survey households, US, 88T2714
- housing preferences, US cultural norms, comment/reply, 88T2151
- housing quality, blacks vs whites, US, national surveys, census, 88T2155
- hunger problem, at-risk population, US, 88T3079
- ideological/political sophistication, age, national survey, US, 88T1187
- illegitimate fertility rates, racial differences, US, national statistics, 1980, 88S20071
- immigrant entrepreneurs, US, oppressed/oppressor role, 88T1475
- immigrants, US, Roman Catholic Church's adaptation, 5-book review essay, 88T2356
- immigration, economic consequences, US, secondary data, 88T2531
- imprisonment/jail expansion rates, US, criminal justice reformers' discretionary action, census data, historical survey, 1880-1881, 88T2470
- industrial policies, railroad/military/electronics industries, GB 1 France, 88T1725
- infant males' circumcision, US, social norms, questionnaire, 88T2273
- innate sex roles, husbands' vs wives' beliefs, interpersonal influences, interviews, US, 88T2723
- inter-American understanding, US/Canadian/Latin American philosophical dialogues, 88T3018
- intercultural communication discipline development, US since late 1960s, 88T1897
- international exchange/training programs, US, 88T2314
- international terrorism, US government's support, 88T3109
- Italian stonecutters, US, migration paths/social networks, historical data, 1879-1915, 88T2044
- Japanese-American WWII imprisonment, cultural/personal work impact; longitudinal case study, Nisei female, psychoanalytic approach; 88T1362
- Jewish concerns involvement, Edward Sapir, 88T1244
- Jewish population estimation method, large US metropolitan area census/secondary data, 1980, 88T2583
- job satisfaction/psychological well-being, males, US, workplace gender segregation; interview survey, 1973, 88T1656
- job/spatial mobility, Mexican interior vs border returnee migrants, US, interviews, 88T3074
- judicial sentencing disparities, 20th-century US, historical research methodology/data source changes, 88T2472
- Justice without Law?* by Jerold S. Auerbach, review essay, 88T2472
- labor disputes, US, National Labor Relations Board's arbitration, legal case studies, 88T1603
- labor market, new technologies impact, US, conference report, 88T2506
- Latin American police, US assistance/control, 1898-present documents, oral histories, 88T3110
- legal/nonlegal social control, juvenile justice system, US, court records; California; 1976-1978; 88T2469
- liberal establishment changes, cultural/economic issues, US politics, 88T1994
- life expectancy, nuns vs general female population, Canada vs US statistics, secondary data, 1901-1971, 88T2931
- linguistic politeness, Japanese vs American English request system discernment/volition factors; questionnaire, college students, 88T2220
- Losing Ground. American Social Policy, 1950-1980* by Charles Murray; review essay; 88T1338

- economic welfare, white vs black males, females, urban amenities valuations, national survey, US, 88T2184
- urban policy development, Saul Alinsky's Citizens Action Program, Chicago, Illinois, case study, 1970-1976, 88T1030
- urban social/political modernization, urban architecture's role, Colombia, 88T2206
- Urban Population
- black male underemployment, urban underclass, advanced capitalist political economy, post-WWII US census data, 88T1643
- Chinatown's functional/structural significance, Montreal, Quebec, 88T2166
- domestic violence, urban family, social/political/economic neighborhood conditions, case study, interviews, observations, 88T3095
- medieval Calvinist/Catholic theology/doctrine, effects on urban life, Lyon, France, marriage contracts, archives, 1550-1580, 88T2359
- occupational gender segregation, metropolitan characteristics structure, census, 1980, 88T2041
- private/public urban space, needs/uses, comment, 88T2160
- urban elderly, population distribution patterns, US, 1980 US census, Baltimore, Maryland, Philadelphia/Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 88T2545
- urban homeless, size/composition estimation method, US, interviews, Chicago, Illinois, 1985/86, 88T2196
- urban working class, geographical/social mobility, Italy, archives in interviews, families, Turin, 1858-1961, 88T2010
- Urban Poverty
- urban homeless, size/composition estimation method, US, interviews, Chicago, Illinois, 1985/86, 88T2196
- Urban Renewal
- downtown revitalization, urban marketplaces, Virginia, 88T2162
- Urban Sociology
- capitalist urbanism, theoretical issues, 2-book review essay, 88T2173
- urban sociology, videotaping teaching technique, 88S20075
- urban sociology/culture, 14-book review essay, 88T2202
- Urban to Rural Migration
- urban to rural emigration, USSR, sociodemographic/motivational factors, questionnaire, young adults, Kuybyshev, 88T2131
- urban-rural population movement, causal factors, published data, 88T3031
- Urbanism
- city planning/working-class housing, reformist approach/urbanism, early 20th century, 88T2182
- neighboring, urbanization vs local ecological factors, survey, California, 1977/78, 88T2200
- public space, historical context, precapitalist origins, comment, 88T2198
- suicide rate explanations, US counties, urban vs rural environment, government statistics, 1970s, 88T2768
- traditional consumer-oriented city, Japan, local cultural system/social organization impact, case study, 88T1551
- Urbanization
- Arab/non-Arab labor migration, Persian Gulf Arab Cities, cultural/socioeconomic impacts, 88T2185
- capitalist urbanism, theoretical issues, 2-book review essay, 88T2173
- city physical/architectural features, Louis Wirth's urbanization theory, reinterpreted, 88S20097
- dependent urbanization effects, 18th-/19th-century Charleston, South Carolina, official data, pre-American Revolution trade flows, England/colonies, 88T2201
- European urbanization, 19th century, econometric analysis, 88T2177
- fertility behavior, community-level analysis, US, economic/demographic/social change: post WWII-present, 88T2164
- industrialization/urban society, 19th-century France, 5-book review essay, 88T2178
- internal migration trends, provincial level, Iran; economic conditions, urbanization, censuses, 1956-1976, 88T2576
- modernization/urbanization, financial policy, Quito, Ecuador, official statistics, 1960s-1980s, 88T2165
- paternal responsibilities, father's perceptions, South Africa, urbanization, questionnaire, 1983, 88T2681
- population growth, 18th-century US cities, social/political impact, 88T2188
- recent capitalist development, dependent urbanization, Latin America, 88T2191
- rural-urban migration, employment patterns, Iran/Egypt, hyperurbanization, 1800-1970s, 88T1752
- urban growth, Africa, export activity, maps, 1980, 88T2209
- urban growth, Africa, export agriculture/mining, maps, 1970, 88T1756
- Uruguay
- economic/social problems, Brazil/Argentina/Uruguay/Chile, 88T1991
- Utah
- industrial firm/university research linkages, knowledge/personnel transfer control theory model, questionnaires, department chairpersons, University of Utah, 1984/85, 88T2296
- marital happiness, Provo, Utah, questionnaire, couples, 1955, 1983, 88T2721
- Utilization
- contraceptive nonuse, women's reasons, Asia/Latin America, surveys, 1978-1981, 88T2567
- library facilities use/awareness, women's studies researchers, Lawcett Library, London, England, questionnaire, interviews, 88T3115
- New Christian Right resource utilization/political effectiveness, local vs centralized control, survey data, resource mobilization theory tested, 88S20093
- social service utilization determinants, causal model applicability, elderly Mexican Americans, interviews, 1979/80, 88T2963
- Utopias
- future societies, desirable/undesirable aspects, critical long-term planning, 88T3040
- nostalgia, evolution/characteristics, Western history, 88T1443
- utopias/utopianism, bourgeois ideology, 88T3008
- Validity
- child sexual abuse, fictitious account characteristics, case records, Department of Social Services, Denver, Colorado, 1983, 88T2607
- item banks, theoretical content/construct validity, "mapping sentence" method tested, 88T1136
- job evaluation methods, comparable worth assessment, measurement validity, participant observation, historical review, quantitative analyses, Oregon, 88T1572
- Value (Economics)
- submarket property values, Louisiana, retarded group home presence, official statistics, Shreveport/Bossier City, 88T1765
- Value Neutrality
- ethnic identity/autonomy, ideological constructs, 88T1485
- social theory, value issues, Gunnar Myrdal's views, 88T1207
- Value Orientations
- adult education development relationship, ideological perspectives, 88T2307
- culture, environmental impacts, Western vs socialist societies, historical perspective, 88T1546
- environmental vs economic values, public opinion, Taiwan, survey, 88T3063
- housing aspects evaluations/preferences, Swedish adults, beliefs/values, questionnaire, 88T2181
- housing preferences, US cultural norms, comment/reply, 88T2187
- loneliness, isolation, older people's subjective experience, cultural/subcultural value systems, 88T2943
- materialist vs postmaterialist values distribution, future projections, surveys, West Germany, GB, Netherlands, France, Belgium, Italy, 1970-1985, 88T1823
- moral orientation, rural/urban differences, Poland, questionnaire, residents, Warsaw, rural villages, 1977, 88T1398
- occupational aspirations/values, intergenerational transmission, parental occupational characteristics, 88T1676
- occupational values/aspirations, white vs Eskimo students, Alaska, race, gender, residence, questionnaire survey, 1982, 88T2094
- personal/societal future orientations, male/female adolescents, Singapore/Australia questionnaire, 88T2635
- postmaterial values/new environmental paradigm, cultural differences, Japan vs US, surveys, 1983/84, 88T1818
- prostitution, Bangkok, Thailand, cross cultural cognitive mapping, fieldwork, 88T1462
- school failure, educational goals vs traditional upbringing, Africa, secondary data, 88T2279
- self-actualization goals/values, Canadian adults, family background, socioeconomic attainment survey, 88T1387
- social class structure/culture changes, New Right's reactions, GB, 88T1925
- social work practitioners, religious/professional values integration, negotiation/conflict resolution strategies, 88T2054
- success/achievement value decline, West Germany, age group, educational level, longitudinal surveys, 1956-1981, 88T2025
- traditional cultural value/role changes, family policy implications, USSR vs US, 88T2697

- state autonomy/economic policy, US, neo-Marxist approach, 88T1907
- state terrorism as US foreign policy tool, Chile/Brazil/El Salvador, 88T1111
- status/educational attainment, intergenerational class mobility, Japan vs US, social surveys, 88T2014
- suicide rate explanations, US counties, urban vs rural environment, government statistics, 1970s, 88T2768
- suicide rate, US, gun ownership/availability, statistics, 88T1408
- suicide rates, official statistics' underreporting, sociological/organizational factors, statistical analysis, 88T1427
- suicide, US Army, epidemiological/temporal aspects, official statistics, 1910-1982, 88T1663
- technological institutionalization, digital computer community, US/UK, social norms, 88T2514
- television news programs, US, discourse analysis approach, 88T1846
- temporary worker policy, US, immigration reform process, 88T1919
- theoretical/methodological trends, US sociology, content analysis, American Sociological Review articles, 1979-1987, 88S20070
- trade unionism/national characteristics, Canada vs US, 88T1620
- trade unions' declining strength, industrialized countries, deregulation, GB/US/Japan/France, 88T1618
- traditional cultural value/role changes, family policy implications, USSR vs US, 88T2697
- two party political system decline, US, 88T1937
- underemployment, metropolitan/nonmetropolitan differences, US, demographic/educational/industrial composition, Current Population Survey, 1980, 88T2138
- undergraduate admissions procedures, bias against Asian-Americans, elite US universities, official data, 88T2284
- undocumented immigration estimation, methodological problems, US, 88T2570
- union members/nonmembers, gender/personal characteristics/perceptions/attitudes, US, questionnaire, employees, social service organization, 1979-1984, 88T1650
- urban conditions for blacks, research issues, comment, 88T2203
- urban development, capitalist world economy, specialization, case studies, England/Netherlands/US, 17th-20th centuries, 88T2194
- urban elderly, population distribution patterns, US, 1980 US census, Baltimore, Maryland, Philadelphia/Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, 88T2545
- urban machine politics, 19th-/20th-century US, 88T2797
- US basketball players, Finland, sociocultural problems, questionnaire, interviews, 88S20066
- US health polity, 1981 authority crisis, acquired immune deficiency syndrome epidemic, 88T2815
- violence toward children, US, national surveys, 1975/1985, 88T3096
- voluntary/altruistic independent sector, internal environments/motivational factors, US, 88T1325
- welfare state, Americans' vs Europeans' support, cross-national survey data, 88T1830
- welfare state women relationship, US, family ethic, historical case studies, colonial times-present, 88T3076
- wife abuse, husband's drunkenness/socioeconomic status, interviews, families, US, 88T3099
- women's fitness for managerial roles, US vs Taiwanese business students' perceptions, sex stereotypic attitudes, questionnaire, scale, 88T2318
- women's liberation movement, US, national policy issues, book review essay, 88T3120
- work performance, US vs England, praise/criticism, field experiment, questionnaire, workers, manufacturing industry, 88T1591
- workers' compensation legislation, early crisis/class conflict, US, 1842-1932, 88T1570
- workplace sexual inequality, 5-book review essay, 88T3127
- young adult independent living, marriage delay, US, national longitudinal survey, 1966-1980, 88T2623
- young urban professional group, lifestyle profile, 88T2032
- United States Supreme Court
- polity/rights principles tension, judicial decision making, US Supreme Court, 88T2418
- Universities
- anti-Semitism, selective admissions policies, New York University, 1920s, 88T1518
- educational quality, community colleges vs universities, US, experimental data, students, university/community college, 88T2319
- industrial firm/university research linkages, knowledge/personnel transfer control theory model, questionnaires, department chairpersons, University of Utah, 1984/85, 88T2296
- modernization, Dutch universities, characteristics/problems, 88T2299
- physical education performance, gender differences, social construction of gender vs biological/behavioral explanations, interviews, participant observation, document analysis; Canadian university, 88T3
- professional role orientation-professional behaviors, US universities, questionnaire; faculty/administrators, 88T2052
- specialization/fragmentation, basic/applied science, universities vs interdisciplinary institutes, US, 88T2485
- teaching quality, university social science departments, USSR, 88T1179
- undergraduate admissions procedures, bias against Asian-American elite US universities; official data, 88T2284
- Unwed Mothers
- teenage marriages, success/failure rates, societal attitudes, 88T26
- Urban Areas
- birth control policy changes, political implications, 20th-century S Africa, 88T2529
- crime prevention activism, urban blacks, southern US; selection/mobilization variables, interviews, questionnaire, 88T2974
- crime rates, urban US youth, cohort size, Uniform Crime Report statistics, 1953-1984, 88T2641
- kinship relations, urban females, Lusaka, Zambia, life-cycle stage, education/other factors, interviews, questionnaire, participant observation, 88T1535
- marginal groups, urban Brazil, global economic vs local sociocultural factors, 88T2026
- open-/single-minded public space, political/cultural factors, US cities, 88T2207
- public health problems/solutions, urban health workers' perceptions, China, questionnaires, Shanghai, 1984, 88T2873
- urban crisis/social movement development, Venezuela, government statistics, Caracas, 1970s-1980s, 88T2171
- urban practices/social movements, democratization process, Brazil, 88T2190
- urban rental markets, rent levels, social factors, literature review, census data, US, 1980, 88T2176
- work values/psychosocial development, black adolescents, head-of-household unemployment, questionnaire, midwestern US city, 88T2628
- Urban Crime
- violent-crimes-against-persons offense rates, environmental factors, city-level data, Raleigh, North Carolina, 1972-1981, 88T2979
- Urban Development
- business incentive provision, city governments, US, local economic development organizations, survey, official data, local officials, Illi, 88T3036
- central-city crime rates, suburbanization, census data, 88T2172
- Cities Perceived: Urban Society in European and American Thought, 1820-1940* by Andrew Lees, book review essay, 88T2169
- macrostructure differences, precapitalist villages/postcapitalist cities, Japan, 88T3034
- population growth, 18th-century US cities, social/political impact, 88T2188
- social change/urban development, structural/behavioral perspective, São Paulo, Brazil, official statistics, previous research, 20th century, 88T2208
- social history, 18th-20th centuries, women's roles, 4-book review essay, 88T3168
- Sociology of Urban & Regional Development session, Eleventh World Congress, New Delhi, India, contributions reviewed, 88T1259
- technical systems introduction, political/social contexts, 19th-century Germany, 88T2516
- urban development cycles, technological development, post-WWII, 88T2159
- urban development, capitalist world economy; specialization, case studies, England/Netherlands/US, 17th-20th centuries, 88T2194
- urban development/population boom, São Paulo, Brazil, since late 19th century, 88T2168
- urban ecological structure, Taiwan, city size, economic development, 88T2167
- urban growth, Africa, export activity; maps, 1980, 88T2209
- urban growth, Africa, export agriculture/mining, maps, 1970; 88T1756
- urban growth/problems, central government political situation, Bolivia, 88T2192
- urban systems' growth/character, cross-national analysis; 19th/20th centuries, 88T2175
- urban-rural movement, Japan, social/economic effects; 88T2163
- Urban Education
- decision making/conflict resolution, school organizations, US, desegregation, ethnographic study, teachers/administrators, urban middle school, 88T2322
- Urban Policy

sex-related attitudes, US government employees, workplace justice/fairness perceptions, questionnaire, Washington, DC/Illinois/Michigan/Ohio, 88T1665

Washington (State)

criminal punishment, whites vs nonwhites, U.S. county records, Washington, 88T2443 emergency medical ambulances, service provision, distribution/organizational problems, case study, Washington, DC, 88T2824

Water Supply

water pollution control legislation, political/economic interests, class struggle perspective, testimony, US Senate hearing witnesses, 88S20134

Wealth

extreme wealth, haves/haves-nots relationship, comics' representation, US content analysis comic strips, 1944-1984, 88T1867

Weber, Max

classic sociological thinkers, reexamination importance, Max Weber's current relevance, 88T1251

correspondence/shared interests, Max Weber/Roberto Michels, 1906-1914, 88T1953

Japanese/Chinese industrialization, Max Weber's institutional approach, 88T11731 function, capitalist mode of production, Weberian vs Marxist theories, 88T2425

Mississippi significance, medieval/Reformation Europe, Weberian approach, 88T1267

Max Weber Gesamtausgabe, 2-volume review essay, 88T1247

modernity, power structure changes, Max Weber's views critiqued, 88T1278 monopoly/competition, power in society, Max Weber's theories, 88T1288 vs Weberian sociology, historical-comparative approach, Margaret Archer's work, 88T1253

sof estates theory, Max Weber, 88T1214

sociology of culture, turn-of-the-century Germany, Max Weber's & Georg Simmel's intellectual relationship, 88T1237

Weber, Max, India/China essays, 88T1194

Welfare Policy

family allowance policies/program, Australia vs Canada, political context, case studies, 1940s, 88T2758

Working Ground: American Social Policy, 1950-1980 by Charles Murray, review essay, 88T1338 public assistance policy-making system, Japan, interorganizational relations, case studies, 88T1673

social security system, inferior services/benefits, rural workers, Brazil, 88T2146

social welfare system, Kuwait, technology/modernization, 88T2504

culture reform, three-dimensional agenda, 88T2986 work requirements, entitlement programs, book review essay, 88T3084

Welfare State

modern democratic welfare state, citizen expectations, West Germany survey, 88T1970

social democracy-state relationship, labor/school reform policies, Sweden, case studies, 88T1644

strong vs soft welfare states, historical divergence, Sweden/Netherlands, post-1975, 88T1337 scholar state development, organizational structure/function, Saudi Arabia, quantitative/other data, 88T1792 scholar state ideological orientations, province-level government, case study, legal aid programs, Canada, 88T1952 scholar state, Americans' vs Europeans' support, cross-national survey data, 88T1830 welfare states' health policies, recent reform, Western Europe, 88T2818 welfare/state's role, public opinion/service users' attitudes, GB, surveys, interviews, 1980s, 88T1831

Well-Being

achievement/psychological well-being, physical attractiveness, national survey, 88T1444 children's well-being, post-marital dissolution, continued paternal involvement, interviews, National Survey of Children (ages 11-16), 1981, 88T2602 friendship/mental health, small group interventions, 88T1349

job satisfaction/psychological well-being, males, U.S. workplace gender segregation, interview survey, 1973, 88T1656

job satisfaction/self-esteem/well-being/stress, male workers, West Germany, job characteristics, questionnaire, 88T1573 long term care decision making, elderly, advance planning advantages, 88T2928 parents' self-reported well-being, parent-adolescent conflict, adolescents' self-reported emotional autonomy, questionnaire, 1985, 88T2639 psychological well-being/distress, married Unification Church members; sect-mandated marriages, affiliative ties, questionnaire, interviews, 88T2365

psychological well-being/mortality relationship, middle-aged men, Canada; longitudinal survey, 1959-1978, 88S20087 psychosocial well-being, retired black males, Prince George's County, Maryland, psychometric instruments, interviews, 88T2933

well-being correlates, Vietnamese women, Texas/Oklahoma, questionnaire, Dallas/Fort Worth, Oklahoma City, 1985, 88T1445

well-being, elderly, Sydney, Australia, social interaction quality/quantity, structured interviews, 88T2934

well-being, racial differences, elderly home-based services recipients, structured interviews, Cleveland, Ohio, 88T2938

well-being, white working males, social status mobility, survey, 1978, 88T2528

Western Civilization

nostalgia, evolution/characteristics, Western history, 88T1443

Western rationalism, Wolfgang Schluchter's evolutionary functional theory critiqued, book review essay, 88T1095

Western Europe

data collection, foreign immigrants, methodological issues, 88T2531

guest-workers, migratory process, West European countries, 88T1583 international migration movements, Western Europe, governmental influence, 88T2569 language policy, Wales/Brittany/Friesland, process model developed, 88T2248

materialist vs postmaterialist values distribution, future projections surveys, West Germany, GB, Netherlands, France, Belgium, Italy, 1970-1985, 88T1823

New Left social movements, North America/Western Europe, post-1960s emergence, 88T1813

political administrative institutional changes, socioeconomic/territorial factors, Western Europe, 88T1717

welfare states' health policies, recent reform, Western Europe, 88T2818

Western Society

environmental problems, Western societies, Christian philosophy/technological solutions, 88T3065 family organization/mating patterns, Western industrial vs West Indian societies, 88T2672 labor relations/economic changes, Western industrialized nations; official statistics, secondary data, 1970s-1980s, 88T1653

legitimation, ideological breakdown, democratic societies, 88T1931

political behavior/social class relationship, working class/non-working class dichotomy accommodation, model proposed, secondary data, 88T1934

postmaterialism, Western industrialized nations, Ronald Inglehart's value change theory critiqued, 88T1107

social class structure/power, nobility vs bourgeoisie, Belgium, industrialization, historical case study, 18th/19th centuries, 88T1722

strong vs soft welfare states, historical divergence, Sweden/Netherlands, post-1975, 88T1337

Western States

migration, nonmetropolitan areas, US, labor structure changes, census data, Washington, Oregon, 88T2534 minority related service activities, Chicano faculty participation, postsecondary educational institutions, southwestern US, questionnaires, 88T2042

White Collar Crime

business malfeasance coverage, general public vs elite media, US, content analysis, crime stories, 1974-1984, 88T3206

white-collar crime, capitalist societies, symbolic motivational patterns, 88T2972

White Collar Workers

humanization of work, professional identity improvement, Switzerland, survey, white-collar workers, 88T1613

new middle class's problems, Finland, autobiographies, white-collar workers, 1985, 88T2030

opportunity/status inequalities, white-collar occupations, Hungary, 88T2036

social stratification, lower-level white-collar workers, USSR vs US, 88T2021

white collar trade unionism, Gujarat, India, democratic structure/functioning, field interviews, 88T2082

Whites

alcohol consumption, whites, South Africa; interviews, 1982, 88T2914

business foundings/success/turnover, Asian/white shopowners, England, family/friendship ties, 88T1710

- value orientations/materialism, native-born vs immigrant West Germans, national questionnaire survey, 1984, 88T2524
- Values
 - axiology, legal science, 88T2428
 - psychology, value problems, 88T1394
- Vancouver, British Columbia
 - class conflict/collective action, 1918/19 labor revolt, Vancouver, British Columbia, historical case study, 88T2003
 - labor market segregation/political practices, working classes, Vancouver, British Columbia 1900-1939; 88T2004
- Variance (Statistics)
 - covariance structure models, goodness-of fit approach assessment, 88T1160
 - structural modeling, covariance analysis, methodological issues, 88T1127
- Venezuela
 - urban crisis/social movement development, Venezuela, government statistics, Caracas, 1970s-1980s, 88T2171
- Verbal Communication
 - Alzheimer's disease experience, grammatical constructions/theoretical approaches, 88T2835
 - verbal conflict management, US families, videotapes, family dinners, 88T2755
 - verbal family interactions, adolescents/parents, gender, observations, audiotapes, family discussion, normal/psychiatric settings, 88T2693
- Verstehen
 - discourse/conversation analytic models, scientific conferences, 88T2490
 - self-narratives/autobiographies, constructivist approach, 88T1369
 - social identities, unknown deceased persons, police detectives' interpretations, observations, southeastern US, 88T2465
- Veterans
 - individual participant citizenship, long term military service, interviews, veterans/civilians/active-duty personnel, US, 88T1659
- Victimization
 - adolescent illicit drug use, US, child physical/sexual abuse, interviews, juvenile center detainees, 1984, 88T2621
 - criminal victimization, social differentiation, methodological issues, errata, 88T2978
 - violent-crimes-against persons offense rates, environmental factors, city-level data; Raleigh, North Carolina, 1972-1981, 88T2979
- Victims
 - Alzheimer's disease victims, caregivers' special needs, interviews, 88S20103
 - inadequate drug testing, drugs prescribed for women, US/Canada/Third World countries, secondary sources, 88T3098
- Victorian Period
 - mortality patterns, Victorian England, regional/age/environmental factors, official data, 88T2594
- Videotape Recordings
 - music videos, epistemological content, content analysis, broadcasts, Denver, Colorado, 88T1868
 - television's cultural impact, 3-book review essay, 88T1871
 - urban sociology, videotaping teaching technique, 88S20075
- Vienna, Austria
 - participation motivations, joggers vs slow runners, Vienna, Austria, questionnaire, 88T1421
- Villages
 - females' status, rural Punjabi village, Pakistan, observation/interview/other data, 88T2735
 - primitive peasant economy, rural India, exchange typology, 88T2124
 - pub use, working- vs middle-class women, English village, fieldwork research, 88T1542
- Violence
 - criminal violence, prison inmates; family attachment/relationships, court files, indices, 88T2983
 - dating relationship violence, high school students, questionnaire; Sacramento, California, 88T2634
 - dating relationship/physical aggression, aggressor/victim role, males vs females, questionnaires; university students; New York; 88T2663
 - gang violence, Chicago, Illinois, crisis/surveillance intervention approach; 88T3004
 - masculinity concepts/violence, national service conscription, GB; personal experience, secondary data, 1945-1963; 88T1416
 - violence in dating relationships, gender differences; questionnaire survey, college students; 88T3106
 - violent behavior-socioeconomic status relationship, class-vs ecological-level theories; literature review; 88T3105
 - violent offenders, personality dimensions, violent offense prediction; questionnaires, convicts, federal prison, Albertu; 88T2976
 - violent subcultures, regional differences; gun ownership; general sex surveys, males, 88T3093
 - violent-crimes-against-persons offense rates, environmental factors, city-level data, Raleigh, North Carolina, 1972-1981; 88T2979
- Virginia
 - downtown revitalization, urban marketplaces, Virginia, 88T2162
 - elderly's nutritional habits, positive/negative behavioral changes, future time perspective, demographic/social conditions, questionnaire interviews, food diaries, observations, Virginia, 88T2960
- Visitation
 - parental visiting patterns, foster children, agency/worker practices, records, Illinois, 88T2612
- Visual Arts
 - network analysis, computer graphics technology, 88T1112
- Visual Sociology
 - visual images, verbal environment/captions, constructivist approach 88T3211
- Vocational Education
 - potential industrial workers' self-definitions/expectations, Belgium training level/type, attitude questionnaire; 88T2289
 - secondary school education reform, vocational/practical vs classical curricula, USSR, 88T2327
 - vocational school reorganization, Estonia, labor force development 88T2698
 - vocational training/public policy, Italy, 88T2297
- Vocational Rehabilitation
 - quality of working life, heart attack patients, job characteristics, psychosocial rehabilitation, questionnaires, 88T2833
- Voluntarism
 - civil religion, voluntarism, 20th-century US presidents' addresses, 88S20058
 - voluntary preventive evacuation, potential chemical emergency, public's/emergency responders' reactions, survey, interviews, statistics 88S20125
 - voluntary/altruistic independent sector, internal environments/motivational factors, US, 88T1325
- Volunteers
 - Peace Corps volunteer experience, Ghana, subsequent life/career effects, case study, 88T1747
 - retiree technoguides, new products/services evaluation, US, 88T296
- Voting Behavior
 - forecasting accuracy, Delphi methods, general election predictions experiment, university students, California, 1980, 88T3043
 - human rights voting, US Congress, party identification, national security views, vote analysis, 1977-1984, 88T1932
 - political behavior/social class relationship, working class/non-working class dichotomy accommodation, model proposed, secondary data 88T1934
 - presidential voting, married vs unmarried persons, US, National Election Studies, exit polls, 88T1988
 - voters' candidate-orientedness, US presidential elections, television National Election Studies, 88T1849
 - voting behavior, party preference, residential/gender/age/occupational factors, panel survey, Lisbon, Portugal, 1976-1982; 88T1977
 - voting decisions, poll results' influence, case study; West Germany 88T1828
- Wages
 - employee motivation, wages' function; Polish perspective, 88T1719
 - public health, sick pay issue, Hungarian perspective; 88T1571
 - sharecropping/wage labor transition, southern US, internal/external socioeconomic factors, official statistics, secondary data, 1930-1988T1737
- Wales
 - alimony/child support system, England/Wales; 88T2451
 - urban suicides rates, 19th-century GB/Wales, industrialization, statistics; 88T1537
- Wallerstein, Immanuel Maurice
 - Wallerstein, Immanuel, personal interview; 88T1256
- War
 - modern warfare, socialist theory's validity; newspaper reports, 1948-1967; 88T1894
 - war's social origins, sociological analysis; 88T1664
- Warsaw, Poland
 - distribution of goods, social preferences; interviews; men, Warsaw, Poland; 1979; 88T1833
- Washington, D.C.

Worker Control

autonomous work groups, Yugoslav factory, sociological aspects, questionnaire, workers, 88T1581

autonomous working groups, Yugoslavia, qualitative research methodology, 88T1628

semi-managed firm's future impact, capitalist/socialist countries, 88T3208 television viewing habits, skilled/unskilled metalworkers, Austria, workplace control, experiment, verbal reports, 88T1859

Worker Machine Relationship

machine politics/democracy, Roberto Michels's work, 88T1227

Worker Participation productivity suggestions, motivational factors, Polish workers, questionnaire, 1982, 88T1624

Workers

economic expansion, technological innovation/human factor, USSR, 88T1307

employee motivation, wages' function, Polish perspective, 88T1719

intergroup relations, paper factory, social-psychological theories tested, interviews, scales, England, 88T1668

productivity suggestions, motivational factors, Polish workers, questionnaire, 1982, 88T1624

small-scale industries, workers' socioeconomic characteristics, India, interviews, Calcutta, 1979/80, 88T1748

well-being, white working males, social status mobility, survey, 1978, 88T2528

worker alienation, socialist states, bourgeois critique refuted, 88T1631

Workers Compensation Insurance athletic scholarship, employment-like conditions, workman's compensation eligibility, court case, Indiana, 1982/83, 88T1887

workers' compensation legislation, early crisis/class conflict, US, 1842-1932, 88T1570

Working Class

Bulgarian sociology, historical development, 88T1211

everyday consciousness development, working class, socialist societies, 88T1471

labor market segregation/political practices, working classes, Vancouver, British Columbia, 1900-1939, 88T2004

marginal groups, urban Brazil, global economic vs local sociocultural factors, 88T2026

political behavior/social class relationship, working class/non-working class dichotomy accommodation, model proposed, secondary data, 88T1934

sub use, working- vs middle-class women, English village, fieldwork research, 88T1542 urban working class, geographical/social mobility, Italy, archives, interviews; families, Turin; 1858-1961; 88T2010 working class families, Portugal, bibliography, 88T1634

working class radicalization, Russia, 1905-1917, 9-book review essay, 88T1965

working class social groups, rural India, fieldwork, Dhanbad, Bihar State, 88T2012

Working Hours

work time flexibility, commercial firms, micro-/macroeconomic impacts, 88T1627 work week reduction, Netherlands, worker reactions, 88T1590 work-time preferences, dual-earner couples/parents, US, survey, 1977, 88T2724

Working Women

automation/new technology, West German garment industry, international division of labor implications, 88T1789

autonomous female migration, Chicago, Illinois, motives/outcomes, 1880-1930, 88T3135 children with working mothers/child care trends, US, census data, national surveys, 88T2605

children's self-care, US, child's age, mother's employment, questionnaire, 88T2615 deprivation perceptions, nonwhite female domestics, definition/management issues, interviews, Toronto, Ontario, 88T1586

economic well-being, independent vs other farmers, male- vs female-headed farms, US, social class/family characteristics, Farm Women Survey, 1980, 88T2151

employed women's spousal support, path model developed, 88T1614

employment sex discrimination, federal policy development, US, census/statistical data; Marxist-feminist approach, 88T1577 family life/job satisfaction, Hispanic vs Anglo women, southern US, questionnaires, 88T1589

family size preferences, central Thailand, women's economic/work status, 1979; survey, 88T2563

female entrepreneurs' business characteristics, Travis County, Texas; personal social/psychological factors, questionnaires, 88T2068 female labor force participation, native- vs foreign-born Canadian women, dominant/subordinate group relations, census data; 1911, 1971; 88T1488

feminist movements, Brazil; first-person narrative, 88T2725

friendship growth/development, exchanged resources' type/similarity, questionnaire, female nursing students, Sweden, 88T1442

husbands' vs wives' relative authority, single-career vs dual-career couples, India; questionnaire, 88T2742 job evaluation methods, comparable worth assessment, measurement validity, participant observation, historical review, quantitative analyses, Oregon, 88T1572

men's vs women's time allocation, nonmarket sector, US, published data; 88T3129 millgirls' identity elaboration, literary activities' impact, Lowell, Maine, autobiographies, 19th century, 88T3142 minority women's employment, GB/Federal Republic of Germany; capital's profitability strategies, 88T1637

occupational gender segregation, metropolitan characteristics/structure; census, 1980, 88T2041

occupational sex-roles/US railroading, institutional/job-intrinsic factors, statistics, previous research, 1969-1986, 88T2062

pay inequalities, male-female state/local government employees, political context, official statistics, 1983; 88T2119

public day care policies, Quebec, 1970s vs 1980s, statistics, government regulations, 88T1601 retirement planning, women's needs, 88S20121

suicide, female labor force participation's impact, theoretical issues, 88T1435

temporary/part-time warehouse worker recruitment, women's predominance, reserve army of labor explanation case study, mail order industry, GB, 1983-1985, 88T1587 unequal incorporation of women, Brazilian labor force, census data, Marxist-feminist perspective, 1972-1982, 88T1646 women in police service, affirmative action, questionnaire, US police chiefs, 1981, 88T3153

women's fitness for managerial roles, US vs Taiwanese business students' perceptions, sex stereotypic attitudes, questionnaire, scale; 88T2318

women's labor force participation, Poland, 1950-1985, 88T3138

women's leadership characteristics, Peruvian/Bolivian labor unions; field research, 1960s-1970s, 88T1602

women's market sector participation, sociodemographic correlates, Honduras, interviews, households, Morocco, 88T3123

women's migration, political/economic/social issues; UN panel discussion, 88T3160

women's salaried/domestic work, social changes, Canada, literature review, 88T1615

women's subordination, social welfare labor process, literature review, census data, US, 1920-1984, 88T2057

women's underachievement, British civil service, 88T3112

work-time preferences, dual-earner couples/parents, US, survey, 1977, 88T2724

workplace sexual inequality, 5-book review essay, 88T3127

Workplaces

distress causes, gender differences, US; workplace conditions; survey; employed adults, 1971-1975, 88T1405 goal-setting strategies, workplace, Israel, working environment's sociocultural values, experiment, supervisors, kibbutz/public/private sectors, 88T1592

home-based workforce, measurement problems, US, 88T1638 television viewing habits, skilled/unskilled metalworkers, Austria; workplace control, experiment, verbal reports, 88T1859

World Economy

Casino Capitalism by Susan Strange, review essay, 88T1784

global unemployment problem, worldwide economic slowdown/interdependence, journal issue introduction, 88T1636

income/employment/growth, worldwide distribution, information technology, 88T2501

international employment competition, 88T1899 international migration flows, European Economic Community countries, demand-determined approach, official data, 88T2585 people/race/nation/ethnic group concepts, capitalist world, economy roles, 88T1986

Third World development, state class control; 88T1781

urban development, capitalist world economy, specialization; case studies, England/Netherlands/US; 17th-20th centuries; 88T2194

urban systems' growth/character, cross-national analysis; 19th/20th centuries; 88T2175

- Indian students, white family foster placement, socioeconomic consequences, southwestern US interviews, questionnaire, Indian students/parents/foster parents, 1982, 88T2285
- structural characteristics/values, economically disadvantaged families, Oscar Lewis's subculture of poverty thesis tested, interviews, black/white/Hispanic female homemakers, 88T2708
- well-being, white working males, social status mobility, survey, 1978, 88T2528
- white enrollment changes, school desegregation, critique/reply, 88T2342
- white long-term residents, US, sociodemographic characteristics, 1977-1980 national surveys, 88S20135
- Whyte, William Foote
sociology/anthropology/industrial relations, William Foote Whyte's contributions, 88T3192 solving human problems, William Foote Whyte's "social inventions" concept, 88T3203
- Widowhood
"contacts with the dead," widows/widowers, national survey, 1984, 88T2776
experiential time organization, elderly widowers, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, interviews, 1981, 88T2956 poverty experiences, widowed males vs females, age/sex/other factors, comment/reply, 88T3085 religious involvement, elderly Kurdish Jewish women, Jerusalem, Israel, widowhood, fieldwork, 88T3147 survival rates, widowed vs married persons, literature review, 88T2775
- Wirth, Louis
city physical/architectural features, Louis Wirth's urbanization theory reinterpreted, 88S20097
- Wisconsin
institutional/post release adjustment, state prison inmates, group therapy participation, experiment, Wisconsin, 88T2453
- Witnesses
battered women syndrome, expert testimony admissibility, US trends, 88T3117
- Wittgenstein, Ludwig Joseph Johann
sociology's "Strong Thesis," Ludwig Wittgenstein's analysis, 88T1094
- Wives
contraceptive-use failure/continuation, married women, method, users' age/race/motivation, National Survey of Family Growth, 1973, 1975, 88T2765
- Wolff, Kurt Heinrich
field researcher experience, Kurt H. Wolff's surrender/catch theory, methodological issues, 88T1105
- Women's Education
kinship relations, urban females, Lusaka, Zambia, life-cycle stage/education/other factors, interviews, questionnaire, participant observation, 88T1535 library facilities use/awareness, women's studies researchers, Fawcett Library, London, England, questionnaire, interviews, 88T3115 women's educational opportunities, policy change impact, UK, 88T1122
- Women's Rights
male dominance/feminist strategies, sociocultural differences, Latin America vs US, 88T3137 poor women/children, 19th-century voluntary benevolent association, Isabella Graham's/Joanna Bethune's work, 88T3113
women's labor force participation, Poland, 1950-1985, 88T3138
women's liberation movement, US, national policy issues, book review essay, 88T3120
- Work Attitudes
humanization of work, professional identity improvement, Switzerland, survey, white-collar workers, 88T1613
job-related attitudes, US government employees, workplace justice/fairness perceptions, questionnaire, Washington, DC/Illinois/Michigan/Ohio, 88T1665
occupational aspirations/values, intergenerational transmission, parental occupational characteristics, 88T1626
Protestant work ethic beliefs, family similarities, GB, demographic/psychographic factors, questionnaires, 88T1597 subjective job involvement, gender differences, national longitudinal survey, 1972/1977, 88T1621 work commitment, female high school seniors, US, sex-role attitudes/other variables, survey, 1982, 88T1567
- Work Environment
employee absenteeism, illness legitimations, work situation, interviews, 88T1604 goal-setting strategies, workplace, Israel, working environment's sociocultural values, experiment, supervisors, kibbutz/public/private sectors, 88T1592
health problems, video display unit operators, gender differences, questionnaire, UK, 1985, 88T1593
subjective job involvement, gender differences, national longitudinal survey, 1972/1977, 88T1621
work environment, axionormative systems, Poland, questionnaire workers, 88T1600
- Work Experience
high school students' work experience, predictors/effects, national longitudinal survey data, 88T1616 retirement attitudes/timing, gender differences, occupational position, marital status, Retirement History Study, 88T2939 social workers' practice adaptation, Hong Kong vs West Germany, 88T2064
- Work Groups
work group quality circles, intervention issues, questionnaire survey, electronics manufacturing firm, 88T1565
- Work Humanization
autonomous working groups, Yugoslavia, qualitative research methodology, 88T1628
humanization of work, professional identity improvement, Switzerland, survey, white-collar workers, 88T1613
work environment, axionormative systems, Poland, questionnaire workers, 88T1600
- Work Leisure Relationship work/leisure time changes, 1963-1977, Hungary, official statistics, 88T1713
- Work Organization
alienation, social service organization employees, organizational structure, interviews, 88T1679
autonomous work groups, Yugoslav factory, sociological aspects, questionnaire, workers, 88T1581
autonomous working groups, Yugoslavia, qualitative research methodology, 88T1628
business organizations, general systems theory approach, 88T3197
humanization of work, professional identity improvement, Switzerland, survey, white-collar workers, 88T1613 job stress/burnout, correctional officers, Alabama, organizational factors, questionnaire, 1984, 88T2090 organizational life, economic issues, book review essay, 88T1795
power/disciplinary methods, work organizations, 88T1574
procedural justice, work organizations, literature review, 88T1674
production organization/innovation, West Germany/USSR/Yugoslavia, 88T1655 psychiatric services' decentralization, Italy, nurses' responses, observations, interviews, questionnaire, Bologna, 1980, 88T2123 unions, new work organization impacts, literature review, case study, Shell Sarnia Chemical Plant local union, 88T1641 white-collar work organization, microcomputer technology effects, interviews, employees, 4 large corporations, 88T1598 work organization/production strategies, clothing industry observation, 88T1595
- Work Orientations
job satisfaction/self-esteem/well-being/stress, male workers, West Germany, job characteristics, questionnaire, 88T1573
production organization/innovation, West Germany/USSR/Yugoslavia, 88T1655
- Work Skills
peasants' pluriactivity, France, census/survey data, 1830-1950, 88T2028 social work intervention, "shadow consultation" method, industrial management applications, case study, 88T3198 television viewing habits, skilled/unskilled metalworkers, Austria, workplace control, experiment, verbal reports, 88T1859
- Work Values
technical/engineering work, males' vs females' subjective experience, questionnaire, 88T2046
work environment, axionormative systems, Poland, questionnaire workers, 88T1600
work values/psychosocial development, black adolescents, head-of-household unemployment, questionnaire, midwestern US city, 88T2628
- Worker Attitudes
class consciousness, workers, job characteristics, questionnaire survey, communications industry, New Jersey/New York, 88T2037 job-related attitudes, US government employees, workplace justice/fairness perceptions, questionnaire, Washington, DC/Illinois/Michigan/Ohio, 88T1665
union members/nonmembers, gender/personal characteristics/perceptions/attitudes, US, questionnaire; employees, social service organization; 1979-1984, 88T1650

Lengthening our stride with

- ▶ New, improved online loads ◀
- ▶ Revised and expanded user aids ◀
- ▶ Note Us — quarterly newsletter ◀
- ▶ New, online users training sessions ◀ sociological abstracts, inc.

P.O. Box 22206 • San Diego, CA 92122-0206
(619)565-6603

Publishers of Sociological Abstracts (sa), Language and Language Behavior Abstracts (LLBA), and Social Welfare, Social Planning/Policy & Social Development (SOPODA). In print and computerized services. Sociological Abstracts, Inc.

World Population

- foreign immigration, Italy, worldwide migration patterns' implications, statistical statistics; 88T2533
- global unemployment problem; worldwide economic slowdown/interdependence; journal issue introduction; 88T1636
- world unemployment/financial crisis, international debt problem, 88T1777

World Problems

- civilization/world systems, definitions/historical processes, 88T1793
- global problems' creation/solution, science's role, socialist vs capitalist society; 88T3066
- human rights, violations assessment, global analysis, Amnesty International/US State Department/Freedom House annual reports, 1973-present; 88T1143

World System Theory

- global unemployment problem, worldwide economic slowdown/interdependence; journal issue introduction, 88T1636
- lethal political violence, world system structural position, cross-national data, 88T1791
- modernization, socioeconomic development, world system/dependency theories, comparative analysis, 88T1733
- state vs society power, less-developed peripheral nations, cross-national statistics, 1960-1980, 88T1734
- world history/comparative macrosociology theoretical development, 88T1275

World War II

- Japanese-American WWII imprisonment, cultural/personal worldview impact, longitudinal case study, Nisei female, psychoanalytic approach, 88T1362
- Polish-Jewish relations WWII, anti-Semitic attitudes/behaviors, published data, 88T1492

Worldview

- black literature, 1960s, worldviews/values, 88T2270
- culture/ultimate reality, anthropologist/subject relationship, Iuba Syankadi tribe, Zaire, 88T1563
- temporal worldview differences, males vs females, life history interviews; university students, 88T2633
- worldviews, Czechoslovakian youth, abstraction characteristics, 88T1093

Writers

- black literature, 1960s, worldviews/values, 88T2270

Writing for Publication

- academic influence measurement/citation analysis, comment/reply, 88T1180
- article publication, Scandinavian social scientists, citation analysis, international/Nordic periodicals, 88T1176
- publication process/editorial decisions, social science literature (US, American Sociological Review submissions, 1977-1981, 88T1163)
- publication productivity, male vs female scientists, work/socialization factors, literature review, 88T2498
- scientific author prestige/new theory acceptance, continental drift/plate tectonics, comment/reply, 88T2489

Young Adults

- career aspirations/success perceptions/self-concepts, young black adults, Toronto, Ontario, socioeconomic conditions, racism, interviews, 88T2629
- educational achievement, ethnogenerational variation, young adults, Toronto, Ontario, native vs foreign parentage, occupational ambition, parental educational level, survey, 1982, 88T1514
- health status/service utilization, young adults, adolescent substance use, questionnaire, 88T2910
- leaving home patterns, British adolescents, transitional housing needs, social class, surveys, 1979-1981, 88T2630
- urban to rural migration, USSR, sociodemographic/motivational factors, questionnaire, young adults, Kuybyshev, 88T2131
- young adult independent living, marriage delay, US, national longitudinal survey, 1966-1980, 88T2623
- young urban professional group, lifestyle profile, 88T2032

Youth

- alcohol use/abuse, Latino youth, prevention program; interviews, staff/participants, East Harlem, New York, 88T2996
- changes in fertility plans/expectations, US young adults, 1979-1983
- family formation/sociocultural/socioeconomic factors, interview survey data, 88T2649
- disproportionate underattainment, black youths, US structural conditions, 88T2301
- educational attainment, black youths, US, family practices, longitudinal surveys, 1970s-1980s, 88T2345
- employment, youth aged 16-19, GB, family employment characteristics, surveys, 1980/81, 88T2732
- geographic/professional mobility, youths, Balkan Republics, USSR, questionnaire, 88T2631

realities; participant observation; 88T2260

Japanese new dialect forms users, sociopsychological character metropolitan Tokyo pupils; computational analysis; 88T2222 leisure patterns, Scottish youth; status transitions, longitudinal views; 88T2640 music videos, epistemological content; content analysis, broadened

Denver, Colorado; 88T1868

political/social outlook, USSR youth; public opinion polls, 88T

rural youth, Poland, sociological research problems; 88T2632

selection process, sports-talented youth, socialist society, 88T18 social/economic situation, young people, Liverpool, England in views, 88T2644

worldviews, Czechoslovakian youth, abstraction characteristics,

88T1093

young people's consumer behavior, family communication effect, literature review, 88T1772

youth ideological formation, USSR, round-table discussion, 88T

Youth Employment

- unemployed youths, marginalization/stigmatization, Belgium, survey data, 88T1578
- youth unemployment, youths' attitudes/opinions, West German interviews, high school students, Bremen, 1979-1983, 88T2624

Youth Movements

- pronuclear/militaristic attitudes/activism, college students, Northern Ireland/white South Africa, authoritarian attitudes, sociocultural/demographic factors, questionnaire, 88T1390
- youth culture, rock & roll music, media technology's role, 88T1
- youth subcultures, qualitative/quantitative methods, 88T2632

Youth Organizations

- intercultural youth meetings, Franco-German Association active, ample, 88T1896
- youth subculture development processes, "Star Trek" fan club, participant observation, document analysis, 88S20095

Yugoslavia

- anthropology of gender, Yugoslav sociologist Vera Stein Erlich's, 88T3140
- applied sociology, English-language bibliography, 88T2990
- autonomous work groups, Yugoslav factory, sociological aspects, questionnaire, workers, 88T1581
- autonomous working groups, Yugoslavia, qualitative research methodology, 88T1628
- capitalist crisis, dual economy alternative, 88T1779
- class theory, Slovene Catholic sociological thought, 88T2009
- educational origin/abilities/achievement/careers, Slovene second school students, causal model proposed, questionnaire surveys, Yugoslavia, 88T1617
- extended Croatian peasant household, sociology's vs ethnology's relation, 88T2736
- housing situation, Zagreb, Yugoslavia, quantitative typology, 88T
- male/female relationships, Yugoslav sociologist Vera Stein Erlich work, 88T3150
- masculine/feminine personality attribute clusters, exclusivity, US Yugoslavia, psychometric test, university students, 88T1359
- patriarchy/culture, Yugoslav sociologist Vera Stein Erlich's concept, US anthropology's influence, 88T3154
- production organization/innovation, West Germany/USSR/Yugoslavia, 88T1655
- professional job classification system, Yugoslavia, 88T2091
- scientific information, formal/informal exchange mechanisms, Yugoslav sociology, 88T2478
- self-management economic system, Yugoslavia, literature review, 88T1645
- social system legitimation, Yugoslav experience, 88T1985
- sociology as academic vs applied discipline, Yugoslavia, 88T1255
- tourism research, Yugoslav sociology, 88T1866
- Yugoslav sociologist Vera Stein Erlich, bibliography/biography, 88T1183

Zaire

- culture/ultimate reality, anthropologist/subject relationship, Iuba Syankadi tribe, Zaire, 88T1563

Zambia

- kinship relations, urban females, Lusaka, Zambia, life-cycle stage education, other factors, interviews, questionnaire, participant observation, 88T1535
- mine labor struggles, women's/children's role, Zambia, 1926-1968, 88T2027

Zionism

- Jewish Diaspora/Zionism vs traditional communities, 2-book review, essay, 88T1500

Spanish (see also Romance Languages)

- Uceda (Spain) dialect use, social variation, standard vs local Castilian, contrasted, questionnaire, interviews, 88T2223

A Brief User's Guide to Sociological Abstracts

WHAT SOCIOLOGICAL ABSTRACTS OFFERS. . .

Selection of nonevaluative abstracts which reflects the world's serial literature in sociology and related disciplines. Each issue of SA contains the following:

1. A Brief User's Guide;
2. A Table of Contents—a list of the major SA classifications with their subcategories;
3. A Subject Index;
4. An Author Index;
5. A Source Index; and
6. A Supplement—International Review of Publications in Sociology—consisting of a bibliography of book reviews from the journals abstracted in the same issue. Some issues also contain Supplement(s) consisting of:
 7. Abstracts of Conference Papers. Cover III contains
 8. Abbreviations—a list of abbreviations which are currently in use

A Reproduction Service: Sociological Abstracts Inc. and the publishers of many journals that are abstracted have contractual agreements which permit SA to provide copies of original documents (abstracts of which appear in SA). A black bond in the citation and source index indicates that such an agreement exists. Beginning with 1984, the symbol u will appear to indicate those journals for which copies are available from University Microfilms International, Ann Arbor, Michigan. For information pertaining to costs and ordering procedures, please locate the Reproduction Service printed throughout the issue. For additional information write to:

SA Reproduction Service

P.O. Box 22206

San Diego CA 92122

Selection and coverage:

Three types of journals have been distinguished in the following order of priority:

Category 1 journals published by sociological associations, departments, faculties and institutes; and periodicals containing the word 'sociology' in their titles. These are abstracted regardless of language of publication.

Category 2 journals from such related areas as anthropology, economics, education, medicine, community development, philosophy, statistics, political science, etc. Such journals are abstracted selectively.

Category 3 journals from the humanities and journals of general circulation wherein scholars and laymen publish discussions or criticisms of sociology and sociological topics. These journals are abstracted selectively.

CLASSIFICATION SCHEME:

Three criteria are used in the classification process, to which each issue of SA is the particular document most relevant, and where more than two areas can justifiably receive the document, the second criterion comes into play, to wit, in which area will the article serve the greatest "information communication" function, i.e., where will it be best or most needed. If none of the above criteria is met, the document is classified into that section to which the subject can conceivably be of closest relation. Each area is represented by a four digit number, i.e., 0200.

200 sociology: history and theory which subsumes the following subcategories:

- 02 of professional interest
- 06 history and present state of sociology
- 07 theories, ideas and systems
- 67 macrosociology: analysis of society

Therefore an article entitled:

"Journal Productivity of Ph.D. Sociologists" would be classified in subcategory 02 of classification 0200. The actual classification number is 0202.

Accession Number:

An alphanumeric code, the first two digits of which represent the year of publication in SA.

Author Names:

The rule is: All authors' names are presented; they appear in inverted order. Authors who have contributed to a symposium or whose names are mentioned as contributors to a document are included in the author index.

Other Types of Authorship:

Editorial (where in fact "editorial" is specified in the primary source)

Name of an institution where a collective authorship is specified as such, i.e., French Public Opinion Institute.

---, this symbol is used to indicate a collective authorship where each contributor's work is summarized briefly as part of the abstract and each contributor is author-indexed.

Affiliations:

An affiliation may be the name of an institution or a home address. Where a primary source does not provide an affiliation, none appears. An affiliation is given only for the senior author.

Serial Imprint Field:

The field contains the year, volume, issue, month and/or season, and page numbers. Where any of these data are omitted, they are not present in the primary source.

Abstract Entries:

Two types of abstracts are included (a) Informative: summarizes the article, provides information on the hypothesis tested, the specific method(s) of data collection, the subjects of the experiment, type of analysis (which tests, scales, etc.) used, evaluation, and results. (b) Descriptive:

Notes

JOURNAL ABSTRACT

- ① → 83N1628 ② → Medina, Esteban (U Complutense, Madrid 3 Spain), Teorías y orientaciones de la sociología de la ciencia (Theories and Orientations in Sociology of Science), Revista Española de Investigaciones Sociológicas, 1982, 20, (Oct-Dec), 7-58 (SPA) ③ → ④ → ⑤ → ⑥ → ⑦ → ⑧ →
- ⑨ → The evolution of contemporary sociology of science is surveyed relative to the Kantian notion of critical subjectivity. Its dualist origin in the 19th & philosophy of science is contrasted with its twentieth-century development in the work of Karl Mannheim, Robert Merton, & Thomas Kuhn, & in the conflict between critical theory & positivism. Positivist & normative philosophies of science are judged inadequate to address epistemological problems of subjectivity. Current research programs are explicated regarding (1) criticism of the analytical epistemological orientation of dominant contemporary philosophies of science, & (2) attempts to reorient epistemological questions in sociological terms. A. Ash

- ① Accession number.
- ② Author(s) name(s).
- ③ Author affiliation.
- ④ Title.
- ⑤ Title translation, where appropriate.
- ⑥ Source journal.
- ⑦ Year, volume, issue, date, pagination.
- ⑧ Three-letter code indicating language of article.
- ⑨ Abstract

ASSOCIATION PAPER ABSTRACT

- ① → S15532 / SSSP / 1983 / 2080 ② → ③ → ④ → ⑤ → ⑥ → ⑦ →
- ⑧ → Gurdin, J. Barry & Patterson, Carrie B. (To Love and to Work: An Agency for Change, 1450 East 55th Pl Chicago IL 60637), The Problem of Sample Frame in Populations Called Deviant: The Case of Methadone-Maintained Women and Their Infants.
- ⑨ → Both theoretical discussions & research presentations often minimize the practical difficulties in establishing a sample frame for a population called deviant. Classical experimental design is frequently recommended, even though inappropriate methodology impedes recruitment & the results are not necessarily representative of the "real world" population under study. The experiences of a research project studying methadone maintained women & their infants are presented to show that researchers of populations labeled deviant must retain a fluid sample frame to best reflect the population under study & to use resources most effectively.

- ① Accession number.
- ② Association acronym.
- ③ Year of conference.
- ④ Cumulative abstract number for the specific association.
- ⑤ Author(s) name(s).
- ⑥ Author affiliation.
- ⑦ Title.
- ⑧ Abstract

this type is not used for summarizing an experimental study; rather, it describes the contents and scope of the subject matter.

Historical Cross-references:

Whenever possible cross-reference to a document previously abstracted and which becomes the focal point of another document is given. In those instances for which a cross-reference number cannot be provided, a full reference is given. Example

L0165

Scarr, Sandra & Weinberg, Richard A. (Yale U, New Haven CT 06520), Nature and Nurture Strike (Out) Again, Intelligence, 1979, 3, 1, Jan-Mar, 31-39

¶A reply to R. Plowman's (no publication information available) critique of S. Scarr's & R. Weinberg's paper "The Influence of 'Family Background' on Intellectual Attainment" (see SA 27 3/19724), & H. Munsinger's review of the adopted child literature ("The Adopted Child's IQ: A Critical Review," Psychological Bulletin, 1975, 82(5), 623-659). The need to discern mean effects in adoption studies is high-lighted by noting that mean scores show more malleability than rank order of individual scores.

Cross-references across Databases:

Abstracts of documents that appeared in two other publications by Sociological Abstracts, Inc., i.e., Linguistics and Language Behavior Abstracts (LLBA), and Social Planning/Policy, Development Abstracts (SOPODA) receive cross references rather than re-publication in sa. Example: 82M2184

Braga, Giorgio (U. Trento, Italy), International Languages: Concept and Problems, ♦ International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1979, 22, 27-49

¶See LLBA 15 4/8105873.

Abstract Sources:

AA Author abstract.

HA Homotopic abstract (printed in journal)

Modified AA Author abstract slightly modified to conform to sa criteria.

Modified HA Homotopic abstract, slightly modified to conform to sa criteria.

AA Tr by J. Mayer Author abstract, translated by sa abstractor

HA Tr by J. Mayer Homotopic abstract, translated by sa abstractor.

AA Tr & Modified by J. Mayer Author abstract, translated and modified by sa abstractor.

HA Tr & Modified by J. Mayer Homotopic abstract, translated and modified by sa abstractor

Association Papers:

(Supplement Abstracts):

Association papers are always presented in a separate section of the printed issue of sa; they are not placed according to the sa classification scheme. Abstracts appear in alphabetical order by last name of senior author.

INDEXING PRACTICES:

Descriptors, or key terms, of which there are approximately 5,000, appear in boldface type in the printed Supplement Indexes. Each appears with an index phrase composed of the following elements:

- (1) the dependent variable
- (2) the independent variable
- (3) tests (measures)
- (4) population
- (5) additional information: type of study (longitudinal, etc.).

For nonempirical articles, the indexing criteria are elements 1 and 5.

Author Index:

All authors' names appear along with abstract number. Because authors' names are reproduced exactly from the primary source, and sources vary in presentation, the same author may be represented differently in separate entries. For example:

Lee, Alfred McClung

Lee, A. McClung

Lee, A. McC

Variant entries are not combined. Commentators' names and names of contributors to symposia are also alphabetically indexed. Authors cited within an abstract are not indexed.

Source Index:

Title and subtitle of journal; publisher's address, volume, issue; month or season, pagination; abstract accession number.

The annual index for the Volume is a cumulation of subject, author, and source indexes, and a list of journals that are screened regularly.

Beginning with Volume 32, 1984, each section of the SA issue will be preceded by a colored sheet which describes the content of the section that follows.

SECTION

Contents:

- (1) Table of Contents of this issue.
- (2) Abstracts of articles under 33 subject areas.

sociological abstracts...

your fast track to the information you need-online or in print

table of contents

volume 36

number 2

jun 1988
(Abstracts) (Page)

0100 methodology & research technology

0103 methodology (conceptual & epistemological)	88T3212	445
0104 research technology	T3246	449
0105 statistical methods	T3286	453
0161 models: mathematical & other	T3307	456

0200 sociology: history & theory

0202 of professional interest (teaching sociology)	T3315	459
0206 history & present state of sociology	T3336	461
0207 theories, ideas and systems	T3405	468
0267 macrosociology: analyses of whole societies	T3447	473

0300 social psychology

0309 interaction within (small) groups	T3470	477
0312 personality & culture	T3475	478
0322 leadership	---	---
0364 deviance	T3554	487
0373 social interaction/everyday life	T3558	488

0400 group interactions

0410 interaction between (large) groups (race relations, ethnicity, & group relations, etc.)	T3568	491
----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	-------	-----

0500 culture and social structure

0508 social organization	T3611	497
0513 culture	T3621	498
0514 social anthropology (& ethnology)	T3646	501

0600 complex organizations

0621 sociology of work	T3664	503
0623 military sociology	T3801	518
0624 bureaucratic structure/organizational sociology	T3814	517
0665 social network analysis	T3848	523
0674 voluntary associations	T3854	524

0700 social change & economic development

0715 social change & economic development	T3857	525
0749 market structures & consumer behavior	T3898	529
0770 capitalism/socialism---world systems	T3907	530

0800 mass phenomena

0826 social movements	T3930	535
0827 public opinion	T3962	539
0828 communication	T3970	540
0829 collective behavior	T3992	542
0842 sociology of leisure/tourism	T3993	542
0850 mass culture	T4012	545
0869 sociology of sports	T4019	546

0900 political interactions

0911 interaction between societies, nations & states	T4040	549
0925 political sociology	T4052	550

1000 social differentiation

1019 social stratification/mobility	T4129	561
1020 sociology of occupations & professions	T4170	566

1100 rural sociology & agriculture

1116 rural sociology (village, agriculture)	T4234	573
---------------------------------------------	-------	-----

1200 urban sociology

1218 urban sociology	T4272	579
----------------------	-------	-----

1300 sociology of language & the arts

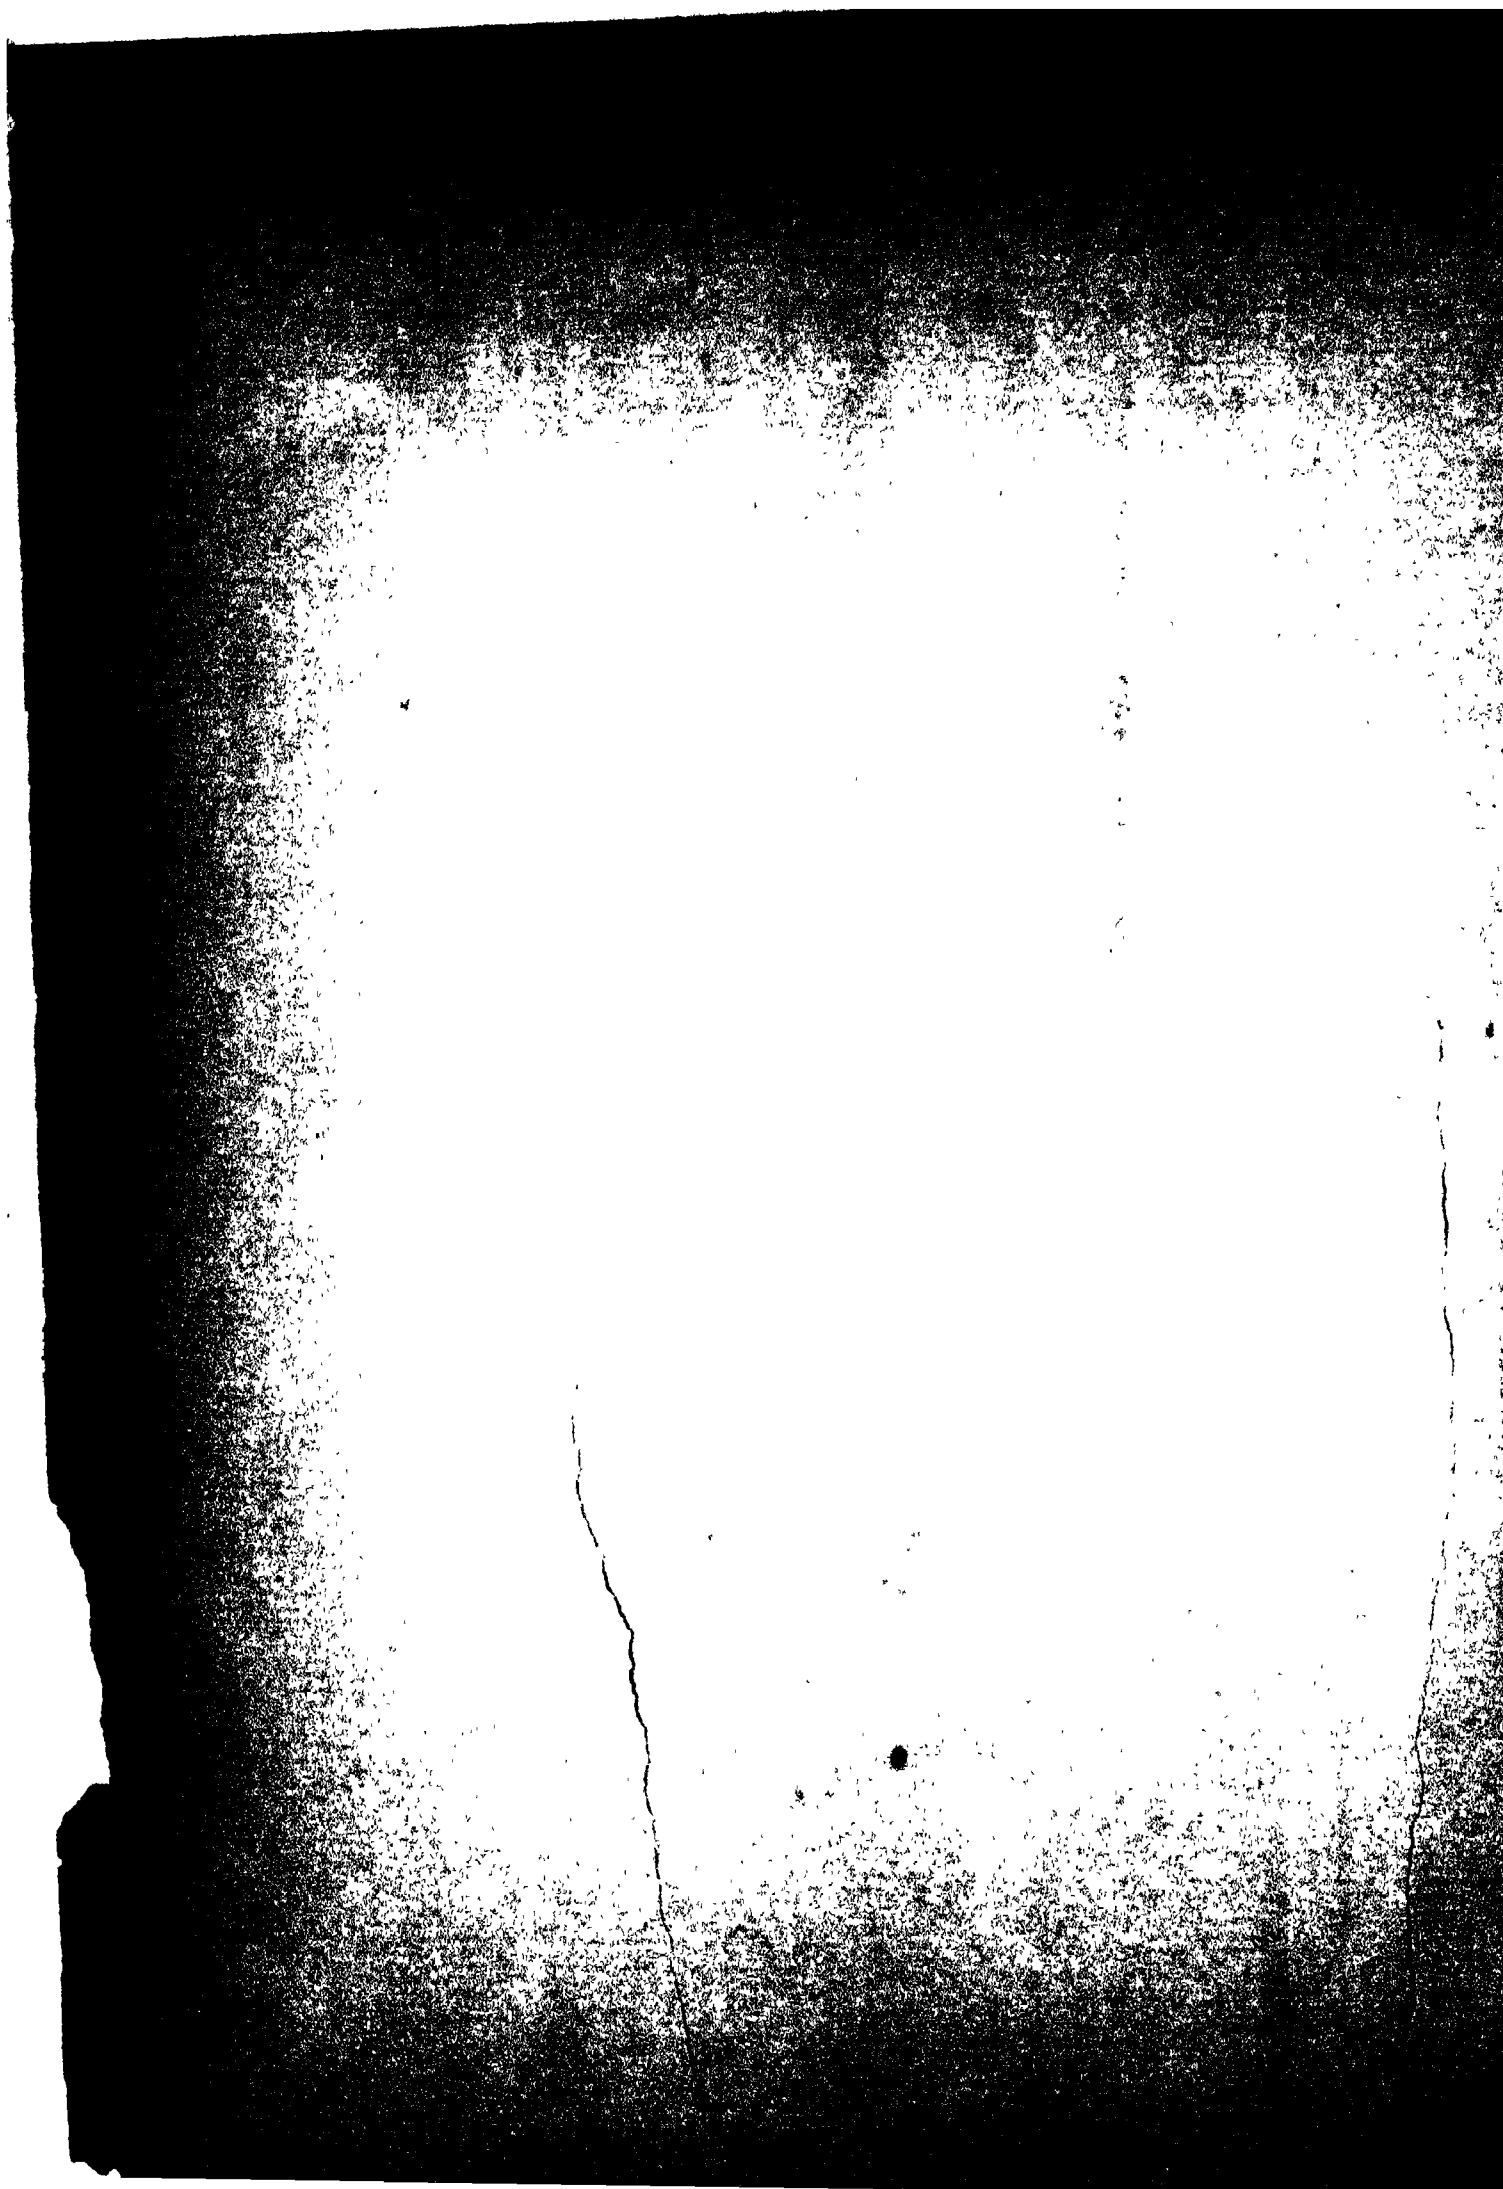

1330 sociology of language/sociolinguistics	T4305	583
1331 sociology of art (creative & performing)	T4323	585
1375 sociology of literature	T4340	587

1400 sociology of education

1432 sociology of education	T4344	589
-----------------------------	-------	-----

1500 sociology of religion

1535 sociology of religion	T4418	599
----------------------------	-------	-----

0100 methodology and research technology

03 methodology (conceptual & epistemological)

RT3212

Alatas, Syed Farid (Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218). Reflections on the Idea of Islamic Social Science. ♦ Comparative Civilizations Review, 1987, 17, fall, 60-86

Two distinctive meanings can be given to "Islamic social science": an application of concepts from Western social science to Muslim societies, & a development of social scientific concepts that reflect the Islamic worldview. The second project requires an understanding of all societies from an Islamic perspective. Illustrations of such a perspective are found in the writings of Ibn Khaldun on political theory. The application of Islamic concepts to current social scientific questions & to the relation of Islamic to Western social science is demonstrated. The need to escape a subservient relation to Western ideas is given particular emphasis. 27 References. W. H. Stoddard

RT3213

Bertalan, László. Az út-elemzésről. II rész (On the Road-Analysis Part II). Szociológia, 1983, 1-2, 171-192 (HU-N)

Abstract not currently available (see citation for Part I in this section box)

RT3214

Bertalan, László. Pozitívizmus és hermeneutika I. rész (Positivism and Hermeneutics Part I). Szociológia, 1983, 4, 465-481 (HU-N)

Abstract not currently available

RT3215

Burger, Thomas (Southern Illinois U, Carbondale 62901). Concepts and Reality, Values and Validity. AM American Journal of Sociology, 1988, 93, 4, Jan, 959-966

A review essay on a book by Heinrich Rickert, The Limits of Concept Formation in Natural Science: A Logical Introduction to the Historical Sciences (Oakes, Guy [Ed & Tr] Cambridge: Cambridge U Press, 1986 [1996] see listing in IRPS No. 421). The work is situated in the context of neo-Kantian efforts to establish a viable conception of philosophy after the discredit of Hegelian idealism. The transformation in the notion of science that led to the replacement of philosophical reason by empirical scientific method as the guarantor of truth is sketched, & the source of the debate over the methodological unity of the natural & the historical sciences is described. Rickert interprets the sciences as aiming to provide accounts of the essential features of reality: scientific methods are methods for differentiating between the essential & the inessential, & philosophy provides the foundation for this distinction. Rickert's approach is designed to deflect the arguments of those who hold that the generalizing method of the natural sciences is the only legitimate scientific method; rather, Rickert proposes an individualizing method that leads to valid knowledge of historical developments. Rickert's arguments exercised a profound influence on Max Weber. 6 References. Modified A

RT3216

Campbell, Donald T. (Lehigh U, Bethlehem PA 18015). Relabeling Internal and External Validity for Applied Social Scientists. New Directions for Program Evaluation, 1986, 31, fall, 67-77

An attempt is made to reduce confusion about the meaning of validity in quasi-experimental research through relabeling different types of validity. Internal validity is retermed "local molar (pragmatic, atheoretical) causal validity," & external validity is reconceptualized as the "principle of proximal similarity." Each is explained in depth along with the rationale for choosing the new terms. Their utility for applied social science is discussed. 21 References. Modified HA

RT3217

Castañeda, Fernando (Facultad Ciencias Políticas & Sociales U Nacional Autónoma México, 04510 México DF). La crisis de la epistemología (The Crisis of Epistemology). ♦ AM Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 13-31 (SPA)

An examination of the way in which the social sciences have confronted the restructuring of their practice in light of the crisis of contemporary society, especially as regards the redefinition of their relations with social projects, arising from the restructuring of the relationship between subject & knowledge in the social sciences. The most significant debates in the social sciences from the 1960s to the present are analyzed, including: (1) the initial exploration of the crisis of sociology in Latin America (Fernando Henrique Cardoso); (2) the positivism debate (Karl Popper & Theodor W. Adorno); (3) the construction of a Marxist epistemology (Louis Althusser, Lucio Colletti, & Georg Lukács); (4) the crisis of epistemology (Thomas S. Kuhn); (5) the return to the subject & the re-evaluation of Althusser's ideas (Barry Hindess & Paul Hirst); & (6) recent social theory, the social subject, & hermeneutics (Anthony Giddens & Jürgen Habermas). 29 References. C. Waters

88RT3218

Frischknecht, Federico (Lavalle 543 piso 6, 1047 Buenos Aires Argentina). Dialogue on Informatic Philosophy of Behavioral Sciences: Positivist Bias Misses the Symbol-System Point. AM Behavioral Science, 1987, 32, 3, July, 234-237

¶ A reply to John P. van Gigch's critique (see abstract in this section) of Federico Frischknecht's article (see SA 34 5/86Q9234). In behavioral sciences, positivism does not hold. Causality has to be replaced by rationality or intentionality, which is idiosyncratic. Hence, behavioral sciences look for meaning, not prediction. The interpretive approach leads one to consider informatic (meta) sciences as the only possible language to deal with human behavior, i.e., linguistics, database theory, & artificial intelligence; they perform the same role as logic & mathematics in natural sciences. The point is that behavioral sciences can only be viewed as praxiologies, describing & prescribing symbol systems, not behavior. Human behavior can only be simulated or synthesized, not predicted, in its unique instances. This informatic or metalinguistic approach suggests two notations, respectively, to analyze & synthesize human organizations: the first, declarative or descriptive, may be called organization theory; the second, constructive or prescriptive, would be management science (or, better, praxis). 2 Tables, 29 References. AA

88RT3219

de la Garza Toledo, Enrique (U Autónoma Metropolitana, Del Izta-palapa 09340 México DF). Medición, cuantificación y reconstrucción de la realidad (Measurement, Quantification, and the Reconstruction of Reality). ♦ AM Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 281-305 (SPA)

¶ The concepts of measurement & quantification are discussed, exploring their principal epistemological assumptions, i.e., homogeneity among the objects or properties to be measured, & isomorphism between the logic of numerical systems & that of social theories. The idea that social theories are simple systems of propositions related in deductive form is questioned, & a more open concept of theory is proposed. It is argued that isomorphism between mathematical logic & theoretical logic has never been proved, & therefore the power or methodological absolutism of quantification is relative. The concept of mathematical logic is investigated, reviewing the ideas of intuitionists, formalists, & logicians. An attempt is made to situate these problems within a strategy of knowledge that differs from the hypothetical-deductive one & is referred to here as the "concrete-abstract-concrete" method. This method differs from positivism in its concept of theory, indicators, data, & verification, which in turn derive from an alternative conception of reality & of the subject-object relationship. In this method, quantification can still fulfill a verificatory role, though a less decisive one. AA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88RT3220

Gerhart, Mary & Russell, Allan Melvin (Hobart & William Smith Colls, Geneva NY 14456). A Generalized Conception of Text Applied to Both Scientific and Religious Objects. Zygon, 1987, 22, 3, Sept, 299-316

¶ The idea of a text is reviewed & reconstructed to facilitate the application of concepts of interpretation to the objects analyzed in the natural sciences, as well as to objects analyzed in religion & literature. Four criteria: readability, formality, material transcendence, &

	(Abstracts)	(Page)
1600 social control
1636 sociology of law	T4468	607
1653 police, penology & correctional problems	T4521	612
1700 sociology of science
1734 sociology of science	T4558	617
1772 sociology of technology	T4597	621
1800 demography & human biology
1837 demography (population study)	T4613	621
1844 human biology/sociobiology	T4655	628
1900 the family & socialization
1938 sociology of the child	T4662	631
1939 adolescence & youth	T4684	633
1940 sociology of sexual behavior	T4711	636
1941 sociology of the family	T4730	639
1976 socialization	T4849	652
1977 birth control (abortion, contraception, fertility, & childbearing)	T4855	652
1978 sociology of death & dying	T4892	657
2000 sociology of health & medicine
2045 sociology of medicine (public health)	T4899	659
2046 social psychiatry (mental health)	T4970	666
2079 substance use/abuse & compulsive behaviors (drug abuse, addiction, alcoholism, gambling, eating disorders, etc.)	T4993	669
2100 social problems & social welfare
2143 social gerontology	T5029	675
2147 sociology of crime & victimology	T5062	678
2148 applied sociology	T5091	681
2151 juvenile delinquency	T5099	682
2200 sociology of knowledge
2233 sociology of knowledge	T5124	687
2252 history of ideas	T5136	688
2300 community development
2317 sociology of communities & regions	T5145	691
2400 policy, planning, forecasting
2454 planning & forecasting	T5169	697
2460 social indicators	T5181	699
2462 policy sciences	T5183	699
2500 radical sociology
2555 radical sociology	---	--
2580 critical sociology	T5199	69
2600 environmental interactions
2656 environmental interactions	T5200	70
2681 disaster studies	T5213	70
2682 social geography	T5221	70
2700 studies in poverty
2757 studies in poverty	T5227	70
2800 studies in violence
2858 studies in violence	T5250	70
2884 terrorism	T5264	71
2900 feminist/gender studies
2959 feminist studies	T5266	71
2983 sociology of gender & gender relations	T5299	71
3000 marxist sociology
3063 marxist sociology	T5324	71
3100 clinical sociology
3166 clinical sociology	T5331	71
3200 sociology of business
3268 sociology of business	T5336	71
3300 visual sociology
3371 visual sociology	T5344	71

ISA Supplement No. 150
Document Delivery Service

IRPS No. 42
author index
source index
subject index

04 research methods

88T3246

Achard, Pierre (c/o Language et société, 54 blvd Raspail F-75006 Paris France), On the Methodology of Discourse Analysis and Content Analysis, BMS. Bulletin de Méthodologie Sociologique, 1987, 13, Jan., 24-32.

A new meta-model for sociolinguistics is presented & illustrated via a discourse analysis of 11 attested quotations from French economic texts. These examples demonstrate the relations between economics & state power as well as the fact that they are part of these relations themselves. It is shown that the sociological relations these texts set up are constructed through formal elements that rely on linguistic characteristics & have more stability than do aspects of content. Modified HA

88T3247

Acquaviva, Sabino Samele (U Padova, I-35100 Italy), Una nota su scambio sociale e riproducibilità sperimentale della situazione di scambio oggetto di studio (Social Exchange and Experimental Repeatability of the Exchange Situation under Study: A Methodological Note), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug., 61-72 (ITA)

Proceeding from the assumption that underlying social interaction there is a cost-benefit exchange, in which psychological motivations can be identified, a methodological contribution is presented concerning how to conduct an interview, formulate questions, & represent opinions adequately. The questionnaire structure & the specific formulation of questions intervene in the exchange situation under controlled conditions. Several examples are provided. 5 References. Modified HA

88T3248

Anan'eva, Nina Viktorovna & Shvedovskiy, Vyacheslav Anatol'evich (All-Union Correspondence Agricultural Instit, Moscow USSR), Trekhmernoe diagrammnoe modelirovanie (Three-Dimensional Diagram Modeling), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 102-107 (RUS)

A modification is proposed for traditional cluster analysis using the concept of symmetry & the histogram analysis of nominal scales. To evaluate the new technique, questionnaire data were collected from adults (N not given) in the Balashikhinsk district of Moscow in 1984. Sociodemographic data collected are developed into a Cartesian coordinate system with three axes of homogeneous indices facilitating nontrivial generalizations about how certain groups relate to the central cluster on a nominal scale. 4 Figures, 4 References. G. Prostavov

88T3249

Bernard, H. Russell, Pelto, Pertti J., Werner, Oswald, Boster, James, Romney, A. Kimball, Johnson, Allen, Ember, Carol R. & Kasakoff, Alice (Dept Anthropology U Florida, Gainesville 32611), The Construction of Primary Data in Cultural Anthropology, Current Anthropology, 1986, 27, 4, Aug-Oct., 382-396

A report on the proceedings of a 1985 conference on construction of primary data in anthropology. Four main types of data construction were examined: unstructured interviews; structured interviews; direct observation of behavior & environment, & extraction of information from archival sources, including the coded ethnographic work of colleagues, eg, the Human Relations Area Files. Data quality issues have become crucial in anthropology, efforts to improve primary data are urgently needed. 226 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3250

Bosse, Hans (Burgweg 5, D-6900 Heidelberg Federal Republic Germany), Rituelle und strukturelle Gewalt im Forschungsprozess. Ethnoanalytische Feldforschung mit Jugendlichen vom Sepik in Papua New Guinea (Ritual and Structural Power in the Research Process: Ethnoanalytic Fieldwork with Adolescents from Sepik in Papua New Guinea), curare, 1987, 10, 2, 99-116. (GER)

An investigation of crises in the relationship between researcher & Ss, in the context of field research among groups of adolescents from Sepik in Papua New Guinea. Several case studies are presented, & transcripts of conversations with informants are analyzed. It is shown that there is a clash between two different patterns of aggression & violence, identified as "ritual" & "structural" violence. The culturally specific, unconscious mechanisms of coping with the situation are revealed, & it is shown how this analysis leads to a valid scientific knowledge of the culture under research. Modified HA

88T3251

Conway, M. A. (MRC Applied Psychology Unit, 15 Chaucer Rd Cambridge England), Verifying Autobiographical Facts, Cognition, 1987, 26, 1, June, 39-58.

Current models of autobiographical memory postulate that such memories of personally experienced events are represented in networks in which distinctive event features act as indices to related memories. Autobiographical knowledge, ie, personal facts, however, drawn from a variety of frequently repeated experiences, may be represented independently of specific memories, & so is unlikely to be indexed by event-related information. In order to test the hypothesis that autobiographical facts are represented along with other types of factual (semantic) knowledge, a fact verification experiment was conducted with 36 students from Cambridge U, England. The central findings were that access of true autobiographical knowledge was facilitated by semantic knowledge, while rejection of false autobiographical knowledge was unaffected by prior presentations of related semantic information. In addition, it was found that speed of verification of true & false autobiographical facts differed, indicating that it may be partly determined by the amount of related information already represented in the memory. It is concluded that not all autobiographical information may be represented in memories of specific experiences or indexed by event-related information. Implications for models of autobiographical memory organization & memory search are discussed. 1 Table, 1 Appendix, 23 References. Modified HA

88T3252

Delobelle, Andre, Un source sociologique: le récit (Narratives as a Sociological Source), Recherches Sociologiques, 1987, 18, 3, 231-254 (FRI:)

Social action has generally been analyzed by means of interviews & statistical data, the study of narratives offers new methodological possibilities that are more directly synthetic & less dependent on the subjectivity of the researcher. The limits & possibilities of this type of approach are analyzed here. It requires an accurate definition of the "story" according to various external criteria. The comparison of a narrative's contents with those of other narratives can then lead to the discovery of essential links in individual &/or social action. The falsifiability of these structural elements gives them the quality of objective & universal principles at work in human phenomena. Numerous examples are used as illustration. 51 References. Modified HA

88T3253

Demers, David K. & Lundman, Richard J. (Dept Mass Communication & Journalism U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), Perceptual Deterrence Research: Some Additional Evidence for Designing Studies, Journal of Quantitative Criminology, 1987, 3, 2, June, 185-194.

Cross-sectional (one-wave) designs have recently fallen out of vogue as methods for assessing perceptual deterrence regarding criminal behavior in favor of panel (multiwave) designs. A renewed examination of cross-sectional designs is attempted via a replication & extension of L. S. Anderson's, T. G. Chiricos's, & G. P. Waldo's study of perceptual deterrence & marijuana use among Coll students (see SA 26:3/78J4022). Analysis of self-report data obtained from a sample of 710 students at Ohio State U confirms that a one-wave, multiple-variable design is capable of yielding results comparable to those obtained by multiwave/variable research. Specifically, it is shown that perceptions of informal sanctions & other extralegal factors explain patterns of marijuana use, while perceptions of formal sanctions are of no explanatory value. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 27 References. K. Hyatt

88T3254

Dijkstra, Wil (Dept Research Methods Free U, NL-1007 MC Amsterdam Netherlands), Interviewing Style and Respondent Behavior: An Experimental Study of the Survey-Interview, U Sociological Methods and Research, 1987, 16, 2, Nov., 309-334

An investigation of how interviewers should behave in order to obtain adequate responses in survey interviews. Guided by the model of the question-answer process as developed by C. F. Cannell, P. V. Miller, & L. Oksenberg ("Research in Interviewing Techniques" in Lainhardt, S.

88T3239

Smith, Robert B. (Social Structural Research Inc, Suite 6 3 Newport Rd Cambridge MA 02140). Linking Quality & Quantity: Part I. Understanding & Explanation, Quality and Quantity. 1987, 21, 3, 291-311

¶ Interpretations are theoretical structures that explain empirical facts. The joint use of data from qualitative & quantitative studies can provide empirical facts for interpretation that are both valid & reliable. Several examples are reviewed to show how articulated qualitative & quantitative research can ameliorate three interrelated methodological problems that have hindered an interpretive understanding of social actions: (1) using verstehen & the implementation of empirical studies to assess the subjective meaning of social actions, (2) linking understanding & explanation, & (3) linking macro & micro analysis. 75 References. HA

88T3240

Tilly, Charles (Center Studies Social Change New School Social Research, New York NY 10011). GBS + GCL = ?, Connections, 1987, 10, 2, summer, 94-105.

¶ Ways that the development & concentration of power in the national state affect ordinary people in the pursuit of their shared interests are examined using examples of collective action from the French & GB experience during periods of transition over the past few centuries. Focus is on collective gatherings in London between 1758 & 1834 & the entire UK between 1828 & 1834 ($\Sigma N = 6,884$), using data obtained in (1) the Geography of Contention in London (GCL) Study (see Tilly, Charles, & Schweitzer, R. A., "How London and Its Conflicts Changed Shape, 1758-1834," Historical Methods, 1982, 5, 67-77), & (2) the current Great Britain Study (GBS), which involves analysis of 7 major periodicals, historical literature, & archival records. Various discontinuous, contentious forms of action, eg, marches, demonstrations, strikes, & assemblies, are compared with respect to timing, place, social group(s) participating, & effectiveness. It is concluded that capitalist expansion involves three fundamental conflicts between capital & labor, rival claimants on the factors of production, & participants in the same markets, each has different effects according to time, place, & social setting, & strongly influences the character of popular contention. 1 Appendix, 10 References. K. Hyatt

88T3241

Triplett, Timm (Dept Philosophy U New Hampshire, Durham 03824). Relativism and the Sociology of Mathematics: Remarks on Bloor, Flew, and Frege, Inquiry, 1986, 29, 4, Dec, 439-450.

¶ Antony Flew's "A Strong Programme for the Sociology of Belief" (see IRPS No. 21/84a27684) critically assesses the strong program in the sociology of knowledge defended in David Bloor's Knowledge and Social Imagery (London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1976). Here, it is argued that Flew's rejection of the epistemological relativism evident in Bloor's work begs the question against the relativist & ignores Bloor's focus on the social relativity of mathematical knowledge. Bloor attempts to establish such relativity via a sociological analysis of Gottlob Frege's theory of number (The Foundations of Arithmetic, Evanston, Ill: Northwestern U Press, 1980), but this analysis only succeeds if the rejection of an explanatory theory entails that there are reasonable grounds for the rejection of the set of propositions that the theory was intended to explain. An argument is put forth against such an entailment, & thus against Bloor's attempt to relativize mathematical knowledge. HA van Gijch, John P. (School Business & Public Administration California State U, Sacramento 95819). Dialogue on Informatic Philosophy of Behavioral Sciences: A Misapplication of the Metasystem Concept, U Behavioral Science, 1987, 32, 3, July, 232-233.

88T3242

¶ A critical comment on Federico Frischknecht's article (see SA 34.5/86Q9234). Disagreed with are Frischknecht's categorization & hierarchy of sciences & metasciences. Questions are raised in connection with: (1) his comparison of descriptive & prescriptive systems, (2) his linguistic levels, (3) alleged differences between natural & behavioral sciences, (4) alleged differences between induction & deduction, & his labeling of metatheories. 3 References. AA

88T3243

Wiseman, Jacqueline P. (U California San Diego, La Jolla 92037). The Development of Generic Concepts in Qualitative Research through Cumulative Application, U Qualitative Sociology, 1987, 10, 4, winter, 318-338.

¶ Because of their close contact with the actual flow of human group life, qualitative research projects frequently have as a bonus the development of insightful concepts of generic quality that catch some essence of interaction & /or structural conditions. Yet little attention has been paid to the way these concepts are modified & strengthened over a series of projects. The lack of regard for this methodological issue may lead to the false impression that qualitative research is not cumulative. It is urged that qualitative sociologists be aware of cumulative concept development as a major methodological tool, & demonstrate how concepts derived from one research project are extended & modified in subsequent projects. This approach illuminates aspects of a given research context, draws attention to hitherto unnoted relationships among concepts. In this way, more systematic strategies for developing generic concepts & cumulative understanding of human group life through qualitative research become possible. 33 References. HA

88T3244

Zemelman M., Hugo (Colegio Mexico, 10740 Mexico DF). La totalidad como perspectiva de descubrimiento (Totality as a Perspective of Discovery), U Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Mar, 53-86. (SPA)

¶ Part of a forthcoming book on dialectic reasoning (Uso crítico de la teoría [The Critical Use of Theory], to be published by El Colegio de México). Here, the function that can be fulfilled by the category of totality as the epistemological basis of the problem of discovery is discussed. The concept of totality as a mechanism for the appropriation of reality indifferent to the properties of the object, is defined. The discussion is based on the proposition that totality is a central category of dialectic according to which other dialectical categories, especially contradictions, can be utilized. An outline of the epistemological problem is presented based on the exigencies of dialectic articulation. The implications of this approach & the methodological developments that it requires are examined. 11 References. C. Waters

88T3245

Zemelman M., Hugo (Colegio México, 10740 Mexico DF). Razones para un debate epistemológico (Reasons for an Epistemological Debate), U Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 1-10. (SPA)

¶ An introduction to the debate contained in the articles in this volume of Revista Mexicana de Sociología (see abstracts in SA 36.2). The social sciences are discussed from the perspective of the organization of reasoning, ie, awareness of the reality on which theory is constructed. It is necessary to determine the form of reasoning most capable of taking into account the complex articulation of reality, & to construct an epistemology that relates to the historical, social reality, especially those historical fields at the limits of which options for the social practice of transformation can be identified. An outline of the characteristics of the proper epistemology is presented. The discussion of the problem examines the crisis of the bases of social knowledge, knowledge & the social subject; historical & political thought; & the dynamic reconstruction of reality. C. Waters combined with free text retrieval & bibliographic search; (3) downloading of bibliographic information offered by online information services; (4) effective handling of cataloguing & other routine operations; & (5) arrangements for the presentation & exchange of information, eg, in the form of references, bibliographic indexes, & state-of-the-art reports. 1 Figure, 3 References Modified HA

13263

Lundstrom, Francesca (U Illinois, Urbana 61801), Research Design in Total Institutions: Problems, Pitfalls, and Possible Solutions, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 3, 209-218

Research on the sociology of total institutions faces unusual methodological problems seldom discussed in textbooks of methodology & research design. These include choice of sampling frame, sampling, representativeness, contamination, & drift. Examples of these problems are presented & suggestions for overcoming or minimizing them are offered. References Modified HA

13264

Malseed, Joanna (School Independent Studies U Lancaster, Bailrigg LA1 4YN England), Straw Men: A Note on Ann Oakley's Treatment of Textbook Prescriptions for Interviewing, Sociology, 1987, 21, 4, Nov, 629-631

Comment, 632

A critique of Ann Oakley's treatment of textbook interviewing methods, "Interviewing Women: A Contradiction in Terms," Doing Feminist Research, Roberts, H. (Ed), London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1981) suggests that interviews need not be mechanical & detached & have been characterized as such. In Comment on Malseed, Ann Oakley (U of London Instit of Education, 41 Brunswick Sq, WC1N 1AZ England) replies that the objectivity of the formal interview is scientifically valued & the informal interview, although it does not accommodate subjective experience & is particularly inapplicable to women. 5 References. Daves

13265

Mohler, Peter Ph. (ZUMA B2 I, D-6800 Mannheim 1 Federal Republic Germany), Offene Fragen und Probleme bei der Analyse Der-selben. Ein Kommentar zu Allerbeck und Hoag (Open Questions and Problems of Their Analysis: A Comment on Allerbeck and Hoag), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 4, Dec, 796-798 (GER)

A response to Klaus Allerbeck's & Wendy J. Hoag's article on survey research (see SA 35 5/87R8972) discusses the problem of open questions processing survey data. Although Allerbeck's & Hoag's suggestion—the establishment of permanent data banks of open questions—is worth considering, they are over-optimistic about the ease of manipulation of data management programs. Computerized content analysis is of very limited use for analyzing concepts of even a moderate degree of complexity; it is generally used only for one-word items. The problem of coding remains, & costs are likely to be higher than Allerbeck & Hoag anticipate. 5 References. C. Waters

13266

Napier, Ted L. & Camboni, Silvana M. (Dept Agricultural Economics/Ru Sociology Ohio State U, Columbus 43210), A Comparison of Human Resources Characteristics of Employed and Unemployed Primary Income Earners in Ohio, Journal of the Community Development Society, 1987, 18, 1, 50-63.

Survey data were collected in 1984 from a statewide sample of 2,341 households to ascertain the recreation needs of Ohio residents. A segment of the questionnaire focusing on the employment status of the primary income earner in the household provided data used to examine the merits of the human resources development model, which hypothesizes that personal characteristics are significantly related to employment status & that education & training have a strong effect on employment status. Discriminant analysis was used in an attempt to isolate human resources variables that differentiate unemployed & employed primary income earners. Findings revealed that these variables were poor predictors of employment status. While the findings were consistent with research expectations, the strength of the associations was very low. It is concluded that the human resources development model was not adequate to explain employment status. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 34 References Modified HA

88T3267

Nederhof, Anton J. (U Leiden, NL-2312 AR Netherlands), When Neutrality is Negative: Pleasantness of Most Recent Survey Experience and Nonresponse, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 4, 425-432.

¶ Since the % of the population with previous survey experience is now quite high, it would benefit researchers to understand the relation between nonresponse & quality of past survey experience. The hypothesis that the pleasantness of past participation in survey research would influence Rs' willingness to participate again was supported by results of a survey of 981 Rs in the Netherlands. An unpleasant or indifferent recent participation experience increased the time delay between participations by 50%. 2 Tables, 18 References Modified HA

88T3268

Nishida, Haruhiko & Hiramatsu, Hiroshi, Title appears in Japanese (The Trends of Quantitative and Mathematical Approaches in Japanese Sociology), Shakaigaku Hyoron/Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 2, Sept, 2-21 (JPN)

¶ The development of qualitative & quantitative methodologies for use in sociological research in Japan following WWII is reviewed, with focus on scaling, sampling, & data analysis. The post-1970 emergence of mathematical approaches to studying social stratification & mobility is explored, & various methodological issues addressed. Little research has been conducted on these models, however. The motto of the Japanese Assoc for Mathematical Sociology, formed in 1986, stresses the need for original research concerning quantitative & mathematical sociological methodologies. 117 References Modified HA

88T3269

Oliva, Carl (Buro soziologische Grundlagenforschung & Entwicklungsplanung, Engstringerstr 1 CH-8952 Zurich Switzerland), Methodologische Probleme landervergleichender Studien. Die Vernachlässigung der Bedeutung internationaler Regionen in Datenanalyse und Theoriebildung (Methodological Problems of Cross-National Studies: The Neglected Significance of International Regions for Data Analysis and Theory Construction), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 3, Sept, 516-533. (GER)

¶ Many recent studies in quantitative macrosociology, especially those of the world system analysis paradigm, use methods of econometry. Some negative consequences of these methodological priorities are discussed: while they aim to map social processes, the methods used do not fit these processes & fail to analyze either the processes themselves or the social structures they produce. Possible ways of improving the theory & methodology of cross-national quantitative research are examined. It is necessary to test the "semantic range" of indicators. As an example, a group of Latin American countries are compared to a group of black African nations. The indicators prove to have different meanings in different contexts. Deeper insight into processes of dependent development & the reproduction of the international system can be gained by taking into consideration the existence of structural cleavages, ie, international regions. 2 Tables, 53 References Modified HA de Oliveira, Orlandina & García, Brígida (Colegio México, 10740 Mexico DF), Encuestas, hasta dónde? (Surveys, To What End?), Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 335-351 (SPA)

88T3270

¶ The use of survey data in the study of phenomena such as fertility, migration, employment, & income & in the construction of statistical models is critically examined. The predominant type of survey is the interview using a structured questionnaire, ie, a specific instrument that seeks to capture aspects of reality through the verbalizations of individuals. Methodological criticisms of this type of information source are discussed, focusing on three aspects: (1) the study of opinions & attitudes via surveys, & the imposition of a previously structured problematic by the researcher through the application of the questionnaire; (2) the fragmentation of reality, which some authors consider inherent in surveys; & (3) the possibilities offered by data gathered at a specific moment in time for the study of sociodemographic change. The review is not exhaustive, but attempts to cover the major changes that have taken place over the past twenty years in the use of survey data in sociodemographic studies in Latin America. 39 References. C. Waters

(Ed), Sociological Methodology, San Francisco: Jossey-Bass, 1981), a field experiment was conducted in which 8 interviewers adopted either a personal or a formal style of interviewing in interactions with 384 Rs. The dependent variables concerned measures of accuracy, social desirability, & the degree of relevant as well as irrelevant information. In addition, by experimentally manipulating the interviewer's alleged opinion, it was possible to ascertain conformity effects. Two different hypotheses were proposed to account for the effect of interviewing style on the dependent variables: the motivation hypothesis proposed that a personal style, compared with a formal style, would motivate the Rs to do well on the task & to give responses that would be as accurate & as adequate as possible, according to the ingratiation hypothesis, Rs interviewed in a personal style would be more inclined to attempt to ingratiate themselves with the interviewer, leading to more socially desirable responses, conformity, & irrelevant information. The results supported the motivation hypothesis. It is contended that both motivation & ingratiation are important mechanisms in the question-answer process, however, it may be easier to influence Rs' motivational level by means of the style of interviewing or other interviewing techniques than to measure Rs' ingratiation tendencies. 7 Tables, 2 figures, 1 Appendix, 25 References. Modified HA

88T3255

Emerson, Robert M. (U California, Los Angeles 90024), Four Ways to Improve the Craft of Fieldwork, Journal of Contemporary Ethnography, 1987, 16, 1, Apr, 69-89.

¶ Four recommendations for improving the ethnographic research process are advanced: spend more time among research Ss, specify theoretical issues, attend consistently to Ss' categories & meanings, & specify the actual interactional & textual practices that produce ethnography. These proposals are illustrated by an exemplary ethnographic work by Jonathan Rubinstein (City Police, New York: Ferrar, Straus, & Giroux, 1973) that describes a case of police error. 30 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3256

Gehrlein, William V. (Dept Business Administration U Delaware, Newark 19716), A Comparative Analysis of Measures of Social Homogeneity, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 3, 219-231.

¶ The relationship between social homogeneity, ie, the degree to which individuals in a society have similar preferences & the existence of a Condorcet winner in an electoral process is explored. Eight non-profile-specific & thirteen profile-specific measures of social homogeneity are defined. Simulation techniques are used to determine how increases in social homogeneity defined in these varied ways are related to the probability of existence of a Condorcet winner. Very different results can be obtained according to which measure is used, the strongest relationships are obtained for profile-specific measures. 4 Tables, 15 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3257

Gerson, Elihu M., Computing in Qualitative Sociology: Do We Sincerely Want to Be Programmers?, Qualitative Sociology, 1987, 10, 4, winter, 407-409.

¶ Computers are increasingly becoming important tools for sociologists, & much of sociology is now based on the assumption that sophisticated technologies of data collection & analysis will always be available. In the process, the tedium of programming is being reduced by development of more sophisticated technology: interactive systems, higher level languages, specialized languages, & automation of the programming process. Carried to its end, this leads toward the point where programming will no longer be distinct from end-use. Sociologists must face the challenge of using this new technology well. W. H. Stoddard

88T3258

Gillespie, Dair L. & Leffler, Ann (Dept Sociology U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112), The Politics of Research Methodology in Claims-Making Activities: Social Science and Sexual Harassment, Social Problems, 1987, 34, 5, Dec, 490-501.

¶ Taking sexual harassment as an example, the politicization of methodological issues in the development of an emergent social problem is analyzed. Scientific debate reflects not only disagreements over the substance of competing claims, but disagreements over the nature of science itself. It is argued here that claims for a problem's legitimacy within the scientific community depend in large part on assessments of methodological adequacy—hinging on questions of generalizability, operational definitions & measurement instruments, & data, particularly how it is analyzed & reported. It is concluded that methodology & theory reflect political bias, which should be critically considered in analyzing the natural history of social problems. 60 References. HA

88T3259

Goitein, Bernard (Bradley U, Peoria IL 61625), Measuring Impacts of Some Common Energy Conservation Programs under Conditions of Nonrandom Assignment, Evaluation Review, 1987, 11, 2, 242-253.

¶ Nonrandom assignment to program & control group conditions create serious difficulties for the evaluation of impacts of energy conservation programs. The particular analytic strategy that is appropriate depends on the character of the causal mechanisms associated with the random assignment. Guidelines for selection & use of the appropriate analytic techniques are presented. It is recommended that the possibility of performing a true experiment should be explored, beyond the use of random assignment to wait list & program conditions, in order to avoid analytic complexities necessary in the nonrandom assignment design. 17 References. HA

88T3260

Grémy, Jean-Paul (Laboratoire analyse secondaire et méthodes appliquées sociologie IRESO, 59-61 rue Pouchet F-75017 France), Les Expériences françaises sur la formulation des questions d'enquête: résultats d'un premier inventaire (Wording of Survey Questions: Results of a Preliminary Inventory of French Experiences), Revue française de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 4, Oct-Dec, 567 (FRE).

¶ The wording of French-language survey questions was examined by analyzing experiments ($N = 26$ empirical studies performed in France from 1945 to the present) that use the "split ballot" method of administering different forms of questions. The types of questions compared were closed & open-ended, with & without a "median" or "zero" (a response of indifference or no change), balanced & unbalanced response choices, negative & positive forms, & subjective & objective forms. Also examined, in the formulation of questions, were the effects of synonym substitution, the addition of supporting information, examples, adding qualifiers, or modifiers, & the position of the question in the survey. It is argued that if most published experiments reveal the existence of effects due to the formulation of questions, then the scientific contribution of those questions remains limited. 16 Tables. HA. Modified by D. Graves

88T3261

Kohn, Melvin L. (Dept Sociology Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore 21218), Cross-National Research as an Analytic Strategy, American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 6, Dec, 713-731.

¶ Four types of explicitly comparative cross-national research (CNR) are delineated: that in which nation is either the object or the context of study, or the unit of analysis, & that which is transnational in character. Personal experience in doing comparative research on social structure & personality in the US, Poland, & Japan is drawn on to discuss the strategies involved in doing comparative analyses & interpreting cross-national similarities & differences. Focusing primarily on CNR that uses nations as the context of analysis, six questions are addressed: (1) in whose context is CNR, (2) is CNR distinctly different from research comparing SCs or genders in a single country, (3) is the emphasis on cross-national rather than cross-cultural, societal, or systemic, (4) how many nations are needed for rigorous CNR & how should they be chosen, (5) what are the costs of doing CNR, & (6) what role does history play in cross-national interpretation? 85 References. Modified AA

88T3262

Land, Franz-Josef (Bochumer Sozialmedizinische Forschung BO, Stiepelstr 129, D-4630 1 Federal Republic Germany), Computergestützte Literatur- und Dokumentationsarbeit in den Sozialwissenschaften (The Use of Microcomputers for the Documentation and Management of Bibliographic Information in the Social Sciences), Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 6, Dec, 469 (GER).

¶ A description of LIDOS 3.0, an inhouse system for the management of bibliographic information. Based on experience with this system following criteria for the efficient use of microcomputers in social science research are presented: (1) integration of word processing into a file databank system, (2) use of hierarchical thesauri for controlled indexthetic Classes: The Operationalization of Cross-Classification Analysis in Behavioral Science Research. ♦ BMS, Bulletin de Methodologie Sociologique, 1987, 15, July, 22-38.

A discussion of the use of cross-classification analysis as a means for operationalizing concepts of a syndrome, class, model, & ideal type in behavioral science research. Experience sampling is suggested as a new research method for introducing variables on mental state & immediate environment. Two behavioral research projects that have utilized this methodology are described. These new techniques can also provide insights into the relationship between syndromes, analysis, & models. 3 figures, 49 References. Modified HA

13281

Vaughan, Graham M. (U Auckland, 1 New Zealand), Social Change and Racial Identity: Issues in the Use of Picture and Doll Measures, Australian Journal of Psychology, 1986, 38, 3, Dec, 359-370.

Fifty years of research has considered how children view their racial identity in response to picture & doll tests. Early US work demonstrated that young blacks were outgroup-oriented, ie, they identified with, & preferred, white figures, but young whites were ingroup-oriented. One law was that young blacks suffered in their self-esteem, & therefore turned toward white models to enhance a positive self-image. This inference played a role in the US Supreme Court decision in 1954 to outlaw racial segregation. A major critique of the research literature (Banks, W.

White Preference in Blacks. A Paradigm in Search of a Phenomenon." Psychological Bulletin, 1976, 83, 1179-1188) argued that the trend in black children's results was actually random, & was an outcome of the unsatisfactory test materials used. More recently, W G Cross ("A Two-Factor Theory of Black Identity: Implications for the Study of Identity Development in Minority Children" in Phinney, J S., & Athram, M. J (Eds), Children's Ethnic Socialization, Pluralism and Development, Beverly Hills, Calif. Sage, 1986) has shown that different questions were asked in studies carried out before the beginning of the black power movement of the 1960s, compared with those after that period of US history. methodological change had been introduced while rapid social change was going on. G M Vaughan's cross-cultural research (see SA 28 1/8OK4336) conducted throughout the decade of the 1960s, using a consistent methodology, gave a clear picture on social-change efforts among young Maori children, the major ethnic minority in New Zealand. Flawed as picture & doll studies may have been in this general field of research, they constitute important evidence bearing on the question of how minority children have responded to the changing image of their group within the dominant culture. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 39 References. Modified HA

13282

Weede, Erich (Forschungsinstitut Soziologie U Köln, D-5000 41 Federal Republic Germany), Ein europäisches Datenhandbuch, aber kaum ein Input für Datenanalysen (A European Data Handbook, but Hardly an Input for Data Analyses), Soziologische Revue, 1987, 10, 4, Oct, 374-379 (GER)

A review essay on a book by Peter Flora et al, State, Economy and Society in Western Europe, 1815-1975. A Data Handbook in Two Volumes (Frankfurt: Campus, 1983-1987 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). Several shortcomings are noted from the viewpoint of the potential user. Only 13 countries are included (Italy, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Ireland, & GB). There are awkward inconsistencies in the way data for 8 are handled: sometimes it is treated as one nation, sometimes as three separate entities (England & Wales, Scotland, & Northern Ireland).

There are also inconsistencies affecting comparisons over time: the amount of data presented vary from country to country & from year to year, with large gaps especially in the earlier part of the period covered. No complete list of variables is provided, & the interpretive notes are judged insufficient. C. Waters

88T3283

Westerheljden, Don F. (Twente U Technology, PO Box 217 Enschede Netherlands), The Substance of a Shadow. A Critique of Power Measurement Methods, Acta Politica, 1987, 22, 1, Jan, 39-59

¶ A theory of decision-making based on reputation for power as a principal explanatory variable is outlined. Three common methods of measuring individual power—the reputational, positional, & decision-making methods—are compared with respect to their validity for investigating decision-making processes using this theory & to the validity of their typical observational techniques. None is found to be fully satisfactory. A combination of all three methods is suggested as a means of obtaining a better indication of an individual's reputation for power. 2 Figures, 54 References. Modified HA

88T3284

White, James M. (U British Columbia, Vancouver V6T 1W5), Researching Developmental Careers: The Career Conformity Scale, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 3, Sept, 306-318

¶ An interval scale was developed to measure deviation from the normative sequencing of first job, marriage, & birth of first child. The scale scores were found to have predictive utility for marital instability & work interruptions in a sample of 14,004 adult Canadians interviewed by telephone in 1984. Use of the scale scores as an independent variable provides information over & above that provided when Dennis Hogan's temporal sequence categories (see SA 27-2/79J8073) are used as the independent variables, & allows use of more powerful analytic techniques. 4 Tables, 5 References. Modified HA

88T3285

———, Anthropology and Fieldwork, Critique of Anthropology, 1987, 7, 1, summer, 83-99

¶ A series of responses are addressed to a comment by Josep R. Llobera (see SA 35.1/87R1224) on Mediterranean anthropology. James W. Fernandez (U of Chicago, Ill), in Fieldwork in Southwestern Europe, agrees that "the Mediterranean" is a constructed object reflecting the assumptions of Northern Europeans & their quest for the exotic, but questions whether science offers a path to a fairer balance in anthropological discourse, ie, one that would take the ideas of people in Mediterranean cultures into account. It might be useful to have Iberians & other southerners do fieldwork in such places as the British Isles. Michael Herzfeld, in A View from Too Far Away, argues that Llobera confuses the reflexivity now pursued by anthropologists with narcissism, though several of Llobera's subordinate points remain valid. Antony Leeds (Boston U, Mass), in Fieldwork, History, and Anthropological Epistemology: A Critique of Llobera's Scientism, finds Llobera's critique unsatisfactory, not least because its charge that anthropology is ahistorical disregards the work of British structural-functionalism & French structuralism. Further, his attack on fieldwork would destroy anthropology's most valuable means of testing theory. Peter Loizos (London School of Economics, Aldwych, England), in In Reply to Llobera, finds Llobera's paper disappointing, especially in its lack of sympathetic insight into the anthropological practices it criticizes. Oriol Pi-Sunyer, in Anthropological Panacea or Epistemological Straitjacket, argues that Llobera underestimates the diversity of anthropology & fails to recognize the value of fieldwork. W H. Stoddard

05 statistical methods

T3286

Bozhkov, Oleg Borisovich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Eta neulovimaya general'naya sovokupnost' (The Elusive Nature of the Total Set), Soisologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 96-101. (RUS)

One of the key problems of sociological research is ensuring that the sample population surveyed is representative of the population as a whole. Statistical analysis must be used to make sure that the sample size is large enough. Some types of studies focus on populations with sharply defined characteristics, lending themselves well to statistical analysis, while other social groups have boundaries that can be somewhat blurred, complicating the problems of reliability of data & statistical analysis. In some cases where the available data are not wholly representative, a logical-content approach is preferred over a statistical approach, especially in the study of mass behavior. 1 Reference. G. Prostavkov

88T3287

Buchanan, Thomas & King, Timothy (Dept Geography & Recreation U Wyoming, Laramie 82071), Comparing Statistical Packages: SPSS, Blommed, and SAS, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 3, July, 329-336.

88T3271

Piña, Carlos. Sobre las historias de vida y su campo de validez en las ciencias sociales (Concerning Life Histories and Their Field of Validity in the Social Sciences). ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 143-162 (SPA)

¶ The role of life histories in the social sciences is evaluated. Many examples, from the 1920s onward, are considered, & reasons are sought for the renaissance of interest in this form since the late 1960s. The assumptions made in treating an individual life as an object of investigation are discussed, as are the limitations & validity of this approach. C. Waters

88T3272

Popping, Roel (State U Groningen, NL-9700 AB Netherlands), Op zoek naar één categoriële stelstel (Looking for One Set of Response Categories). ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 3, May-June, 196-203 (DUT)

¶ A method is proposed that uses the agreement-index D2 for the transfer of response categories as developed by several raters on the basis of answers given to open-ended questions to one set of categories. The method is especially useful in pilot studies that attempt to identify a set of response categories for questions to be added to the investigation that will follow. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 7 References. Modified AA

88T3273

Reinert, Max (Laboratoire psychologie U Toulouse II, F-31058 Cedex France), Classification descendante hiérarchique et analyse lexicale par contexte—application au corpus des poésies d'A. Rimbaud (Hierarchical Descending Classification and Lexical Analysis by Context: Application to the Poetry of A. Rimbaud). ♦ BMS, Bulletin de Methodologie Sociologique, 1987, 13, Jan, 53-90 (ERF)

¶ Lexical analysis by content & a hierarchically descending classification method are used to examine the corpus of Arthur Rimbaud's poetry. Two different codings of the corpus using these methods, along with others, furnish a means of judging the stability of the results thus obtained. 1 Appendix, 9 References. Modified HA

88T3274

Scheid-Cook, Teresa L., Aldige' Hiday, Virginia & Wooten, Keith (Saint Vincent Coll, Latrobe PA 15650), Mental Patients Eager and Willing to Help Sociological Research. ♦ Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 57-61

¶ To examine the willingness & ability of mental patients to give informed consent to a sociological research project, interview & other data from a larger statewide study designed to evaluate individual outcomes of reformed civil commitment procedures were analyzed. Written informed consent was necessary for R medical records to be examined in a 6-month follow-up. Most (79.5%) of 552 Rs agreed to participate when asked. Nonconsent had little relationship to psychiatric diagnosis, gender, or race, although age differences were found. Specifically, those aged 60+ were more likely judged to be incompetent & therefore unable to consent to the research. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 20 References. Modified HA

88T3275

Sommer, Robert (U California, Davis 95616), An Experimental Investigation of the Action Research Approach. The Journal of Applied Behavioral Science, 1987, 23, 2, May, 185-199

¶ An examination of the dissemination & use of membership survey results in six memorial-funeral cooperative societies. For two societies, an action research approach was used whereby the societies participated in survey planning & received both prescriptive results & technical assistance from the researchers, two others did not participate in planning & received only descriptive results. Two additional societies also conducted surveys, one as part of the pilot study, the other on its own, with the former receiving assistance. Follow-up interviews with the societies' officers provided evidence that the societies highly involved in the survey planning, & which received technical assistance, disseminated & used the results more often, & had more favorable attitudes toward the researchers, than did societies characterized by low involvement or no assistance. These results support the efficacy of an action research approach combining self-survey with technical assistance. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 31 References. HA

88T3276

Tedeschi, Enrica, Autobiografia e carisma. Le memorie di un sacerdote "lazzarettista" (Autobiography and Charisma. The Memoirs of a "Lazzarettist" Priest). ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, C, Dec, 108-124 (ITA)

¶ An examination of the memoirs of Don Giovanni Battista Polverini, titled "Io e Montelabaro: ossia la storia del misterioso David Lazzaretto sorto nel 1868, scomparso tragicamente dall scena nel 1878" (I, Montelabaro. Or the Story of the Mysterious David Lazzaretti, Who Appeared in 1868 and Tragically Disappeared in 1878), an unpublished manuscript in the library of the Istit per la Storia del Risorgimento Italiano, Rome. Lazzaretti (1834-1878) was an illiterate carter who, at a sudden religious conversion, founded a charismatic, millenarian movement in Tuscany, Italy. Polverini (1837-1927) was one of his principal disciples, who acclaimed Lazzaretti as Christ at his second coming. The memoirs present the life story & spiritual autobiography of Polverini, well as a partial biography of Lazzaretti. The nature of charism, movements in general & of Lazzarettism in particular are discussed. The use of such autobiographical materials in the social sciences. Waters

88T3277

Van Dongen, W., Deschamps, L. & Pauwels, K., Evaluatie van postenquête als instrument voor sociaal-economisch onderzoek (Evaluation of a Mail Survey as an Instrument for Social and Economic Research). ♦ Tijdschrift voor Sociale Wetenschappen, 1987, 32, Oct-Dec, 403-416 (DUT)

¶ The increasing costs of classic interview surveys, shrinking budgets, decreasing response rates are the main arguments advanced in favor of mail surveys. D. A. Dillman's method for the elaboration of a mail survey (Mail and Telephone Surveys: The Total Design Method, New York: John Wiley & Sons, 1977) was used in a survey of Fs' household work (N = 1,243) in Flanders (Belgium). The various aspects of Dillman's method & its application are evaluated. While the mail survey was as successful as Dillman predicts, the results are very promising. 4 Tables, 3 References. Modified HA

88T3278

van Meter, Karl M. (LISH-Centre national recherche scientifique, 54 blvd Raspail F-75006 Paris France), Ideology and Methodology in Network Analysis in the United States and France. Connections, 1987, 10, 2, summer, 106-110

¶ The possibility of a meaningful tie between general ideology & research methodology in the social sciences is explored. J. Wellman's count of specific examples of association or opposition between ideology & methodology ("The American Sociological Review vs Marxist Theory," Connections, 1986, 9, 1, 1416) tends to confirm that certain sociologists associate Marxism with network analysis. It has been suggested that though there are ties between the two, they are far more complex than the simplistic equation identifying analysis of elites & structural criticism of capitalism with network analysis & Marxism. A brief historical review is provided of the development of network analysis in the English-speaking world & its concomitant lack of development in Europe & French-speaking world. It is concluded that network analysis of elites is not yet independent of ideology, though progress has been made, particularly in the New World. 17 References. Modified HA van Meter, Karl M. (LISH-Centre national recherche scientifique, 54 blvd Raspail F-75006 Paris France), Methodological Discourse in Sociological Research and Social Representation of Deviance in Study of Ideology. ♦ BMS, Bulletin de Methodologie Sociologique, 1987, 13, Jan, 33-52.

88T3279

¶ It is argued that social representation & discourse on sociological methodology play important roles in determining the shape & outcome of sociological research. Different discourses on sociological methodology are presented & situated in relation to other sociological discourse (thematic & theoretical), as well as to methodological discourses in other social & physical sciences. Research on the structures & functions of diverse social representations of deviance is reviewed to illustrate ties between ideology & methodological discourse. The lack of methodological precision in French social scientific research is demonstrated, primarily through an analysis of government-sponsored research projects. 2 Appendixes, 28 References. Modified HA

88T3280

van Meter, Karl M., de Vries, Marten W., Kaplan, Charles D. & Ijkmann, Chantal I. M. (LISH-Centre national recherche scientifique, 54 blvd Raspail F-75006 Paris France), States, Syndromes, and Ps

88T3297

Mayer, Lawrence S. & Carroll, Steven S. (Coll Business Arizona State U, Tempe 85287). Testing for Lagged, Cointemporal, and Total Dependence in Cross-Lagged Panel Analysis, Am Sociological Methods and Research, 1987, 16, 2, Nov, 187-217.

Panel studies are statistical studies in which 2+ variables are observed at 2+ Ss at 2+ points in time. Cross-lagged panel studies are those in which the variables are continuous & divide naturally into 2 sets, focus on estimating & testing the effects of each set of variables on the other. In the regression approach, the cross-lagged model is formulated as a multivariate regression model & regression methods are used to make inferences about the parameters. A contribution is made to this approach by decomposing the dependence in such models into lagged & cointemporal dependence & developing three strategies for assessing the degree of dependence. After presenting hypothesis tests for these strategies, they are demonstrated through analysis of a set of psychiatric panel data. 4 Tables, 21 References. HA

88T3298

O'Brien, Robert M. & Homer, Pamela (Dept Sociology Coll Arts & Sciences U Oregon, Eugene 97403). Corrections for Coarsely Categorized Measures: LISREL's Polyserial and Polychoric Correlations, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 4, 349-360.

Versions 5 & 6 of LISREL (Joreskog, K. G., & Sorbom, D. LISREL V: Analysis of Linear Structural Relationships by Maximum Likelihood and Least Squares Means, Aricso: International Educational Services, 1981) contain procedures that estimate the underlying r between continuous variables on the basis of crude rank category measures. The procedures assume that the distribution of the measured variables could have been bivariate normal if they had not been categorized. Using survey data & simulations, the accuracy of these polyserial/polychoric (P/P) based estimates of the underlying correlations are compared with those based on simple equal distance scoring of the categories. The results indicate that under some conditions, eg, nearly normally distributed variables & moderate to high correlations, the P/P based estimates are better. Under other conditions, eg, a moderate to high degree of skew & kurtosis & low correlations, the equal distance score based estimates are better. Under all conditions, the amount of error decreases fairly rapidly as the number of categories is increased from 2 to 5. 2 Tables, 33 References. HA

88T3299

Shvyrkov, Vladislav V. (Sonoma State U, Rohnert Park CA 94928). What Harvard Statisticians Don't Tell Us, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 4, 335-347.

Statistical methods are only valid when they are applied to data from homogeneous populations. Such homogeneity is an assumption of probability theory, but in statistics it is a hypothesis that must be tested. The contradictions between probability & statistics can only be resolved by adoption of a valid methodology for such testing. 2 Tables, 19 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3300

Tziner, Aharon & Elizur, Dov (Dept Labor Studies Tel-Aviv U, Ramat-Aviv 69978 Israel). Work Values as "Reinforcer Groupings": Is the Underlying Structure Method Free?, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 4, 377-392.

An examination of whether the same underlying structure of occupational reinforcers (denoted the structure of work values) turns out when three different data analysis methods are used. A questionnaire on which is indicated the importance of each of 21 occupational reinforcers was administered to a representative sample of 546 Ur adult Jews in Israel. Factor analysis, Guttman's smallest space analysis, & cluster analysis were each applied to the questionnaire responses, essentially resulting in different work value structures. Theoretical implications of the comparison results are discussed. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 1 Appendix, 27 References. Modified HA

88T3301

Wasserman, Stanley & Iacobucci, Dawn, Statistical Analysis of Discrete Relational Data, The British Journal of Mathematical and Statistical Psychology, 1986, 39, 1, May, 41-64.

Social interaction data record the intensity of the relationship, or (f) interaction, between two individual actors. Recent methods for analyzing such data have treated these relational variables as continuous. A more appropriate method, described here, views these dyadic interactions as variables in multidimensional discrete cross-classified arrays, thus permitting analysis by loglinear models. These methods extend previous approaches to social interaction data, which were limited to binary relations, by focusing on discrete-valued relations. Dyadic interactions, measured for a single discrete relational variable, are modeled stochastically using tendencies toward expansiveness (actor-effects), popularity (partner-effects), & reciprocity. Actor-characteristic variables may be used to group actors into a substantive partition, thus simplifying the analysis & subsequent interpretations. These approaches are used illustratively with a hypothetical & a published data set. 7 Tables, 1 Appendix, 50 References. Modified HA

88T3302

Weede, Erich (Forschungsinstitut Soziologie U Koln, Lindenburger Allee 15 D-5000 41 Federal Republic Germany). Interaction Effects in Cross-National Studies: Human Capital Formation, Government Revenues and Economic Growth in Less Developed Countries, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 4, 361-375.

¶ One may analyze interaction effects either by adding a multiplicative term to an ordinary regression equation or by group comparisons. The effects of human capital formation & government revenues on economic growth in less developed countries serve as an example. The proposition under discussion claims that high government revenues (as a share of gross domestic product) cancel the otherwise positive effects of human capital formation on economic growth. This proposition cannot be supported in regression analyses with an interaction term, although it receives strong support from comparisons of linear-additive regressions of growth of rates on human capital formation separately done for high- & low revenue countries. This result leads to the question of which technique, & thereby which finding, should be adopted. Since regression analyses with interaction terms investigate whether an interaction of a restricted, symmetrical type applies, group comparisons should often be preferred. 6 Tables, 29 References. HA

88T3303

Yager, Ronald R. (Machine Intelligence Instit Iona Coll, New Rochelle, NY 10801). Aggregating Evidence Using Quantified Statements, Am Information Sciences, 1985, 36, 1-2, July-Aug, 179-206.

¶ The problem of aggregating a collection of experts' opinions as to the value of some unknown variable in the form of fuzzy subsets is explored with focus on what values for the unknown variable are possible, certain, or probable. Linguistically quantified propositions are shown to provide a framework in which to aggregate the opinions. Two methodologies are provided for implementing the aggregation in terms of quantified statements: (1) a consensory aggregation based on an algebraic interpretation of a quantified statement, & (2) a competitive type aggregation based on substitution interpretation of a quantified statement. The ability to assign differing importances to the experts as well as differing degrees of confidence in an opinion is provided for. 28 References. Modified HA

88T3304

Yeaton, William H. & Sechrest, Lee (Instit Social Research U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109). Use and Misuse of No-Difference Findings in Eliminating Threats to Validity, Evaluation Review, 1986, 10, 6, Dec, 836-852.

¶ Donald Campbell & his colleagues (eg, see Campbell, D. T., & Stanley, J. C., Experimental and Quasi-Experimental Designs for Research, Chicago: Rand McNally, 1963) have elaborated an approach to research based on the elimination of threats to four validity types: internal, external, construct, & statistical conclusion. Here, it is argued that the process of eliminating validity threats depends fundamentally on no-difference findings, a fact that has not been made explicit by researchers. The implications of this neglect are explored using examples from different substantive areas, including psychology, health, & medicine. The intrinsic role of no-difference findings is described in the context of all four validity types, & suggestions for improving the process are offered. 38 References. HA

88T3305

---, Az út-elemzésről. III. rész (On Path Analysis, Part 3), Szociológia, 1983, 3, 327-348. (HUN)

Edited by László Bertalan.

¶ Abstract not currently available (see SA 36:1/88T1147 & 88T1101 for citation information on Parts 1 & 2, respectively).

† SPSS, Biomed, & SAS are three statistical packages widely available to social scientists. Besides their use on mainframe computers, each is available for personal computers. Although similar, each has different capabilities, strengths, & weaknesses. 10 References. HA

88T3288

Cortés, Fernando & Rubalcava, Rosa María (c/o Rubalcava Colegio Mexico, 10740 Mexico DF), Teoría, estadística e información (Theory, Statistics, and Information). ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 353-365 (SPA)

† The part played by statistical knowledge in the relationship between theory & information &, more specifically, between theory & data, is investigated. The two aspects considered are association & regression. The help that can be given by the statistical instrument in the study of relationships among variables & the links between theory & information is explored. It is shown that statistics is a powerful form of assistance in the process of investigation, provided there is a basis of conceptual clarity that allows the theoretical content to be formalized or expressed in mathematical terms. Given a relationship between two or more concepts, the processes of objectivation, operationalization, & the construction of scales or indexes are used to determine the corresponding variables. Thus, on the one hand, there are relationships between concepts, & on the other, measurements corresponding to each of them separately. Statistics provides an instrument for establishing the relationships between the empirical manifestations of the links between the concepts. Through the statistical study of the level & form of association between variables, the connection between concepts is also analyzed. Modified AA

88T3289

Feucht, Thomas Eugene (U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Estimating Interaction Effects in Regression in the Presence of Measurement Error, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 490-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711111.

88T3290

Flores, Benito E. (Texas A&M U, College Station 77843), Use of the Sign Test to Supplement the Percentage Better Statistic, International Journal of Forecasting, 1986, 2, 4, 477-489.

† The utilization of an accuracy measure such as Percentage Better can be made more meaningful if it is supplemented with a statistical test of the significance of the results. For the Percentage Better, the Sign Test can be useful. Some of the findings of the Makridakis competition are re-analyzed to illustrate this point. The results make for a clearer interpretation & facilitate the establishment of clear & distinct advantages of one forecasting method vs another. 9 Tables, 5 References. HA

88T3291

Garg, Rashmi (Laurentian U, Sudbury Ontario P3E 2C6), Estimating Test Norms via Multiple Matrix Sampling. ♦ Canadian Journal of Behavioural Science/Revue canadienne des sciences du comportement, 1987, 19, 2, Apr, 191-198.

† The estimates of a population mean & variance obtained by traditionally used examinee sampling (ES) & multiple matrix sampling (MMS) plans are compared using computer simulated data. The variables include a number of observations & item subtest sizes. The results show that, for a large number of observations, MMS plans provide as good estimates of a population mean & variance as ES. However, in this experiment, the estimate of population variance became more stable as the number of items in each subtest increased. The item subtest size had no effect on estimation of the mean. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 20 References. Modified HA

88T3292

Gensemer, Susan H. & Kelly, Jerry S. (Dept Economics Syracuse U, NY 13244), An Efficient Algorithm for Voting Sequences, Mathematical Social Sciences, 1987, 14, 1, Aug, 59-75.

† The chaos theorems show that given almost any alternatives x & y , there exists a voting sequence from x to y . However, proofs of such results have been purely existential, i.e., there is no algorithm by which such a voting path can be constructed. Such an algorithm is presented here for one standard example. Furthermore, it is shown that the algorithm has the property that the voting sequence involves the fewest possible number of steps. 1 Figure, 2 References. HA

88T3293

Gillespie, Michael, Tenenbarg, Elisabeth M. & Kingma, John (Dept Sociology U Alberta, Edmonton T6G 2E9), Using Mokken Scale Analysis to Develop Unidimensional Scales: Do the Six Above Items in the NORC GSS Form One or Two Scales?, Qualit. Quantity, 1987, 21, 4, 393-408.

† As a nonparametric stochastic version of Guttman scale analysis, Mokken model (Mokken, R. J., A Theory and Procedure of Scale Analysis, The Hague: Mouton, 1971) provides a useful starting point for scale construction since it does not impose severe restrictions on the functional form of the item trace lines. It requires only that the item trace lines are monotonically increasing & that they do not cross. After describing the Mokken method, it is illustrated by analyzing 6 above items from the 1975-1984 NORC General Social Surveys. In contrast to earlier parametric analyses of these items (regular & probit factor analyses), these items are found to form a single dimension. It is argued that the two-dimension solution of these earlier analyses is an artifact of differences in the difficulty of the items. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 39 References. HA

88T3294

Guilkey, David K. & Rindfuss, Ronald R. (Carolina Population Center U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Logistic Regression Multivariate Life Tables: A Communicable Approach, Sociological Methods and Research, 1987, 16, 2, Nov, 276-300.

† The use of logistic regression to estimate a discrete-time hazard model is discussed. The derivation of linkage between the results of the estimation of the logistic regression equations & the summary measures of life table is presented. It is argued that the method is responsive to the needs of a variety of researchers, requires few assumptions, & is straightforward to implement. An example is presented where the determination of the timing of entry into motherhood in eight Asian countries is analyzed. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 1 Appendix, 33 References. HA

88T3295

Hubbard, Raymond & Allen, Stuart J. (Drake U, Des Moines 50311), A Cautionary Note on the Use of Principal Components Analysis: Supportive Empirical Evidence, Sociological Methods and Research, 1987, 16, 2, Nov, 301-308.

† In "A Cautionary Note on the Use of Principal Components Analysis" (see SA 35 2/87R3221), Edgar F. Borgatta, Kyle Kercher, & Donald Stull used hypothetical data to illustrate how the results produced by principal components analysis can be substantially different from those of common factor analysis. Their work is extended into the empirical domain using seven well-known data sets, & the results of the maximum likelihood factor analysis model are compared with those of the principal components model. The results strongly support those of Borgatta et al.; indeed, the discrepancies in the empirical results reported here are larger than their hypothetical example would suggest. When comparing the performance of the principal components model with the common factor & maximum likelihood models, differences can be expected to occur in (1) the magnitudes of the factor loadings, (2) the signs attached to the factor loadings, & most important, (3) the interpretation of factors themselves. 1 Table, 1 Appendix, 15 References. HA

88T3296

Kaufman, Robert L. & Schervish, Paul G. (c/o Schervish Social Welfare Research Institute Boston Coll, Chestnut Hill MA 021), Variations on a Theme: More Uses of Odds Ratios to Interpret Linear Parameters, Sociological Methods and Research, 1987, 16, 2, Nov, 218-255.

† An expository discussion of the use of odds, odds ratios, & functions of odds ratios as an aid to the interpretation of loglinear parameters. While there have been some previous presentations on the use of odds ratios, this method has never been fully & systematically developed in complex situations, nor have the potential problems of interpreting odds ratios been discussed. The possible modes of drawing conclusions with odds ratios using any of the three common parameterizations, loglinear model (analysis of variance-like, regression-like, & logit) are elaborated. The sampling distribution & the calculation of standard errors for odds ratios are also discussed, as are some cautions on the interpretation of odds ratios. Analysis of data on unemployment (among black & white US Ms from the Current Population Surveys for 1978) using polytomous variables illustrates the application & interpretation of the odds ratio approach. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 23 References. Modified HA

8T3314

Thomas, R. W. (School Geography Victoria U Manchester, M13 9PL England), Developments in Mathematical Programming Models and Their Impact on the Spatial Allocation of Educational Resources, Progress in Human Geography, 1987, 11, 2, June, 207-226.

The management of school sizes & catchments has been aided by developments that have taken place in the field of mathematical programming. Linear programming models were used to provide solutions to the desegregation of US schools in the 1960s, & more recently goal programming has been used to evaluate trade-offs between conflicting design criteria. It is argued that, while in Western societies, complex model formulations are suitable devices for the educational planner, in Third World countries, simple manual formulations based on location-allocation principles are usually more appropriate. The applicability of programming models as management devices & the case for adopting broadly positivist approaches to the allocation of educational resources are considered. 61 References. Modified AA

SOCIAL ANALYSIS

Journal of Cultural and Social Practice

For anthropologists, sociologists, political scientists, social historians

SOCIAL ANALYSIS regularly publishes articles of a combined theoretical and substantive nature which address critical issues and problems in cultural and social studies.

SPECIAL ISSUE NUMBER 22, DECEMBER 1987

POWER, PROCESS AND TRANSFORMATION: ESSAYS IN MEMORY OF MAX GLUCKMAN

Edited by Bruce Kapferer

Bruce Kapferer: The Anthropology of Max Gluckman

Luc de Heusch: Sacred Kingship as a Politico-Symbolic Structure: A Re-Evaluation of Frazer's Thesis

Chandra Jayawardena: Analysis of a Social Situation in Acheh Besar: An Exploration in Micro History

Kingsley Garbett: Symbolic Labour and the Transfer of Symbolic Capital in the Production of a Ritual Field among Korekore and Zezuru of Zimbabwe

T.M.S. Evens: Psychologism and Ethnocentrism in Anthropological Interactionism.

Don Handelman: Micro-Structure and Macro-Process: The Development of Infrastructure in two Israeli Work Settings

Susan Baggett Barham: Takeovers, Decision Making and Power in Organisations

Sally Falk Moore: Dividing the Pot of Gold: Social and Symbolic Elements in an Instrumental Negotiation.

Meyer Fortes: Towards the Judicial Process: A Tallensi Case

	Students (Aust)	Other Individuals	Inst
ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION	$12 00	$17 00	$30 00
SINGLE NUMBER, Special Issue	$10 00	$15 00	$24 00
SINGLE NUMBER, Ordinary Issue	$7 00	$11 50	$18 00
SET OF BACK ISSUES 1979-1986	$70 00	$95 00	$180 00
"SPECIAL" FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS: All back issues plus 1987 subscription	$80 00	$105 00	$200 00

Cheques from outside Australia can be in US dollars

NAME

ADDRESS

STATE/COUNTRY

POSTCODE

SUBSCRIPTION TYPE

AMOUNT

Please mail cheque or purchaser order to Social Analysis, Dept of Anthropology, University of Adelaide, G P O. Box 498, Adelaide, 5001, Australia

All prices include the cost of overland postage.

88T3306

Correction: "Estimation with Cross-National Data: Robust and Nonparametric Methods", Am American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 6, Dec, ix

† Corrections are offered to a previously published article by Thomas

Dietz, R. Scott Frey, & Linda Kalof (see SA 35:5/87R9001). The unbiasedness & efficiency of ordinary least squares estimators do not depend on the normality of the population residual distribution; furthermore are readily available to resolve some problems with standard statistical packages. 4 References. W. H. Stoddard

61 models: mathematical & other

88T3307

Foin, Theodore C. & Davis, William G. (Division Environmental Studies U California, Davis 95616), Equilibrium and Nonequilibrium Models in Ecological Anthropology: An Evaluation of "Stability" in Maring Ecosystems in New Guinea, American Anthropologist, 1987, 89, 1, Mar, 9-31

† Three models pertaining to the stability of Maring in New Guinea ecosystems have been proposed: the local stability model, in which a population seeks its own equilibrium state, the regional stability model, in which each population is ultimately unstable, but populations persist somewhere in space; & the disequilibrium model, in which neither stability nor population regulation is attained. In the disequilibrium model, exogenous factors prevent a population, which is moving toward some equilibrium state, from reaching it. The many quantitative anthropological & ecological studies conducted in the New Guinea Highlands have not shown clearly which of these three models best describes reality. Simulation of shifting agriculture in New Guinea shows that the Highlands systems are equilibrium-seeking, but have such limited recovery rates from disturbance that even small perturbations are sufficient to keep them from reaching equilibrium. When the influences of technological innovation, environmental change, & social-cultural evolution are taken into account, the disequilibrium model is the model of choice. These systems remain away from their stable equilibrium points most of the time, if those exist at all, thus, New Guinea agroecosystems can be stable or unstable depending on how stability is defined. 1 Table, 9 Figures, 60 References. HA

88T3308

Homer, Jack B. (Dept Systems Science U Southern California, Los Angeles 90089-0021), A Diffusion Model with Application to Evolving Medical Technologies, Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1987, 31, 3, May, 197-218

† A system dynamics simulation model is described that was developed to study the diffusion of medical technologies, but that should also be applicable to other sorts of technologies. The model addresses both the adoption & the changing extent of use of an evolving, product-based technology, & also endogenously accounts for changes in actual & perceived performance. Two specific medical case studies provide background to the model & are used for testing its ability to reproduce various aspects of historical behavior. The model's relatively complex structure is presented in the form of influence diagrams showing major flows & relationships. Contributions & possible future uses & modifications of the model are discussed. 20 Tables, 46 References. HA

88T3309

Lelli, Marcello (Institut Sociologia U Sassari, I-07100 Sardinia Italy), Intorno alla "fine del lavoro" (The End of Work), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 2, Apr-June, 132-138 (ITA)

† It is argued that the industrial society is based on two concepts: one links citizenship with work, & the other links production with consumption. The discontinuity of the postindustrial society arises from the break with these paired concepts. The traditional meaning of work has been overwhelmed by this break, & interpretations that are antinomic with reference to capital can no longer be supported. Modern society may be on the threshold of the end of work: this does not mean a utopia, but it may mean the end of the historical era in which man had to deny his being in order to make himself available as an object in the work process. It is therefore a hopeful prospect. Modified HA

88T3310

Masuch, Michael, LaPotin, Perry & Verhorst, Rik (Faculteit Politiek-Sociale Wetenschappen U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands), Kunstmatige intelligentie in organisaties. Een simulatie-model van organisatorische besluitvorming (Artificial Intelligence in Organizations. A Simulation Model of Organizational Choice), W Mens en Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 4, Nov, 358-381. (DUT)

† Much attention has been paid to the metaphor of garbage-can decision making (Cohen, Michael D., March, James G., & Olsen, Johan P., "A Garbage Can Model of Organizational Choice," Administrative Science Quarterly 1972, 17, 1-25). A new design of the simulation model, on which the concept was originally based, is developed & exercised, with special emphasis on organizational structure & complex forms of interaction between decisionmakers. The garbage-can mechanism cannot describe decision making in organized structures, it is, however, a fairly general conceptualization of decision making beyond structure. Tests of the new model indicate that decision making in an organized structure behaves like decision making in an organized anarchy, but for partially different reasons. 2 Tables, 6 Figures, 33 References. HA

88T3311

McKelvey, Richard D. & Ordeshook, Peter C. (Division Humanities & Social Sciences California Instit Technology, Pasadena 91125), Elections with Limited Information: A Multidimensional Model, Mathematical Social Sciences, 1987, 14, 1, Aug, 77-99

† A game-theoretic model is developed of two-candidate competition over a multidimensional space, where the participants have incomplete information about the preferences & strategy choices of other participants. The players consist of the voters & the candidates. Voters are partitioned into two classes: informed voters observe candidate strategy choices, while uninformed voters do not. All players (voters & candidate alike) observe contemporaneous poll data broken down by various subgroups of the population. The results give conditions on the number & distribution of the informed & uninformed voters that are sufficient to guarantee that any equilibrium (or voter equilibrium) extracts all information. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 4 References. HA

88T3312

Shinn, Terry (GEMAS, 54 blvd Raspail F-75006 Paris France), Geometrie et langage: la structure des modèles en sciences sociales et en sciences physiques (Geometry and Language: The Structure of Models in the Social Sciences and the Physical Sciences), BMS Bulletin de Methodologie Sociologique, 1987, 16, Oct, 5-38. (FRE)

† It is argued that in the physical sciences, models are essentially based on visual or reified geometry, while in the social sciences, models are often based on language constructions, especially metaphors. A comparison of research in the physical & the social sciences examines their ontological reference to the models they use. Everyday language in the physical sciences is analyzed, as are three theories of metaphor. The idea is developed that in the social sciences, there is a deterministic relationship between metaphoric models & social ontology. Modified HA

88T3313

Sylvan, Donald A. (Dept Political Science Ohio State U, Columbus 43210), Supplementing Global Models with Computational Models: An Assessment and an Energy Example, Behavioral Science, 1987, 32, 3, July, 212-231

† Many global modeling efforts have been criticized for not paying enough attention to political decision making. Computational models based on much of the methodology developed by scholars in the "artificial intelligence" community, have been utilized in recent years to represent some aspects of political decision making. The question of whether intellectual progress could be made by combining some of the features of these heretofore disparate academic strands is addressed. Four criteria are suggested under which supplementing global modeling efforts with computational models seems to make sense: (1) the identity of the political unit being modeled; (2) the depth of the modeler's understanding of the political unit's problem-solving behavior; (3) whether the political unit can be reasonably characterized as exhibiting an identifiable general mode of problem-solving; & (4) the availability of sufficient information to test the model's view of the political unit's problem-solving behavior. 4 Figures, 1 Appendix, 29 References. Modified AA

0200 sociology: history and theory

02 of professional interest (teaching sociology)

88T3315

Agrawal, S. P. (National Social Science Documentation Centre, New Delhi India), Asia-Pacific Information Network in Social Sciences (APINESS) Launched, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 179-180

* An information network for exchange among Asian & Pacific scholars was organized at a meeting in Bangkok, Thailand, with the name Asia-Pacific Information in Social Sciences (APINESS). Its goal will be to link existing social science libraries & documentation centers & to create new centers. Its initial program of activities & its office bearers are noted. W. H. Stoddard

88T3316

Bair, Jeffrey H., Thompson, William E. & Hickey, Joseph V. (Division Sociology/Family Sciences/Anthropology Emporia State U, KS 66801), The Academic Elite in American Anthropology: Linkages among Top-Ranked Graduate Programs, Current Anthropology, 1986, 27, 4, Aug-Oct, 410-412

* An examination of patterns of faculty recruitment & mobility among the 12 graduate departments of anthropology ranked highest by the National Academy of Sciences. These programs are divisible into a stable elite of departments that recruit from their own or each other's graduates, & a middle rank that does so much less. The large enrollments of elite programs & the wide dispersal of their graduates through other US helps to maintain their reputation, which does not seem to be based so much on true quality as on relative power within the discipline. 3 Tables, 9 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3317

Bruce, Robert H. (Western Australian Instit Technology), Different Perceptions of the Requirements for Credibility and Empathy in Cross-National Instructor-Trainee Relations: A Case Study, International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 287-292

* Interview data & document analysis were used to examine the perceptions of US Office of Public Safety (OPS) officials about the requirements for instructor credibility & empathy in the training program for 5,000 foreign policemen at the International Police Academy (IPA). Rs assumed that the instructors' US police experience created in trainees the perception of instructor credibility, & instructors' overseas advisory experience instilled the perception of empathy. Trainees, however, indicated that the US police experience often was not relevant to their needs, & that the instructors' overseas experience did not prepare them to understand trainees. Trainees did not perceive IPA instructors as having credibility & empathy as OPS officials had assumed. 12 References. Modified HA

88T3318

Corsino, Louis (Dept Sociology Concordia College, River Forest IL 60305), Fieldworker Blues: Emotional Stress and Research Involvement in Fieldwork Settings, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 3, July, 275-285

* Field research leads participant observers to develop emotional responses that on the one hand preserve the symbolic order of these encounters, & on the other, disengage these observers from critical research activity. Personal experience conducting field research on political campaigns in Boston, Mass, & San Diego, Calif, serves as example. 38 References. HA

88T3319

Gray, Jane (Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218), Conference on the Comparative Study of the Informal Sector: Harper's Ferry West Virginia, October 1986, International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 3, Sept, 421-423

* A summary of the research presented at the Harper's Ferry, WV, conference of Oct 1986 on the informal sector. The conference included 27 scholars from Europe, the US, Africa, Asia, & Latin America. The major themes of the conference emerged as: the difference between formal & informal economies, the informal sector's internal heterogeneity, the formal sector's interaction with household survival strategies, & the state's role in informalization. D. Graves

88T3320

Grigor'eva, N. S., Otvetstvennost' molodykh uchenykh (Young Scientists' Responsibility), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 130-131 (RUS)

¶ In 1987 the International Federation of Scientific Workers sponsored an international forum in Moscow on "Science, Technology, & Peace," with representatives from 36 countries. N. Artenaika called on delegates to fight against the threat of nuclear war. A. Momdzhyan noted that scientists bear responsibility for the fate of progress & civilization. P. Drazhalev, M. Batachariya, & F. Gordiner called on young scientists to actively participate in the development of scientific concepts leading to optimal security. J. Bekker & G. Colombetti spoke against the militarization of scientific research. S. Yukito criticized the manner in which military scientific research consumes funds better spent on social problems. Kh. Butaleb lamented the emigration of young scientists from Third World to developed nations. G. Prostavkov

88T3321

Gupta, Shiv Prakash (Dept Sociology U Jodhpur, 342003 Rajasthan India), Report of the Post-Congress Workshop on "Sociological Prerequisites for the Development of Under-Developed Regions: The Case of Arid Regions", The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 180-182

¶ A workshop on SE development of underdeveloped arid regions conducted 24-26 Aug 1986 (just after the Eleventh World Congress of Sociology held in Delhi, India) is described. Summaries are offered of the major papers that were presented & of other events at the workshop. W. H. Stoddard

88T3322

Hanson, David J. (State U New York Coll, Potsdam 13676), Another Note on Sociology and Infrahuman Culture, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 1-2, Jan-Apr, 163-165

¶ Most introductory sociology textbooks & books of readings ignore the possibility that culture might exist among nonhumans. The treatment of that subject in a sample of current books is compared with a study conducted 10 years earlier. In the present survey (N = 36 books), 26% did not discuss culture, 53% presented it by definition or implication as an exclusively human creation, & 21% discussed the possibility of cultural forms among nonhumans. The % of introductory books in which the issue was examined rose from under 2% in the earlier study to 21% in the current survey. This suggests that introductory text authors have become less academically ethnocentric & more open to relevant evidence from other disciplines, possibly in response to controversial issues raised by sociobiology, which gained widespread attention shortly after the first survey. Modified AA

88T3323

Hauser, Robert M. (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Sharing Data: It's Time for ASA Journals to Follow the Folkways of a Scientific Sociology, American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 6, Dec, vi-viii.

¶ A suggestion is advanced for the adoption of formal procedures for sharing original data within the sociological community. Journals published by the American Sociological Assoc could facilitate this by omitting such data from articles, while making machine-readable databases available on floppy diskettes as supplements. While some difficulties would need to be overcome, this measure would improve the quality of sociological research. 3 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3324

Heath, Phyllis A. (Dept Home Economics Family Life & Consumer Education Central Michigan U, Mount Pleasant 48859), Developing Parent Education Courses: A Review of Resources, Family Relations, 1987, 36, 2, Apr, 209-214.

Volume 7: Special Issue 1, Issue 2

TEXT

an interdisciplinary journal for the study of discourse

Editor:

Teun A. van Dijk
University of Amsterdam
Dept. of General Literary studies
Spuistraat 210
1012 VT Amsterdam, Netherlands

Editorial Board:

John B. Black (Yale)
Aaron Cicourel (La Jolla)
Malcolm Coulthard (Birmingham)
János S. Petőfi (Bielefeld)
Deborahannen (Georgetown)

In special issue 7-1:

Medical Discourse

edited by Sarah H. Freeman and Monica S. Heller

Editor's Preface

SARAH A. FREEMAN Introduction Verbal communication in medical encounters. An overview of recent work

ANITA M. POMERANTZ, BARBARA P. MASTRIANO and MURRAY M. HALFOND. Student clinicians' difficulties while conducting the summary diagnostic interview

NORBERT HEIN and RUTH WODAK Medical interviews in internal medicine: Some results of an empirical investigation

PER MASEIDE. The permanent context construction: A neglected dimension of therapeutic discourse

In issue 7-2:

BETTY LOU DUBOIS. A reformulation of thematic progression typology
R. W. KIRSNER, V. J. VAN HEUVEN and J. F. M. VERMEULEN. Text-type, context and demonstrative choice in written Dutch: Some experimental data

KAY RICHARDSON. Critical linguistics and textual diagnosis

CHARLES A. WEAVER, III and WALTER KINTSCH. Reconstruction in the recall of prose

STEVEN YEARLEY. Demotic logic: Causal discourse and the structure of explanations

Subscription rates for Volume 7 (1987):

- Libraries/Institutions DM 135,- US$ 58,-
- Individual (prepaid)* DM 60,- US$ 26,-
- Single issues DM 37,- US$ 15,-

Add postage per issue DM 2,- for FRG, or DM 2.80 for all other destinations

* For private use only Order directly from Walter de Gruyter (Not valid for German, Swiss and Austrian residents)

Payment via Mastercard (Access)/Eurocard/American Express Card accepted

Subscriptions and single orders available from booksellers and subscription agents, or directly from.

Walter de Gruyter & Co
P.O. B 110240
D-1000 Berlin 11, F R G

Walter de Gruyter, Inc.
200 Saw Mill River Road
Hawthorne, NY 10532, U.S.A.

mouton de gruyter

Berlin · New York · Amsterdam

06 history & present state of sociology

88T3336

Adler, Patricia A. & Adler, Peter (Dept Sociology Washington U, Saint Louis MO 63130), The Past and the Future of Ethnography, Journal of Contemporary Ethnography, 1987, 16, 1, Apr, 4-24
A position statement explaining the decision to change the name of Urban Life (formerly Urban Life & Culture) to Journal of Contemporary Ethnography. The previous name was misleading in that it suggested a focus on Ur societies rather than on a distinctive way of studying modern societies. This approach has been characterized by reliance on empirical data, emphasis on the conceptual dimensions of ethnography, & concern for the theoretical relevance of concepts. Journal goals are examined in depth against the background of ethnography's past, present, & future. 96 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3337

Ako, Edward O. (Dept English U Yaounde, Cameroon), The African Inspiration of the Black Arts Movement, ♦ Diogenes, 1986, 135, fall, 93-104 Literary historians & students of influence studies have been able to establish that the "Negritude movement" owed its coming into existence partly as a result of the impetus from the Afro-American writers of the Harlem renaissance," eg. Claude McKay, Langston Hughes, James Eldon Johnson, & Countee Cullen. Here, focus is on the impact that the writers of the Negritude movement had on the young Afro-American writers of the 1960s & 1970s. By looking at the pronouncements of movement theorists & the role played by various writers, it is established that the black arts movement was brought into existence in part as a result of the writings of the Negritude movement. Modified AA

T3338

Arnason, Johann (La Trobe U, Bundoora Victoria 3083 Australia), Figurational Sociology as a Counter-Paradigm, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 429-456
Norbert Elias's figurational sociology represents an alternative to the dominant ideas in sociology. Six specific contrasts are developed in detail, ie, with (1) Karl Marx's emphasis on economics, (2) Emile Durkheim's emphasis on norms, (3) reductionism, (4) functionalism, (5) structuralism; & (6) individualism. The concept of power is central for Elias's view of society. However, he leaves uncompleted a theory of culture that would complement his theory of power, & his theory of the three basic controls—over self, other human beings, & nature is overgeneralized. These concerns need to be addressed if the promise of figurational sociology is to be realized. 28 References. W. H. Stoddard

T3339

Baldwin, John D. (U California, Santa Barbara 93106), The Matter of Habit and G. H. Mead: Comment on Camic, UM American Journal of Sociology, 1988, 93, 4, Jan, 952-957
Reply, 957-958
Charles Camic's analysis of the demise of the concept of habit in sociological theory over the twentieth century (see SA 34 4/86Q7399) is extended through an exploration of George Herbert Mead's ideas on biology & habit. Mead's social behaviorism is reviewed to demonstrate how integrated habit & reflective processes into a framework in which the influence of biological & social factors were of equal importance. In reply to Baldwin, Charles Camic (U of Wisconsin, Madison) praises this analysis of Mead & offers further comparisons to Emile Durkheim's analysis of John Dewey's views on habit. However, it is suggested that biology refrain from overemphasizing biology in its attempt to counteract behavioral interpretations of reflective conduct & personality. 22 References. K. Hyatt

T3340

Bogner, Artur (U Essen, D-4300 1 Federal Republic Germany), Elias and the Frankfurt School, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 249-285.
A number of similarities between the ideas of Theodor W. Adorno & Norbert Elias have gone largely unrecognized in the social science literature. The two share a common heritage in Sigmund Freud's ideas about the relationship between civilization & the Superego, despite the contrast between Adorno's theoretical & philosophical approach & Elias's concrete emphasis. Elias saw states, especially royal courts, as encouraging the development of codes of conduct that required increasing behavioral restraint & that were gradually internalized as self-restraint. Adorno & Max Horkheimer described a similar process that was also linked with growing domination over nature. They differ, however, in that Elias predicted a continuation of the trend to self-control, while Adorno anticipated its reversal. They also differ in that Adorno postulates the unity of reason & domination, while Elias sees reason as a source of power that can be played against the power resulting from structural inequality in society. 97 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3341

Brown, Richard (U Durham, DH1 3HP England), Norbert Elias in Leicester: Some Recollections, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 533-539.
¶ Personal recollections are offered of Norbert Elias's tenure as a member of the U of Leicester's (England) sociology faculty between 1954 & 1962. Elias played a major part in developing the degree program in sociology, & taught primarily courses in general sociology & general & social psychology, to which he gave a distinctive character. He also supervised a wide range of postgraduate work. While he published little, he was constantly at work on varied projects. Though occasionally so focused on his own theories as to fail to understand others' viewpoints, he brought valuable insights to discussions & was generally skilled in communicating with others. 11 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3342

Brown, Richard Harvey, Dialéctica y estructura en la teoría sociológica, la búsqueda de un método lógico (Dialectic and Structure in Sociological Theory, the Search for a Logical Method), ♦ UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 65, Jan-Apr, 7-30, (SPA)
¶ The traditional conflict between positivism & humanism in social sciences is addressed, with particular attention to the possibility of a convergence that would be both rigorous & personal. Attempts to reconcile positivist & romanticist elements are traced through the works of Karl Marx, Max Weber, Emile Durkheim, & their successors. The dialectical humanism of Jean-Paul Sartre & the structuralism of Claude Lévi-Strauss are discussed with an eye toward a social theory that would embrace the dialectical interaction of the subjective genesis & structures of hierarchies. 2 Figures. J. Anderson

88T3343

Campelli, Enzo (Dipartimento sociologia U Roma, I-00100 Italy), L'insostenibile leggerezza dell'essere (sociologi) ovvero professionalizzazione e professionalità della sociologia (The Unbearable Levity of Being Sociologists, or Professionalization and Professionalism in Sociology), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug, 125-129 (ITA)
¶ A discussion of the discipline & profession of sociology & related trends in professionalization. The concept of professionalization is analyzed, & the functions of sociology & the role of the sociologist in society are examined. Aspects discussed include limitations, specialization, bureaucracy, & control. 1 Figure. C. Waters

88T3344

Champion, James W. (Emory U, Atlanta GA 30322), Tillich and the Frankfurt School: Parallels and Differences in Prophetic Criticism, UM Soundings, 1986, 69, 4, winter, 512-530.
¶ The publication in English translation of Paul Tillich's The Socialist Decision (Sherman, Franklin [Tr], New York: Harper & Row, 1977) has awakened interest in Tillich's early adherence to socialism & in his relationship to the Frankfurt school. The two are akin in moving beyond rational criticism of society & culture to prophetic critique. Both critiques emphasize the demonic implications of historical progress. Socialism, in Tillich's view, suffers from an inner conflict that grows out of its reliance on rational formulations of reality & its simultaneous need to resist the manipulative implications of rationality. Ultimately, Tillich differs from the Frankfurt school in his call for a return to ontology, which the Frankfurt theorists rejected. He also in the process attains an optimism that contrasts with their pessimism. 34 References. W. H. Stoddard

† An annotated bibliography of films (N = 30) & books (N = 14) that focus on parent education & parent-child relationships

88T3325

Holmwood, John (U Edinburgh, EH8 9YL, Scotland), The Winfield Report and Its Implications, Network, 1987, 38, May, 3-4

† The credibility of the ESRC (acronym not identified) is called into question, based on the fallacious reasoning, irrelevance of data to the issues, & errors in presentation & data interpretation of the Winfield Report ("The Social Science PhD: The ESRC Inquiry on Submission Rates," Sept 1985). It is argued that such incompetence on the part of the ESRC, which determines British academic research priorities, presents a grave situation. D. Graves

88T3326

Jamison, Andrew, Science and Technology in Society, Bulletin of Science, Technology and Society, 1986, 6, 6, 627-632

† An introductory graduate course designed to provide a general overview of the issues involved in science & technology (S&T) policy studies is described. It surveys the main theories & approaches in the social study of S&T from the history of technology to the economics of industrial innovation. Some of the main concepts & methods of S&T policy making are introduced. Three subcourses examine: (1) the theory & history of technological development, (2) the process of technical innovation & the role of the state in S&T policy making, & (3) the sociology of technical change. A course syllabus & reading list are provided. Modified HA

88T3327

Kelly, Michael P. & Glover, Ian A. (Faculty Management & Social Studies Dundee Coll Technology, DD1 1HG Scotland), Sociology: A Sector-Specific Useful Art, Network, 1987, 37, Jan, 3-4

† Two sides of British sociology are discussed with regard to the education of sociology students. The dilemma involves the balance between teaching the intellectual methodology/theory aspects of sociology & its practical applications. A philosophy of education is proposed that integrates sociology as a useful art & as a science. It is argued that intellectual purity vs relevance is a nonissue, since both can be taught, taking into consideration the prospective employment settings of sociology students. It is also argued that the cause of the problem is not in the nature of sociology, but in the British elitism imposed on the field. 5 References. D. Graves

88T3328

Mauksch, Hans O. (U Georgia, Athens 30602), Doing Sociology, ♦ The Wisconsin Sociologist, 1987, 24, 4, fall, 151-155
Comment, 156-160

† It is argued that the classroom is a social situation, & as such, a place where teachers should practice their discipline rather than just talk about it. Personal experiences gained during 15 years of working with the American Sociological Assoc Projects on Teaching Undergraduate Sociology are used to discuss: (1) how to ascertain where students are as well as where they can be realistically expected to be, (2) the need to challenge traditional notions of how the learning of sociology takes place, & (3) how to create conditions in the classroom most conducive to learning. In Sociology and the Higher Learning: Observations and Applications, Jerry A. Stark (U of Wisconsin, Oshkosh) uses a similar line of argument with respect to the curriculum in U sociology programs. The concept of a freshman learning community is discussed, & a case study provided of such a project at the U of Wisconsin, Oshkosh. 3 References. K. Hyatt

88T3329

Miller, John S. (Coll Liberal Arts U Arkansas, Little Rock 72204), The Sociological Perspective and Policy Analysis: A Case Study Approach, Sociological Spectrum, 1987, 7, 4, 309-325

† Case studies are widely used in law, medicine, & business schools. An example of how the case method can be used in complex organizations, industrial sociology, or political sociology classes is presented. The case method also lends itself to an applied approach challenging the student to use a sociological perspective in policy analysis. The utility of the case method for instructors using an applied approach is demonstrated. 37 References. HA

88T3330

Ovsiyannikov, Vasilii Grigorievich (Leningrad A. A. Zhdanov St., U, 199164 USSR), Metodologicheskaya osnovannost' protsessov prikladnogo sotsial'nogo issledovaniya (A Methodological Basis of Applied Sociological Research), Vestnik Leningradskogo Universiteta, Ekonomika, 1987, 1(5), Mar, 45-52. (RUS)

† Study of the interaction between general sociological methodology, concrete methods for applied research, based on dialectical materialism is a key task of Soviet social scientists during the current period of economic reform. Noted are the implications for expanding the scope of sociological studies, investigating previously unstudied areas of society, applying new quantitative methods, empirical interpretation procedures, typologies, & models. The relationship between abstract & concrete features of sociological studies is emphasized as a pivotal point in the transition from theoretical to empirical studies. Special attention is given to logical inconsistencies in the quantitative treatment of qualitative data. Sotsialisticheskoe sorevnovanie (Socialist Competition), Changli, 1 (Ed), Moscow: no publisher cited, 1978) 1 Table. G. Prostavov

88T3331

Paley, Liz (Case Western Reserve U, Cleveland OH 44106), Technology in Western Civilization, Bulletin of Science, Technology and Society, 1986, 6, 6, 633-637

† A Coll course that examines the history of technology in Western Europe & the Mediterranean from prehistory (about 5000 BC) until the Industrial Revolution in GB (about 1700-1800) is described, & a course syllabus provided. Emphasis is on technical development as an expression of culture, the influences of economics, politics, population, religion, philosophy are explored. The course aims to show engineers & nonengineers alike that "machinery is part of the human experience, not alien to it." Modified HA

88T3332

Papp, Zsolt, Az amerikai szociológiáról: Interjú Szelényi Ivánnal (An American Sociologist Interview with Iván Szelényi), Szociológia, 1983, 3, 307-317. (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available

88T3333

----, Cronache e commenti (Chronicle and Comment), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec, 151-173. (ITA)

† A report on the Eleventh World Congress of Sociology, held in New Delhi, India, Aug 1986. The opening speech by Fernando Henrique Cardoso, president of the International Sociological Assoc, discussed the threat of nuclear catastrophe, the confrontations between North/South & East/West in the global economy & culture, the need to combat poverty, & the need for cultural revitalization. Other speakers' topics included sociology & cultural anthropology in India; the problem of terrorism, labor relations & the work environment; white-collar crime, & community response to catastrophes. Further contributions & the themes of symposia are summarized by Maria Macioti, Anna Coen, Massimo Canavaci, Marina D'Amato, Fabrizio Battistelli, Consuelo Corradi, Paola Bor Maricla Sellari, Carlo DiCicco, Anna Maria Isastia, Daniela Orlandi & Franco Ferrarotti, including: the cultural dimension of social change, women in society, peace & war, citizenship & voting behavior, politics & religion, leadership & democracy, & international migrations. C. W. ters

88T3334

----, Márkus István kandidátusi értekezésének vitája (Discussion of the Dissertation for the Candidate of Sciences Degree by István Márkus), Szociológia, 1983, 3, 349-350. (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available

88T3335

----, Sexual Harassment, Network, 1987, 37, Jan, 13

† The executive committee of the British Sociological Assoc suggests its members guidelines for dealing with the issue of sexual harassment in the workplace, defined as men using their power over women to repeatedly make unwanted looks, jokes, suggestions, or physical contact. Three types of action can be taken against such behavior: (1) informal action such as verbally stopping the abuse; (2) mediation, involving discussion of the experience with others & examining standards of behavior; & (3) formal complaints. An open dialogue among colleagues is recommended to raise the issue, make men aware of their behavior, & change the atmosphere of the workplace. D. Graves

America, Africa, South Asia, & the Pacific basin are expanding their archives. Better support services (access to statistical data, computer services, governmental archives, & copying services) are needed for the social sciences to achieve these goals. G. Prostakov

88T3355

Gabardi, Wayne. Negation and Liberation: The Critical Legacy of Herbert Marcuse. In Qualitative Sociology, 1987, 10, 4, winter, 378-382.

A review essay on a book by Douglas Kellner, Herbert Marcuse and the Crisis of Marxism (Berkeley & Los Angeles: U of California Press, 1984 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). Kellner attempts in this book to come to terms with the legacy of Herbert Marcuse through a reconstruction of his intellectual evolution. His rendering of the Marcusean canon is largely accurate but offers no critical synthesis. Nor does it address his continuing relevance to contemporary issues, many of which are best approached in a Marcusean spirit. W. H. Stoddard

88T3356

Gerchikov, Vladimir Isakovich & Khakhulina, Lyudmila Aleksandrovna (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow A-71), Novosibirskie sotsiologi na XI VSK (Novosibirsk Sociologists at the Eleventh World Congress of Sociology), Izvestiya Sibirskogo otdeleniya Akademii nauk SSSR, Seriya Ekonomika i prikladnaya sotsiologiya, 1987, 2(8), May, 63-64. (RUS)

The Eleventh World Sociological Congress was held in Aug 1986 in New Delhi, India. This was the second time that the Congress was held in a developing nation & the first time in Asia, pointing to the increasing importance of these nations for the rest of the world. About 15 Soviet sociologists participated with 3,000 other delegates from throughout the world, including 1,300 from India. Representatives from the Siberian Division of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, V. I. Gerchikov, V. I. Fedoseev, I. A. Khakhulina, & N. V. Chernina, participated in sessions on economics & society, participation, worker control, & self-management, social ecology, & the sociology of labor. G. Prostakov

88T3357

Goudsblom, Johan (Sociologisch Instituut Amsterdam, NL-1012 CF Netherlands), The Sociology of Norbert Elias: Its Resonance and Significance, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 323-337.

Norbert Elias's seminal study The Civilizing Process (see IRPS No. 81/83c00199 & 83c00200) did not become generally known as an important contribution to sociological theory until at least thirty years after its initial publication in German in 1939. This long neglect can be explained by a combination of social & cultural circumstances including both Elias's somewhat peripheral position in the sociological profession & his unconventional intellectual perspective. In both respects, a comparison with Talcott Parsons & his The Structure of Social Action (1937 [for abstract of 1968 edition, see SA 16 3/68D0525]) is illuminating. 10 References. AA

88T3358

Graña, Cesar, Life Histories and Qualitative Sociology, In Qualitative Sociology, 1987, 10, 4, winter, 369-373.

A review essay on a book by Bonnie J. Smith, Confessions of a Concierge: Madame Lucie's History of Twentieth-Century France (New Haven, Conn: Yale U Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). This book presents the recollections of a Frenchwoman born in the late nineteenth century. Smith presents them as having an immediate truth that historians can learn from, taking them as samplings from collective memory. In fact, historians do not so much distort this type of material as disregard it in favor of coherent narrative that gives structure to the past, as these recollections do not. Madame Lucie's views of historical events are presented piecemeal & characteristically emphasize personal impacts. W. H. Stoddard

88T3359

Green, Paul F. (Dept Sociology Massey U, Palmerston North New Zealand), Positivism and Enlightenment as Projects, New Zealand Sociology, 1987, 2, 2, Nov, 149-153.

A review essay on books by Peter Halfpenny, Positivism and Sociology: Explaining Social Life (London: George Allen & Unwin, 1982), & Frank Hearn, Reason and Freedom in Sociological Thought (Boston: Allen & Unwin, 1985 [see listings in IRPS No. 42]). These authors provide contrasting but complementary perspectives on the development of sociological thought. Halfpenny reviews the stream of positivist ideas & interpersonal influences as if they occurred in intellectual isolation from historic upheavals, while Hearn places the growth of positivism & the scientization of politics in the context of continuing struggles as the enemies of reason & freedom. Halfpenny identifies twelve distinct strains of positivism, with particular emphasis on those that attempt to develop & amplify an empiricist epistemology. Although the school of positivist philosophy has disappeared as a community, he sees today's conventionalist & realist philosophies of science as continuous with the program formulated by logical positivists. His central thesis is that the complete rejection of positivism is based on distortions & that its association with status-quo politics & a value-free stance should be abandoned in favor of a return to Auguste Comte's first formulation, i.e., improvements in knowledge must be made to serve mankind. Hearn sees the influence of Comte's positivism as a conservative reaction against the Enlightenment quest for individual freedom based on reason, or as an attempt to replace the lost theological source of authority with a new source—that of scientific rationality. His problematic is not merely an attack on positivism but an affirmation of the sociological project formulated by C. Wright Mills & expanded on by Jürgen Habermas. The treatises stand apart due to their incommensurate positions on the substance of science, the scope of reason, & their conflicting values for society & the sociological enterprise. By traditional standards Halfpenny's work is the more scholarly, however, Hearn's book will engage the sociologists committed to the humanization of modern societies. Modified AA

88T3360

Gross, Felix (Brooklyn Coll, NY 11210), Don Martindale—An American Scholar, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1986, 23, 3-4, July-Oct, 181-207.

A biographical sketch of US sociologist Don Martindale, with focus on early factors that influenced his choice of career & the directions it took into teaching & scholarly writing at the U of Minnesota. It is shown how aesthetics & the humanities, particularly classical philosophy, led him to the sociology of culture & of ideas. A brief review of some of his writings & contributions to the field is presented. K. Hyatt

88T3361

Haferkamp, Hans (U Bremen, D-2800 33 Federal Republic Germany), From the Intra-State to the Inter-State Civilizing Process?, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 545-557. Comment, 559-561, Reply, 562.

A review of seven recent works (see listings in IRPS No. 42) by or about Norbert Elias reveals a shift in his interests from intrastate to interstate social processes. Elias's work also reveals responses to several criticisms of his earlier theories. The threat of nuclear war is a major concern of these works, & the fact that it has so far been avoided is a major puzzle for Elias's theories. In Comment on Haferkamp, Stephen Mennell suggests that Haferkamp exaggerates the differences between Elias's earlier & later work, failing to note Elias's early recognition of differences between interstate & intrastate processes. In this & other areas, Haferkamp imposes polar oppositions on Elias's thought that distort it. In Reply to Stephen Mennell, Haferkamp notes several points on which Mennell misinterprets him. 22 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3362

Hanson, David J. (Dept Sociology State U New York, Potsdam 13676), Contributions to the History of Psychology: XI.IV. Scholars of High Impact in Social Psychology, Psychological Reports, 1987, 61, Oct, 602.

Authors & coauthors are identified of those publications cited in common in 5 recent mainline nonsociological social-psychology textbooks that are in a second or later edition. While the 5 books cited a total of 7,164 publications, only 59 (0.8%) were referenced in all 5. The authors of those select publications constitute scholars who have strongly influenced contemporary social psychology as reflected in major textbooks. 3 References. AA

88T3363

Hecht, Jacqueline (Institut national études démographiques, 27 rue du Commandeur Paris 14 France), Johann Peter Sussmilch: A German Prophet in Foreign Countries, ♦ Population Studies, 1987, 41, 1, Mar, 31-58.

The clergyman Johann Peter Sussmilch (1707-1767), chaplain to King Frederick II of Prussia, deserves to be called the father of German demography & was recognized as such in his own lifetime in his country

88T3345

Cherchi, Placido, Il rapporto De Martino-Adorno. Contributo all'analisi di una convergenza possibile e di una controversia irrisolta (The Relationship between De Martino and Adorno: A Contribution to the Analysis of a Possible Convergence and of an Unresolved Controversy). ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 78, June-Sept., 57-87 (ITA)

¶ In a continuation of a study of the work of Ernesto De Martino & of Theodor W. Adorno (for abstract of Part I, see SA 35 2/87R3352), De Martino's Il Mondo Magico (The Magic World), Torino, Italy: Einaudi, 1948) is analyzed & compared with Max Horkheimer's & Theodor Adorno's Dialektik der Aufklärung (Dialectic of the Enlightenment), 1947). Il Mondo Magico is usually viewed as part of the reaction of European intellectuals to the Nazi era. Here it is examined rather from the viewpoint of De Martino's theoretical development & continuities with his other works, leading up to La Fine del Mondo (The End of the World), Torino, Italy: Einaudi, 1977).

88T3346

Damle, V. B., Importance of Sociological Theory: Its Antecedents and Some of the Challenges Faced by It, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan., 1-10

¶ An assessment of the current state of sociological theory. The development of sociology in the West has been shaped by two principal models: linear development & conflict. Social analysis needs not only to describe society but to change it. The contributions of major sociological thinkers to this goal are examined. In recent years, a clinical sociology approach has emerged that has given increased emphasis to the social relevance of theory & research. 3 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3347

Deegan, Mary Jo (U Nebraska, Lincoln 68588-0324), An American Dream: The Historical Connections between Women, Humanism, and Sociology, 1890-1920, ♦ Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 3, Aug., 353-365

¶ Early women sociologists were central figures in the founding of the discipline, but their identities, work, networks, & institutional affiliations have been forgotten. Their epistemology, critical pragmatism, & cultural feminism provided a complex theoretical focus for humanistic application of knowledge. The demise of the dreams envisioned by these early women is explained as a function of professional definitions, historical changes, & the emergence of alternative professions dominated by women, especially social work. The names of these women, & references to material by & about them, are provided. 1 Table, 45 References. Modified AA

88T3348

DeRita, Giuseppe, Professionalita scientifica e politica della ricerca nelle scienze sociali (Scientific Professionalism and Research Policy in the Social Sciences), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug., 131-135 (ITA)

¶ Professionalization & professionalism in sociology are discussed as they concern social research in the private, market sector, rather than in the public or U sphere. The demands made by society in this field, & the necessity for rapid response are examined. The importance of the market as a political force & as a factor in professionalization is emphasized. C. Waters

88T3349

Ekpo, Monday U. (U Maiduguri, Borno State Nigeria), Two Decades of Sociology in Nigeria, 1960-80: A Developmental Overview, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 1-2, Jan-Apr., 81-111

¶ A historical survey of the development of sociology in Nigeria since independence, based on observation, questionnaire data from sociology academicians (N not given) at 11 Us, a review of the literature. Sociology was only recognized in Nigeria in 1960, when the first department of sociology was founded at the U of Nigeria. At present most courses are purely general surveys, though additional courses are becoming available, especially in fields relevant to social problems. Research consists primarily of small-scale individual projects. A Nigerian Anthropological & Sociological Assoc has been founded & has student branches at 9 Us. Sociology has established itself as a scientific discipline, though one that faces several difficulties. 8 Tables. W. H. Stoddard

88T3350

Elias, Norbert, The Retreat of Sociologists into the Present, Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 223-247.

¶ One of the major trends in sociology since WWII has been the retreat of sociologists' interest to the present age, in contrast to the broadly historically based work of such earlier figures as Karl Marx & Max Weber. The two major schools, Parsonianism & neo-Marxism, reflect political divisions among sociologists, few of whom recognize the need to emancipate their science from such divisions. In a longer-term perspective, a crucial need exists to identify universal features of human societies that have persisted through the radical change & development such societies have undergone. A concept of basic social functions is outlined, & the work of Karl Marx is critiqued as having recognized only one of these functions, the economic, as a power base. The history of civilization is reviewed from a perspective that avoids this determinism. 3 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3351

Ellemers, J. E., F. van Heek als socioloog (F. van Heek as Sociologist), ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 3, May-June, 150-158 (DUT)

¶ A biographical outline & a review is offered of the work of the late van Heek. Although slightly outdated, his studies, characterized by unity of analysis, theory, & methodology, still are considered to be valuable contributions to the practice of sociology. His study on talent research (Het verborgen talent, [The Hidden Talent], 1968) was a landmark continuing societal discussion. Van Heek is argued to be one of the most important Dutch sociologists. M. Barker

88T3352

Fanuko, Nenad (Arhitektonski fakultet U Zagreb, YU-41 Yugoslavia), Vrijednosti i društvena integracija u teoriji Talcotta Parsonsa (Values and Social Integration in the Theory of Talcott Parsons), Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 3-4, July-Dec., 231-241 (SCR)

¶ The internal theoretical difficulties of Talcott Parsons's concept of values & their role in the integration of the social system are discussed, with focus on The Social System (New York: Free Press, 1951). The impossibility of deriving the concept of society from the concept of action is emphasized. In a later phase of his theory, Parsons was forced to reenter the theory of a system in order to derive the concept of society. In "Talcott Parsons: Problems of Theory Construction" (see SA 31 83M7170), Jurgen Habermas distinguishes between system & social integration, establishing a fruitful analytical tool resolving contradictions in action & system theory. 20 References. Modified HA

88T3353

Featherstone, Mike (c/o Theory, Culture & Society, Dept Administrative & Social Studies Teesside Polytechnic Middlesbrough Cleveland TS1 3BA England), Norbert Elias and Figurational Sociology: Some Prefatory Remarks, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, June, 197-211

¶ An introduction to this special issue of Theory, Culture & Society (abstracts in SA 36 2), which examines the work of Norbert Elias, especially his concept of figurational sociology. English-speaking sociologists have only begun to assimilate his The Civilizing Process (see IRPS 31/83c00199 & 83c00200), which was originally published in Gerr in 1939; his subsequent work is largely unknown. Elias has consistently pursued his own sociological approach, which emphasizes the interpretation of concrete power relations among actual human beings in specific settings drawn from the entire range of historical cases. The problems sociologists have faced in understanding this approach are noted. 31 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3354

Fedoseev, P. I. (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt Moscow V-71), Ob osnovnykh itogakh razvitiya obshchestvennykh nauk (The Main Results of Social Science Development), Vestnik Akademii Nauk SSSR, 1987, 57, 7, July, 47-54. (RUS)

¶ Since Apr 1985, the USSR has sought to overcome outmoded forms of management, old ideological dogmas, & stereotyped ways of thinking, implement profound changes in the SE spheres. The critical reassessment of old ideas is opening up new alternatives to the previous system of absolute economic centralization & planning. One key change in social policy is the increased emphasis on multilateral exchange with foreign scholars. Additionally, Soviet centers for the study of the US, L.

His stimulating contributions to the field opened new horizons & revealed points of psychological interest. However, some of his positions, while fascinating, are misleadingly "nostalgic." Modified HA

88T3374

Larson, Calvin J. (Dept Sociology U Massachusetts, Boston 02125). Habermas's "Grand" Theory, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1986, 23, 1-2, Jan-Apr, 21-39

¶ While Jurgen Habermas's social theory has been extensively analyzed by European scholars, it has not received the close scrutiny it deserves from US social scientists. Relative neglect of his work is undoubtedly related to Habermas's difficult writing style, the vast sweep of his scholarly interests, his inclination to juggle levels of analysis, &, perhaps, the fact that he examines topics explored previously by Talcott Parsons. Nevertheless, even those most skeptical of the validity & utility of Habermas's approach & central ideas are inclined to acknowledge his exceptional intellectual power & ability to provoke thought about subjects of considerable importance to philosophers & social scientists—from the premises of positivism to the possibilities of human emancipation via reason rather than revolution. The basic elements of Habermas's theoretical perspective are identified, along with some of its apparent shortcomings & limitations. Modified AA

88T3375

LaTorre, Massimo (Facoltà Giurisprudenza Istit Giuridico "A Cicu" U Bologna, I-40126 Italy). Rileggendo il saggio sulla libertà di John Stuart Mill. Liberalismo, democrazia, anarchismo (Re-Reading John Stuart Mill's On Liberty: Liberalism, Democracy, Anarchism), Sociologia del Diritto, 1987, 14, 2, 67-91 (ITA)

¶ An examination of John Stuart Mill's ideas concerning the optimal relation between community & individuals, between political agencies & citizens, as expressed in Mill's essay On Liberty (Himmelfarb, G. (Ed), Penguin, 1976 (1859)). The model of the liberal state advocated by Mill is compared with some recent developments in the organization of Western democracies, with particular reference to Italy over the past forty years. A tentative conclusion considers the interrelationship between liberal & anarchist ideologies, & views liberal thinking as being historically rooted in an anarchist source. Modified HA

88T3376

Lofland, John (U California, Davis 95616). Reflections on a Thrice-Named Journal, Journal of Contemporary Ethnography, 1987, 16, 1, Apr, 25-40

¶ The original intent of the journal initially titled Urban Life & Culture, then Urban Life, & now renamed Journal of Contemporary Ethnography, was to publish ethnographic studies of Ur societies. The concept of Ur society was interpreted broadly to apply, eg, to small towns in societies such as the US. Since its founding, ethnographic approaches to contemporary & modernized societies have become so common as to be institutionalized. A need is now apparent for increased attention to ethnography as method, increased attention to teaching, publication of more review articles, examination of methodologically distinctive questions regarding specific subtopics, & inclusion of a large book review section. Further, attention should be given to ethnographic projects in a variety of disciplines & to diverse national ethnographic traditions. W. H. Stoddard

88T3377

Luke, Timothy W. (Dept Political Science Virginia Polytechnic Inst & State U, Blacksburg 24061). Social Ecology as Critical Political Economy, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 3, July, 303-315

¶ A critical examination of the views advanced by recent adherents of the new discipline of social ecology, based on the works of seven major social ecologists: Murray Bookchin (The Ecology of Freedom, Palo Alto, Calif: Cheshire Books, 1982), Andre Gorz (Ecology as Politics, Boston: South End Press, 1980), Hazel Henderson (Creating Alternative Futures: The End of Economics, New York: Berkley Windhover, 1978), Karl Hess (Community Technology, New York: Harper & Row, 1979), Ivan Illich (Shadow Work, Boston: Marion Boyars, 1981), Amory B. Lovins (Soft Energy Paths: Toward a Durable Peace, Cambridge, Mass: Ballinger, 1977), & E. F. Schumacher (Small Is Beautiful, New York: Harper & Row, 1973). While they offer an attractive model for restructuring society along more ecological lines, their program for social transformation is limited by its incomplete political tactics for organizing mass social change. 31 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3378

Maniscalco, Maria Luisa (Facoltà scienze statistiche U Roma, I-00100 Italy). Di che parla il sociologo? (Of What Does the Sociologist Speak?), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug, 151-165. (ITA)

¶ A discussion of the work of Franco Leonardi, especially Di che parla il sociologo? (Of What Does the Sociologist Speak?) (Milan: Angeli, 1986). Leonardi's views on the following subjects are examined: the language & logic of social research, methodological individualism, holistic & evolutionary models; the logic of measurement, & theories of social change. 7 References. Modified HA

88T3379

Manning, Peter K. (Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824). The Ethnographic Concell, Journal of Contemporary Ethnography, 1987, 16, 1, Apr, 49-68.

¶ Changes in ethnography & ethnographers in the last ten years are assessed, based on personal observation & analysis of ethnographic articles, & discussed in the context of the author's editorship of Urban Life. Ostensive limitations on current ethnography are identified, including the lack of standardized concepts, procedures, & systematic theory that might lead to more cumulative knowledge. These have persisted in the face of editors' efforts to solicit & publish articles with comparative, historical, & theoretical foci intended to strengthen the quality of the articles. Based on a case study of Robert Lifton's The Nazi Doctors: The Psychology of Genocide (New York: Basic Books, 1986), it is suggested that semiotic analysis is linked to basic questions of authority & power to which ethnographers should address their studies. 21 References. Modified AA

88T3380

Minore, J. B. (Yale U, New Haven CT 06520). Piti, Piti Zwazo Fe Nich: A Comment on Sociology in Haiti, an International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 293-322

¶ The limited, & slowly increasing, volume & scope of sociological studies of Haiti are described by the use of a creole proverb: piti, piti zwazo fe nich (a bird builds its nest bit by bit). The primary regulators of progress in the discipline are not sociologists themselves, but politicians. This is apparent in the perspectives that have been applied, the examination of academic life in the country, the conduct of social research, & even the publishing industry. It is evident, too, in the fact that so much of what is known about the island society is found in work written by Haitians in exile. While foreign researchers have added to the sociological literature, the work by Haitians is emphasized. The political & social forces that continue to be dominant themes in the theory & practice of sociology in Haiti reflect the predominant forces shaping the society. Race, class, & foreign exploitation are considered as they have been treated since 1900. Other major categories of research such as that intended to promote development are also discussed. 99 References. Modified HA

88T3381

Negri, Antimo. Cultura al trivio (Culture as Trivia), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986-87, 80, Jan-Mar, 77-79. (ITA)

¶ A response to Franco Ferrarotti's article "Sociologo, non fare lo sciocco" (Sociologist, Don't Play the Fool), which appeared in the Italian newspaper Il Messaggero (7 Jan 1987). In his discussion of the destiny of the relatively young discipline of sociology, Ferrarotti attacked the devaluation of sociology into uncritical sociology, at the service of industrial, military, or political bosses. He also denounced the growing trend for scientists to perform as "showmen" for the mass media. Here, further reflections are offered on the banalization of culture & the presentation of science as one of the many ephemera of modern daily life. The elements of spectacle & trivialization in the transmission of knowledge via the mass media are investigated. C. Waters

88T3382

Prandstraller, Gian Paolo (Facoltà Scienze Politiche U Bologna, I-40126 Italy). La "Professionalità come azione razionale nell'età post-industriale" (Professionalism as Rational Action in the Postindustrial Society), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug, 117-123. (ITA)

¶ The concept of professionalization is discussed with reference to the postindustrial society. The relationships among various forms of action are analyzed: professional, scientific, social, & rational action. Implications concerning the connections between professional groups & the realm of politics & business are investigated. 22 References. C. Waters of origin & throughout Europe, except possibly in France & Italy. In his Die Gottliche Ordnung ([The Order of God] 1741), he attempted to explain the regularity of vital phenomena as being due to divine intervention. His conception of a "divine" order soon gave way to that of a "natural" order. His life-tables, though incorrect, continued to be used by insurance offices well into the nineteenth century. His views about the relationships between mortality on one hand, & fertility & nuptiality on the other led to controversies between Thomas R. Malthus, M. T. Sadler, & other scholars. Later, his ideas were given a broader economic & social interpretation. Whether as the last representative of primitive demography, or the first scientific scholar of the subject, he contributed to the triumph of political arithmetic throughout Europe. HA

88T3364

Hegy, Pierre (Adelphi U., Garden City NY 11530), Sociology as Public Philosophy: A Critique of Habits of the Heart, Qualitative Sociology, 1987, 10, 4, winter, 358-368.

¶ A review essay on a book by Robert N. Bellah, Richard Madsen, Ann Swidler, William M. Sullivan, & Steven M. Tipton, Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life (Berkeley: U of California Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). Sociology as public philosophy, the program of Habits of the Heart, can be understood in three ways: (1) sociology as "a mirror which it holds up" to society, however, the mirror is only as good as the data, which unfortunately, in this book, do not seem representative; (2) sociology as public debate, a thesis presented in such a way that it is ambiguous; & (3) sociology as social intervention using the Socratic method, an alternative that is explored here. 19 References. Modified AA.

88T3365

Held, David (Open U., Milton Keynes MK7 6AA Buckinghamshire England), The Future of Sociology—Report for the Horizons and Opportunities Group of the ESRC: Future Prospects for Sociology, Network, 1987, 39, Oct., 3-7.

¶ A discussion of the future of sociology in GB, based on interviews (N not specified) & information gathered as part of an Economic & Social Research Council project. While sociology is enjoying a period of resurgence in the US, Japan, & many countries in Western Europe, the development of sociology in GB over the last decade has suffered from an erosion of its institutional basis & a loss of confidence & credibility. Internal problems in the intellectual development of the discipline are traced, & their consequences considered. Opportunities for the future are assessed, & the potential for extending area studies beyond GB is examined. The need for a wider perspective is stressed if sociology is to further develop. Important institutional changes in sociology are also suggested. F. Rasmussen.

88T3366

Heller, Agnes (New School Social Research, New York NY 10011), Sociology as the Defetishisation of Modernity, International Sociology, 1987, 2, 4, Dec., 391-401.

¶ Empirical & theoretical sociology exist in constant tension because of the philosophical aspects of the latter. Philosophy's absolute truth claims assume a shared life experience of all free persons, but functionalist modern society confines the production of meaningful worldviews to a limited number of intellectuals. They can only discover the experience of others by reifying them through science. None of the empirical research strategies of the sociologist can provide a perfect solution to this dilemma, while theoretical sociology has to operate through generalized concepts of structure & action. Karl Marx too had to operate through the fetishistic category of class, & concepts such as state, market, & economy are all fetishistic, but rational action is by definition nonfetishistic, & its interpretation is the primordial task of philosophy. Sociology, to account for both rationalization & rationality, has to operate with both fetishized & defetishized categories. HA.

88T3367

Kilminster, Richard (U Leeds, LS2 9JT England), Introduction to Elias, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 213-222.

¶ The discovery of the sociology of Norbert Elias in the 1960s & 1970s is described, & some guidelines for reading his work are provided. Also examined are the language used by Elias, his unique style, & his tendency not to cite other sociologists. The important differences between Elias's work & that of Weberians & Marxists are explained, & the content of Elias's article "The Retreat of the Sociologists into the Present" is summarized (see abstract in this section). 24 References. AA.

88T3368

Kniff, Rudolf, Bibliography of Norbert Elias, 1983-86, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 541-543.

¶ A bibliography of recent publications of Norbert Elias, including 16 German from 1983 through 1987, 4 in English from 1984 through 1986, & 13 translations into various other languages, including Danish, Dutch, French, & Italian. W. H. Stoddard.

88T3369

Komarovsky, Mirra (Barnard Coll Columbia U., New York N 10027), Some Persistent Issues of Sociological Polemic, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 3, summer, 556-563.

¶ The centrifugal forces & the jumble of polemics that have alleged fragmented sociology today are shown to have existed also in the 1920s & the 1930s. An analysis of certain persistent themes of intradisciplinary polemics shows them to be pseudo-issues: eg, differences in findings can be caused by differences in latent questions addressed by writers. From a cognitive point of view, the different approaches are frequently complementary rather than conflicting; rather, the social conflict is caused by competition of various schools for scarce resources. Here, a two-pronged intellectual agenda is proposed that might clarify the complementarity of some orientations & strengthen the thrust toward theoretical integration. 15 References. Modified HA.

88T3370

Kovacs, Teréz, A szociológia kialakulása és fejlődése Jugoszláviában (The Evolution and Progress of Sociology in Yugoslavia), Szociológia, 1983, 4, 457-463. (HUN)

¶ Abstract not currently available.

88T3371

Lal, Barbara Ballis (Dept Social Science & Administration Goldsmith's Coll, New Cross London SE14 6NW England), Black as Blue in Chicago: Robert E. Park's Perspective on Race Relations, Urban America, 1914-44, The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 4, Dec., 546-566.

¶ Robert E. Park regarded favorably the emergence of separate black institutions in cities, & celebrated the creation of an Urban black culture. He saw Afro-American culture as rooted in the experience of slavery & its aftermath rather than in Africa, & thought that migration of black from the Ru South to the Ur North would allow the creation of a cosmopolitan black culture & the emergence of Afro-Americans as a national minority, whose heightened group identity & solidarity would confer collective mobility & political mobilization. His students at the U of Chicago (Ill) developed his ideas about race relations in various ways, but all challenged his view that the progress of blacks would depend on their efforts alone rather than on the cooperation of whites. They also pointed to features of the black community that contributed to fragmentation & disorganization rather than to solidarity & concerted political action. 9 References. Modified HA.

88T3372

Lana, Robert E. (Dept Psychology Temple U., Philadelphia PA 19122), Ibn Khaldun and Vico: The Universality of Social History, The Journal of Mind and Behavior, 1987, 8, 1, winter, 153-165.

¶ Ibn Khaldun, a fourteenth-century Berber, developed a theory of social history of the Arabs of North Africa, which included a reasonably objective account of their social development. His work stands in contrast to the ideal of Plato's Republic. Plato believed that a rational state could be achieved even though it would eventually fall. Giambattista Vico, the eighteenth-century Italian rhetorician, used the idea of historical cycles to develop both a theory of social change & an epistemology for the study of social context, which shaped contemporary US social psychology. Vico held that societies not only move through cycles of development, but explanation concerning societies moves through similar cycles. 1 Table. 1 References. HA.

88T3373

Lanternari, Vittorio, Ripensado a Mircea Eliade (Reconsidering Mircea Eliade), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec., 67-82. (ITA)

¶ An appreciation of the work of Mircea Eliade (1907-1985) in the history of religion. Eliade was born in Romania & studied & worked in various European countries & also in India, where he studied Sanskrit & yoga. In 1956 he came to the U of Chicago (Ill) as professor of the history of religion. His outlook was broad, interdisciplinary, & multicultural.

appointment at Columbia U (New York, NY) is discussed, & his early publishing experiences are detailed. The development of the Ur studies program at Columbia U is traced, & Jackson's experiences with campus demonstrations are recounted. Teaching Ur history & the development of the speciality within history are discussed, & Jackson's primary contributions are assessed. Bibliography: F. Rasmussen.

88T3392

Sakharov, A. N., Obzhashchayutsya problemy zapadnoy sotsiologii (A Discussion of Problems in Western Sociology), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 128-130 (RUS).

The Institut for Sociological Research of the Soviet Academy of Sciences sponsored an interdisciplinary seminar on the methodological problems of Western industrial sociology in 1987. Yu. N. Davydov gave the keynote address, lamenting the issue of technological fatalism in the West. A. N. Malinkin discussed the idea of dynamic technology. A. I. Kravchenko discussed the impossibility of viewing Western industrial sociology outside of its own historical context. G. S. Batygin discussed several sociophilosophical ideas. I. V. Bestuzhev-Lada gave ideas for future interdisciplinary seminars. K. V. Andreev discussed recent successful cooperative ventures between Soviet & West German sociologists. L. G. Ionin noted the contradictory nature of Western sociology. A. I. Antonov spoke on humanization of the scientific-technical revolution. D. D. Raykova hoped that more attention would be given to Western Marxist sociology. Yu. L. Kachanov noted that many scholars ignore the fundamental connection between technological & substantial rationality. G. Prostavkov.

88T3393

Taylor, Ian (Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6), Retrieval and Reconstruction: A Sense of Purpose for the Social Sciences in the 1980's, New Zealand Sociology, 1987, 2, 2, Nov, 98-111.

A discussion of the widespread disillusionment regarding the rationale for social scientific endeavor in the late 1980s, particularly among liberal professionals. It is suggested that purpose in the social sciences revert to the commitments & interests of social scientists during 1930-1950. With social-democratic social scientists in GB, & of the League for Social Reconstruction in Canada, emphasis is placed on the radicalization that occurred within the social sciences of that period, which was characterized by the close involvement of scholars in the broad society, the identification of social science with social-democratic politics, & a commitment to radical & reformist, but realistic, policy goals. The limitations of social science work in the 1980s are considered, & it is argued that one of the effects of cutbacks in government & educational spending has been the emergence of a new, economically insecure, & highly mobile underclass of young social scientists, whose work is informed by their own marginal relationship to professional social science & by their own lived experience of the insecure & competitive contemporary labor market. However, it is precisely from this "class" of social scientific intellectuals that the most innovative & imaginative (but realistic & reformist) social science is emerging, particularly in areas of cultural studies, social policy, & feminist theory. 55 References. Modified AA.

88T3394

Tilly, Charles (New School Social Research, New York NY 10011), Review Essays: Preface, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 3, summer, 583-584.

The contributions of Frenchman Charles de Secondat, Baron de Montesquieu, to sociology are noted, particularly his critical sensibility, talent for large-scale comparison, belief that human behavior depends on its milieu, & recognition of the "obligation to deal with life's great themes critically & creatively." His standards are applied to the review essays in this issue of Sociological Forum (see abstracts in SA 36.2 & listings in IRPS No. 42). 1 Reference. K. Hyatt.

88T3395

Tommissen, Piet, Rouwen om Gunnar Myrdal en François Perroux (In Memoriam, Gunnar Myrdal and François Perroux), Tijdschrift voor Sociale Wetenschappen, 1987, 32, 4, Oct-Dec, 380-392. (DUT).

Gunnar Myrdal & François Perroux, important representatives of the social sciences in general & economics in particular, both died in 1987. Despite the scientific merit of their work, their names are seldom mentioned in histories of economic doctrine. This omission may have resulted from their preference for interdisciplinary research. Here, the evolution of the ideas of both thinkers is traced, & an attempt is made to summarize the essence of their theories. The element of utopianism in the solutions they upheld is acknowledged. HA Tr & Modified by C. Waters.

88T3396

Velkov, Yuriy Evgen'evich & Podvig, Sergey Petrovich, Perestroika khozyaystvennogo mekhanizma i sotsial'noe upravlenie (Economic Reorganization and Social Management), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 133-136. (RUS).

¶ A review essay on books by G. Kh. Popov, Effektivnoe upravlenie ([Effective Management], Moscow, Ekonomika, 1985), & O. I. Novikov, Ekonomicheskie metody upravleniya kapital'nym stroitel'stvom ([Economic Methods of Management for Capital Construction], Moscow: Moscow State U, 1984 [see listings in IRPS No. 42]). Special praise is given for specific guidelines presented in each work for such topics as planning & cost accounting. 5 References. G. Prostavkov.

88T3397

Watson, Margaret (U Warwick, Coventry CV4 7AL England), Sociology in Poland, Network, 1987, 38, May, 4-5.

¶ The direct & indirect consequences of political control over Polish sociology are examined historically, from 1919 on. The initial orientation was a Marxist one, followed by a humanistic approach, then an indoctrinating Marxist bent. The repressive Stalinist era resulted in the elimination of academic sociology between 1940 & 1957. Present-day Polish sociology has not progressed past the enthusiasm for US empiricism so popular in the 1950s. Currently, it can neither transcend this positivist approach nor develop its own Marxist theory. The result is the inability of Polish sociology to deal with issues of the 1980s, such as feminism. 3 References. D. Graves.

88T3398

Weber, Max, George Simmel come sociologo e come teorico dell'economia del denaro (Georg Simmel as a Sociologist and as a Theorist of the Monetary Economy), La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec, 103-107. (ITA).

Translated & Introduced by Pietro L. DiGiorgi, 98-102.

¶ Several pages of a text by Max Weber, discovered in the archives of the Max Weber Institut of the U of Monaco, are presented in translation, introduced by Pietro L. DiGiorgi in Max Weber, Su Simmel (Max Weber on Simmel). As the original manuscript remains inaccessible, this translation into Italian is from Donald N. Levine's translation from German into English (see SA 20.7/72F9049). Weber's text is an introduction to his entire study of Georg Simmel, by the same title. C. Waters.

88T3399

Weiland, Steven (Dept English U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), Social Science toward Social Criticism: Some Vocations of David Riesman, The Antioch Review, 1986, 44, 4, fall, 444-457.

¶ An exploration of the varied career & early life experiences of sociologist David Riesman, who became famous as a sociocultural critic with the publication of his book, The Lonely Crowd (1950, no further publication information provided). It is shown that his pluralistic "experiments in vocation" contributed to his durable style of cultural criticism & continued public popularity. K. Hyatt.

88T3400

Wolff, Kurt H. (58 Lombart St, Newton MA 02158), Leben mit Philosophie und Soziologie (Life with Philosophy and Sociology), Soziologische Revue, 1987, 10, 4, Oct, 369-373. (GER).

¶ A review essay on a book edited by Richard Grathoff, Alfred Schutz/Aron Gurwitsch, Briefwechsel, 1939-1959 ([Alfred Schutz/Aron Gurwitsch, Correspondence, 1939-1959], Munich: Fink, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). The letters exchanged between Schutz & Gurwitsch, who emigrated to the US from Austria & Germany, respectively, show their intellectual adventures, as well as their friendship which was inseparable from their common work in phenomenology & sociology; the reader can participate in the genesis & development of some of their important writings. Also interesting to note is the subtle change that occurred over time, especially on Schutz's part, in their view of the relation between philosophy & sociology. The work includes an introduction by Ludwig Landgrebe, which covers major concepts of phenomenology & of Schutz's & Gurwitsch's work. Also, Grathoff discusses the central themes of the letters, with particular reference to their sociological relevance. AA.

88T3383

Reuband, Karl-Heinz (Zentralarchiv empirische Sozialforschung U. Köln, D-5000 41 Federal Republic Germany), Die Arbeitsmoral der Arbeitslosen. Fragwürdige Deutungen einer empirischen Studie (The Work Ethic of the Unemployed: Questionable Interpretations of an Empirical Study), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 3, Sept., 550-559 (GFR)

¶ A study of unemployment in West Germany by Elisabeth Noelle-Neumann & Peter Gillies (Arbeitslos: Report aus der Tabuzone (Unemployed: Report from the Taboo Zone), Frankfurt am Main: Verlag Ullstein, 1987) is criticized. Noelle-Neumann & Gillies suggest that only about 50% of the unemployed have an interest in finding a job, & they attribute this to the relatively high unemployment benefits. However, their conclusions are not necessarily supported by their own data. It is argued that the unavailability of work, especially in certain areas, is a more convincing explanation of why so many unemployed persons are not actively seeking work. Available evidence from other sources also fails to support the authors' thesis. Noelle-Neumann & Gillies focus on the situation of persons receiving unemployment benefits. It is estimated here that there is a "silent reserve" of up to 2 million persons in West Germany who are not officially registered as unemployed, but who would like to work; given the opportunity, this group should be taken into consideration in any analysis. 13 References. Modified HA

88T3384

Riva, Anna, Donne si nasce o si diventa? L'esperienza di Simone de Beauvoir (Woman: Born or "Made"? The Experience of Simone de Beauvoir), La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec, 47-57 (ITA)

¶ Simone de Beauvoir's autobiographical experiences are important for understanding her work. Particular attention is drawn to certain aspects of her life: the growing pains of the adolescent, the rebellion against parental & social authority, & the craving not only for autonomy per se but for the opportunity for forceful, & spontaneous self-expression. Modified HA

88T3385

Schneider, Joseph W. (Drake U., Des Moines IA 50311), Perspektive der Akteure und soziologische Sympathie. Kommentar zu Hans Haferkamp: "Theorie sozialer Probleme. Kritik der neueren nordamerikanischen Problemsociologie" (Actors' Perspectives and Sociological Sympathy: Comments on Hans Haferkamp's "Theory of Social Problems. A Critique of Recent North American Sociology of Social Problems"), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 3, Sept., 571-577 (GFR)

Translated by Anne Dreyer; Reply, 578-579

¶ A comment on Hans Haferkamp's critique of US sociological theory of social problems (see SA 35 5/87R9146). Haferkamp argues that the constructionist theory of social problems in US sociology (especially as represented in the work of John I. Kitsuse & Malcolm Spector) has been unproductive because of its nonstructuralist, interactionist, narrow, unscientific conceptualization of social problems. These criticisms are contested. Haferkamp complains that the theory has undergone little modification: this can be considered evidence of strength rather than weakness. Haferkamp suggests that too much importance has been placed on symbolic interactionism & that this approach does not distinguish itself from the viewpoint of the actors in the everyday world. It is argued that the interactionist goal is to understand how people define their world & how they affect their world through these definitions; hence it is important not to replace these definitions by sociologists' judgments. Haferkamp further accuses the constructionist approach of moral irresponsibility, because it does not acknowledge that social problems exist without reference to the relativity of values. This line of reasoning is itself irresponsible, since it leads to the idea that science can make a moral judgment between good & bad. In Standards, Grundbegriffe und Wissensunterschiede: Erwiderung auf Joseph W. Schneider (Standards, Basic Concepts, and Cognitive Distinctions: A Reply to Joseph W. Schneider), Hans Haferkamp acknowledges that US sociology of social problems has some positive aspects, as pointed out by Schneider; however, his basic position, that it is characterized by shortcomings & intellectual stagnation, remains unchanged. In particular, its lack of theoretical development is criticized, & it is suggested that this would be improved if some of the ideas of Robert K. Merton were accepted. 23 References. C. Waters ist Sociological Theory: The State of an Art, ♦ Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 3, Aug., 335-352.

88T3386

Scimecca, Joseph A. (George Mason U., Fairfax VA 22030), Human-

¶ An attempt is made to formulate a systematically humanistic approach to sociology. A particular need is seen to recognize an autonomous role for individuals within society. The ideas of Peter L. Berger, Randall Collins, & George Ritzer are critically examined. The biological & sociological significance of mind & consciousness must be the central assumption of a humanistic approach. 29 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3387

Sellari, Maricla, Addio Simone. Grazie (Goodbye, Simone, and Thank You), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec, 58-66 (ITA)

¶ A brief appreciation of the work of Simone de Beauvoir, who died in 1986. In particular, de Beauvoir is praised for her courage in revealing intimate aspects of her own everyday life & that of her longtime companion, Jean-Paul Sartre. Modified HA

88T3388

Shalin, Dmitri N. (Dept. Sociology, Southern Illinois U., Carbondale 62901), G. H. Mead, Socialism, and the Progressive Agenda, American Journal of Sociology, 1988, 93, 4, Jan., 913-951.

¶ George Herbert Mead is known today primarily for his original philosophy & social psychology. Much less familiar is Mead the reformer, man who sought to balance political engagement with academic detachment & who established himself as an astute critic of contemporary society. Mead's political beliefs & his theory of the reform process are examined. Drawing on little-known sources & archival materials, it is demonstrated that Mead shared socialism's humanitarian ends & that, following the dominant progressive ideology of his time, he sought to accomplish these ends by constitutional means. An argument is made that Mead's ideological commitments had profound effects on his substantive ideas, particularly on the dialectical premises of social interactionism. The legacy of Mead & the Progressive movement are discussed. 111 References. HA

88T3389

Sonoda, Kyoichi & Ijima, Nobuko, Title appears in Japanese (Retrospective and Prospective Review of the Sociological Study of Life, Environment, Health and Medicine), Shakaigaku Hyoron/Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 2, Sept., 102-120 (JPN)

¶ A review of Japanese sociological studies on life & the environment, including such topics as: (1) life study related to Ur & Ru sociology, (2) life system theory & family study, & (3) environmental study evolving from community & life studies, & social movement analysis. In addition, the application of sociological methodologies & theories to the fields of health & medicine is examined, with focus on developments in public health, mental health, & nursing from the 1950s to present. Research topics & trends are summarized, & the growth of the field illustrated by the establishment of the Japanese Society of Health & Medical Sociology in 1974. It is concluded that though research in these areas has become more extensive & internationalized, much remains to be done in order to improve its efficiency & practical utility. 94 References. Modified HA

88T3390

Statara, Gianni (via Savoia 80, I-00198 Rome Italy), Declino della sociologia e corporazione sociologica (The Decline of Sociology and the Sociological Guild), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 2, Aug., 3-6 (ITA)

¶ An editorial introduction to this issue of Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale reviews current trends in Italian academic sociology, taking as a starting point for discussion the competitive examinations for University chairs that have been held since 1984. The waning of cultural vitality & debate is attributed to two facts: that struggles between academic cliques have replaced genuine scientific competition among us, & that the sociological community has been fragmented into "sociological guilds." Modified HA

88T3391

Stave, Bruce M. (U. Connecticut, Storrs 06268), A Conversation with Kenneth T. Jackson, Journal of Urban History, 1987, 13, 3, May, 307-347.

¶ An interview with Kenneth T. Jackson that traces his early life, schooling, & family background with an emphasis on his civil rights experiences. Jackson's academic career following his Air Force service & his cial about Social Control?, Contemporary Crises, 1986, 10, 3, 321-327.

- ¶ A review essay on a book edited by Donald Black, Toward a General Theory of Social Control, Vol 1: Fundamentals, Vol 2: Selected Problems, (London: Academic Press, 1984 (see listing in IRPS No. 42)). This collection of essays on the nature of social control includes discussions of methods of control under industrial capitalism, state control under totalitarian regimes, political witchhunts, the use of vengeance, gossip, & scandal; & social control from below in the form of riots, strikes, & crime. The editor's style & theoretical framework are problematic, however, particularly the contention that there is a general theory of social control, i.e. laws applicable to all manifestations of social control regardless of differences in human will or historical change. Evidence is presented to refute this assumption &, in doing so, to illuminate the social characteristics of different forms of social control. K. Hyatt

88T3409

Fuchs, Martin (Reichensteinstr 48, D-6903 Neckargemund Federal Republic Germany), Fremde Kultur und soziales Handeln. Max Webers Analyse der indischen Zivilisation (Non-Western Culture and Social Action: Max Weber's Analysis of Indian Civilization), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 4, Dec, 669-692. (GER)

- ¶ To reconstruct the patterns of confrontation between man & his world that are specific to each civilization, Max Weber, in his comparative sociology, concentrates on the relationships between religion & society. Here, his interpretation of the civilization of India is examined. Weber's notions of intellectual & popular soteriology, of karma, & of the articulation of world-renunciation & the nonreligious sphere of life & values are discussed. It is shown that Weber failed in his endeavor to determine the way in which Indian religions might have exerted lasting influences on the course of social action & thus on the society's mode of development (or nondevelopment). The type of model he used favors an attitude toward the world & the relationship between religion & social action as found in Western societies. While Weber's theory & methodology are criticized, his substantial assertions are approved. 71 References. Modified HA

88T3410

Gadacz, René R. (Faculty Business U Alberta, Edmonton T6G 2E1), Agency, Unlimited, ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de théorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 3, fall, 158-163.

- ¶ A review essay on books by Anthony Giddens, The Constitution of Society: Outline of the Theory of Structuration (Berkeley: U of California Press, 1984 (see IRPS No. 26/85c00433)), & John B. Thompson, Studies in the Theory of Ideology (Berkeley: U of California Press, 1984 (see listings in IRPS No. 42)). These works complement each other in that Giddens examines how structure is produced & reproduced by agencies, while Thompson examines how agents inadvertently reproduce structure. Giddens, however, does not accord language as central a role in this process as does Thompson, who argues that social relations are sustained through the medium of language. Thompson offers a systematic interpretive theory of ideology that combines both social & discursive analysis & recognizes that the discourse that expresses ideology is historically & situationally specific. Relations or structures of domination are seen as rooted in the interplay between practical consciousness & the unconscious & are sustained by meaning (signification). Giddens discusses the role of actors' rationalized reflexive monitoring & unconsciously motivated actions in generating structural conditions. Ways that power & domination are realized in the relation between action & structure are explored both are immanent in social relations as well as transcendent to them, & depend on the ability of actors to recognize & use them. K. Hyatt

88T3411

Gambacorta, Carmelo, A proposito del rapporto fra storia e quotidianità (Concerning the Relationship between History and the Everyday), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec, 83-88 (ITA)

- ¶ A review essay on Franco Ferrarotti's latest work, La storia e il quotidiano (History and the Everyday), Laterza, 1986 (see listing in IRPS No. 42)). Ferrarotti examines crucial questions in the social sciences & their philosophical elaboration. He criticizes theoretical positions that attempt to interpret the reality of postmodernity but retain too narrow a view. The third section of this three-part work contains the most useful, constructive indications. C. Waters

88T3412

García Menéndez, José Ramón (Dept Política Económica U Santiago Compostela, Spain), Relativismo versus absolutismo en el pensamiento económico (Relativism versus Absolutism in Economic Thought), ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 21-28 (SPA)

- ¶ The development of economic thought since the 1940s is traced, based on a review of the most significant works. The construction of economics as a positive science is discussed. It is suggested that in the history of the analysis of economic theory, two opposite trends or approaches have tended to alternate: the relativist/historical conception, & the absolutist/critical conception. C. Waters

88T3413

Hatcher, Joe W., Jr. (Ripon Coll, WI 54971), Arguments for the Existence of a General Theory of Behavior, U Behavioral Science, 1987, 32, 3, July, 179-189.

- ¶ The ways in which living & artificial systems are modified over time are compared in order to present a case for the plausibility of the existence of a general system of behavior, i.e. one capable of being shared by organisms of differing complexity. It is argued that the restrictions of living system evolution lead to the proliferation of natural systems, which are capable of being modified only to small degrees without negative consequences, leaving fundamental modes of operation intact. This reasoning is then applied to possible general behavioral systems. Several possible simple systems are suggested. These systems are then compared to current theories within psychology: arousal-reduction & optimal-arousal theory, ways in which these theories can be used to predict complex social behavior are demonstrated. 3 Figures, 15 References. AA

88T3414

Herz, Thomas (Fachbereich I Soziologie U Gesamthochschule Siegen, D-5900 Federal Republic Germany), Nur ein Historikerstreit? Die Soziologen und der Nationalsozialismus (Only a Dispute among Historians? Sociologists and National Socialism), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 3, Sept, 560-570. (GER)

- ¶ A newspaper article by Jürgen Habermas ("Eine Art Schadensabwicklung" (Disentangling the Damage), Die Zeit, 1986, 29, 11 July) suggesting that there has been a tendency toward apology for the Nazi era in Germany set off a dispute among historians. Reasons why sociologists did not participate in this dispute are investigated. German sociologists since WWII have shown little interest in the Nazi era. Those who supported the regime, even indirectly, could not be expected to analyze it; for others, professional interests lay elsewhere. Sociologists are no longer "outsiders." Before WWII, a large proportion of German sociologists were Jews, but there are few Jews among their ranks today. The role of sociology as a critical science has probably been exaggerated: postwar German sociologists have not generally engaged in macrosociology, & the function of interpretation has often been left to historians. 48 References. Modified HA

88T3415

Ho, David Y. F. (U Hong Kong, Hong Kong), Asian Concepts in Behavioral Science, ♦ Psychologia, 1982, 25, 4, Dec, 228-235.

- ¶ A review of six key concepts in behavioral science found in three Asian cultures: the Chinese concepts of filial piety, jen (personage), & face, the Japanese concepts of amae (reciprocal dependency) & on (social obligation), & the Filipino concept of utang na loob (debt of gratitude). Overlaps in meaning among these concepts are identified, in contrast to the individualistic character of Western concepts, such as self, ego, & actor, which have enjoyed prominence in behavioral science. It is argued that, as social behavior invariably takes place in some relational, particularly interpersonal, context, relational concepts lend themselves readily for its representation & analysis, & are thus capable of yielding a more complete account of its total complexity. 21 References. HA

88T3416

Holton, R. J. (Sociology Division Flinders U, Bedford Park South Australia 5042), The Idea of Crisis in Modern Society, U The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 4, Dec, 502-520.

- ¶ Crisis has become such an all-pervasive rhetorical metaphor that its analytical utility in contemporary social thought has become impaired. The normalization of a sense of crisis has blurred the distinction between

88T3401

Yakovlev, A. N. (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Dostizhenie kachestvenno novogo sostoyaniya sovetskogo obshchestva i obshchestvennye nauki (Making a Qualitative Leap in the State of Soviet Society and the Role of Social Sciences), Vestnik Akademii Nauk SSSR, 1987, 57, 6, June, 51-80 (RUS)

¶ A speech delivered on 17 Apr 1987 before a conference of social scientists sponsored by the Soviet Academy of Sciences on "The Tasks of Social Sciences during the Current Developmental Stage of Soviet Society." The current economic restructuring program is a time for fundamental changes, involving analysis & evaluation of existing SE structures. Since 1985, reasons for the sluggishness of certain economic sectors have been demonstrated, & new, revolutionary perspectives have been introduced. Self-management of industry & a move away from overcentralized planning are dependent on openness to new ideas. The role of the social sciences should be to develop strategies for economic acceleration, provide an atmosphere in which creativity can flourish, move away from unrealistic theoretical frameworks, establish organizations to implement research findings into social practice, & continually stimulate the democratic interactions of scholars, foiling any attempts to monopolize the truth. The social sciences should help socialist society come to a better understanding of itself. G. Prostakov

88T3402

---, Remarks Presented at the Meeting of the Southern Sociological Society (1987), ♦ Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 3, Aug, 185-194

¶ In On Certification, Russell R. Dynes (U of Delaware, Newark) discusses a recent proposal that the American Sociological Assoc should provide certification to nonacademic sociologists as an aid to their search for employment, which has been the focus of controversy. Such proposals are not new, & it is difficult to understand why they are objectionable. In Can Sociology Afford Certification? No!, Lewis M. Killian (U of West Florida, Pensacola) argues that the danger of certification of sociologists is that the most gifted researchers will not fit into any of its categories. Certification will not benefit sociology's clients, it will not benefit sociologists, & it is not needed. 4 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3403

---, Sotsiologiya v kontekste revolyutsionnoy perestroiki obshchestva (Sociology in the Context of Community Revolution/Reorganization), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, June, 3-11 (RUS)

¶ Sociology will play a significant role in restructuring Soviet SE policy by providing a scientific foundation for planning & management. As early as 1918, V. I. Lenin addressed the need for scientific evidence to back up any proposals for social policy change, giving great impetus to the development of social sciences; however, during the late 1930s, the tedious, dogmatic approach of Joseph Stalin led to a sharp decrease in the number of empirical studies & an increase in the number of theoretical studies with a priori conclusions. This trend began to change during the 1960s & 1970s, with a return to empirical studies & development of sociological subdisciplines. Today, the main task of sociology is to help dismantle sectors of the socialist bureaucracy that stifle economic development. 13 References. G. Prostakov

88T3404

---, "Sturzo, i cattolici democratici e la società civile del mezzo giorno" (Sturzo, the Catholic Democrats, and Civil Society in Southern Italy), Sociologia, 1987, 21, 1-3, 1-689. (ITA)

¶ The proceedings of a conference devoted to application of Luigi Sturzo's politico-religious sociology to the history of southern Italy are presented in a special issue of Sociologia, edited, introduced, & glossed throughout by Gabriele DeRosa. A round-table discussion & an extensive appendix are included. Participating authors & commentators include: Antonio Cestaro, Giampaolo D'Andrea, Raffaele Colapietra, Licio Avagliano, Andrea Riccardi, Vincenzo Robles, Achille Miriz Salvatore Palese, Antonio Fino, Matteo Pizzigallo, Vittorio DeMaro, Angelo Sindoni, F. Michele Stabile, Michele Pennisi, Alfredo LiVice, Giuseppe DiFazio, Pietro Borzomati, Luigi Intrieri, Ferdinando C. siani, Lorenzo Del Piano, Luciano Carta, Francesco Atzeni, Paolo E. Magistris, Pasquale Bellu, Guido DeLucia, Renato Lalli, Walter Capozali, Carmine Viggiani, Piero Barucci, Carlo Pace, Alberto DiGiovanni & Giuseppe Viscardi. C. Waters

07 theories, ideas, & systems

88T3405

Day, Lincoln H. (Dept Demography Australian National U, Canberra ACT 2601), Durkheim on Religion and Suicide—A Demographic Critique, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 3, Aug, 449-461

¶ Emile Durkheim's Suicide (1897) houses its argument on the differences in suicide rates between Catholic & Protestant populations. The empirical evidence for this difference is reassessed, using Emile Durkheim's own methods. Data are taken from archives for three countries of mixed religious composition in the late nineteenth & early twentieth centuries: Prussia, Switzerland, & the Netherlands—housed in the archives of the Bavarian State Statistical Office in Munich, West Germany. The use of suicide rates calculated from official data is questionable, since Catholic countries are more likely to register suicide as accidental death, death of unknown cause, or some other category. The f of suicide does not actually differ significantly between these two populations. This raises doubts not only about Durkheim's theories but about other causal theories that rely on a sociological frame of reference. 2 Tables, 26 References. Modified HA

88T3406

Elias, Norbert, The Changing Balance of Power between the Sexes—A Process-Sociological Study: The Example of the Ancient Roman State, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 287-316.

¶ Despite M domination of women in Western society, the West is unusual in having elements of M deference & consideration that implicitly treat women as of higher rank, in contrast to other civilizations where polite conduct regularly demonstrates women's social inferiority. This equivocal mode of conduct is the product of a continuous evolution traceable to antiquity. To illuminate this process, the nature & development of relations between the sexes in ancient Rome is examined. Women originally were under the control of M members of their own families, who exercised the power of violence, but as the Roman state gained control of violence, women's position improved relative to men's. Ultimately husband & wife were all but equal in Roman marriages, though this development was accompanied by a curious aloofness between spouses largely as a result of changes in custom rather than of formal legal changes. This development influenced early Christian ideas & laws thus shaped later Western standards of conduct. 10 References. W. Stoddard

88T3407

Ferman, Louis A., Henry, Stuart & Hoyman, Michele (School Soc. Work U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), Issues and Prospects for the Study of Informal Economies: Concepts, Research Strategies, and Policy, ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 493, Sept, 154-172.

¶ An examination of the current state of knowledge about informal economies. Criticism of the value of the informal economy concept is addressed by considering the multiple disciplinary interests in the topic, the confusion over an appropriate definition, & the problems of classification & explanation. A multidisciplinary, macro-micro approach is suggested. The joint ethnography-survey method has been found to be the most productive research tool for empirical study, & the principles of such methodology are outlined. In the context of a discussion on the politics of research funding, major areas for future research are identified: historic surveys; local-area studies; changing household work patterns in relation to the wider formal economy; informal work & illegal markets; class, ethnic, & sexual composition of the participants; informal institutions particularly information & skill exchanges; media & their representation of the informal economy; & the role of informal economies in coping with national disasters. Implications of informal economies for government policy on taxation, labor, welfare, & crime & criminal justice are described. 2 Tables. HA

88T3408

Fine, Bob (U Warwick, Coventry CV4 7AL England), What Is So

ate themselves by giving rise to secondary motivations & emergent motivations that reinforce them. The analysis of autodynamic social processes is not only interesting from a control perspective, but may contribute to a better understanding of the complex dynamics of modern societies in particular. 24 References. Modified HA

3424

Istorić, Stjepan G. (Dept Sociology Lander Coll, Greenwood SC 29646), Durkheim's Concept of Anomie Considered as a 'Total' Social Fact, in The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 4, Dec, 67-83.

Arceel Mauss's notion (in Sociology and Psychology, London: George & Kegan Paul, 1979) of the "total" social fact as a phenomenon that simultaneously includes the sociological, psychological, & physical dimensions of an occurrence is applied to Emile Durkheim's concept of anomie. In this new reading, the psychological & physiological aspects of anomie are brought out. Implications for operationalizing a new approach to anomie are explored. Modified HA

3425

Figlield, Dieter (Dept History & Philosophy Education Ontario Inst Studies Education, Toronto M5S 1V6), Kritische Theorie und Postmoderne (Critical Theory and the Postmodern), Soziologische Zeitschrift, 1987, 10, 4, Oct, 380-387 (GER) review essay on 13 works on the topic of critical theory (see listings: PS No. 42). All the books reviewed treat critical theory, in different ways, as a theory that should make a positive contribution to the understanding of modernity. Discussion focuses on such topics as: themes of re-debate in France concerning the postmodern, rationality, & Jean Habermas's theory of communication. C. Waters

3426

Longardini, Carlo (Via U. Pavoni 58, I-00046 Grottaferrata Italy), From 'Society' to the Social Actor: A Reconsideration of Agency and Its Determinants in Sociological Analysis, International Sociology, 1987, 2, 4, Dec, 403-417.

Sociology has created the social & acted as its interpreter, but has also produced an untenable simplification of the human, replacing reality with the image of society. To regain the dignity of science, contemporary sociology has to reintroduce the complexity of the acting subject—as both beginning & ending point in any interactional relation—into the complexity of the situation, taking into account both psychological attitude in social relations & the definition of preconditions & prefigurations of action. Natural sciences reconstruct seemingly symmetric complexity; the social sciences can only investigate living processes through big asymmetrical simplifications. The general simplification of the representation can only be integrated by a humanistic sociology capable of reintegrating the representation with the complexity of real experience, without touching with it, but rather adding to it the value of the peculiarity of historicity experienced in day-to-day life. 19 References. Modified

3427

Montero de Juan, Javier F. (Dept Estadística e O/Fac CC Matemáticas, Madrid E-28040 Spain), Arrow's Theorem under Fuzzy Rationality, in Behavioral Science, 1987, 32, 4, Oct, 67-73.

Dealing with living systems at the individual & group levels, fuzzy set theory is applied to study K. J. Arrow's paradox in aggregation preference problems (Social Choice and Individual Values, New York: Wiley, 1951). Such impossibility theorems are based on using Aristotelian logic; thus, also fully applicable is Lukasiewicz's critique to sciences based on that logic. Here, "rationality" is understood as a fuzzy property. By considering the concept of fuzzy opinion, which is different from classical fuzzy preference relation. Whenever this concept is considered, Arrow's theorems are deemed as results relevant to the impossibility of complete rationality. Nevertheless, proving the existence of rules of incomplete irrationality is revealed as possible. 1 Table, 11 References. Modified AA

3428

Negrotti, Massimo (Istit Filosofia U Genova, I-16126 Italy), Alcune Considerazioni sul "quarto uomo" di Gianfranco Morra (Some Reflections on Gianfranco Morra's "Fourth Man"), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 1, Jan-Mar, 69-74. (ITA) Gianfranco Morra's concept in "Il quarto uomo" (The Fourth Man) see SA 35 1/87R1618)—modern or future man, the consumer of technology—is critiqued. Some indirect effects of technology are examined that derive from ignorance of its processes (invention, diffusion, operation) on the part of intellectuals. Much of the intellectual criticism of technology in fact supports the users' rather than the experts' viewpoint. It is suggested that the integration of man & machine is a crucial problem of our times, & that intellectuals should strive to contribute to it. Modified HA

88T3429

O'Brien, Michael J. (U Missouri, Columbia 65211), Sedentism, Population Growth, and Resource Selection in the Woodland Midwest: A Review of Coevolutionary Developments, Current Anthropology, 1987, 28, 2, Apr, 177-189.

Comments, 189-193, Reply, 193-197

¶ Theories of the relationship among sedentism, population growth, & resource selection strategies have tended to assign primacy to one of these variables, though recent work has shown that changes in social systems are almost always coevolutionary. The applicability of David Rindos's assertion that domestication is the result of coevolutionary interactions between humans & plants (The Origins of Agriculture: An Evolutionary Perspective, New York: Academic Press, 1984) to archaeological, archaeobotanical, & archaeofaunal data from the middle & late Woodland periods of the prehistoric midwestern US is tested. It is concluded that these ideas are useful in pointing to an expansion of the realized niche of riverine-adapted groups in increasingly intensive interaction with plants, as well as the increase of economic benefits of sedentism in comparison with the benefits of mobility. It is suggested that the adoption of a coevolutionary approach can free anthropologists from the need to identify prime movers & allow them to focus on the social adjustments made by Woodland groups & the timing of those adjustments. Comments are offered by David P. Braun (Dept of Anthropology, Southern Illinois U, Carbondale), Bennet Bronson (Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago, Ill), Douglas K. Charles (Dept of Anthropology, Wesleyan U, Middletown, Conn), Robert C. Dunnell (Dept of Anthropology, U of Washington, Seattle), George R. Milner (Dept of Anthropology, Pennsylvania State U, University Park), & David Rindos (Dept of Anthropology, U of Missouri, Columbia). In Reply, O'Brien addresses each comment separately & reaffirms the utility of a coevolutionary model/approach to sociocultural behavior. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 81 References. K. Hyatt

88T3430

Parker, James Hill (Brooklyn Center Long Island U, Greenvale NY 11548), The Social Functions of Secrecy, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1986, 23, 3-4, July-Oct, 229-236.

¶ It is argued that current psychotherapeutic emphasis on openness & candor ignores the fact that secrecy, & a certain amount of dishonesty, are vital to the sustenance of all forms of social relationships. Extending the views of Georg Simmel on the subject (The Sociology of Georg Simmel, Wolff, Kurt H., [Tr & Ed], New York: Free Press, 1950), some social functions of secrecy are outlined. Empirical evidence is offered from (1) the literature on group dynamics & small group research, (2) the failure of experiments in communal living & totally open forms of group therapy, (3) cross-cultural anthropological investigations of the universality of secrecy, & (4) the art of secrecy as practiced by governments in advanced U-industrialized nations. 4 References. K. Hyatt

88T3431

Podgorecki, Adam (Dept Sociology Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6), Social Control of the Third Order, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1986, 23, 3-4, July-Oct, 163-180.

¶ An introduction of the concept of "dirty togetherness," defined as elements of traditional social control that are so saturated with erosive influences that they lose their character as agents of social control & assume new traits of specific subsystem loyalty. This loyalty is additionally cemented by family ties, mutual services, & participation in various punishable crimes. It creates the possibility of mutual blackmail should the reciprocal code of collaboration be violated. All these ties, manipulative & instrumental in nature, serve to establish stronger links than impersonal, rational relationships, & create their own superstructure that influences the social system in which they prosper. Dirty togetherness is additionally a defense strategy used by ordinary people to survive the oppression of the totalitarian regime. Modified AA

88T3432

Pollini, Gabriele (Dept Teoria/Storia/Ricerca Sociale U Trento, I-crisis & normality. An attempt is made to restore this distinction, starting from the axiom that only individuals can be involved in crisis. The loss of faith in European Enlightenment rationalism is seen as crucial to the pervasiveness of crisis talk. A modern sociology of crisis based on problems of social differentiation & institutionalization is outlined, it permits distinguishing between crisis & normality, while retaining a sense of the provisionality of the normal. Such an account is more compatible with the politics of this-worldly social reform than other-worldly utopianism. Modified HA

88T3417

Howard, M. C. (Dept Economics U Waterloo, Ontario N2L 3G1), Economics on a Sraffian Foundation: A Critical Analysis of Neo-Ricardian Theory, Economy and Society 1987, 16, 3, Aug, 317-340

¶ A critical examination of work that has taken Piero Sraffa's Production of Commodities by Means of Commodities: Prelude to a Critique of Economic Theory (Cambridge U Press, 1960) as its basic theoretical text. Much of this work endeavors to construct an economic theory that rivals that of neoclassical & Keynesian economics. The seminal character of Sraffa's book is accepted, but it is argued that it cannot form the foundation for a comprehensive new economics. Marxism still represents a more viable alternative to orthodoxy. 95 References. AA

88T3418

Kuzmics, Helmut (Instt Soziologie U Graz, A-8010 Austria), Civilization, State and Bourgeois Society: The Theoretical Contribution of Norbert Elias, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 515-531

¶ The value of Norbert Elias's theory in The Civilizing Process (see IRPS No. 31/83c00199 & 83c00200) lies in two different possibilities of application. (1) The theory holds a heuristic potential due to its acknowledgment of the courtly heritage (eg, refinement of manners, pacification, increase of the number of inhibitions) & its implications for the understanding of bourgeois forms of interaction & rationality. This application is stressed in arguing against those critiques of Elias's theory that explain the working bourgeois or essential dimensions of modernity predominantly through the Protestant ethic or the constraints of capitalist development. (2) Also, Elias's method can contribute to a better understanding of the state by correcting one-sided economic & functionalist notions of the state. The genesis of the state depends on inner & outer dynamics & is rooted as is the Western civilization deeper in feudality than is usually assumed. 21 References. AA

88T3419

Lalonde, Michel (Dept sociologie U Montréal, Quebec H3C 3J7), L'Objectivation et la symbolisation (Objectivization and Symbolization), ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de théorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 3, fall, 173-183 (FRI-)

¶ A review essay on a book by Michel Freitag, Dialectique et société. I. Introduction à une théorie générale du symbolique ((Dialectic and Society, Vol. I. Introduction to a General Theory of the Symbolic), Montreal: Saint-Martin et l'Âge d'Homme, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). This work, the first volume in a projected 5-volume project, examines the relationship with the object in general, & specifically social practice as a meaningful relationship with the world. The overall structure within which social practice takes place will be explored in later volumes. Freitag rejects the positivist option of the social sciences as leading to impasse. He turns to its alternative, recognition of the primordial unity of any relationship with the world, & refusal to reify the subject/object poles. Freitag revives the link with dialectic inspiration in the Hegelian sense. His work offers rich & powerful ideas. The critique of positivism reveals the ontological primacy of the relationship of objectivization. The analysis of types of mediation & their constituent moments, besides showing the unilateral character of positivism, establishes the basis of a theory of symbolism, which is essential for the understanding of social practice. C. Waters

88T3420

Laughlin, Charles D., Jr. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6), On the Spirit of the Gift, Journal of the Indian Anthropological Society, 1986, 21, 2, July, 156-176.

¶ The sociology of exchange is considered from the perspective of the phenomenology of love. Various views on the structure & function of exchange & gift-giving are reviewed. Ritualized exchange is considered as a limited mechanism for controlling effects of ego-centeredness. The "spirit" of the gift is defined as love, which may be evoked through ritual giving. The significance of gift-giving in the Hindu tradition is discussed & a summary of the practice of dana yoga (the yoga of giving) is offered. The implications of combining the sociology of exchange & the phenomenology of love are discussed relative to fear & realization of self-awareness, the biology of altruism, giving & the experience of flow, transpersonal experience & ritual exchange. 41 References. HA

88T3421

Lie, John (Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138), The Road to Nowhere?, In Harvard Educational Review, 1987, 57, 3, Aug, 331-340

¶ A review essay on books by Samuel Bowles & Herbert Gintis, Democracy and Capitalism: Property, Community, and the Contradictions of Modern Social Thought, (NY: Basic Books, 1986) & David Phillips, Toward a Just Social Order, (Princeton NJ: Princeton U Press, 1986 [see listings in IRPS No. 42]). Bowles & Gintis argue that social change in liberal democratic societies must be informed by a liberal discourse of rights, & strive to democratize all institutions & "sites", ie, the family, school, workplace, & state. In contrast to their 1976 work Schooling in Capitalist America (NY: Basic Books), a transformation of the economic structure is no longer a primary agenda for the left; however, the "corrosive effect of the capitalist economy on personal development" is stressed. Liberal & Marxist social theories are criticized for ignoring the multiple sources of power & oppression & failing to make democracy their primary objective. It is argued that this work overemphasizes the power of liberal discourse for achieving social change, its place in political life, & obscures hard analysis with moral criticism. These shortcomings also plague Phillips's work, which lapses even further into liberal discourse & unsubstantiated idealism. It argues that normative consensus concerning human rights to freedom & well-being underlies a just social order. Both works are criticized for being "symptoms of, rather than solutions to, the crisis of the left", they offer moralizing, but no reflection or imagination in their proposals for social change, & remain confined by the traditional liberal discourse. K. Hvalby

88T3422

Lipp, Wolfgang (Lehrstuhl Soziologie II U Würzburg, D-8700 Federal Republic Germany), Autopoiesis biologisch, Autopoiesis soziologisch. Wohin führt Luhmanns Paradigmawechsel? (Autopoiesis Biologically, Autopoiesis Sociologically. Where Does Luhmann's "Change of Paradigm" Lead To?), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 3, Sept, 452-470 (GER)

¶ A review of Niklas Luhmann's work, on the occasion of his sixtieth birthday. In Soziale Systeme: Grundriss einer allgemeinen Theorie ((Social Systems: Outline of a General Theory), Frankfurt am Main, 1984), Luhmann claims to accomplish a change of paradigm, & presents autopoiesis as a key concept. Here, it is discussed whether this change yields genuinely new theory, & how it should be evaluated. Luhmann's version of autopoiesis is compared with that originally developed in biology, & it is concluded that Luhmann's notion lacks the evidence of a precise biological term. Translated into the language of systems theory, the concept becomes metaphorical. Autopoiesis refers not only to organic life but to life in general & to systems that organize themselves at the level of meaning & consciousness. Autopoiesis, thus, intensifies & dialectically radicalizes the option for complexity that has distinguished Luhmann's work since its beginnings. Rather than decisive theoretical innovation, Luhmann's "change of paradigm" represents a certain switch in perspective, as Luhmann increasingly emphasizes the category of the life of the system. 51 References. Modified HA

88T3423

Mayntz, Renate & Nedelmann, Birgitta (Max Planck Institut Gesellschaftsforschung, Lothringer Str 78 D-5000 Köln 1 Federal Republic Germany), Eigendynamische soziale Prozesse. Anmerkungen zu einem analytischen Paradigma (Autodynamic Social Processes. Reflection on a New Analytical Paradigm), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 4, Dec, 648-668. (GER)

¶ A discussion of autodynamic social processes, analyzing five well-known examples from the social science literature. It is shown that such processes are based on circular causality following from circular interactive stimulation within a system of actors, either individual or collective. Under specific conditions, the shape of the resulting social processes is likewise circular (spirals or cycles). Autodynamic social processes often rest on ambivalent or antagonistic action orientations. They tend to per-ning of deprivation. This scientific concept is used extensively not only in the analysis of social conditions but also, in an applied form, as instrument of policy in allocating resources to particular regions, areas & services. It is argued that the indicators chosen to represent the phenomenon are often unduly restricted & even involve double counting. As a result, the distribution & severity of deprivation seem to be seriously misperceived & resources misallocated. A review of available studies shows how the concept might be treated more coherently in relation to the concept of poverty. 1 Table, 1 Appendix, 50 References. HA

[3442]

Velkavrh, Peter. Pragmatizem. Formalna pragmatika in teorija akcije (Pragmatism-Formal Pragmatics and Action Theory). ♦ Anthropos, Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1987, 1-2, 393-420. (SLO)
An examination of the development of pragmatism as a theory from its beginnings to its application as formal pragmatics & action theory. An outline is presented of the semiotics developed by C. S. Peirce, attention also given to the ideas of C. Morris. Contemporary directions for pragmatism are outlined & reviewed as well. 25 References. Modified HA

[3443]

Vromen, Suzanne (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Bard Coll, Annandale-on-Hudson NY 12504), Georg Simmel and the Cultural Dilemma of Women, in History of European Ideas, 1987, 8, 4-5, 563-579.

Georg Simmel's views on women are explored through an analysis of his 1902 essay "Weibliche Kultur" ([Feminine Culture], Oakes, Guy L., Georg Simmel On Women, Sexuality and Love, New Haven: Yale Press, 1984). Simmel's ideas on gender are placed within the context of his theoretical concerns, & the linkages between his study of cultural forms, social forms, & forms of individuality are demonstrated. This essay represents Simmel's contribution to the debate surrounding the "woman question" & a critique of its potential for objective creativity. Though Simmel was acutely aware of women's oppression & cultural alienation, he was unable to transcend a biological model of womanhood & recognize the influence of socialization. Modified HA

[3444]

Woodiwiss, Anthony, The Discourses of Production (Part I): Law, Industrial Relations and the Theory of Ideology, Economy and Society, 1987, 16, 3, Aug., 275-316.

An attempt is made to produce a theory of legal discourse in democratic-capitalist societies that recognizes its relative autonomy. Earlier attempts to theorize the noneconomic dimensions of production are reviewed & critiqued. A need is seen to theorize the effects of law on production in such a way as to overcome the incommensurability problem. Otherwise blocks attempts at unification of macro- & microlevels. 79 References. Modified HA

88T3445

Zepelin, Harold, Silks, Randy A. & Heath, Michael W. (Dept Psychology Oakland U, Rochester MN 48063), Is Age Becoming Irrelevant? An Exploratory Study of Perceived Age Norms, International Journal of Aging and Human Development, 1986-87, 24, 4, 241-256.

¶ The validity of assertions that the US is becoming an "age-irrelevant society" is examined, based on the responses of a quota sample of 462 white- & blue-collar Ms & Fs aged 18-70 from Fla, Mich, & Calif, to a questionnaire regarding the most suitable ages for various role transitions & age-related attributes. Findings converged with pertinent recent reports from more representative samples. Comparisons with findings from the 1950s (eg, see Neugarten, B. L., "Time, Age, and the Life Cycle," American Journal of Psychiatry, 1979, 136, 887-894) indicated loosening of the norms, but with continuing adherence to a prescriptive timetable & with persistent SE differences. These results challenge the notion of age-irrelevance. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 19 References. Modified HA

88T3446

----, Cronache e commenti (Chronicles and Comments), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 78, June-Sept., 127-141. (ITA)

¶ In La "precarietà" di Montale nell'interpretazione di Romano Luperini (The "Precariousness" of Montale in the Interpretation of Romano Luperini), Mario Lunetta discusses the metalinguistic & metapoetic language of the Italian poet Montale. Several critical works on Montale are reviewed, especially Romano Luperini's Storia di Montale ([History of Montale], Rome & Bari: Laterza, 1986), in which the theme of identity is a key concept. In Il tempo e il sacro: un confronto multidisciplinare (Time and the Sacred. A Multidisciplinary Confrontation), Enrica Tedeschi describes a colloquium organized in Florence, Italy, in May 1986 by the Inst of Social Studies of the U of Florence & other sponsors. The colloquium focused on social practices relating to time, & humans' functions as "carriers of memory." Major themes included religious concepts of time, eg, finite & infinite, sacred festivals; & historical attitudes to time, as revealed in old calendars & almanacs. In Il "tempo" nella conferenza dell'ASSET per il 1986 ("Time" in the ASSET Conference of 1986), Arianna Montanari reports on the ASSET (Assoc for the Social Studies of Time) conference held in Devon, England, in July 1986. ASSET focused on two themes: temporal modes of human behavior, with particular reference to social rhythms; & the study of individual time & consciousness of time. Various contributions to the conference are summarized, relating especially to psychological & cultural aspects of time. In Sui fatti religiosi e urgente una nuova capacità di comunicare (A New Capacity for Communication on Religious Matters Is Urgently Needed), Carlo DiCicco examines changes in religiosity in Italy & current debates on religion both within the Catholic Church & in the lay press. The relevance of the Catholic Church for Italy's young people is discussed, taking as an example the Catholic scouting organizations. In Ricordo di Augusto Guzzo (In Memory of Augusto Guzzo), Franco Ferrarotti pays tribute to the late Augusto Guzzo, for many years professor of philosophy at the U of Turin, Italy. C. Waters

67 macrosociology: analyses of whole societies

[3447]

Alestalo, M. (U Helsinki, SF-00100 10 Finland), Structural Change, Classes and the State. Finland in an Historical and Comparative Perspective, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 479.

Unavailable from UMI; published by Research Group for Comparative Sociology, Mariankatu 10 A 13, SF-00170 Helsinki, Finland.

[3448]

Bellah, Robert N. (U California, Berkeley 94720), The Idea of Practices in Habits, in Soundings, 1986, 69, 1-2, spring, 181-187.

Based on the idea of practices proposed by Alisdair MacIntyre (After Virtue, 2nd edition, Notre Dame: U of Notre Dame Press, 1984), reply is offered to the review essays (see abstracts in this section) in this special issue of Soundings of Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Culture (Bellah, Robert N., et al, Berkeley of California Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No 42]). It is suggested that the language of individualism is fundamentally inadequate to describe certain practices that are important in the life of the US. A synthesis of utilitarian individualism, expressive individualism, civic republicanism, & biblical religion is needed for this purpose. W. H. Stoddard

88T3449

Congli, Gaetano, Il ritorno di Léon Walras (The Return of Léon Walras), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec, 89-92. (ITA)

¶ A review essay on Léon Walras's L'economia monetaria ([The Monetary Economy], Rome: Istit della Enciclopedia Italiana, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No 42]). Walras's writings, from 1860 to 1899, on pure economics, applied economics, & political economy, are collected for the first time in this Italian edition, translated from various original sources in French. The long & interesting introduction by Gaspare De Caro will undoubtedly provoke a new debate. Basic problems of Walras's scientific conception are discussed. The evolution of Walras's ideas is linked with contemporary external events: the expansionism of France's Second Empire & its collapse in the Great Depression. C. Waters

88T3450

Delattre, Roland A. (U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), The Culture

38100 Italy), Finii ideali e finii pratici: a proposito della teoria paretoiana dell'utilità sociale (Ideal Goals and Practical Goals. Pareto's Theory of Social Utility), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 1, Jan-Mar, 49-63 (ITA)

¶ The relationship between ideal goals & practical goals is explored in the context of Vilfredo Pareto's frame of reference for social action (Trattato di Sociologia generale [Treatise on General Sociology], Milan: Ed. di Comunità, 1981 [1916]). The complementary relationship linking ideal & practical goals in Pareto's theory of social utility is emphasized. Some problematic aspects of the relationship itself are pointed out. A comparison is offered between Pareto's classification of the doctrines concerned with such a relationship & Max Weber's typology of the forms of adaptation to or rejection of the world that are typical of the "religions of redemption." Modified HA

88T3433

Racine, Luc (Dept sociologie U Montréal, Québec H3C 3J7), Transferts d'objets et groupe de Klein: essai de formalisation en sémiotique narrative greimasienne (Transfer of Objects and the Klein Group: An Attempt at Formalization of the Narrative Semiotics of Greimas), Sémiotica, 1986, 62, 3-4, 313-323 (FRE)

¶ An examination of the narrative semiotics of Algirdas J. Greimas that focuses on Greimas's analysis of the transfer of objects between persons in folk tales of magic. Greimas distinguishes two types of statement, those of state or being (junction & disjunction between subjects & objects), & those of doing or transformation. These two types lead to the definition of four principal categories of the circulation of objects among subjects: test, gift, reciprocal gift, & exchange. It is shown here that the two types of statement, their mutual relationships, & the four categories of circulation can be explained in the mathematical language of the "Klein group." 22 References. C. Waters

88T3434

Raes, Koen (Administratieve en Economische Hogeschool, Brussels Belgium), Ethische en communicatieve rationaliteit bij Habermas. Universalisme en contextualisme in de ethiek (Ethical and Communicative Rationality in Habermas, Universalism and Contextualism in Ethics), ♦ Tijdschrift voor Sociale Wetenschappen, 1987, 32, 3, July-Sept, 213-243 (DUT)

¶ A critique of the relation that Jürgen Habermas proposes to establish between his universalist & cognitive ethics of communication & his concept of the life world. Contrary to transcendentalist thought, Habermas is in search of immanent or naturalist foundations of an ethics of dialogue, mostly on the basis of L. Kohlberg's theory of moral development (Essays on Moral Development I: The Philosophy of Moral Development, San Francisco, Calif, 1981). This approach is argued to lack empirical foundations for the sixth & most crucial stage. The literature primarily feminist that advances a contextualist ethics is reviewed, & it is argued that universalism & contextualism are not alternatives to one another, but are both contextually induced by the dialectical interconnectedness of forms of life in modern capitalist society. 56 References. Modified HA

88T3435

Rudas, János, Bevezetés egy értékutatáshoz (An Introduction to the Study of Values), Szociológia, 1983, 4, 421-432 (HUN)

¶ Abstract not currently available

88T3436

Rummel, R. J. (46-393 Holopu Pl, Kaneohe Hawaii 96744), A Catastrophe Theory Model of the Conflict Helix, with Tests, U Behavioral Science, 1987, 32, 4, Oct, 241-266.

¶ Macrosocial field theory has undergone extensive development & testing since the 1960s. One of these has been the articulation of an appropriate conceptual micromodel called the conflict helix—for understanding the process from conflict to cooperation & vice versa. Conflict & cooperation are viewed as distinct equilibria of forces in a social field; the movement between these equilibria is a jump, energized by a gap between social expectations & power, & triggered by some minor event. Quite independently, there also has been much recent application of catastrophe theory to social behavior, but usually without a clear substantive theory & lacking empirical testing. Here, catastrophe theory—namely the Butterfly Model—is used to mathematically structure the conflict helix. The social field framework & helix provide the substantive interpretation for the catastrophe theory, & catastrophe theory provides a suitable mathematical model for the conflict helix. The model is tested on the annual conflict & cooperation between India & Pakistan, 1948-1973. Tests are generally positive & encouraging. 2 Tables, 10 Figures, appendixes, 37 References. AA

88T3437

Saiedi, Nader (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Carleton Northfield MN 55057), Simmel's Epistemic Road to Multidimensionality, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 2, Apr, 181-193.

¶ Georg Simmel's critique of historical realism constitutes the foundation of his sociological theories. Confronting the crisis of European thought at the turn of the twentieth century, Simmel extends the critique to the realm of history & society, & advocates a sociological activism that rejects both historical materialism & historical realism. Epistemological construction of multidimensionality differentiates Simmel from the functionalist attempt to base multidimensionality on analysis of the problem of order. Advocating an epistemological construction of unity & reality, & rejecting the theory of historical empiricism, Simmel radically negates the possibility of structural-historical construction of any universal history. HA

88T3438

Simpson, Lorenzo C. (U Richmond, VA 23173), On Habermas: Particularity: Is There Room for Race and Gender on the Plains of Ideal Discourse?, ♦ Praxis International, 1986, 6, 3, 328-340.

¶ A discussion of the charge that the universalistic tendency of Jürgen Habermas's critical theory, especially in his conception of the ideal speech situation, make it impossible for him to do justice to racial, cultural, & linguistic diversity. It is concluded that this standard criticism is misplaced, but that his work does invite another kind of criticism in regard. It is suggested that the distinction between an anomaly & a counterexample illuminates Habermas's notion of the contrast between generalizable or universalizable interests, on the one hand, & particular interests, on the other. This distinction is also invoked in order to highlight the unavailability of a priori criteria for distinguishing generalizable from particular interests. As a consequence, prior to discussion among all those whose interests are at stake, it is not possible to say that any specific interest position would be excluded from a consensus about what all could want. It is argued that, though the critique against Habermas as it is typically lodged will not stick, his concept of ideology critique, when its practical & hermeneutic dimensions are explored, does render him vulnerable to the claim that his critical theory does not do justice to particularity. AA

88T3439

Synnott, Anthony (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Concord Montreal Quebec H3G 1M8), Lions, Tigers and Cows: Zoological Sociology and Anthropology, Society-Société, 1987, 11, 2, May, 6-22.

¶ Sociologists & anthropologists have rarely shown much interest in the flora & fauna of the social worlds they have studied, nor in zoologically. Here, the contributions of founding members of the discipline of zoological sociology & anthropology are considered, including: Sir James Frazer, Karl Marx, & Vilfredo Pareto on lions & foxes; Mao Tse-tung on tigers; Thorstein Veblen on cats & dogs; & Edward Evans-Pritchard on cows. Various schools of the discipline are discussed, including: predator sociology, & pet sociology, in satirical vein. A

88T3440

Synnott, Anthony (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Concord Montreal Quebec H3G 1M8), Lions, Tigers and Cows: Zoological Sociology and Anthropology (Part II), Society-Société, 1987, 11, 3, 22-28.

¶ A continuation of a satirical discussion of the interest in animals in the work of Mary Douglas, Marvin Harris, Claude Lévi-Strauss, Marshall Sahlins, Emile Durkheim, Bronislaw Malinowski, & Edmund Leach. Part I, see SA 36.2/88T3439. Topics include taboos, totemism, the sacred cow & the sacred dog, cannibalism & cook-books, & the apocalypticism of some authors. The conflict, consensus, & cross-eyed perspectives are distinguished. 1 Figure, 26 References. AA

88T3441

Townsend, Peter (U Bristol, BS8 1TH England), Deprivation, Journal of Social Policy, 1987, 16, 2, Apr, 125-146.

¶ Widening inequality in the distribution of resources, higher rates of unemployment, & deteriorating conditions in the inner cities have concentrated attention in GB, & elsewhere in Europe, on the idea & the avoiding overemphasis on shared values & focusing on shared specific practices as crucial to tradition. Yet it must be asked whether these reasons do not transform communitarianism back into the pluralism that pluralism has always defended. It is suggested that a comprehensive commitment of individualism must be formulated to provide a basis for communitarianism. 14 References. W. H. Stoddard

T3458

Linhart, Jiří (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Czechoslovak Academy Sciences, Jilská 1 CS-110 00 Prague 1), Aktuální otázky prognózy sociálního rozvoje a způsobu života (Current Issues and Prognoses of Social Development and Way of Life), Sociologický časopis, 1987, 23, 5, 440-457 (CZE).

The international aspects of social life have become crucial to contemporary world development, especially in the forms of military & economic competition. In terms of domestic social developments, however, the dualist society of Czechoslovakia has been distinctive in its homogenization of Ru & Ur sectors, elimination of private property, political acceptance of dual nationalities, & encouragement of democratic traditions. Czechoslovakia's social development has been a model for many other countries, but its problems are also recognized. New approaches for later social development are needed. 22 References. Modified HA

T3459

May, William F. (Southern Methodist U, Dallas TX 75275), Adversarialism in America and the Professions, WM Soundings, 1986, 69, 1-2, spring, 77-98.

An exploration of the political dimensions of the issues raised in Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life (Bellah, Robert N., et al, Berkeley U of California Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). The centrality of the Lockean myth of the origin of society is argued, & consequent reliance on four basic mechanisms—the Constitution, the free market, the large-scale organization, & the U—is seen as having shaped US society. This political myth apes the practice of professionals dealing with clients into the pattern of an adversarial society. Such adversarialism provides a valuable corrective to domination of all of life by centralized authority, but still has flaws that call for reform. W. H. Stoddard

T3460

Mills, Charles W., Race and Class: Conflicting or Reconcilable Paradigms?, WM Social and Economic Studies, 1987, 36, 2, June, 69-108.

Two of the most influential theoretical perspectives on Caribbean societies have been the cultural pluralist & the Marxist models. Some key differentiating assumptions of these rival theories are identified. The notion of "ideology" can be used to develop an alternative, class-based understanding of the significance of race & culture in the Caribbean. On its foundation, a Marxist critique of cultural pluralism is outlined. 54 References. Modified HA

T3461

Müller, Hans-Peter, Wertwandel und Arbeitsmarktkrise. Zehn Thesen zur Diskussion um die "Krise der Arbeitsgesellschaft" (Value Change and the Crisis of the Labor Market: Ten Themes for Discussion concerning the "Crisis of the Work Society"), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 3, Sept, 580-587 (GER).

A review essay on books by Wolfgang Bonss & Rolf G. Heinze (Eds), Arbeitslosigkeit in der Arbeitsgesellschaft (Unemployment in the Work Society), Frankfurt/M. Suhrkamp Verlag, 1984; Hans-Joachim Hoffmann-Nowotny & Friedhelm Gehrmann (Eds), Ansprüche an die Arbeit: Umfragedaten und Interpretationen. Soziale Indikatoren XI (Expectations concerning Work: Survey Data and Interpretations—Social Indicators XI), Frankfurt Campus Verlag, 1984; Michael von Klipstein & Burkhard Strümpel, Der Verdross am Überfluss. Die Deutschen nach dem Wirtschaftswunder (Bored with Abundance: The Germans after the Economic Miracle), München Gunter Olzog Verlag, 1984; & Claus Offe, Arbeitsgesellschaft: Strukturprobleme und Zukunftsperspektiven (Work Society: Structural Problems and Future Perspectives), Frankfurt Campus Verlag, 1984 [see listings in IRPS No. 42]). Work, unemployment, & related values in modern society are discussed, particularly exemplified in West Germany. The central debate concerns the so-called "crisis of the work society" & whether it represents only temporary problems of adjustment of the labor market, or profound changes in SE & value structures. The current situation, in which there seems to be an upturn in the economy accompanied by the acceptance of a high level of unemployment as permanent, is described as the "normalization of a pathology." The authors & editors whose works are examined here are generally agreed that the possibilities for earning are shrinking, & that the importance of work in the individual's life is declining. The crisis is identified as primarily a crisis in the mechanisms of allocation & distribution. As regards value change, there are a number of differing interpretations. Various suggestions are made concerning political options, but no overall concept or policy emerges. C. Waters

88T3462

Mushkat, Miron (U Hong Kong, Hong Kong), Intersectoral Administrative Resource Transfer in the Process of Development: Retired Military Officers as Civilian Administrators in Israel, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 3-4, July-Oct, 213-239.

¶ The performance of retired senior military officials as administrators in Israel's civilian sector is evaluated using data collected during 1973 & 1981 from 47 officers acting in such a capacity. A vast discrepancy between the administrative, human relations, & technical skills used as a military officer & as an administrator is revealed, most Rs felt that their skills had been misemployed. Some micro- & macrofactors contributing to this are examined, with focus on aspects of the administrative role & organizational variables. Implications for policymakers are discussed. 7 Tables. K. Hyatt

88T3463

Potter, Ralph B. (Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138), Qualms of a Believer, WM Soundings, 1986, 69, 1-2, spring, 111-126.

¶ Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life by Robert N. Bellah et al (Berkeley U of California Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]) is reviewed from the perspective of the discipline of social ethics. Its analysis of the inadequacy of moral discourse moves between two levels: that of the individual, & that of society. However, these are only two of four dimensions that must be encompassed within a coherent account of the world, the other two being nature & ultimate reality. The orientations the authors support: the republican tradition & the Biblical tradition, do not merit the privileged status they grant them against utilitarian & expressive individualism. All four are living languages of moral discourse in the US. The problem is to attain a unified discourse without assuming the existence of any neutral language. The prescriptions in Habits of the Heart do not appear sufficient to this purpose. An alternative strategy is proposed that centers on expanding the range of conversation to include varied traditions. W. H. Stoddard

88T3464

Reynolds, Charles H. (U Tennessee, Knoxville 37916), Narrative Coherence and Civic Ecology, WM Soundings, 1986, 69, 1-2, spring, 7-31.

¶ Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life (Bellah, Robert N., et al, Berkeley U of California Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]) seeks to give the civic/moral ecology of the US a sufficient narrative coherence to permit Americans to affirm it as one people. The contributions of Richard Madsen, William Sullivan, Ann Swidler, Steven Tipton, & Robert Bellah to this project are assessed. The essays that comprise a special issue of Soundings devoted to Habits of the Heart are introduced, & their role in encouraging public discussion of this important work is appreciated. 24 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3465

Stout, Jeffrey (Princeton U, NJ 08544), Liberal Society and the Languages of Morals, WM Soundings, 1986, 69, 1-2, spring, 32-59.

¶ An exploration of the moral predicament of the contemporary US as revealed in Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life (Bellah, Robert N., et al, Berkeley U of California Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]) from the perspective of problems of moral languages. While the book makes the case for individualism being central to the US, this appearance derives in part from the authors' adoption of a Socratic questioning mode that raises doubts that its subjects do not feel, & seeks foundations for principles that its subjects do not need to justify. This is similar to the problems of Alisdair MacIntyre's After Virtue (2nd edition) Notre Dame U of Notre Dame Press, 1984), which emphasizes moral controversy & irreconcilability at the expense of moral agreement. This is a persistent flaw of communitarian critiques of liberal society, one that is best countered by seeking nonstandard defenses of such a society. 9 References. W. H. Stoddard of Procurement: Reflections on Addiction and the Dynamics of American Culture, U Soundings, 1986, 69, 1-2, spring, 127-144

¶ Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life by Robert N. Bellah et al (Berkeley: U of California Press, 1985 (see listing in IRPS No. 42)) is assessed by using it as a pattern for examination for a specific habit: addiction. Central to addiction is the experience & pattern of dependence. It is argued that addiction pervades the current society of the US & is visible specifically in the realm of military procurement & in the culture of consumption. The dependence, powerlessness, & incompetence that characterize corporate culture are powerful stimuli to addictive behavior. An understanding of military spending & federal budgets could well be informed by this concept of addiction. 18 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3451

Elshstain, Jean Bethke (U Massachusetts, Amherst 01003), Citizenship and Armed Civic Virtue: Some Critical Questions on the Commitment to Public Life, U Soundings, 1986, 69, 1-2, spring, 99-110

¶ Discussing the widely acclaimed Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life by Robert N. Bellah et al (Berkeley: U of California Press, 1985 (see listing in IRPS No. 42)), it is argued that the language of civic republicanism the book calls on to chasten & tame the imperatives of the US's "first language," liberal individualism, must itself be scrutinized & approached with some wariness, for civic republican visions of virtue historically have been armed, ie, the ideal of virtue celebrated by such thinkers as Machiavelli & Rousseau was inseparable from the strong vision of civic autonomy & unity in which the image of the soldier-citizen played a key narrative role. The national identity that civic republicans assume & yearn for is tied to war & the preparation for war as a constitutive feature of civic virtue. However, it is argued that there is a tradition of civic virtue in the recognition of politics as a series of tragic encounters & possibilities, which Americans can repair to. This tradition is exemplified in the lives & careers of Abraham Lincoln & Martin Luther King, & their vision of "chastened patriotism" is offered as an alternative to an unacceptably "armed" & strong republicanism. 10 References. Modified AA

88T3452

Fincham, Robin (Dept Industrial & Social Studies Napier Coll, Edinburgh EH10 5DT Scotland), "From 'Post-Industrialism' to 'Information Society': Comment on Lyon," Sociology, 1987, 21, 3, Aug, 463-466

Response, 467-468

¶ In a discussion of theories that attempt to look beyond industrial society where the emphasis on postindustrialism has recently been supplanted by the notion of an information society David Lyon (see SA 35 4/87R8216) suggests that the massive social implications of information technology qualify the concept of a transformation to an information society for serious sociological analysis. Despite the general validity of this argument, Lyon's critique of postindustrialism underestimates its validity, & his approach to technological & social change is at times inconsistent. In Information Technology and Information Society: A Response to Fincham, David Lyon (Bradford & Ilkley Community Coll, West Yorkshire LS29 9RD England) clarifies three concerns: the status of the information society concept, its relation to information technology, & the role of technology in social theory. 7 References. Modified HA

88T3453

Giraud, Pierre-Noel (Centre Geopolitics Energy & Raw Materials U Paris IX, F-75775 Cedex 16 France), Japan at the Turning Point, Futures, 1987, 19, 4, Aug, 385-402

¶ Data gathered during a 1986 visit to Japan are used to examine challenges in three major areas geopolitical, economic, & sociocultural/political that Japan must face now that its rapid industrial growth has ended & it has become a world power second only to the US. It is concluded that Japan has serious problems to overcome if its new relationships with the rest of the world are to become stable. Specific social, political, & cultural problems that remain to be solved are explored in depth. Modified HA

88T3454

Godet, Michel (Conservatoire national arts et métiers (CNAM), 2 rue Conté F-75003 Paris France), Ten Unfashionable and Controversial Findings on Japan, Futures, 1987, 19, 4, Aug, 371-384

¶ The idea that success can be achieved simply by following the example of the Japanese superpower model has become too fashionable not to be treated with some suspicion. Interviews with 30 leading Japanese citizens & analysis of various international statistics reveal that the West's conceived notions about Japan need to be reappraised. Various myths exploded on the basis of ten findings. (1) the impossibility of Pax ponica, ie, Japan becoming the center of a new world economy, (2) backwardness of Japanese development, despite strong growth in past, (3) the fragility of Japan's trade surplus; (4) the dubious significance of statistics on wages & work hours, (5) an underestimated unemployment rate, (6) illusory views on lifetime employment & consensus within Japanese companies, (7) the overinflated estimate of BA held by assembly line workers, (8) high corporate performance due to common sense, hyper-Taylorist, & militaristic organization of staff uneven & overestimated Japanese technological superiority; & (10) emergence of "Japanosclerosis," ie, an aging population, family crisis, social inflexibility. 2 Tables. Modified HA

88T3455

Horowitz, Irving Louis (Dept Sociology Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903), Dai mezzi di produzione ai modi di comunicazione: la formazione delle classi sociali in gruppi d'interesse (From Mea Production to Modes of Communication: The Transformation of Social Classes into Interest Groups), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 2, Apr-June, 189-196 (ITA)

Translated from English.

¶ A revised version of a paper presented at an Italian conference sponsored by Ente Nazionale Idrocarburi, exploring the shift from the nineteenth-century economic emphasis on commodities to a late twentieth-century social emphasis on information. If this productive base has shifted from control of material production to control of organization & information, the character of class competition has also redefined those who are capable & competent to manage & manufacture information those who have no such capabilities & are merely passive users of information. While inherited distinctions between capital & labor remain postindustrial world has changed the terms of this struggle & the alignment of social forces. Thus, the so-called new technology changes the social infrastructure of present advanced societies. In contrast to Marx's prescriptions for capitalism, work becomes more rather than less important, & labor unions become less rather than more critical. A technological alignment has resulted in sociopolitical realignments. In general blue-collar/white-collar struggles are displaced by Wcs & welfare concerns. In short, the shift in the character of commodities has resulted in corresponding change in the transformation of social relationships.

88T3456

Iversen, Gunvor, Andersen, Arne S., Ellingsaeter, Anne Lise & Iversen, Arvid, Levekår i Norge: ulikhet, stabilitet og helhet (Stand of Living in Norway: Inequality, Stability and Comprehensive Measures), Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 229-245 (NOR)

¶ Eight dimensions of standard of living are analyzed, & additive indices are constructed separately for "good" & "poor" conditions. Regression analyses of Norwegian data indicate that the labor market is the most important arena for the distribution of welfare, & SC is a more important variable than gender. The empirical distributions of 5 good & 5 poor states are compared with the expected distributions (assuming independence between the dimensions); analysis reveals that in 1973, the poor states tended to accumulate, while in 1983, the good states did so. An overall compensation structure was found, though one dimension of relations tended slightly to compensate relative to the others. The average income increased during the 1970s, relative inequality was reduced. For several groups, eg, individuals & households with low incomes & long-term unemployed or disabled persons, poor living conditions are permanent to a much higher degree than would be expected if those statuses were independently distributed over time. 10 Tables. References. Modified HA

88T3457

Lasch, Christopher (U Rochester, NY 14627), The Communitarian Critique of Liberalism, U Soundings, 1986, 69, 1-2, spring, 60-71

¶ The recently published book Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life by Robert N. Bellah et al (Berkeley: U of California Press, 1985 (see listing in IRPS No. 42)) represents a major effort to bring the communitarian critique of liberalism to public awareness. The difference between these two approaches rests on contrasting visions of the self, as unencumbered by tradition or as situated in & constituted by tradition. A need is argued for revision of communitarian

0300 social psychology

09 interaction within (small) groups

88T3470

LaLonde, Richard N., Moghaddam, Fathali M. & Taylor, Donald M. (Dept Psychology McGill U, Montreal Quebec H3A 1B1), The Process of Group Differentiation in a Dynamic Intergroup Setting, Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 127, 3, June, 273-287

An examination of the social categorization processes of between-group differentiation & within-group similarity in a dynamic intergroup setting. Traditionally, these processes have been examined in static settings, & it was hypothesized that they might not operate in the same way group members were in a dynamic intergroup setting. Spectators ($N = 68$) at 4 Canadian collegiate hockey games completed questionnaires designed to examine ingroup (home team) vs outgroup (visiting team) perceptions. The traditional effect of ingroup favoritism was found with respect to between-group differentiation, but this effect was influenced by objective measures of performance (ie, goals). For negative characteristics, ingroup favoritism prevailed regardless of the ingroup's relative performance. A distinction could also be made between ingroup favoritism & outgroup discrimination. Although the results pertaining to within-group similarity were only suggestive, they indicated that the outgroup homogeneity effect was not operating in this dynamic context. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 22 References. HA

88T3471

Murstein, Bernard I. (Connecticut Coll, New London 06320), A Clarification and Extension of the SVR Theory of Dyadic Pairing, Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 929-933

Comments, 933-938

An attempt to elaborate & clarify the SVR (stimulus-value-role) theory of dyadic pairing proposed by Bernard I. Murstein (see SA 19 6/ F1370). Previous critiques by Timothy D. Stephen ("A Symbolic Exchange Framework for the Development of Intimate Relationships," Human Relations, 1984, 37, 393-408) & Geoffrey K. Leigh, Thomas B. Holman, & Wesley R. Burr ("An Empirical Test of Sequence in Murstein's SVR Theory of Mate Selection," Family Relations, 1984, 33, 5-231) are summarized, & methodological problems are found regarding the populations, tests, concepts, & variables that they used to test the SVR theory. These critiques, however, have provided for a more precise rationalization of the theory, specifically, in distinguishing between value & role & revising earlier sets of curves regarding courtship progression. External factors influencing courtship are also investigated. In Some Confusions and Exclusions of the SVR Theory of Dyadic Pairing: Response to Murstein, Leigh, Holman, & Burr (Dept of Family Relations & Human Development, Ohio State U, Columbus) review their test of the SVR theory & summarize four basic conceptual & methodological problems with the theory that make attempts to test it difficult. It is argued that Murstein seems to regard any unsupportive tests of his theory as methodologically flawed, further empirical tests are encouraged. In Taking Communication Seriously: A Reply to Murstein, Stephen (Dept of Language, Literature, & Communication, Rensselaer Polytechnic Inst, Troy, NY) argues that his work on symbolic interdependence was never intended as a test of the SVR theory. However, theories which propose that values, attitudes, & beliefs are created through interpersonal communication do present a formidable challenge to stage theories of partner selection. 1 Figure, 22 References. K. Hyatt

88T3472

Ohita, Masao (Faculty Education U Kanazawa, 920 Japan), Self-Control System of Small Groups: Perception of the Probability of

Group Goal Attainment and Evaluation of Achievement Level, Psychologia, 1986, 29, 2, June, 80-90

¶ The self-control system of small groups is investigated, focusing on how group members perceive the probability of attainment of group goals & evaluate the level of achievement devoted toward reaching those goals by means of feedforward & feedback information. An experiment was conducted with a sample of 20 fifth-grade boys from a primary school in Kanazawa, Japan, who were divided into 4 groups to perform a numerical task, groups were instructed either to maximize or optimize their performance, & only half the groups were given feedback following their performance. Results indicate that both feedforward & feedback information were used to rate the probability of group goal attainment & evaluate group performance. Between-group differences are discussed as a function of task type, knowledge of past performance, & individual members' performances/perceptions. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 24 References. Modified HA

88T3473

Wall, Victor D., Jr. & Galanes, Gloria J. (Dept Communication Ohio State U, Columbus 43210), The SYMLOG Dimensions and Small Group Conflict, Central States Speech Journal, 1986, 37, 2, summer, 61-78

¶ An examination of whether the SYMLOG (systematic multiple level observations of groups) dimensions (Bales, Robert F., & Cohen, Steven P., SYMLOG: A System for Multiple Observation of Groups, New York: Free, 1979) are predictably associated with the quality of a group's outcome, the amount of conflict experienced by the group, the manner in which the conflict is managed, & the amount of satisfaction reported by group members. Undergraduate Ss in 24 groups of 4-7 members each ($\Sigma N = 129$) were given the task of developing, individually & as a group, a list of five topics for workshops that could be used for freshman orientation. Analysis of tape recordings of group interactions & questionnaire responses indicates that the Positive-Negative dimension was the only SYMLOG dimension significantly related to any of the independent variables. The relatively poor predictive performance of the Up-Down (UD) & Forward-Backward (FB) dimensions prompted additional analysis using the relative dispersion of members within the groups along these dimensions, which showed a r between FB & UD dispersion & both the observed & perceived amount of conflict. While no other UD & FB r was significant, both produced encouraging potential results with the quality of outcome measures, providing some support that FB & UD dispersion may inhibit the quality of a group's decision-making process. 2 Tables, 49 References. Modified AA

88T3474

Wilson, Rick K. & Pearson, Anne (Dept Political Science Rice U, Houston 77251), Evidence of Sophisticated Voting in a Committee Setting: Theory and Experiments, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 3, 255-273.

¶ Laboratory experimental methods are used to investigate the extent to which decisionmakers employ sophisticated voting strategies. In 2 experimental settings that provide very different incentives for sophisticated voting behavior, analysis of participants' actions ($N = 15$) turns up little evidence that participants rely on perfect foresight when confronting lengthy voting agendas. Rather, the results point toward members using a weaker version of sophistication when anticipating complex decision settings. These findings suggest that decisionmakers employ only limited foresight when choosing among voting strategies. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 17 References. Modified HA

88T3466

Streeck, Wolfgang (Wissenschaftszentrum Berlin, Platz an der Luftbrücke 2 D-1000 42 Federal Republic Germany), Vielfalt und Interdependenz. Überlegungen zur Rolle von intermediären Organisationen in sich ändernden Umwelten (Diversity and Interdependence. Problems of Intermediary Organizations in Changing Environments), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 3, Sept., 471-495. (GER)

¶ Functional problems of intermediary organizations in modern societies are discussed. The increasing heterogeneity & fluidity of interests & motivations that characterize modern societies are perceived from an organizational perspective as growing uncertainty of membership relations, to be dealt with by rationalization of organization technology & economization of exchange relations. Simultaneously, the increasing complexity & interdependence of causal relations at the level of societal systems result in a growing density of interorganizational networks, which makes the sovereignty & identity of participating organizations appear precarious. Intermediary organizations are under pressure to respond simultaneously to the problems of management of diversity that arise in their relationship to the underlying microsystems, & to the problems of management of interdependence that arise in their relationship to the encompassing macrosystems. 55 References. Modified HA

88T3467

Tipton, Steven M. (Emory U, Atlanta GA 30322), A Response: Moral Languages and the Good Society, WM Soundings, 1986, 69, 1-2, spring, 165-180.

¶ A response is offered to the reviews (see abstracts in this section) in this special issue of Soundings examining Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life, by Robert N. Bellah, Richard Madsen, William Sullivan, Ann Swidler, & Steven Tipton (Berkeley: U of California Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). This book does not seek to produce a representative sampling of opinions in the US, but to elicit moral understandings. It does not produce an image of one dominant tradition, but of significant cultural disagreements; nor does it diagnose moral pluralism as the cause of problems or prescribe moral absolutism as a cure. Each major moral language is suited particularly to certain human activities in the US. The problem is to give respect due to all of them. W. H. Stoddard

88T3468

Wallwork, Ernest (Syracuse U, NY 13210), A Constructive Free Alternative to Psychotherapeutic Egoism, WM Soundings, 1986, 69, spring, 145-164.

¶ A critical review of Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life (Bellah, Robert N., et al, Berkeley: U of California Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]), focusing on the inadequacies of the book's treatment of psychotherapy & its legitimization of cal egoistic individualism. It is argued that if one accepts the author's insistence on the radical individualism of the psychotherapeutic tradition & also accepts that psychotherapy commands as much legitimizing power in contemporary culture as the book contends, the authors' praiseworthy aim of fostering a revival of the biblical & republican traditions appears to be seriously subverted. If communitarian values are to be revived, it is important to find legitimization of the values of interdependence, the common good in the reigning psychotherapeutic ideology. It is argued that even psychoanalysis—the school of psychotherapy most aligned with psychological egoism in popular culture—emphasizes the importance of other-regarding behavior. However, psychoanalysis also provides a moral corrective of any uncritical affirmation of communal bonds, in its recognition of the pervasiveness & depth of the aggressive instinct, egoistic strivings that continually work against the forging of more decent human relationships. 26 References. AA

88T3469

---- (Duke U, Durham NC 27706), Habits of the Heart: A Literary Event, Social Science, 1986, 71, 2-3, fall, 120-124.

¶ A discussion of the major themes in Habits of the Heart: Individualism and Commitment in American Life (Bellah, Robert N., et al, Berkeley: U of California Press, 1985 [see listings in IRPS No. 42]), focusing on the authors' concern with the problem of individualism in US life. Tiryakian interrelates micro & macro aspects of social reality reflected in this work, from a sociological perspective. James Peacock utilizes an anthropological viewpoint to locate the work's critical analysis in a trend that began to develop twenty years ago in the US. L. Craig Calhoun analyzes the work as part of an ongoing critique of individualism by sociologists & social thinkers. F. Rasmussen

Document Delivery Service

The costs of reproduction are: US $0.25 per reproduced page. Orders must be PREPAID (unprepaid orders cannot be acknowledged or returned) and sent to SOCIOLOGICAL ABSTRACTS, INC. (P.O. Box 22206, San Diego, CA 92122, USA) together with the SA accession number and the complete citation of the document to be reproduced. To calculate price per document, multiply the number of pages as indicated in the citation of the abstract by US $0.25 and add a US $1.50 search fee per document. POSTAGE is EXTRA. Below is a table for postage fees that vary by weight/size of paper.

No. of Pages	US & Canada Postage Fee	All Other Countries
		Postage Fee	Air Mail
1-5	$0.39	US $1.40	Surface US $1.00
6-10	$0.73	$2.24	$1.90
11-15	$1.07	$2.78	$2.30
16-20	$1.41	$3.32	$2.75
21+	Additional multiples as above

CONFERENCE papers are available ONLY when the following notation precedes the text of the abstract; ● "Complete paper available from SA Reproduction Service prepaid at $0.25 per page plus $1.50 search and postage. Length: pp." For copies of paper without this notation, write directly to the author, whose address is listed in the citation.

88T3483

Byrne, Barbara M. (Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6), Self-Concept/Academic Achievement Relations: An Investigation of Dimensionality, Stability, and Causality, Canadian Journal of Behavioural Science/Revue canadienne des sciences du comportement, 1986, 18, 2, Apr, 173-186

A 2-wave LISREL structural equation model was used to validate the self-concept construct & investigate relations among general self-concept, academic self-concept, & academic achievement. A sample of 429 ninth-twelfth graders at 2 secondary schools in a Mc/UMc suburban area of Ottawa, Ontario, completed 5 self-report instruments at the beginning & end of the academic year. Results confirm previous findings that self-concept is multidimensional, hierarchically structured, & stable. Relations among the 3 constructs were moderately stable, & general academic self-concept were measurable as separate constructs, though moderately correlated. Causal predominance between self-concept & academic performance was not established. Problems of model fit & measurement error are addressed. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 39 References. Modified HA

88T3484

Cahill, Spencer E. (Dept Sociology Skidmore Coll, Saratoga Springs NY 12866-0851), Children and Civility: Ceremonial Deviance and the Acquisition of Ritual Competence, Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 4, Dec, 312-321

Erving Goffman's analyses (eg, see SA 15 1/67C3639) of the ritual elements of everyday interaction indicate that contemporary civil society is characterized by a kind of religion of civility. Based on nearly 300 hours spent observing children in public settings in the northeastern US over a 2-year period, some of the ways in which children are socialized to civility are empirically analyzed. Results indicate that children's disruptive & otherwise offensive acts are essential elements of that socialization process in that they occasion observed interpersonal rituals, ceremonial instructions, & coaching. However, children often are not the beneficiaries of the expressions of respect & regard that they are instructed & encouraged to give to others. Such treatment may actually encourage the young to engage in a kind of calculated ceremonial deviance that may also indirectly promote their socialization to civility. 28 References. HA

88T3485

Cashmore, Judith A. & Goodnow, Jacqueline J. (c/o Goodnow-Macquarie U, North Ryde New South Wales 2113 Australia), Influences on Australian Parents' Values: Ethnicity versus Socioeconomic Status, Journal of Cross-Cultural Psychology, 1986, 17, 4, Dec, 441-454

Prior research has found that parental values concerning the importance of particular qualities & skills in their children vary with both SES (or SES) & ethnic background. In an attempt to untangle these effects, differences in values held by native-born Anglo & Italian-born Australian parents of 100 first-born children (50 Ms & 50 Fs) were investigated as a function of differences in SES (as measured by father's occupation & mother's/father's educational level). Data from in-home interviews & a Likert-type rating scale of 14 qualities/skills indicated that significant differences between the two groups of parents varied with content area & were differentially reduced when SES indicators were taken into account. Though the specific effects of ethnicity remain undetermined, the importance of using separate measures of SES when investigating the differential impact of ethnicity & SES is demonstrated. 2 Tables, 29 References. Modified HA

88T3486

Cupach, William R. & Metts, Sandra (Illinois State U, Normal 61761), Accounts of Relational Dissolution: A Comparison of Marital and Non-Marital Relationships, Communication Monographs, 1986, 53, 4, Dec, 311-334

Verbal accounts are the principal means by which individuals personally cope with spoiled relationships & socially manage relations. In dissolution. Seeking to identify similarities & differences in the disengaging process for marriages vs dating relationships, personal accounts of the dissolution of 50 marital & 50 premarital relationships were analyzed in terms of 4 key features: (1) the problems & relational stresses that motivate one or both members to dissolve the relationship, (2) the attributions of responsibility for these problems, (3) the attempts to repair or manage the dissolving relationship, & (4) the factors that impede termination of the relationship. Findings indicate that the structural & affective entrenchment of marital couples lend to their disengagement accounts a characteristic complexity not paralleled in the accounts of couples who dissolved their relationship prior to marriage. 5 Tables, 46 References. Modified HA

88T3487

Damer, Sean, Poetics or Posturing?, Critique of Anthropology, 1987, 7, 1, summer, 71-75

Comment, 77-79

¶ (A corrected version of the article abstracted in SA 35 3/87R5509) A review essay on a book by Michael Herzfeld, The Poetics of Manhood: Contest and Identity in a Cretan Mountain Village (Princeton U Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). Herzfeld stresses Greek men's indigenous theories of the meaning of their lives, relying on the expression of this meaning in local language. A major focus of Herzfeld's Ss' lives is intense competition expressed through sheep-stealing. His account appears questionable on three grounds: the credibility of his Ss' accounts, the salience of sheep-stealing in everyday life, & the omission of women from his treatment, despite women's having a public life & despite the effect of their public behavior on men. Despite these problems, Herzfeld offers several interesting ideas for further research. In Posturing as Social Poetic: A Reply to Damer, Herzfeld suggests that different Greek villages may have different levels of sheep-stealing, & that language does have the importance in Greek life that Damer expresses doubts about. W. H. Stoddard

88T3488

Dressler, William W., DosSantos, Jose Ernesto, Gallagher, Philip N., Jr. & Viteri, Fernando E. (Dept Behavioral Science U Alabama, University 35486), Arterial Blood Pressure and Modernization in Brazil, American Anthropologist, 1987, 89, 2, June, 398-409

¶ The relationship between individual modernization & elevated arterial blood pressure was examined among a sample of 128 residents of Ribeiras Preto, Brazil, representing part- & full-time agricultural workers, factory workers, & bank employees & their spouses, who were interviewed in their homes & physically examined at a clinic. It was hypothesized that elevated blood pressure would result from the discrepancy between an individual's life style & his/her economic resources; specifically, it was suggested that when modern lifestyle acquisition exceeded economic resources, a circumstance referred to as "lifestyle stress," blood pressure would be elevated. This factor was found to be related to diastolic, but not systolic, blood pressure, independently of a variety of biologic, dietary, & sociocultural confounding factors. The perceived change associated with life events also predicted diastolic, but not systolic, blood pressure. Other predictors of diastolic blood pressure were calcium intake, fat intake, race, age, & body mass. The findings support the hypothesis that sociocultural risk factors emerge in the modernization process as a result of social-structural imbalances generated by economic development & represent independent risk factors for elevated arterial blood pressure. 4 Tables, 32 References. Modified HA

88T3489

Drulhe, Marcel (Centre recherches sociologiques et Instit sciences sociales U Toulouse II, F-31000 France), Rupture et transition: le devenir des pensionnaires d'un centre d'hébergement pour femmes battues (Disruption and Transition: The Future of Residents of a Battered Women's Home), Revue française de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 4, Oct-Dec, 641-661 (FRE)

¶ The effects of shelters for battered women on the future of these clients are examined by means of a monographic study of one such shelter, "L'Accueil" (Welcome), in France. An overview is given of the selection of candidates for the program, the succession of ruptures & transitions constituting the client's gradual social reinsertion, & the change from imprisonment in marital violence to institutional dependence. The rupture of leaving the shelter allows the client, through a series of transitions & further ruptures, to construct a lifestyle of progressive growth that approaches her concept of independence. 18 References. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T3490

Dunning, Eric (Leicester U, LE1 7RH England), Comments on Elias's 'Scenes from the Life of a Knight', Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 366-371

¶ Contrary to Anthony Giddens (in The Constitution of Society: Outline of a Theory of Structuration [see IRPS No. 26/85C00433]), Norbert Elias (in The Civilizing Process, Vol. 1: The History of Manners [see IRPS No. 31/83C00199]) does not claim that genital sexuality was simply less

12 personality & culture

88T3475

Amann-Gainotti, Merete. Prospettive sociali e interculturali della psico-epistemologia genetica di Jean Piaget (Social and Intercultural Perspectives of the Genetic Psychoepistemology of Jean Piaget). ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986-87, 80, Jan-Mar, 106-119 (ITA)

¶ A discussion of the work of Jean Piaget focuses on Piaget's main thesis: the solution of the gnosological problem in genetic terms, i.e., in terms of the development of the individual. In this, Piaget differed from Emile Durkheim & others who emphasized the perspective of the development of society. In dealing with knowledge, Piaget gives priority to the rational element over other forms of thinking, e.g., collective representations or the theory of the unconscious. 54 References. Modified HA

88T3476

Ansbury, Charles A., Knuckle, Essie P., & Adderly-Kelly, Centrice (Howard U., Washington DC 20059). Effectiveness of Selected Neuropsychological and Sociocultural Measures for Predicting WISC-R Discrepancy Group Membership. Educational and Psychological Research, 1987, 7, 1, winter, 47-59

¶ An attempt to demonstrate the predictability of the Weschler Intelligence Scale for Children-Revised (WISC-R), Weschler, D., The Weschler Intelligence Scale for Children-Revised, New York: Psychological Corp., 1974) subscale discrepancy score directions from an array of selected neuropsychological, sociocultural, & achievement-related variables. It was assumed that discrepancy directions have educational implications & can be explained by variables related to brain function & sociocultural influences. A sample of 100 black adolescents aged 12-14 from a Me. semi-Ru school district completed a battery of neuropsychological & academic achievement tests & an ethnic identity scale. The results of a discriminant analysis for three discrepancy score directions were significant, using the Symbol Digit Modalities Test, Black Ideology Scale, & grade in English achievement as predictor variables. Findings are discussed in terms of possible cultural mediating influences involved in brain-behavior relationships as reflected in standardized test performance of black students. 4 Tables, 19 References. Modified HA

88T3477

Bailey, William C., Hendrick, Clyde & Hendrick, Susan S. (c/o C. Hendrick, Dept. Psychology Texas Tech U., Lubbock 79409). Relation of Sex and Gender Role to Love, Sexual Attitudes, and Self-Esteem. Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 11-12, June, 637-648

¶ An exploration of attitudes toward love & sex as a function of sex-role orientation (M- or F-sex typed, androgynous, or undifferentiated). Students (N = 286) at Texas Tech U. completed background questionnaires, various attitudinal & self-esteem scales, & the Bem Sex-Role Inventory in spring 1985. Correlational techniques & analysis of variance reveal that sex-role orientation was a strong predictor of basic attitudes toward love & sexuality, however, the influence of biological sex was also significant, & operated more or less independently of sex-role orientation. Results support the notion of a multidimensional set of constructs to explain sex-role differences. Difficulties that sex-stereotyped couples might encounter in their relationships as a result of differences in their attitudes toward love & sexuality are explored. 2 Tables, 22 References. K. Hyatt

88T3478

Biddle, Bruce J., Bank, Barbara J., & Slavings, Ricky L. (Center Research Social Behavior U. Missouri, Columbia 65211). Norms, Preferences, Identities and Retention Decisions. UM Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 4, Dec, 322-337.

¶ Social psychologists have differed concerning the modes of thought that presumably generate decisions, & independent traditions of research have appeared concerning the effects of three separate thought modes: norms, preferences, & self-referent identity labels. In prior research it was shown that these modes have independent effects on decisions & that the relative strengths of model effects vary depending on the context studied. This model is used to analyze retention decisions made by 2 waves of freshmen (N = 1,955) at a midwestern US U., who completed questionnaires involving Likert-type scales of behavioral alternatives. Findings confirm that each thought mode has effects on retention intentions & reenrollment behaviors, norms have stronger effects for these decisions, & the effects generated are substantial & independent of those associated with students' backgrounds, achievements, social influences, campus experiences, & grades earned. In addition, findings confirm the decisions to transfer to another campus or to drop out of high school are predicted differentially by students' thoughts concerning distinct retention issues. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 61 References. Modified HA

88T3479

Bilotta, George James (United States International U., San Jose, CA 92131). Gay Men Coming Out to Their Families of Origin: A Exploratory-Descriptive Investigation. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, 1026-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715387.

88T3480

Bochner, Stephen (U. New South Wales, Kensington Australia). Coping with Unfamiliar Cultures: Adjustment or Learning?. Australian Journal of Psychology, 1986, 38, 3, 347-358

¶ Persons exposed to novel & unfamiliar cultural environments as migrants, foreign students, refugees, tourists, business persons, & national guest workers. Coping with unfamiliar cultures has been treated in the literature as a matter of adjusting the "culture traveler" to their new cultures, within a clinical framework based on the assumption that sojourning in foreign places causes culture shock. The adjustment model is rejected on the ground that exposure to a second culture is essentially a learning process, in particular, acquiring the social skills of the new culture. Emphasizing intrapsychic determinants of behavior stimulates those experiencing difficulties in adjusting. A culture learning model avoids implications of relative culture superiority, assimilation & culture erosion inherent in the concept of adjustment. The culture learning model also has specific implications for the design, implementation, & evaluation of culture training programs, particularly those aimed at producing mediating persons. Finally, the distinction between adjustment & culture learning has theoretical, sociopolitical, & practical consequences for the development of multicultural societies. 61 References. HA

88T3481

Boyd, Carol Jane (Wayne State U., Detroit MI 48202). Relation among the Correlates within the Construct of Mother-Daughter Identification: Mutual Identification, Attachment, Conflict and Identical Adult Polish-American Women. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, 1027-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714530.

88T3482

Butler, Ruth (School Education Hebrew U. Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel). The Role of Generalised Expectancies in Determining Causal Attributions for Success and Failure in Two Social Contexts. ♦ The British Journal of Educational Psychology, 1986, 56, 1, 51-63

¶ It is hypothesized that the sources of discrepancies in causal attributions for success & failure & outcome attributions for self & others become clearer when the role of generalized expectancies in the attributional process is accounted for. Specifically, when information about self & outcome is standardized, the attributions of both actors & observers will tend to reflect generalized expectancies more than they will serving biases. An experiment is described in which 230 sixth-grade Israeli students of high & low SES were assigned to a self- or other attribution condition & asked to rate performance on a questionnaire style anagram test as a function of ability, task difficulty, luck, or effort. Results indicate that while students of high SES tended to attribute their own & others' outcomes in ways consistent with high generalized expectancy for success, students of low SES attributed their own outcomes to external, unstable factors, & differentiated consistently in attributions for self, similar, & different others. It is argued that high SES students hold undifferentiated, global perceptions of causality & attribution patterns consistent with both teacher values & their own experience. Low SES students, on the other hand, have more differentiated perceptions of causality since uncertainty as to the real causes of learning outcomes motivates them to greater, but not always more active, attributional activity. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 25 References. Modified HA self-expressive function observed in the first study was subdivided into social-expressive & value-expressive functions. Preliminary data support the AFI's validity. Theoretical & methodological implications for future research are discussed. 8 Tables, 65 References. Modified HA

88T3499

Hetteema, Joop & Van Heck, Guus L. (Tilburg U, NL-4000 LE Netherlands), Emotion-Cognition Interactions in Personality, Communication and Cognition, 1987, 20, 2-3, 141-169.

An attempt is made both to create order in the complex area of models of emotion, & to address the issue of emotion-cognition interactions. A multidimensional mapping of 17 published theories of emotion is developed, based on the presence or absence of 25 features (as determined by consensus of 2 raters). Two major dimensions of theories of emotion are distinguished. A model is presented that treats the cognitive & the emotional system as a powerful strategic-tactical coalition that can perform goal-directed actions. 1 Table, 3 Figures, 70 References. Modified HA

88T3500

Hofer, Myron A. (Dept Developmental Psychobiology Coll Physicians & Surgeons Columbia U, New York NY 10032), Early Social Relationships: A Psychobiologist's View, Child Development, 1987, 58, 3, June, 633-647.

A strategy for studying early social relationships in relatively simple animal model systems is outlined. Some of the differences in approach between neuroscientists & human developmentalists in dealing with the same research problems are described. These ideas are illustrated in a description of laboratory work on the processes of early social attachment in young rats & on their responses to separation from their mothers. Evidence is found for a novel mechanism by which the mother appears to be a regulator of physiological & behavioral systems of the infant so that many of the prolonged responses to separation represent withdrawal or release phenomena. Some surprising results from the studies on the organization of nursing are described revealing an unexpected degree of synchrony & reciprocity in this apparently simple interaction that is so basic to being mammal. 2 Tables, 4 Figures, 41 References. HA

88T3501

Holden, Constance, The Genetics of Personality, Science, 1987, 237, 4815, 7 Aug, 598-601.

A review of recent research by behavioral geneticists on the origins of personality & causes for its variation between individuals. Results challenge conventional wisdom about the importance of the childhood environment in shaping personality, & indicate that it plays little or no role in producing personality similarities among family members. Rather, genes have been found to account for about 50% of personality variance, with the other 50% explained by environmental influences unique to the individual, eg, parent-child interactions, peer influences, & random events. Future research is expected to explore the mechanisms by which genes either singularly or in combination influence behavioral characteristics. Some criticisms of behavioral genetics & its techniques are briefly considered. 2 Photographs, 3 References. K. Hyatt

88T3502

Humphrey, John A. & Palmer, Stuart (Dept Sociology U North Carolina, Greensboro 27412-5001), Stressful Life Events and Criminal Homicide, Omega, 1986-87, 17, 4, 299-308.

An exploration of the relationship between stressful life events & criminal homicide, based on inmate files for 270 persons incarcerated for criminal homicide & for 194 persons incarcerated for felonious property offenses in NC during 1976/77. Criminal homicide offenders tended to experience stressful life events in greater number & more consistently than did nonviolent felons. Further, when homicide offenders were divided into primary offenders (those whose victims were family members or close friends) & nonprimary offenders (those whose victims were acquaintances or strangers), it was found that primary offenders suffered more stressful life events involving loss, while nonprimary offenders experienced more stressful nonloss events. 3 Tables, 42 References. Modified HA

88T3503

Johansen, John Earl (Texas Women's U, Denton 76204), Transgenerational Patterns of Intimacy and Autonomy: A Multivariate Study, Dissertation Abstracts International, A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1028-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715030.

88T3504

Johnson, Robert J. & Kaplan, Howard B. (Dept Psychiatry Baylor Coll Medicine, Houston TX 77030), Corrigendum: Methodology, Technology and Serendipity, Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 4, Dec, 352-354.

Some corrections are offered to an earlier analysis of the effects of self-rejection & disposition to deviance on later deviance (see SA 34:5/86Q9523). Although the substantive conclusions remain unchanged, it is found that the two-step series of compute statements used to create three dichotomies of deviance produce unintended results that do not conform to the variables as described. Particular implications for sociologists of science are discussed, since it was a series of research decisions that first created the problem & then allowed for its solution. 1 Figure, 2 References. K. Hyatt

88T3505

Kihlstrom, John F. (Dept Psychology U Arizona, Tucson 85721), The Cognitive Unconscious, Science, 1987, 237, 4821, 18 Sept, 1445-1452.

Contemporary research in cognitive psychology reveals the impact of nonconscious mental structures & processes on the individual's conscious experience, thought, & action. Research on perceptual-cognitive & motoric skills indicates that they are automatized through experience, & thus rendered unconscious. In addition, research on subliminal perception, implicit memory, & hypnosis indicates that events can affect mental functions even though they cannot be consciously perceived or remembered. These findings suggest a tripartite division of the cognitive unconscious into truly unconscious mental processes operating on knowledge structures that may themselves be preconscious or subconscious. HA

88T3506

Kimble, Charles F. & Kardes, Frank R. (Dept Psychology U Dayton, OH 45469), Information Patterns, Attribution and Attraction, Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 4, Dec, 338-345.

A report on an experiment with U of Dayton (Ohio) students ($N = 119$) conducted to see how information patterns concerning a positive behavioral event affect attributions & attraction toward the actor. It was expected that information patterns that implied a person \times stimulus attribution, whereby a particular actor acted in a positive way exclusively toward an opposite-sex target (the S), would engender the most attraction toward the actor. Person, stimulus, circumstance, & person \times stimulus information patterns led to the appropriate attributions, with the person \times stimulus information patterns producing more attraction than all other patterns. Results are discussed in terms of how inferences about exclusive behaviors between pairs of individuals affect relationships. 3 Tables, 28 References. HA

88T3507

Kuz'min, E. S. & Murgulets, L. V., Aktual'nye zadachi sotsial'noy psikhologii (Current Problems of Social Psychology), Vestnik Leningradskogo Universiteta. Istoriya KPSS. Nauchnyi Kommunizm, Filosofiya, Pravo, 1987, 3(6), Sept, 63-70. (RUS)

Efforts to accelerate the SE development of the USSR depend on activating a wide range of social-psychological factors affecting work. Contemporary social psychology needs a complex program for investigating changes in behavior under specific objective & subjective conditions. Some advantages of a dialectical-materialist approach are described; over-reliance on bourgeois social-psychological models should be avoided. G. Prostavkov

88T3508

Lamovec, Tanja, Faktorji samospoštovanja (Factors of Self-Esteem), Anthropos, Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1987, 1-2, 223-236. (SLO)

An attempt was made to construct a self-esteem inventory in Slovenian, using data collected from 340 students who completed 160 5-point scales for various items. Factor analysis yielded 4 components after varimax rotation: social self, physical self, emotional self, & self-assurance & assertiveness. Contrary to findings in foreign research, an additional academic self factor was not identified. Men & women differed significantly on the first three factors but not on the fourth. 3 Tables, 5 Graphs, 4 References. Modified HA concealed in medieval Europe than at present in every case. However, there is evidence from a sequence of medieval drawings to support some degree of greater openness about sexuality in the Middle Ages. These drawings present sexuality matter-of-factly as an element of everyday public life. Elias actually claims that medieval European societies were characterized by greater extremes both of expression & of repression than are modern societies. While Elias's interpretations may be subject to criticism, they should not simply be dismissed. W. H. Stoddard

88T3491

Elias, Norbert, On Human Beings and Their Emotions: A Process-Sociological Essay. ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 339-361

¶ In studying emotion, sociologists, in contrast to biologists & psychologists, must examine not only aspects shared between human beings & other animals but also aspects uniquely human. To do so they must overcome the tendency either to reduce human characteristics to those of other species or to interpret human uniquenesses distinctively. Both result from a focus on static conditions rather than on processes. A theoretical model is proposed for human emotion based on the uniquely great extent of the human capacity to learn & indeed the necessity for learning as a basis for human survival, which requires a redefinition of the concept of nature. As a result, no human adult experiences entirely unlearned or genetically fixed emotions. An example of this approach can be seen in analysis of the implications of the unique mobility & expressiveness of human faces, which only human beings can interpret properly. It is no longer possible to study emotions in isolation, without reference to the total experience of the human beings who feel them. W. H. Stoddard

88T3492

Ferrarotti, Franco (via Appenini 42, I-00198 Rome Italy), La California come mito (California as Myth). ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec, 93-97 (ITA)

¶ The introduction to a forthcoming study, Sacro, sangue, potere ((The Sacred, Blood, Power) no publication information given), of the mass suicide at Jim Jones's People's Temple in Jonestown, Guyana. The origins of the cult in Calif are examined. An attempt is made to identify some of the peculiar characteristics of life in Calif: elements of the frontier, the furthest place from the Old World, a place to which people flee. Calif is described as a "waiting room" where no one knows what they are waiting for." C. Waters

88T3493

Freeman, Linton C., Romney, A. Kimball & Freeman, Sue C. (School Social Sciences U California, Irvine 92717), Cognitive Structure and Informant Accuracy, American Anthropologist, 1987, 89, 2, June, 310-325

¶ The problem of informant accuracy is examined in light of principles of memory organization from cognitive psychology. Analysis of data from attendance records at a colloquium series at the U of California, Irvine, & from interviews with 33 colloquium participants reveals these principles to be powerful, not only in explaining overall patterns of informant error, but in predicting details about the types of errors made. Predictions are made in terms both of different kinds of informants & of different kinds of objects. All the predictions are strongly supported by the data. Finally, in the light of these results, two strategies are developed. The "best" informants, it seems, can be used to reveal long-range stable patterns of events, & the "worst" informants can be used to reveal the details of a particular event of special interest. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 41 References. Modified HA

88T3494

Furnham, Adrian & Karani, Roshni (Dept Psychology University Coll London, WC1E 2TB England), A Cross-Cultural Study of Attitudes to Women, Just World, and Locus of Control Beliefs. ♦ Psychologia, 1985, 28, 1, Mar, 11-20.

¶ Religious cultural differences in the perceived/desirable equality of men & women & related beliefs about justice & control were investigated using a sample of 32 white Christians from London, GB, & 64 Indians (Zoroastrians & Hindus) from Bombay. Rs completed 3 questionnaires: the Attitudes toward Women Scale, Belief in a Just World Scale, & Levenson Multidimensional Locus of Control Scale—which were then subjected to analysis of variance & correlational analysis to determine cross-cultural differences. It was found that conservative attitudes toward women were associated with beliefs in an unjust world & external locus of control. In addition, Ms were more conservative than Fs, & Hindus more conservative than Zoroastrians, who in turn more conservative than Christians, in their attitudes toward women. Results are discussed in terms of the role & status of women in culture, & comparisons made to US studies. 3 Tables, 38 References. Modified HA

88T3495

Goetting, Ann (Western Kentucky U, Bowling Green 42101), Husband Wives: A Profile, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 3, 332-341

¶ The population of 56 women arrested in Detroit, Mich, for killing husbands during 1982/83 is described in the context of their killings. Descriptions include the demographic & social characteristics of offenders & victims & the circumstances of the offenses. Where feasible, comparisons are made with general populations of homicide offenders. 15 References. HA

88T3496

Grubb, Henry Jefferson & Ollendick, Thomas H. (Dept Psychology East Tennessee State U, Johnson City 37614-0002), Cultural Distance Perspective: An Exploratory Analysis of Its Effect on Learning and Intelligence, International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 1986, 10, 4, 399-414

¶ Sociocultural factors that lead to group performance differences on intelligence tests & learning tasks are explored in an attempt to empirically determine the validity of the cultural-distance approach hypothesis that a subculture's distance from the major culture on which questionnaires are based & validated will determine that subculture's subpattern. Analysis of personal data questionnaires & intelligence performance tests completed by 80 postsecondary school adults indicate that although blacks & whites perform similarly on learning tasks, they perform differently on standardized IQ tests, possibly because of loading of cultural influences on the latter measures. When cultural influences are controlled for, differences in IQ performance are minimized. 4 Tables, 35 References. Modified HA

88T3497

Gudykunst, William B., Yoon, Young-Chul & Nishida, Tsui (Arizona State U, Tempe 85287), The Influence of Individualism-Collectivism on Perceptions of Communication in Group and Outgroup Relationships. ♦ Communication Monographs, 1987, 54, 3, 295-306

¶ Drawing on H. C. Triandis's refined conceptualization of individualism-collectivism ("Collectivism vs Individualism: A Reconceptualization of a Basic Concept in Cross-Cultural Psychology," in Bagley, C. & Ma, G. [Eds], Personality, Cognition, and Values: Cross-Cultural Perspectives of Childhood and Adolescence, London: Macmillan, 1986), predictions were made regarding the influence of the cultural dimensions of individualism-collectivism on the degree of personalization, synchronization, & difficulty that occurs in interpersonal relationships. 10 studies (Σ N = 380) from the northeastern US, Tokyo, Japan, & Seoul, S. Korea, completed questionnaires that assessed their perceptions of communication with strangers (outgroup) & classmates (ingroup). Individualism-collectivism was systematically related to perceptions of communication in ingroup relationships, but it appears that a distinction between contextual & simple collectivism must be made to explain the link between individualism-collectivism & outgroup communication. 2 Tables, 44 References. Modified HA

88T3498

Herek, Gregory M. (Social/Personality Psychology Program Graduate School & U Center City U New York NY 10036-8099), What Functions Be Measured? A New Perspective on the Functional Approach to Attitudes, U Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 4, 285-303.

¶ An argument for the value of a reformulated & reoperationalized functional approach to attitudes. The development of two new procedures directly assessing functions is described. First, a content analysis procedure was devised, using essays written by 205 Calif U students describing their attitudes toward lesbians & gay men. Patterns of themes were identified that indicate the presence of three functions: experiential, schematic, defensive, & self-expressive. In a second study, involving Calif U students, an objectively-scored method, the Attitude Function Inventory (AFI), was developed & used to assess the functions served by attitudes toward lesbians & gay men & toward persons with stigmatizing disabilities: AIDS, mental illness, & cancer. In the AFI, becoming a runaway is conceived as a process of action & reaction, which unfolds over time. Becoming a runaway is the end product of a person's actions, reasons, & symbols. 10 References. Modified HA

88T3518

Pettitway, Leon E. (Division Criminal Justice U Delaware, Newark 19716). Arson for Revenge: The Role of Environmental Situation, Age, Sex, and Race, Journal of Quantitative Criminology, 1987, 3, 2, June, 169-184.

* An analysis of some differences between arson offenses that are "expressive" (ie, retaliatory or revenge-motivated) & those that are "instrumental" (ie, nonretaliatory), with focus on variations in offender characteristics (age, race, & gender) & neighborhood factors (SES, demographic composition, & housing characteristics). Data from the US census & files of the Houston (Tex) Fire Dept on 377 individuals arrested during 1978/79 are used to construct loglinear models to test the relative effect of individual & neighborhood characteristics on the likelihood of perpetrating retaliatory vs nonretaliatory arson. Significant age & race differences are revealed, & both are affected by offender's place of residence. It is concluded that retaliatory arson is primarily used as a coercive measure or form of conflict management by 1c or dispossessed individuals for whom the function of the law has broken down. 4 Tables, 40 References. K Hyatt

88T3519

Pietromonaco, Paula R., Manis, Jean & Frohardt-Lane, Katherine (Program Social Ecology U California, Irvine 92717). Psychological Consequences of Multiple Social Roles, ♦ UM Psychology of Women Quarterly, 1986, 10, 4, Dec, 373-381

* Data from a 1981 survey are used to explore the potential negative & positive consequences of having multiple roles. The responses of 500 employed women to questions about self-esteem, satisfaction with careers, partners, & children, & perceptions of life stress & pleasure are examined. The number of roles held by Rs ranged from 1 to 5 (worker, partner, parent, volunteer, & student). The results indicate that higher self-esteem & greater job satisfaction are associated with holding more roles. However, neither marital nor parental satisfaction was consistently related to the number of roles held by Rs. Although the majority of working Rs reported their lives to be stressful, this finding was independent of the number of roles held, & Rs with more roles did not consistently report a greater number of stressful life domains. These findings suggest that, for employed women, having multiple roles may enhance psychological well-being. 19 References. HA

88T3520

Popitz, Heinrich (Instt Soziologie Albert-Ludwigs-U, D-7800 Freiburg im Breisgau Federal Republic Germany). Autoritätsbedürfnisse. Der Wandel der sozialen Subjektivität (A Need for Authority. The Change in Social Subjectivity), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 4, Dec, 633-647 (GER)

* It is argued that an individual's self-esteem depends on gaining the acknowledgement & approval of other persons whom the individual holds in esteem, from this need, those others draw the power of authority. Some historical variations of the need for authority are described. The characteristics of institutional authority are discussed, & a typology of the different needs for social approval is presented. Focus is on the manner in which a person seeks social approval as a member of a social group, as the holder of certain public roles, or as a unique individual, a more recent manifestation. The trend toward the individualism of social subjectivity has given rise to new kinds of sociostructural & sociopsychological problems. Modified HA

88T3521

Poplawski, Witold T. (Dept Psychology Ontario Ministry Correctional Services, PO Box 300 Millbrook L0A 1G0). Adult Altruism: Problems of Terminology in Prosocial Behaviour Research, ♦ Psychologia, 1986, 29, 4, Dec, 197-213

† The theory of altruism focuses mainly on the origins & the stages of altruistic development in children & has understudied its varied manifestations in adults, resulting in conceptual framework inconsistencies in prosocial behavior research. Here, an attempt is made to clarify chosen elements of terminology, & a possible avenue for research is suggested. An analysis of the hypothetical levels in the development of altruism in adults is performed, an altruistic typology is introduced, & its implications, as they relate to prosocial behavior theory & terminology, are considered. The nature of reinforcers of altruistic behavior & their gradual extrinsic-intrinsic transformation is also discussed. Altruism is regarded as a phenomenon resulting from a dynamic schema of psychological functions & as an indicator expressive of the level & direction of their development. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 99 References. Modified HA

88T3522

Poplawski, Witold T. (King St West PO Box 300, Millbrook Ontario). On the Origin of Altruism and Charitable Behavior Conceptions: Chosen Ancient Sources as a Contribution to Prosocial Behavior Theory, ♦ Psychologia, 1985, 28, 1, Mar, 1-10

† It is suggested that there are elements of knowledge from broad historical-philosophical & religious sources that could be worthwhile to scientific psychological analysis & could also contribute to theories of prosocial behavior. A brief exploration of the origins & meanings of two aspects of prosocial behavior: altruism & charity—is presented, drawing on Vedic thought, Indian philosophy, Buddhism, the Judeo-Christian tradition, & ancient Greek & Roman sources. The large & varied informational potential of these ancient texts for the development of psychoethical research on human behavior is discussed. 28 References. Modified HA

88T3523

Rabbie, Jacob M. & Lodewijckx, H. (Instt Social Psychology State U Utrecht, NL-3508 TC Netherlands). Individual and Group Aggression, ♦ Current Research on Peace and Violence, 1987, 10, 2-3, 91-101

† Although group aggression, violence, & vandalism are major problems today, research in experimental social psychology has focused on intraindividual rather than group determinants of aggression. In an effort to test a behavioral interaction model (BIM), an experiment was conducted in which single individuals & categorized groups, 100 M & F Dutch U students, had to play a 3-trial prisoner's dilemma game against a programmed individual or group opponent who broke a promise to make a cooperative choice. Ss could react to this norm violation by sending painful white noise to the earphones of the opponent, a measure of physical aggression. As expected, intragroup interaction produced more aggression. Ms were more aggressive than Fs, & individual opponents, who could be held accountable for their norm violation, evoked more aggression than group opponents. More variance in the aggressive reactions was explained by Ss' perceptions & experiences in interaction with the experimental conditions than by the experimental treatments alone, stressing the importance of the meaning structure of the situation. 3 Tables, 59 References. AA

88T3524

Ravaud, Jean-Francois & Ville, Isabelle (c/o Ville INSERM U 215 Hôpital Raymond Poincaré, F-92380 Garches France). De la représentation sociale à l'identité des personnes handicapées physiques (From Social Representation to the Identity of Physically Handicapped People), International Journal of Rehabilitation Research/Internationale Zeitschrift für Rehabilitationsforschung/Revue Internationale de Recherches de Réadaptation, 1986, 9, 4, 343-354 (FRE)

† An investigation of the relationship between the social representation of physically disabled people & social identity as expressed by the disabled themselves. In France, 41 physically handicapped adults (confined to wheelchairs) & a control group of 50 nonhandicapped persons were asked to evaluate themselves, using a questionnaire containing pairs of opposite adjectives. The results indicate that, in a general way, the disabled do not perceive themselves as different from the nondisabled; but on certain items there is a clear tendency to see themselves as they are perceived by others. Findings are compared with those of earlier research, which demonstrated a special social representation of physically disabled persons. The problem of the origin of this social representation & its possible impact on the social identity of the handicapped is discussed. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 15 References. Modified HA

88T3525

Ray, J. J. (U New South Wales, Kensington 2033 Australia). Intolerance of Ambiguity among Psychologists: A Comment on Maier and Lavrakas, Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 11-12, June, 559-562. Response, 563

† A critique of R. A. Maier's & P. J. Lavrakas's contention that Ms with rigid personality structures (as measured by high scores on the Calif F-scale) prefer an idealized muscular physique (see "Attitudes toward Women, Personality Rigidity, and Idealized Physique Preferences in

88T3509

Leary, Mark R., Barnes, Byron D., Griebel, Carol, Mason, Eileen & McCormack, Don, Jr. (Dept Psychology Wake Forest U, Winston-Salem NC 27109), The Impact of Conjoint Threats to Social- and Self-Esteem on Evaluation Apprehension, Am Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 4, Dec., 304-311.

¶ The impact of simultaneous threats to social- & self-esteem on evaluation apprehension was investigated in an experiment involving 80 Coll students, who were told they would take a potentially ego-threatening test & that only they, only another individual, both they & the other individual, or no one would see their test scores. Prior to the test, evaluation apprehension was assessed via a questionnaire. Results showed that potential threats to self- & social-esteem both increased apprehension, but only in the absence of the other type of ego threat. Further, the presence of both sources of threat did not produce greater apprehension than either threat alone. Also, Ss who scored low vs high on a measure of academic self-esteem differed in their reactions to social- & self-esteem threats. Results suggest that the effects of conjoint threats to social- & self-esteem are not cumulative. 5 Tables, 31 References. HA

88T3510

Lester, David (Dept Psychology Stockton State Coll, Pomona NJ 08240), Social Deviancy and Suicidal Behavior, Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 127, 3, June, 339-340.

¶ Henry Wechsler's & Thomas F. Pugh's hypothesis that individuals whose social characteristics are relatively uncommon in their communities will have higher rates of psychiatric breakdowns (see SA 16 5/68D2902) is extended to an analysis of suicide. Using data on suicide rates among nonwhites in each state in 1960 (Massey, J. T., "Suicide in the United States, 1950-1964," Vital & Health Statistics, 1967, 20, 5) & US statistics on the proportion of nonwhites in each state during the same year, it is found that the scarcer a particular social group in a community, the higher its rate of suicide. Similar correlations found in previous studies of suicide among immigrant groups & those with marital statuses different from the community norm are examined. Some potential mediating psychological variables that could account for this phenomenon are discussed. 4 References. K. Hyatt

88T3511

Lewis, Gilbert (Dept Social Anthropology U Cambridge, CB1 23F England), Fear of Sorcery and the Problem of Death by Suggestion, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 12, 997-1010.

¶ The role played by fear in the onset of illness &/or death is examined through a discussion of sorcery among the Gnaou of New Guinea. The epistemology of the Gnaou concerning destructive magic is described, & an example of acute public anxiety resulting from an outburst of sorcery (minmin) detailed. Two case studies relating illness to the fear of minmin are provided. While accounts of instantaneous & lingering death resulting from sorcery are prevalent among the Gnaou, researchers are advised to view the claims with more caution than claims of sorcery-related illness. 32 References. Modified HA

88T3512

Macdonald, Michael (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), The Secularization of Suicide in England 1660-1880, Past and Present, 1986, 111, May, 50-100.

¶ Suicide was thought of in medieval England in almost wholly religious terms, but in the present century is thought of largely in secular terms. Both religion & secular law originally condemned it bitterly. From 1660 to 1800, these attitudes changed profoundly. The decisions of coroners & coroners' juries reflected these changes in attitudes. Three phases can be recognized: denial of the crown's claim to the goods of suicides, increasing reliance on the insanity verdict, & finally routinization of this verdict. The laws against self-murder came to be selectively enforced, & PO came to regard suicide tolerantly. Suicide was regarded a moral choice or a reflection of madness, not a sin, popular customs changed as a consequence. 2 Figures, 1 Appendix. W. H. Stoddard

88T3513

Macdonald, Nancy E., Ebert, Patricia D. & Mason, Susan E. (Raymond Walters General & Technical Coll U Cincinnati, OH 45236), Marital Status and Age as Related to Masculine and Feminine Personality Dimensions and Self-Esteem, Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 127, 3, June, 289-298.

¶ The relationships among marital status, gender-role traits, & self-esteem in a sample of 270 US Ms & Fs was investigated using questionnaire data obtained during 1981/82. Divorce was found to be associated with shifts in gender-role identity, leading to greater masculine (i.e., androgynous) personality traits for both sexes. Intact marriages were associated with higher self-esteem & greater masculinity for both sexes & greater femininity for women. Masculinity & femininity both contributed to Fs' self-esteem, but only masculinity was associated with Ms' self-esteem. Comparisons between the present data & those of J. T. Leary & R. L. Helmreich (Masculinity and Femininity: Their Psychological Dimensions, Correlates, and Antecedents, Austin: U of Texas, 1978) suggest the need for more research on gender-role identity & self-esteem in nonacademic adult samples. 1 Table, 14 References. Modified HA

88T3514

Mayfield, Gary Kent (Emory U, Atlanta GA 30322), Social Isolation and Suicide: An Exploratory Analysis of Durkheim's Theory across Three Levels of Aggregation, Dissertation Abstracts International A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1022-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8716126.

88T3515

Mazur, Elizabeth & Oliver, Rose R., Intimacy and Structure: Sex Differences in Imagery of Same-Sex Relationships, Sex Roles, 1987, 11-12, June, 539-558.

¶ Differences in Ms' & Fs' responses to same-sex relationship situations of varying structure, & therefore intimacy potential, were investigated in an experiment involving 75 Coll student volunteers. Ss were divided into 4 gender/structure subgroups & requested to write brief stories in response to 3 written Thematic Apperception Test (TAT) cues describing same-sex relationship situations. Stories were coded for the presence/absence of negative, defused, positive, & neutral imagery, & subjected to detailed content analyses. Results indicate that Ms were more influenced by the potential for same-sex intimacy, & attempted to diffuse perceived challenges to their autonomy by adding other character role & rule restrictions to their stories, particularly in the unstructured situations. An approach-avoidant conflict was evident, reflecting knowledge of relational or dependency needs. Fs responded positively to the unstructured situations, suggesting that they are more comfortable with same-sex intimacy. The finding that they were less comfortable in structured situations indicates that the boundaries that protect Ms' intimacy constrict F intimacy. 7 Tables, 46 References. K. Hyatt

88T3516

Mennell, Stephen (Western European Studies Centre U Exeter, 4QJ England), On the Civilizing of Appetite, Cultural Theory, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 373-403.

¶ Controls over appetite in European society since the Middle Ages appear to have changed, similar to those over bodily functions & in toward violence discussed by Norbert Elias in The Civilizing Process (see IRPS No. 31/83c00199 & 83c00200)—in the direction of more & all-round controls. In the Middle Ages, in all social ranks, there was an oscillating pattern of eating related to the general insecurity of food supplies in particular. Such pressures as there were to control appetite—eg, from the Church, sumptuary laws, & medical opinion—the marks of external constraints rather than self-restraints. The coming of greater self-control over appetite can be seen in the 18th century, in the greater emphasis on delicacy than on quantity of food. The virtue of moderation is increasingly stressed by bourgeois gastronomes in the nineteenth century. The problem & fear of fat gradually spread down the social scale, & slimming became a preoccupation of the popular press in the twentieth century. The incidence of pathological eating disorders, eg, anorexia nervosa & bulimia, appears to be related to changing social standards of control over appetite. 1 Figure, 89 References. AA

88T3517

Palenski, Joseph E. & Launer, Harold M. (c/o Launer—Dept Sociology/Anthropology Seton Hall U, South Orange NJ 07079), "Process" of Running Away: A Redefinition, Adolescence, 1987, 22, 86, summer, 347-362.

¶ Based on data gathered during naturalist field research with 38 young people who came into contact with a large youth advocacy organization in New York City between 1977 & 1979, the designation "runaway" is viewed as a social process. The concept of "career" is utilized to identify where in the overall process young persons see themselves. In general,

88T3535

Sethi, A. S. & Bala, Neeru (Himachal Pradesh U, Simla 171005 India). Relationship between Sex-Role Orientation and Self-Esteem in Indian College Females. ♦ Psychologia, 1983, 26, 2, June, 124-127

* A sex-role inventory & a self-concept inventory were administered to a random sample of 120 Coll Fs in Simla, India, to determine their sex-role orientation (masculine, feminine, or androgynous) & its relation to their self-esteem. Analyses of variance revealed masculine sex-role orientation to be associated with the highest self-esteem, followed by androgynous & feminine orientations. The self-esteem difference was not as marked between masculine & androgynous as between androgynous & feminine Fs. 26 References. Modified HA

88T3536

Sinha, Madhulika & Ojha, Hardeo (Dept Psychology TNB Coll Bhagalpur U, Bihar 812007 India). A Study of Achievement Motivation as Related to Religion and Caste. ♦ Psychologia, 1983, 26, 2, June, 118-123

* Using D. C. McClelland's achievement & motive test (The Achievement Motive, New York: Appleton Century Crofts, 1953), the extent to which M students at Bhagalpur U, Bihar, India, differ in their achievement motive level due to their religious & caste backgrounds is investigated. Test results indicate that Hindu & Muslim Ms do not differ, but Ms of higher caste show a greater achievement motive level than those of lower caste. 3 Tables, 6 References. Modified HA

88T3537

Smith, H. W. (U Missouri, Saint Louis 63121). Structural Changes in Informational Redundancy of Observational Dimensions Due to Treatment Effects. ♦ International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 389-394

* The dimensionality of observational recall accuracy is explored, with focus on three questions: How are perceptual dimensions organized? Is the information in these dimensions redundant or independent? What effect does observational training have on these dimensions? Structure & change of observational accuracy dimensionality are examined using canonical r analysis techniques on data obtained during 3 experiments in which the observational recall accuracy of Ss ($\Sigma N = 242$ students at a midwestern US U) was tested using a Brunst-type test. Results indicate that naive, untrained Ss did not have a fixed stable dimensional structure influencing their recall processes. One-shot observational training modestly "shook up" & structured the observers' focus of attention. Both one-shot & two-shot observational training sessions significantly reorganized perceptions into less redundant, more stable dimensions, modest increases in observer recall accuracy were also noted. These findings are consistent with similar research findings on interviewer training results. 14 References. Modified HA

88T3538

Stevenson, S. J. (Emmanuel Coll U Cambridge, CB2 3AP England). Social and Economic Contributions to the Pattern of 'Suicide' in South-East England, 1530-1590. Continuity and Change, 1987, 2, 2, Aug, 225-262

* In an earlier article (Stevenson, S. J., "The Rise of Suicide Verdicts in South-East England, 1530-1590: The Legal Process," Continuity & Change, 1987, 2, 1), the extent to which defects in the administrative & legal systems of England & Wales influenced the number of recorded verdicts of suicide between 1530 & 1590 was examined. Here, a sociological analysis of suicide is attempted using data from legal records, with focus on three issues: (1) the distribution of suicide risk by age & sex, (2) the exploitation of tensions generated within communities faced with any possible verdict of suicide, & (3) the distribution of suicides between areas of supposedly differing social organization. Taking the rate of apparently accidental drownings into account, the suicide rate among the young exceeded that of the middle-aged; economic reasons are advanced, along with the influence of communal attitudes on the recording of such deaths as accidents rather than suicides. No conclusive evidence was found that suicide varied under different agrarian regimes, though it was highest in areas of lowest population density. Previous theories concerning the effects of the Reformation & urbanization on the suicide rate are revised to include an analysis of the influence of alienation & of psychological & familial factors. 5 Tables, 7 Figures, 1 Appendix. Modified HA

88T3539

Taft, Ronald (Monash U, Clayton Victoria 3168 Australia). Methodological Considerations in the Study of Immigrant Adaptation in Australia. Australian Journal of Psychology, 1986, 38, 3, Dec, 339-346.

† A long-term program of psychological research into the adaptation of immigrants to Australia was begun in Western Australia in the early 1950s. These studies used psychological concepts, such as learning, skills, values, attitudes, & self-concept, to explain the changes that occur in individual immigrants during the process of their resocialization. Use has been made of the normal methodological procedures that are followed in psychological studies, such as statistics, comparisons between groups, including two generations in one family, sampling representativeness, operational definitions, & the use of objective measures of variables. Rather than seeking explanation in terms of a definitive theory, a conceptual framework has been developed for organizing the data in terms of adjustment, national identity, cultural competence, social absorption, & role acculturation so that comparisons can be made between studies of different aspects of adaptation. 1 Figure, 27 References. HA

88T3540

Testa, Ronald J., Kinder, Bill N. & Ironson, Gail (c/o Kinder-Dept Psychology U South Florida, Tampa 33620). Heterosexual Bias in the Perception of Loving Relationships of Gay Males and Lesbians. ♦ U Journal of Sex Research, 1987, 23, 2, May, 163-172

† It was hypothesized that a heterosexual bias would emerge in the perception of loving relationships of gay Ms & lesbians. Specifically, it was predicted that if heterosexual Ss were presented with identical information about a hypothetical heterosexual couple, a lesbian couple, & a gay M couple, the latter two would be perceived more negatively than the former. Questionnaire data were gathered from heterosexual U students ($N = 360$) randomly assigned to 1 of 18 conditions defined by a $3 \times 2 \times 3$ ANOVA experimental design. The factors were: sex & sexual orientation of individuals in the hypothetical couple profile to be read & evaluated, sex of S, & amount of love content in the description of the couple. Analysis of the data confirmed that heterosexual bias existed; & that gay & lesbian couples were perceived as being less satisfied with their relationship & as less in love than heterosexual couples. The implications of these results are discussed as they relate to the generation of self-fulfilling prophecies. 2 Tables, 26 References. Modified HA

88T3541

Triandis, Harry C., Bontempo, Robert, Betancourt, Hector, Bond, Michael, Leung, Kwok, Brenes, Abelardo, Georgas, James, Hui, C. Harry, Marin, Gerardo, Setiadi, Bernadette, Sinha, Jai B. P., Verma, Jyoti, Spangenberg, John, Touzard, Hubert & de Montmollin, Germaine (Dept Psychology U Illinois, Urbana 61820). The Measurement of the Ethic Aspects of Individualism and Collectivism across Cultures. Australian Journal of Psychology, 1986, 38, 3, Dec, 257-267

† One of the major dimensions of cultural variation is allocentrism vs idiocentrism, or collectivism vs individualism (Hofstede, G., Culture's Consequences, Beverly Hills, Calif. Sage, 1980). The possibility of measuring this dimension between cultures is explored. A questionnaire was constructed & administered to samples of adults of both sexes in 9 countries ($\Sigma N = 1,484$)—except in India, where only Ms participated. Four ethic factors were identified by factor analysis: self-reliance with hedonism, separation from ingroups; family integrity; & interdependence & sociability. Rankings are determined for the 9 countries. Theoretical implications of these findings are explored. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 19 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3542

Troiden, Richard R. & Jendrek, Margaret Platt (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Miami U, Oxford OH 45056). Does Sexual Ideology Correlate with Level of Sexual Experience? Assessing the Construct Validity of the SAS. ♦ U Journal of Sex Research, 1987, 23, 2, May, 256-261

† The Sexual Attitude Scale (SAS) developed by W. W. Hudson, G. J. Murphy, & P. A. Nurius ("A Short-Form Scale to Measure Liberal vs. Conservative Orientations toward Human Sexual Expression," Journal of Sex Research, 1983, 19, 258-271) is a measure of sexual ideology—i.e., whether a person has a conservative or liberal orientation toward sexual expression. Using data collected in 1984 from 164 Coll students enrolled in a human sexuality class, the sexual behaviors of Rs scoring as extremely liberal ($N = 40$) were compared with those scoring as extremely conservative ($N = 50$). The relationship between sexual ideology & sexual behavior was examined for 17 behaviors. Results support the validity of the SAS; sexual liberals, whether M or F, were more likely to have experimented with a variety of sexual behaviors than sexual conservatives. 14 References. AA

Males," Sex Roles, 1984, 11, 5-6, 425-433) It is argued that this view of the F-scale as a measure of psychological rigidity or authoritarianism is invalid, & has been discounted by a large body of research. Rather, the F-scale measures a tendency toward holding old-fashioned values. In Response to Ray's "Intolerance of Ambiguity among Psychologists," Richard Maier (Loyola U, Chicago, Ill) accepts this new evidence on the meaning of the F-scale, but adds that Ms generally tend to hold old-fashioned values about sex roles that incline them to be impressed with more muscular M physiques. Nonetheless, the conclusion that personality variables are related to idealized physical preferences is still valid. 38 References. K Hyatt

88T3526

Richards, Cara E. (Transylvania U, Lexington KY 40508), Roles: A Strategy to Avoid Information Overload, ♦ Central Issues in Anthropology, 1987, 7, 1, Apr, 9-12

¶ Materialists have delineated technological & environmental factors that constrain human choices. It is suggested that a known & tested mental factor, information processing, which serves a similar purpose & consequently also plays a role in organizing behavior, be considered in conjunction with these factors to explain human behavior & social organization. The limitations of information processing & the methods used for circumventing those limitations (eg, behavior expectations or roles) provide a framework for human interaction. Combining the interplay of mental & technoenvironmental constraints increases the ability to explain human behavior. 20 References. HA

88T3527

Rigby, K. (South Australian Instit Technology, North Terrace Adelaide 5000 Australia), Orientation toward Authority: Attitudes and Behaviour, Australian Journal of Psychology, 1986, 38, 2, Aug, 153-160.

¶ The extent of attitude-behavior consistency with respect to orientation toward authority was investigated via General Attitude to Institutional Authority Scale (GAIAS) & self-rating scales data & peer ratings collected in 1984 from Australian Coll students & nonstudents (N = 100 each). Consistency between attitudes & behavior was examined by means of correlations between the GAIAS & both single-criterion & multiple-criteria indices derived from peer & self-reported behavior. As predicted, correlations with single-criterion indices tended to be low compared with those obtained using multiple-criteria indices. The latter correlations were moderate to high & provided appropriate validation for the GAIAS. Correlations based on self-reports were significantly higher than those derived from peer ratings. Students were more antiauthority than nonstudents, but were not different with regard to attitude-behavior consistency. 3 Tables, 15 References. Modified HA

88T3528

Roberts, Bruce R., A Confirmatory Factor-Analytic Model of Alienation, U Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 4, Dec, 346-351

¶ A longitudinal second-order confirmatory factor-analytic model of alienation in employed US men, based on Melvin Seeman's original 5-facet conceptualization (see SA 8:1/606922) is developed using interview data from 687 civilian employees collected in 1964 & 1974 (see SA 27:1/79J6909). Alienation appears in this model as a second-order factor that is significantly related to all 5 facets, particularly powerlessness & self-estrangement. Meaninglessness, normlessness, & cultural estrangement are significantly related to the underlying construct, removing its results in a model that fits the data slightly better. Crossnational comparisons using cross-sectional data from Poland & Japan (see SA 30:3/82M3406 & SA 33:2/85O6119) confirm the generalizability of this model. However, the magnitudes of the relationships of both normlessness & cultural estrangement to the second-order factor are somewhat different for Japan than for the US & Poland. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 23 References. HA

88T3529

Robinson, Chris J. (U Notre Dame, IN 46556), Selfhood in Complex Organizations: A Critical Approach to Corporate Identity, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 750-A-751-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712953.

88T3530

Robinson, Kathryn (Dept Anthropology & Comparative Sociology Macquarie U, North Ryde New South Wales 2113 Australia), Step- children in Their Own Land: Class and Identity in an Indonesian Corporate Town, ♦ U Mankind, 1986, 16, 2, Aug, 85-98.

¶ The people of a Ru village in South Sulawesi, Indonesia, have been incorporated into a modern town that grew up as a consequence of the establishment of a foreign-owned nickel mining & processing facility. assertion of ethnic identity by the indigenous population of the village examined in the context of the changes in their social & economic milieu. Soroakan identity is examined as a response to the oppression arising from the basis of capitalist SC relations. Because of the apparent fit between the status hierarchy derived from the company's manpower structure & a hierarchy of racial & ethnic groups, the Soroakan people identify & ethnic group relations, rather than the capitalist rationality of the company, as the cause of their felt dispossession. 20 References. H.

88T3531

Rotimi, Adewale (North Texas State U, Denton 76204), Retrospective Participant Observation on Driving and Car Ownership in Nigeria, U International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 395-406

¶ Participant observation is used to analyze car ownership & driving, Nigeria from the point of view of symbolic interaction, with particular emphasis on identity-based interaction & deference. The size, model make of a car sometimes affect the interaction between the person who drives it & drivers of other vehicles. In Nigeria, car ownership or mere act of driving is a status symbol, more so than occupation or place of residence. A car can also be an object of ornamentation or even used as a religious symbol. The general impact of car ownership on the overall social structure is immense: it has affected recreation & shopping habits, created jobs, led to traffic jams, increased the crime rate (car theft & robbery), & led to new social arrangements in the family, especially where both husbands & wives own cars & enjoy relative freedom of movement. 13 References. Modified HA

88T3532

Ryckaert, Magdalena, De controle over woede en agressief gedrag: rol van cognitieve factoren (The Control of Anger and Aggressive Behavior: The Role of Cognitive Factors), ♦ Tijdschrift voor Sociale Wetenschappen, 1987, 32, 3, July-Sept, 282-301 (DUT)

¶ One of the main assumptions of cognitive psychology is that the human organism is not a passive recipient of life events but actively constructs its environment, intervening between stimulus input & response output via selective control over cognitive processes. Individual differences in control of anger & aggressive behavior are a function of the situation, stimuli, & variables controlling the way that these are represented in mind of the individual. Drawing on R. W. Novaco's anger model ("Functions and Regulations of the Arousal of Anger," American Journal of Psychiatry, 1976, 133, 10, 1124-1128) & research from the literature on cognitive psychology & information processing, the development of internal cognitive structures & processes that mediate between external events & behavioral/emotional reactions is described. 2 Figures, 51 References. Modified HA

88T3533

Schantz, Donna Buchanan (Portland State U, OR 97207), Analysis of Problemsolving Groups with Feedback Intervention Using a Systematic Multiple Level Observation of Groups, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, Aug, 488-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711932.

88T3534

Schwalbe, Michael L. (North Carolina State U, Raleigh 27650), Practical and Discursive Self-Knowledge, ♦ Humanity & Society, 1987, 11, 3, Aug, 366-384.

¶ The distinction between tacit or practical knowledge & articulate discursive knowledge is applied to knowledge about the self. The implication is that people know more about themselves than they can say—that practical self-knowledge always exceeds discursive self-knowledge. Social-psychological research that fails to recognize this is misled in its attempts to study the self, since discursive self-knowledge is mistaken self-knowledge in toto. Social scientists who study the self must therefore seek to understand the limits on self-knowledge that are imposed by people's abilities to symbolize experience & by the social conditions that inhibit development of symbolizing abilities. 33 References. AA an & indigenous students ($\Sigma N = 87$) of above average, average, & below average family incomes. The data were subjected to a series of canonical discriminant analyses demonstrating the separate & interactive effects of the three factors under study. The complex configuration of value structures that emerged was comparatively discussed in terms of the social contexts in which they were embedded & their significance highlighted for cross-national investigations in this area. 1 Table, 5 Figures, 35 References. HA

88T3551

Zayas, Luis H. (School Social Work Columbia U, New York NY 10025), Psychodynamic and Developmental Aspects of Expectant and New Fatherhood: Clinical Derivatives from the Literature, IM Clinical Social Work Journal, 1987, 15, 1, spring, 8-21

* Expectant & new fatherhood has received increasing attention in the literature. During this major adult transitional period, earlier developmental conflicts are reactivated. These in turn influence adaptation to current life processes, consistent with psychoanalytic theory. Three major psychodynamic & developmental findings that repeatedly emerge in the literature—re-aroused sibling rivalry, intensified dependency needs, & reawakened oedipal conflicts—are delineated. Less prominent psychosocial manifestations reported in the literature are also identified & discussed. Knowledge of the psychodynamic & developmental issues of this life transition is helpful to clinicians. 43 References. HA

88T3552

Zolch, Martina & Peters, Michael (Schinkestr 8-9, D-1000 Berlin 44 Federal Republic Germany), Arbeit und Persönlichkeitsentwicklung in Alternativbetrieben (Work and Development of Personality in Employee-Run Firms in the Alternative Economy), Zeitschrift für Sozialisationsforschung und Erziehungssoziologie, 1987, 7, 4, Oct, 303-307 (GER)

* An examination of the individual & collective learning processes of workers in employee-run firms, focusing on motivational structure & acquired action competencies. Qualitative analysis of structured interviews conducted with 15 persons at 5 different firms (2 bakeries, a restaurant, a dentist's practice, & a grocery) in Berlin, West Germany, indicates that in conditions of high decision-making latitude, action demands, cooperation, & social communication, employees gained extended action competencies. The impact of increased employee workplace participation on the relationship between work & leisure time is also discussed. Modified AA

88T3553

———, Comments on "Jensenism and Interracial Peace: A Multidisciplinary Essay on Intercultural Synthesis", International Journal of World Peace, 1987, 4, 2, Apr-June, 30-32, 39-58, 60-62. Rejoinder, 63-80

† In Bardis on Jensenism and Peace, Henry O. Thompson (7 University Mews, Philadelphia, Pa 19104) comments on Panos D. Bardis's discussion (see abstract in this issue) of problems in Arthur R. Jensen's thesis (see SA 34 5/86Q9487) that certain nonwhite minorities have lower levels of intelligence than whites. There are several grounds for mistrusting Jensen's conclusions: the wide range of error (plus or minus 15 points) on intelligence tests, the low scores of culturally deprived Ss relative to their true scores, & the questionability of both race & intelligence as concepts. Further research is needed in this area to arrive at valid conclusions. Surya K. Parmanand (Law Faculty, U of Venda, South Africa) welcomes Bardis's questioning of Jensen's conclusions, while noting that Jensen is neither fascist nor racist. Edward Gobetz (Sociology Dept, Kent State U, Willoughby Hills, Ohio) sees Jensen's conclusions as a return to the discredited racism of such writers as A. J. de Gobineau & H. S. Chamberlain, & offers scientific, professional, & ethical grounds for rejecting Jensen's views. José M. R. Delgado (Centro de Estudios Neurobiológicos, Caleruega 29, E-28033 Madrid Spain) presents evidence for the transracial structuring of the brain & anticipates that Jensen's future research will invalidate his earlier conclusions. Dominic Milazi (U of Bophuthatswana, Mafikeng Bophuthatswana, South Africa) concedes that physical, chemical, & biological factors affect human behavior, but emphasizes the social structuring of all human behavior. The inappropriateness of attempting to ban Jensen's research, which Bardis argues, is supported. In Jensen and the Monocritics: A Rejoinder Panos D. Bardis (U of Toledo, Ohio) responds to these critical comments, emphasizing the need to avoid one-sided criticism & to make use of scientific data in solving social problems. The equality of all races implies that Jensen's own research will ultimately lead him to reject his belief in racial differences. W. H. Stoddard

22 leadership

No Abstracts In This Issue

64 deviance

88T3554

Brownfield, David H. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907), A Reassessment of Cultural Deviance Theory: The Use of Underclass Measures, IM Deviant Behavior, 1987, 8, 4, 343-359

* A reassessment of Walter Miller's version of cultural deviance theory (see SA 9 3/61A0294) utilizing underclass measures to define the subculture. Previous research has ignored the potential of underclass measures such as unemployment & welfare status, despite evidence suggesting that such measures are strongly correlated with delinquency. Analysis of questionnaire data from a sample of 1,500+ white M. junior & senior high school students in western Contra Costa County, Calif, yields results that are for the most part consistent with Miller's theory. It is found that a number of indicators of subcultural focal concerns are significantly associated with underclass membership & with delinquent behavior. However, tests of the socialization process notions implicit in delinquency theories yield results more consistent with social control theory than with cultural deviance theory. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 24 References. Modified HA

88T3555

Case, Carole (Dept Sociology & Anthropology New Mexico State U, Las Cruces 88003), Deviance as a Rational Response: Disguise, Deceit, and Conspiracy among Racehorse Trainers, IM Deviant Behavior, 1987, 8, 4, 329-342

* A revised version of SA 33 5/85S17221/ASA/1985/3840

88T3556

Kivirauma, Joel & Kivinen, Osmo (Kasvatustieteiden laitos, Lemminkäisenkatu 1 SF-00530 Turku Finland), Sukupuolen ja poikkeavuuden yhteiskunnalliset ja kulttuuriset luokitukset koulussa (Social and Cultural Labeling of Deviance and Gender in School). Kasvatus, 1986, 17, 5, 380-394 (FIN)

† A review of research findings on sex differences in education shows that boys typically appear active & self-assured while girls appear adaptable & accommodating. Girls' better academic achievement, based on their good behavior, conscientiousness, & stereotyped learning, does not help them to achieve power & success after school. Deviance classifications are applied more often to boys than to girls, though as special education increased after the late 1960s, the proportion of girls went up con-

88T3543

van Stolk, Bram & Wouters, Cas (Keizersgracht 211, NL-1016 DT Amsterdam Netherlands), Power Changes and Self-Respect: A Comparison of Two Cases of Established-Outsider Relations. ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 477-488

¶ Based on two earlier empirical studies of outsiders in an emancipation process ((1) van Stolk, Bram, & de Regt, Jose, "Zelfaanvaarding van homoseksuelen" (Self Acceptance of Homosexuals), Maandblad Gestelijke Volksgezondheid, 1 (Journal of Public Mental Health, 1), 1979, & (2) van Stolk, Bram, & Wouters, Cas, Vrouwen in Tweestrijd (Women in Inward Conflict), Deventer, 1983), changes in the relationship between men & women are compared to those between heterosexuals & homosexuals, focusing on changes in the situations of women & homosexuals with regard to their mutual balance of power, the respect shown them socially, & their self respect. The sense of inferiority felt by women & homosexuals is understood primarily in the context of fluctuating power relations: it has diminished together with the power inequalities between them & their respective established groups. Three issues are discussed: (1) Homosexuals & women acquire their group identity in a different way, ie, women are brought up as women, & homosexuals as heterosexuals (2) Men & women are more dependent on each other in that they perform particular social functions for each other, therefore the power inequalities between them can never be as great as those between heterosexuals & homosexuals (3) In the mutual balance of power between men & women, a figurational ideal of harmonious inequality developed, which did not develop between heterosexuals & homosexuals. This difference is elaborated on & connected to difficulties in the respective liberation processes of women & homosexuals. 11 References. Modified AA

88T3544

Van Lear, C. Arthur, Jr. (Dept Communication U Wisconsin, Milwaukee 53201), The Formation of Social Relationships: A Longitudinal Study of Social Penetration. ♦ Human Communication Research, 1987, 13, 3, spring, 299-322

¶ Three levels of self-disclosure public, semiprivate, & private-personal in the social penetration process are investigated, with focus on: (1) the nature of changes in the three levels of disclosure over time; (2) whether self-disclosure is reciprocated at the three levels of intimacy, & (3) whether reciprocity varies over time & if so, how. A repeated-observation, longitudinal approach was used to analyze interactions between same-sex dyads with no previous acquaintance (N = 7 dyads of students from 2 US Us) who met for half-hour conversations over a 6-week period. Polynomial trend & Markov analyses were used to analyze the data. The results show: (A) a convex quadratic trend for private-personal disclosures over time, (B) reciprocity at the same level of intimacy as an interactional norm (especially at the beginning & end of the relationship), & (C) a cyclical fluctuating of reciprocal interacts over time. Results are interpreted as elaborating some temporal & processual norms of self-disclosure in the social penetration process. 3 Tables, 72 References. Modified HA

88T3545

Verma, Jyoti (U Patna, 800005 Bihar State India), The Ingroup and Its Relevance to Individual Behaviour: A Study of Collectivism and Individualism. ♦ Psychologia, 1985, 28, 3, Sept, 173-181.

¶ An empirical measure for analyzing individualism & collectivism is tested using a cross-cultural sample of 52 M Indian students at Patna U & 75 M & F students at the U of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign. Ss completed a grid designed to measure how the views of others from "choice" (eg, friends) & "no-choice" (eg, family) ingroups influence one's behavior or decisions. Although some differences related to collectivism & individualism between the US & Indian samples are revealed, it is concluded that the grid is not a suitable measurement instrument for this construct because of the different meanings of ingroups in the two societies. 5 Tables, 6 References. Modified HA

88T3546

Vowinkel, Gerhard (U Bundeswehr, D-2000 Hamburg 70 Federal Republic Germany), Command or Refine? Cultural Patterns of Cognitively Organizing Emotions. ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 489-514.

¶ Cultural bodies of knowledge used by the European Ucs since the Middle Ages in order to make their emotions & emotional displays consistent with the exigencies of social life are described relying on diverse writings on man, manners, morals & society. Norbert Elias's hypothesis, in The Civilizing Process (see IRPS No 31/83c00199 & 83c00200), that the bodily expression of affects was more & more strictly controlled & repressed is not confirmed due to insufficiently valid indicators; however, the changing moral assessment of emotional sincerity or dissimulation proves to be an important indicator for thoroughly different modes of sociomoral thought. It is demonstrated that, as to psychological acumen & behavioral rationality, the seventeenth century's "political prudence" is equally superior to the thirteenth century's "knightly" & the late eighteenth century's "civil" virtue. It is suggested that this superiority in sociomoral reasoning developed while coping with the fundamental erosion of social structure, & hence of moral consensus, in the process of state formation. By comparison the higher structural & moral stability of both intact feudal societies & settled nation-states prescribe modes of behavioral control that are less efficient intellectually but more deeply ingrained in feelings. The advantageous & destructive aspects of sentimental morals within modern societies are also discussed. 50 References. Modified AA

88T3547

Williamson, C. (Dept Philosophy University Coll Swansea, Singleton Park SA2 8PP Wales), Prejudices and Generalisations. ♦ International Journal of Moral and Social Studies, 1987, 2, 2, summer, 95-104

¶ Flaws in the view of prejudice as tied to generalization are identified. Specifically, addressed are the notions that: prejudices are generalizations, the stereotypes on which prejudices are based are generalizations, & all concepts are generalizations, in which case the concepts of racism & sexism are regarded as typical of all thinking. This last idea, which is metaphysical rather than scientific, buttresses the view that there is a natural propensity to prejudice, which results in the transference of blame from actual people to human nature. Modified HA

88T3548

Wouters, Cas (Hogeweg 8, NL-1098 CB Amsterdam Netherlands), Formalization of Informalization in the Netherlands, 1930-85. ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 405-427

¶ Changes in dominant behavioral codes & ideals, particularly involving relationships between the sexes, are noted in the course of a comparative analysis of etiquette books published in the Netherlands from 1930 to 1985. Although no books on this subject were published during 1966-1979, an upsurge of books on liberation & self-realization, coupled with a relative loosening of behavioral codes & ideals, occurred. A spurt in the development from M protection toward F self-protection is documented together with a rise in the level of mutually expected self-restraints. Since the start of the 1980s, there appears to have been a tightening of behavioral codes & ideals, both in terms of relationships between men & women, & in general. These changes are presented as developments of informalization & formalization, ie, phases in civilizing processes. It is concluded that the current (re)formalization of preceding informalization represents a stage in a long-term process of informalization. 17 References. AA

88T3549

Wyatt, Thomas A. (Dept Philosophy/Psychology U Papua New Guinea, Waigani), Quality of Consciousness: The Human Experience. ♦ Psychologia, 1986, 29, 3, Sept, 186-195

¶ An exploration of the living experience-consciousness—that characterizes the human condition. Viewing humanness as separateness, the birth & development of the sense of "I" is discussed, & Western & Eastern viewpoints regarding the conceptual & nonconceptual modes of knowing are juxtaposed, including the mystical, social, psychological, & physiological or drug perspectives. Both dual & nondual levels of consciousness are acknowledged & accepted as necessary aspects of the human condition. Different approaches to altering consciousness are examined. 29 References. Modified HA

88T3550

Young, Louis, Louw-Potgieter, John & Giles, Howard (U Bristol BS8 1HH England), Values as a Function of Ethnicity and Socio-Economic Status: A Cross-National Study. ♦ Journal of Multilingual and Multicultural Development, 1986, 7, 4, 253-267.

¶ An examination of the interactive roles of geographical/sociopolitical context, ethnicity, & SES on values structures in South Africa & Britain. A modified version of the Rokeach Value Survey was administered to South African Indian & English-speaking students (Σ N = 86) of above average & average family income backgrounds & to British Indi types of interpersonal situations; gesture may exist autonomously of speech or relate to what is being said in a variety of ways. It is argued that the study of gesture can provide insight into the nature of thought, the mental representation of knowledge, the production of utterances, & the codification processes by which formal properties of language become established. 78 References. K Hyatt

88T3564

Mooney, Linda A. & Brabant, Sarah (c/o Brabant-Dept Sociology & Anthropology U Southwestern Louisiana, Lafayette 70504-0198). Deviance, Deference, and Demeanor: Birthday Cards as Ceremonial Tokens. In Deviant Behavior, 1987, 8, 4, 377-388.

† The incidence of deviant messages & images in one of the most widely used modes of personal communication—birthday cards—is investigated using a sample of 535 birthday cards randomly selected from 14 retail outlets in Lafayette, La. Each outlet represented a geographically distinct high-traffic area varying in type of establishment (discount, drug, dime, department, grocery, & card stores) & SE level of the community. Both the incidence & type of deviance, the characteristics of cards in which deviance is represented, & the characteristics of the sender/receiver population are discussed within the context of Erving Goffman's concept of ceremonial activity (Interaction Rituals, New York: Aldine Publishing, 1967). 25 References. HA

88T3565

Schwarz, Dieter (Institut Soziologie U Erlangen-Nürnberg, D-8520 Federal Republic Germany). Thanato(sozio)logie? Zur Alltäglichkeit des Exzeptionellen (Thanato(socio)logy? On the Everyday Nature of the Exceptional). Soziologische Revue, 1987, 10, 4, Oct, 388-393. (GER)

† A review essay on 4 books by: (1) Gerhard Schmied, Sterben und Trauern in der modernen Gesellschaft ((Death and Mourning in Modern Society), Opladen: Leske & Budrich, 1985), (2) Heike Schnoor & Katarina Sendzik, Die Bedeutung des Todes für das Bewusstsein vom Leben: Ansätze in Psychologie, Soziologie und Philosophie ((The Meaning of Death for the Consciousness of Life. Approaches in Psychology, Sociology, and Philosophy), Frankfurt: Campus, 1986), (3) Dorothea Sich, Horst H. Figge, & Paul Hinderling (Eds), Sterben und Tod: Eine kulturvergleichende Analyse. Verhandlungen der 7. Int. Fachkonferenz Ethnomedizin ((Death and Dying: A Culture-Comparative Analysis: Proceedings of the Seventh International Conference on Ethnomedicine), Braunschweig/Wiesbaden: Vieweg, 1986); & (4) Hannes Stubbe, Formen der Trauer. Eine kulturanthropologische Untersuchung ((Forms of Mourning: A Cultural-Anthropological Investigation), Berlin: Reimer, 1985 (see listings in IRPS No. 42)). All deal with sociocultural aspects of death & mourning. The question of the determination of the moment of death, made particularly relevant by modern medical technology, is discussed by several authors. Many of these works are affected by problems of terminology & the dangers of superficial cultural criticism & excessive use of literary quotations. (1) Schmied's readable book examines demographic as well as sociological aspects of the process of dying. (2) Schnoor & Sendzik investigate the relationship between consciousness of death & that of life. They bring together approaches from many disciplines in a fruitful way. (3) Sich, Figge, & Hinderling have carefully documented the proceedings of a conference on ethnomedicine. A preface to their book by Christian von Ferber confronts the problem of transforming scientific knowledge into practical action. (4) Stubbe attempts to avoid cultural bias in describing forms of mourning, & treats mourning as a social fact. The book contains an encyclopedic breadth of material but its ideas are not thoroughly worked out. C. Waters

88T3566

Shenkar, Oded & Ronen, Simcha (Tel-Aviv U, Ramat Aviv 69978 Israel). The Cultural Context of Negotiations: The Implications of Chinese Interpersonal Norms. The Journal of Applied Behavioral Science, 1987, 23, 2, May, 263-275.

† Distinctive characteristics of Chinese negotiating behavior as compared to that typical of the US are discussed. Confucian philosophy continues to provide the foundation of Chinese cultural traditions & values, with the tenets of harmony, hierarchy, developing one's moral potential, & kinship affiliation having relevance for interpersonal behavior. An analysis of three key interpersonal norms illustrates the impact of culture on the negotiation process: emotional restraint & politeness as basic to communication; an emphasis on social obligations; & the interrelationship of the life domains of work, family, & friendship. Recommendations are offered for preparing, conducting, & concluding negotiations with Chinese persons. 45 References. HA

88T3567

Thomas, David R. (U Waikato, Hamilton New Zealand). Culture and Ethnicity: Maintaining the Distinction. Australian Journal of Psychology, 1986, 38, 3, Dec, 371-380.

† Research studies that make comparisons between different ethnic groups frequently assume that cultural patterns coincide with ethnic categories. This assumption often leads to a reliance on cultural explanations for any differences found between ethnic groups. Such explanations may be erroneous in multiethnic societies, unless the extent to which members of a particular ethnic group are competent in the language & cultural practices of that ethnic group is assessed. Comparisons of Maori & Pakeha (European) groups in New Zealand, based on test responses from, & other data on, primary school children in Waikato, New Zealand, in 1982 & 1983 (N = 214 & 306, respectively), illustrate the importance of the distinction between ethnicity & culture. Results are presented which indicate that Maori children with some knowledge of Maori language & culture have higher scores on achievement tests than those who have little or no knowledge of Maori culture. Possible reasons for these results are discussed. 3 Tables, 22 References. Modified HA siderably. Girls classified deviant by the school & by child guidance clinics did not differ from similar boys with regard to parental SS or personality or negative attitudes toward school & teachers. Differences were evident, though, in attitudes to peers, irregular school attendance, outward behavior, & academic achievement. SC, however, determines academic & social success even more strongly than does cultural classification of sex & deviance. 4 Tables, 3 Figures, 28 References. Modified HA

88T3557

Walsh, Anthony (Dept Sociology Boise State U, ID 83725), Becoming "Normal": Applying Differential Association Theory to the Renunciation of Tribal Stigma, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1986, 23, 1-2, Jan-Apr, 87-111

¶ Differential association theory attempts to explain the acquisition of a deviant identity via the priority, frequency, duration, & intensity of association with individuals holding an excess of definitions favoring law violation. Here, the renunciation of a deviant identity, that of immigrant is explored using the insights of differential association theory. Immigrants are considered deviant in the sense that they are marked by Erving Goffman's "tribal stigma" (Stigma, Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, 1963). The formal renunciation of that stigma is achieved legally when the immigrant takes US citizenship. A multiple regression model applied to demographic data, & data from a scale designed to measure association with individuals holding mainstream US values gathered from immigrants (N = 137) in Toledo, Ohio, found that scores on the scale were the most powerful predictor of taking citizenship, followed by number of years in US, national origin of spouse, national origin of self, church attendance, & anomie. Overall, the model strongly supports the basic tenets of differential association theory: having intense associations with "normal" role models, such as an American spouse & American church members, the duration of these associations, & possessing a excess of definitions favorable to cultural normalcy all have significant independent effects on the taking of US citizenship. 6 Tables. Modified AA

73 social interaction/everyday life

88T3558

Carucci, Laurence Marshall (Montana State U, Bozeman 59717), Sly Moves: Ritual Movements in Marshallese Culture, Semiotica, 1986, 62, 1-2, 165-177

¶ A discussion of the significance of ritual movement sequences in the lengthy Marshall Islands celebration of Kürimōj (Christmas), focusing on enactments of the motions of Etao, a series of sexually suggestive actions that seem unsuited to the celebration of the birth of Christ. However, these ritual movements are shown to be signifiers that take on meaning in their context of use, i.e., the stories of Etao & those of the birth & life of Christ, in which the ability to control renewal & regeneration on earth are perceived to be similar. The sexually explicit portrayals of Etao recreate these primordial acts as a way to empower living humans & re-infuse earth with life-giving force. It is suggested that movement sequences & nonverbal patterns should not concentrate on metaphorical parallels with the formal features of structural linguistics. The assumption that postures of movements mean certain things is equally misleading. Various motion sequences can be analyzed more fruitfully in relation to the context of use of that set of signifiers, that context is always relative, not only a particular culture but to a certain historical circumstance. The ability to impute relevant meaning derives from a knowledge of how to situate a performance within that social & historical whole. 1 Figure, 14 References. AA

88T3559

Creider, Chet A. (U Western Ontario, London N6A 3K7), Interlanguage Comparisons in the Study of the Interactional Use of Gesture: Progress and Prospects, Semiotica, 1986, 62, 1-2, 147-163

¶ Work on a cross-linguistic study of the interactional use of body movement is presented. Data are drawn from analysis of spontaneous conversation samples from speakers of Kipsigis & Luo (Nilo-Saharan), Samburu (Nilotic), Gushi & Swahili (Bantu), & Inuktitut (Eskimo-Aleut). All the African languages make extensive use of hand movements to mark elements of verbal behavior, although these movements differ in style. The differences appear to be conditioned by differences in the use of stress in the prosodic system of the various languages. The Inuktitut show an almost total absence of regular body movement accompanying speech. 17 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T3560

Gershuny, Jonathan (Dept Sociology U Bath, Claverton Down BA2 7AY England), Daily Life, Economic Structure and Technical Change, International Social Science Journal, 1987, 39, 3(113), Aug, 337-352

¶ The issue of the impact of technology on employment & daily life is used to demonstrate an interdisciplinary approach to an economic problem. Economists view the development of new markets as a response to the development of new products. However, for a new product to create a new market, consumers (individuals, households, or communities) must first find a use for the product in their daily lives. The theoretical solution is a time-based SE account of work, household, & consumption activities. This approach is illustrated by data from a UK time budget survey (see SA 35:4/87R7529). The results show: (1) a shift away from time spent on basic (food, shelter, etc) needs to more sophisticated activity (education, leisure, etc), (2) a shift from manual to white-collar work, & less time spent on household tasks. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 3 Photographs. 25 References. D. Graves

88T3561

Goodwin, Charles (U South Carolina, Columbia 29208), Gestures: A Resource for the Organization of Mutual Orientation, Semiotica, 1986, 62, 1-2, 29-49

¶ Based on analysis of videotapes of conversations recorded in a range of natural settings in the US, it is argued that gestures are not simply symbols, entities for carrying meaning about something else, but physical actions with their own distinct properties, e.g., they occur at specific moments in time & at particular points in space. As a type of action, gesture can tie together the behavior of separate individuals, e.g., a speaker & hearer, & make relevant a form of recipient response that is quite different socially from that which is given to some other types of body movement such as self-grooming. Moreover, gestures emerge within recognizable activities, such as conversation, & partially because of this, they become socially organized. Indeed, gesture provides a resource for negotiating features of the moment-by-moment organization of the interactive processes within which it emerges. In brief, gesture is not simply a way to display meaning, but an activity with distinctive temporal, spatial, & social properties that participants not only recognize, but actively use in the organization of their interaction. 1 Figure, 16 References. Modified AA

88T3562

Goodwin, Marjorie Harness & Goodwin, Charles (U South Carolina, Columbia 29208), Gestures and Coparticipation in the Activity of Searching for a Word, Semiotica, 1986, 62, 1-2, 51-75.

¶ In the study of human behavior, the phenomenon of analytic interest is often divorced from the local circumstances of its production; e.g., gesture is commonly investigated as a signal isolated from its interactive context. Here, videotapes of conversations recorded in a variety of natural settings in the US are used to analyze gesture, focusing on its organization within specific instances of a particular activity—searching for a word. Understanding the meaning of a particular gesture involves more than passively listening to talk. In order to participate in the field of action within which an utterance functions, participants must attend to a range of resources—including gaze, body movement, facial displays, involvement or noninvolvement in concurrent activities—as well as the detailed structure of the talk itself. By investigating gesture within particular events it is possible to study in some detail not only how participants find it to be meaningful but also how they use that meaningfulness as a constitutive feature of the social organization of the activities they are engaged in. 23 References. Modified AA

88T3563

Kendon, Adam, Some Reasons for Studying Gesture, Semiotica, 1986, 62, 1-2, 3-28

¶ Research on nonverbal communication, psychology, & linguistic science has generally ignored the role of gesture in human communication. Gesture is defined not as a unitary phenomenon, but as a wide range of actions that differ relative to communication communities, cultures, &

0400 group interactions

10 interaction between (large) groups (race relations, ethnicity, & inter-ethnic relations)

88T3568

An-Na'im, Abdullahi Ahmed (Faculty Law U Khartoum, Sudan), Religious Minorities under Islamic Law and the Limits of Cultural Relativism, U Human Rights Quarterly, 1987, 9, 1, Feb, 1-18

* The international human rights movement has succeeded in establishing universal human rights standards for religious minorities based on moral as well as pragmatic arguments. Modern Muslim countries have had to participate in the formulation & adoption of these standards at the regional & national as well as international levels. However, extremely serious tensions exist between these standards & Muslim historic religious law—Shari'ah. Muslims cannot, & should not be allowed to, justify discrimination against & persecution of non-Muslims on the basis of Islamic cultural norms, however, the cultural relativist position can be adapted to shape attitudes & inform policy regarding fundamental human rights. A reform methodology for reconciling Shari'ah with the full human rights of religious minorities is summarized. Modified AA

88T3569

August, Thomas (Dept History U West Indies, Mona Kingston 7 Jamaica), Jewish Assimilation and the Plural Society in Jamaica, U Social and Economic Studies, 1987, 36, 2, June, 109-122

* Before 1870, Jews in Jamaica were a distinct "off-white" social group who, along with whites, browns, & blacks, formed the building blocks of Jamaican cultural pluralism. Although traditionally identified by scholars as white, Jews followed institutional norms that were culturally incompatible with those of the other three social groups; also, Jews played a disproportionately important role in Jamaican history, separate from the white population. Judgments strictly along color lines became easier after the 1865 rebellion & the introduction of Crown Colony government. Between 1870 & 1914 a transformation occurred in which Jews gradually merged with the white U. By the 1920s & 1930s, Jamaica had completed the shift from cultural to ethnic pluralism in the terminology of M. G. Smith (The Plural Society in the British West Indies, Berkeley & Los Angeles, 1965)—& would shortly experience deppluralization. 18 References. Modified HA

88T3570

Bardis, Panos D. (U Toledo, OH 43606), Jensenism and Interracial Peace: A Multidisciplinary Essay on Intercultural Synthesis, U International Journal of World Peace, 1987, 4, 1, Jan-Mar, 77-104.

* A multidisciplinary & cross-cultural evaluation of Arthur Jensen's recent work ("The Nature of Black-White Difference on Various Psychometric Tests: Spearman's Hypothesis," The Behavioral and Brain Sciences, no other publication information given) dealing with Charles Edward Spearman's hypothesis ("General Intelligence," American Journal of Psychology, 1904, 15, 201-292) concerning racial inequality & its social implications in the sphere of interracial conflict & peace. Scientific arguments are borrowed mainly from anthropology, biology, education, history, philosophy, psychology, religion, sociobiology, & sociology. The discussion is based on four concepts—peace, race, intelligence, & synthesis—whose chief aspects are examined in detail. The main conclusions are that: Jensen has not proved that blacks are genetically inferior; all races are potentially equal, & an objective observer would be attracted about equally by Jensen's right to continue his research & by the blacks' right to be protected against studies with deleterious social implications. Modified AA

88T3571

Berdichewsky, Bernardo (Dept Anthropology Capilano Coll, North Vancouver British Columbia), Del indigenismo a la indianidad y el surgimiento de una ideología indígena en Andinoamérica (From Indigenism to "Indianity" and the Emergence of an Indian Ideology in Andean America), U América Indígena, 1986, 46, 4, Oct-Dec, 643-658. (SPA)

* An analysis of the ideological shift that has occurred recently in Latin America, especially in the Andean countries, from indigenismo (indigenism) to what is referred to as indianidad ("Indianity"). Indigenismo is rooted in the liberal, progressive, Mc outlook that postulates the integration & assimilation of the Indians within the national society. Indianidad is the result of the growing presence & participation of the Indian peoples in the SE system of contemporary nations on the American continent. It contains an active community ideology, which is defined as "nondialectic" & is found within the Indian cosmic concept of organic materialism; it is also characterized by cultural revitalization. Modified HA

88T3572

Boyd, Derrick A. C. (Dept Economics U West Indies, Mona Kingston 7 Jamaica), The Historical Materialist-Symbolist Theory of Race Discrimination, U Social and Economic Studies, 1987, 36, 2, June, 123-143

* Contrasts are drawn between the approaches to racial discrimination typical of neoclassical economics where it is regarded as an expression of individual preferences & of dual labor market theory where it is seen as a strategy of capitalist domination over the Wc. It is argued that the holistic nature of racism must be considered to understand the effects of discriminatory relations. The historical materialist-symbolist theory, which interprets racial discrimination in terms of the function of symbols in power relations, offers such an understanding of racism. The operation of racial groups is a special case of the functioning of SC in social & economic relations. This view allows a theoretical explanation of the incidence of discrimination. 30 References. Modified HA

88T3573

Casas, J. Manuel, Ponterotto, Joseph G. & Sweeney, Michael (Graduate School Education U California, Santa Barbara 93106), Stereotyping the Stereotyper: A Mexican American Perspective, U Journal of Cross-Cultural Psychology, 1987, 18, 1, Mar, 45-57.

* A total of 28 Spanish-speaking & 17 English-speaking Mexican-American couples from low-income neighborhoods in Santa Barbara, Calif, were interviewed to assess their perceptions of the stereotypes they believed ascribed to them by Anglo-Americans. Additionally, the degree of the Rs' perceptions was examined as a function of R gender, level of education, language spoken, & ethnic self-identification. In general, the Rs perceived the stereotypes ascribed to them by Anglo-Americans to be negative. The variable "education" was found to distinguish significantly Rs' perceptions of Anglo stereotypes toward Mexican Americans, with the less educated Rs perceiving themselves to be more negatively stereotyped by the larger Anglo society. Directions for future research are suggested. 1 Table, 25 References. HA

88T3574

Cazares, Ralph B. (Washington State U, Pullman 99164), A Generational Analysis of Chicano Inter-marriage in California, U Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 485-A-486-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711980.

88T3575

Chetcuti, Joseph, Maltese Communities & Communal Identity: Fragmentation of an Ethnic Minority in Australia, Journal of Intercultural Studies, 1986, 7, 2, 52-79

* A discussion of the ethnic dimension of Maltese communal life in Australia, based on previously published data. Community life is assessed in terms of three main functions of communal identity in Malta—religion, language, & politics. The effect of three important institutions—the settlement, associations, & family—is also evaluated in terms of the mobilization of communal life in Australia. Results indicate that the wider Maltese community in Australia does not attribute great significance to sources of communal identity thought important in Malta, & as a result, Ur concentrations of Maltese in Australia have a weakened communal life. F Rasmussen

INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF MORAL AND SOCIAL STUDIES

Editor S. Wolfram (U of Oxford). Editorial Board. T.E. Downing (U of Arizona); B.M. Levick (U of Oxford); L. Sciana (Venice & Oxford); M.E. Smith (SUNY); J.L. Thompson, (U of La Trobe, Austr.); A. Watson (U of Pennsylvania)
Published in Spring, Summer and Autumn

Volume 2 Number 1 Spring 1987

M. MIDGLEY	Can Specialisation Damage your Health?
J. SABINI & M. SILVER	Internal and External Causes of Behavior
N. J. ALLEN	The Ideology of the Indo-Europeans: Dumézil's Theory and the Idea of a Fourth Function
N. K. MACKIE	Rome's First Emperors: The Birth of an Institution
A. C. BRAMWELL	'Dans le Couloir': The Political Culture of the EEC Commission
R. H. BEIS	Pornography: The Harm it Does?

Volume 2 Number 2 Summer 1987

C. WILLIAMSON	Prejudices and Generalisations
J. L. THOMPSON	A Rational World Order: Hegel on International Relations
M. W. HUGHES	Nuclear Deterrence and Moral Argument
N. G. E. HARRIS	Decision-making and the Terminally Ill
J. CASSELL	The Good Surgeon

Volume 2 Number 3 Autumn 1987

R. HARRIS	Mentioning the Unmentionable
J. SABINI & M. SILVER	Character: The Moral and the Aesthetic
W. J. EARLE	Depersonalized Sex and Moral Perfection
J. J. HALDANE	Aesthetic Naturalism and the Decline of Architecture Pt 1
B. M. LEVICK	Divination in Roman Public Life
R. ELOUL	Is the State of Israel Jewish?
A. DE WAAL	The Perception of Poverty and Famines

Volume 3 Number 1 Spring 1988

Special Issue — Political Persuasion

R. R. A. MARLIN	Logic and Rhetoric
R. PAINE	The Persuasions of 'Being' and 'Doing': An Ethnographic Essay
A. K. McHARDY	Religious Ritual and Political Persuasion: The Case of England in the Hundred Years War
M. E. SMITH	We Help our People to become Good Citizens': Persuasion and 'the Morally Defective'
J. MacCLANCY	Kastom and Politics

SUBSCRIPTION RATES:

	U.S.	U.K.	Elsewhere
Per annum
Individuals	$24	£12	£15
Institutions	$50	£24	£30

All orders and remittances should be sent to Journals Ltd, 1 Harewood Row, London NW1 6SE, U.K. Back issues can be purchased at the same rates. Rates for Special Issue only available on application.

All contributions and enquiries to the Editor, S. Wolfram, at 34 Park Town, Oxford OX2 6SJ, U.K. or, in the U.S.A., to T. E. Downing at 1402 E. Kleindale Rd., Tucson, AZ 85719, U.S.A.

88T3584

Jordan, Deidre F. (U Adelaide, South Australia 5001). Aborigines in a Multi-Cultural Society: A Sharing of Dreams?, Journal of Intercultural Studies, 1986, 7, 2, 5-29.

* A study of the interaction of Aboriginal students & the social structures of a multicultural society within the context of the school. Questionnaire data from ninth & eleventh graders at 2 country schools & 2 city schools in South Australia, including Aboriginal & non-Aboriginal students (N = 57 & 289, respectively), are analyzed to examine rudimentary theorizing expressed by students on a number of scales relating to identity. Results indicate that non-Aboriginal Rs in daily contact with Aboriginal people held negative stereotypes about Aborigines. Aboriginal Rs, however, perceived themselves in a positive way, suggesting that they are able to reject the negative typifications found in the wider society. 8 Tables, 24 References. F. Rasmussen

88T3585

Kurian, George (U Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4). Socio-Cultural Adaptation of South Asian Immigrants: The Canadian Experience, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 47-62.

* Indian immigrants have been coming to Canada since the start of the twentieth century. Many of them, especially the less educated, have faced problems of adjustment. Despite these, they generally express satisfaction with their lives in Canada. M-F & parent-child relationships are sources of strain & of intrafamilial conflicts. The overall tendency appears to be toward complete assimilation into Canadian society. 12 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3586

Lewins, Frank (Dept Sociology Australian National U, Canberra ACT 2601). "The Blainey Debate" in Hindsight, ♦ U The Australian and New Zealand Journal of Sociology, 1987, 23, 2, July, 261-273.

* Responses to Geoffrey Blainey's recent views on Asian immigration (All for Australia, Sydney: Methuen Haynes, 1984) have been numerous, wide-ranging, & variable in quality. In hindsight, two key elements in Blainey's writings have escaped detailed scrutiny: the role of PO & the powerlessness of "old Australians." Examination of these elements is important because in Blainey's sociology of Australian society the first is explicit & central while his analysis of the second is faulty. 1 Figure, 62 References. HA

88T3587

Massey, Douglas S. & Denton, Nancy A. (Dept Sociology U Chicago, IL 60637). Trends in the Residential Segregation of Blacks, Hispanics, and Asians: 1970-1980, U American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 6, Dec, 802-825.

* An examination of trends in residential segregation for blacks, Hispanics, & Asians in 60 SMSAs between 1970 & 1980 using US census data taken from the 1970 Fourth Count Summary tapes & the 1980 Summary Tape File 4. Segregation was measured using dissimilarity & exposure indices. Black segregation from Anglos declined in some smaller SMSAs in the South & West, but in large Ur areas in the northeastern & north-central states, there was little change; in these areas, blacks remained spatially isolated & highly segregated. The level of black-Anglo segregation was not strongly related to SES or level of suburbanization. Hispanic segregation was markedly below that of blacks, but increased substantially in some Ur areas that experienced Hispanic immigration & population growth over the decade. The level of Hispanic segregation was highly related to indicators of SES, acculturation, & suburbanization. Asian segregation was everywhere quite low. During the 1970s, the spatial isolation of Asians increased slightly, while dissimilarity from Anglos decreased. Results suggest that Asian enclaves were beginning to form in many US metropolitan areas around 1980. 7 Tables, 78 References. HA

88T3588

Mathieu, Jacques (CELAT U Laval, Quebec G1K 7P4). Mobilité et sédentarité: stratégies familiales en Nouvelle-France (Mobility and Sedentariness. Familial Strategies in New France). ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 211-227 (FRE). In collaboration with Pauline Therrien-Fortier & Rénald Lessard.

* The migratory phenomenon of New France, in the seventeenth, eighteenth, & nineteenth centuries, is examined at the level of the family. Local & regional factors are viewed as secondary to familial situations & ancestral ties in the process of emigrating from France. The French swarmed into the Saint Lawrence valley, partly in response to family strategies to produce an abundance of children. This model reproduced itself in the eighteenth century when Canadians settled the Ill region. The notion of populating in this fashion is termed the mobility of sedentariness. 1 Table, 1 Chart, 1 Map. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T3589

Mohan, V. (Centre Soviet Studies U Bombay, 400032 India). The Socio-Economic Transformation of Soviet Central Asia as a Means to the Nationalities Question of USSR: The Muslim Dimension, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 63-87.

* The history of the problem of nationalities claimed to be solved by the Soviet government—is briefly reviewed. Adherents of Islam in Central Asia have been the groups most difficult to assimilate. However, Soviet efforts have increased economic well-being & improved education in this region; in addition, women have gained much improved rights. The USSR has remained cautious in its treatment of Islam, which survives in a generally atheistic society. 1 Table, 10 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3590

Moodley, Kogila (U British Columbia, Vancouver V6T 1W5). The Legitimation Crisis of the South African State, U Journal of Modern African Studies, 1986, 24, 2, June, 187-201.

* Recent contradictory changes in racial policies made by the ruling class in South Africa are explored. A fundamental reorganization of the state & its central political institutions is described that transcends past conceptualizations of black/white antagonisms. The permanence of the black Ur population has been acknowledged, & the exclusive apartheid ideology of the 1960s has given way to a state of political cooptation. This "neo-apartheid" is reflected in a new terminology & administrative style; details of the new technocratic vision of reform are explored in depth. It is argued, however, that South Africa's authoritarian government differs from such systems in other states in three primary aspects: imposed group membership, legalized racial-group boundaries, & a convergence of race & SC that render it an illegitimate polity. Implications for inter-group relations & South Africa's development are explored. K. Hyatt

88T3591

Morris, L. D. (Dept Sociology U Durham, DH1 3JT England). Local Social Polarization: A Case Study of Hartlepool, International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 3, Sept, 331-350.

* The social & spatial-clustering aspects of employment & unemployment are studied using the example of Hartlepool, England, with attention to labor market conditions, recent work histories, patterns of residence, & future prospects. Explored is the notion of social polarization, or segregation of households of workers from those of the unemployed. Data from interviews with married men (N = 20 employed & 20 unemployed, all below age 60) from 4 different electoral wards of Hartlepool in 1984 indicate a trend of informal recruitment to employment, wherein social contact with employed friends & family increases the probability of finding work. When housing options decline as a result of unemployment, clusters of the long-term unemployed become established, decreasing the opportunity for work-based contacts. It is therefore argued that such spatial clustering is the result of an interaction between age, labor market experience, & situation in the housing market. Spatial clustering in the local social structure affects not only access to work & the development of support networks, but also attitudes toward work. 28 References. Modified HA

88T3592

Murdock, Margaret Maier (U Wyoming, Casper 82601). Putting Indians Back into the Central Role in Their Own History, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 3, July, 341-342.

* A review essay on books by: W. R. Swagerty (Ed), Scholars and the Indian Experience: Critical Reviews of Recent Writing in the Social Sciences (Bloomington: Indiana U Press, 1984); & Vine Deloria, Jr., & Clifford Lytle, The Nations Within: The Past and Future of American Indian Sovereignty (New York: Pantheon Books, 1984 [see listings in IRPS No. 42]). Scholars and the Indian Experience presents ten excellent bibliographic essays that cover a wide range of concerns in American Indian history. The Nations Within documents political conflicts surrounding Indian political sovereignty & also offers a valuable critical examination of the sovereignty concept. Both succeed in the goal of recognizing Indians as participants in the history of the US. W. H. Stoddard

88T3576

Clemmer, Richard O. (Dept Anthropology U Denver, CO 80208). Hopis, Western Shoshones, and Southern Utes: Three Different Responses to the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934. American Indian Culture and Research Journal, 1986, 10, 2, 15-40

¶ The Indian Reorganization Act (IRA) is analyzed as a mechanism for acculturation & as a program for social, cultural, & political change between 1934 & 1985, within a theoretical scheme that regards the US mainstream as the dominant culture & American Indian cultures as dominated. The IRA was an attempt by the US to channel change in American Indian societies in certain directions & to offer a complex of Anglo-American cultural traits to these societies for their acceptance. Measurement of the degree of acceptance of these cultural traits is done for the Hopis, western Shoshones, & southern Utes, in four categories: political implementation of the Act, results of implementation in land reform, results in economic development, & results in tribal organization & management via statistical & descriptive records & reports of the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), non-BIA researchers' data, results of open-ended interviews (N not given), participant observation, & other ethnographic methods. It is concluded that, as a complex of culture traits, the IRA was differentially & variably accepted by the three groups, & only positively accepted by one. Two hypotheses are suggested for further investigation: (1) the variation in acceptance may be explained in a particular society in terms of degree of cultural homogeneity, demographic characteristics, economic factors, political characteristics, & history of contact, & (2) a positive acceptance of the IRA was exceptional, & the rule was a variable response on the part of any one group. 1 Table. Modified AA

88T3577

Cohen-Nusbacher, Ailene (New York U, NY 10003). Responses to Secular Influences among Orthodox Jewish Women. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 749-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712773.

88T3578

Coleman, Lerita M., Antonucci, Toni C., Adelman, Pamela K., & Crohan, Susan E. (Dept Psychology U Tennessee, Knoxville 37996-0900). Social Roles in the Lives of Middle-Aged and Older Black Women. ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 761-771

¶ Participation in & the impact of social roles on the psychological & physical health of middle-aged & older black women are explored, using interview data from the National Survey of Black Americans (N = 451 Fs aged 40-64 & 215 Fs aged 65-101). The results indicate that few middle-aged & older black women participate in the 3 roles of parent, spouse, & employee simultaneously. Of these roles, only employment had a significant relationship to well-being, contributing to higher self-esteem & better health. Sociodemographic characteristics also contributed to well-being in the midlife group. It appears that particular roles (ie, employment) or clusters of roles (employment & marriage), rather than the sheer number of roles, benefit well-being; a greater number of roles was related only to better health in the middle-aged group. The importance of the employment role & other sociodemographic factors in understanding the well-being of middle-aged & older black women is discussed. 3 Tables, 47 References. Modified HA

88T3579

Collier, Mary Jane, Ribeau, Sidney A., & Hecht, Michael L. (Dept Communication Studies California State U, Los Angeles 90032). Intracultural Communication Rules and Outcomes within Three Domestic Cultures. International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 1986, 10, 4, 439-457

¶ A description of a qualitative study of intracultural communication rules & outcomes among Mexican Americans, blacks, & whites. Utilizing a rules/systems theoretical orientation, responses to open-ended questionnaires were content analyzed, producing five rule categories (politeness, role prescriptions, expression, content, & relationship climate) & five outcome categories (self-validation, relational validation, cultural validation, being understood, & goal accomplishment). Cultural similarities & differences are discussed. 2 Tables, 40 References. HA

88T3580

Eisenbruch, Maurice. Action Research with Vietnamese Refugees: Refugee, Befriender and Researcher Relationships. Journal of Inter- cultural Studies, 1986, 7, 2, 30-51.

¶ The processes whereby individuals within a helping community develop competence as helpers are discussed, based on a case study of an informal helping network for Vietnamese refugees in Williamstown, England. The functioning of a voluntary church group, established in 1980, is analyzed focusing on the way in which informal helpers, or befrienders, see themselves as nonprofessional & as differing greatly from formal helping networks. The process by which the two discrete communities—the refugees & the helpers—come into a mutual interaction & yet remain independent of each other is traced, & implications of this process for members of each group are assessed. 18 References. F. Rasmussen

88T3581

Faber, Ronald J., O'Guinn, Thomas C., & Meyer, Timothy P. (Dept Advertising U Texas, Austin 78712). Televised Portrayals of Hispanics: A Comparison of Ethnic Perceptions. International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 1987, 11, 2, 155-169

¶ Data from telephone interviews conducted in 1983 with 405 Hispanic, black, & Anglo residents of Chicago, Ill, are used to compare beliefs about the adequacy of minority character portrayals on US TV programs & commercials & to determine the impact of demographic & media variables on these perceptions. Results indicate that there are significant differences in perceptions between ethnic viewers & Anglos; no significant differences, however, are found in the perceived fairness of ethnic portrayals. Theoretical implications for the way the media may affect acculturation & assimilation are discussed along with implications for advertising & programming practitioners. 4 Tables, 23 References. Modified HA

88T3582

Godbout, Jacques T., La Communauté retrouvée? (The Rediscovered Community?). ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2, 407-414 (FRE)

¶ A review essay on two books by former French-Canadian militant Jean-Marc Piotte. La Communauté perdue: petite histoire du militantisme (The Lost Community: A Short History of Militancy, Montreal, VLB, 1987), & Pierre Vallières, Les Héritiers de Papineau (The Heirs of Papineau), Montreal: Quebec/Americ, 1986 (see listings in IRPS No. 42). Piotte discusses two themes: (1) the contradictions between the cause, the ideology, the movement, & the personal, everyday, real life of the militant, & (2) the militant's painful choice of either a life devoted to a cause or the meaninglessness of a life devoted to oneself. Vallières rejects the concepts of structure, system, or mode viewing community instead as process & projecting hope for the transformation of Quebec society through a communal dream. D. Graves

88T3583

Jakubowicz, Andrew & Castles, Stephen (Faculty Humanities I Technology, Sydney 2007 New South Wales Australia). The Inherent Subjectivity of the Apparently Objective in Research on Ethnicity and Class. Journal of Intercultural Studies, 1986, 7, 3, 5-25

¶ Positivist causal methodologies in the social sciences have increasingly been used to investigate the settlement experience & social-structural position of immigrants in Australia; the findings of such research have been used by governments in the development of policy. Recent findings in this area contest the critical position that immigrants face discrimination in Australian society. This new research argues that their low SE position accurately reflects rewards in a free labor market that advantages workers with skills & English language. However, the new research is based on many untested assumptions, & an unreflective epistemology. The quantification of elements of the immigrant experience & the implementation of regression analysis disguise the relations of production & exploitation by concentrating on the relations of exchange. Particularly criticized are SE attainment studies, which are affected by simple assignments of values in bimodal class models, while they also ignore the historical process of immigrant recruitment & the fashioning of Australian manufacturing industry to take advantage of the inflow of immigrants. Also, second-generation mobility studies tend to concentrate on individual characteristics to explain variations, rather than analysis of concrete social environments. The problems of the new causal paradigm are presented as the fetish of "normal sciences," the problem of class composition, & the incapacity of the model to explain key relations of ethnicity & gender. The concept of society utilized by modern sociology & human capital theory is reductionist, & exacerbates a circularity of logic evident in a number of the studies examined. It is concluded that, while quantitative methods can be useful, they often produce little more than ideology. 36 References. Modified AA

88T3604

Sullivan, Sherry (U Alabama, Birmingham 35294), Indians in American Fiction, 1820-1850: An Ethnohistorical Perspective, ♦ UCLA, 1986, 15, 3, spring, 239-257

* An ethnohistorical approach is applied to the contextual analysis of fiction literature concerning US Indians published between 1820 & 1850. A contextual perspective—ie, a focus on writers' & readers' views of the works—is used to avoid the cultural biases & presuppositions that frequently cloud literary & cultural historical analyses. In this light, examination of 124+ fictional works contradicts previous assumptions that this literature was antagonistic toward Indians or represented an attempt to romanticize their destruction by whites. Rather, the majority of writing was sympathetic toward Indians & expressed guilt concerning their treatment during the westward expansion of white civilization. Some major works are summarized, & shown to represent a marked change from the antiprimitivist, negative writings of the late eighteenth century. The Indian as a romantic symbol & the image of an idealized national identity, that combined the best of Indian & white cultures emerged in this literature & continued into twentieth-century works. K. Hyatt

88T3605

Szantó, Miklos, Bevándorlás és kettős azonosságtudat (Immigration and Dual Identity-Consciousness), Szociológia, 1983, 3, 289-298 (HU N)

* Abstract not currently available

88T3606

Trigger, David S. (Dept Anthropology U Western Australia, Nedlands 6009), Blackfellas and Whitefellas: The Concepts of Domain and Social Closure in the Analysis of Race-Relations, ♦ U Mankind, 1986, 16, 2, Aug, 99-117

* In presenting data on social relations between aborigines & whites at north Australian aboriginal settlement, the concepts of domain & social closure are developed as important in the study of power & race relations. Previous Australian studies in this area have not treated adequately the substantive nature & theoretical significance of spatial & social separation between aborigines & whites. It is argued that aborigines retain some autonomy within a "blackfella domain," through effecting a form of exclusionary social closure. 1 Plate, 37 References. HA van Praag, C. S., Onderzoek naar etnische minderheden in Nederland: een signalement (Ethnic Minorities in the Netherlands: A Review), ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 3, May-June, 159-175 (DUT)

88T3607

* The rapid increase in research publications on ethnic minorities during the last few years in the Netherlands can be explained by national & local authorities' involvement in the development of new policies. However, experts express doubts as to the quality of the research because this research is attached to specific domains of current policy & to problems as they are formulated by the authorities. Improvement of theoretical standards is called for. 1 Table, 44 References. Modified HA

88T3608

Vecoli, Rudolph J., Los Italianos en los Estados Unidos: una perspectiva comparada (The Italians in the United States: A Comparative Perspective), ♦ Estudios Migratorios Latinoamericanos, 1986, 2, 4, Dec, 403-429. (SPA)

Translated by Alicia Bernasconi.

† An investigation of the history & social & cultural identity of Italian Americans, based on personal experience & numerous studies. In the 1980 US Census, 12 million persons identified themselves as of Italian origin; the majority of these are third generation or further removed from the country of origin. The history of Italian immigration to the US, which was highest in 1890-1920, is summarized. The majority of immigrants were young, unskilled men, intending to return home (as 50% of them did) after earning some money. This expectation of temporary stay tended to shape attitudes in the Italian-American communities. Other aspects discussed include: political attitudes; the activities of Italian-American organizations (primarily restricted to the philanthropic sphere), & images of Italian Americans in modern popular culture, especially TV & films, which tend to be negative. In general, Italian Americans have achieved material success, but this is often accompanied by psychological insecurity. Nevertheless, it is concluded that the US will probably be a more pluralistic society in the future, & that Italian Americans will continue as a viable ethnic group. C. Waters

88T3609

Vegler, Anna (Fordham U, Bronx NY 10458), The Integration of Post-1965 Greek Immigrants to New York, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1026-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714577.

88T3610

Young, Louis, Giles, Howard & Pierson, Herbert (c/o Giles Dept Psychology U Bristol, B58 1HH England), Sociopolitical Change and Perceived Vitality, International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 1986, 10, 4, 459-469

† An investigation of how ethnic groups cognitively represent some of the societal forces impinging on them & relevant outgroups before & after a naturally occurring event. Here, questionnaires were administered to students at the Chinese U, Hong Kong (N = 82) to obtain ratings of the perceived vitalities (ie, SS & institutional support) of Chinese & Western groups in Hong Kong as well as their respective languages before & after the signing of the Sino-British Treaty (1984). Results showed that the status of the English language was perceived lower in a number of situations after the international agreement. This was complemented by a decrease in the perceived level of immigration & emigration patterns of Westerners, by an increase in their perceived political power locally, & by an increase in the status of the English language internationally. The findings, many of which manifest judgmental reversals from before to after the treaty, are discussed in terms of the psychological acceptance of the agreement by the Hong Kong Chinese & in the context of maintaining a positive ethnic identity. 1 Table, 17 References. HA

88T3593

Pagano, Nora & Oporto, Mario (U Buenos Aires, Argentina). La conducta endogámica de los grupos inmigrantes: pautas matrimoniales de los italianos en el barrio de La Boca en 1895 (The Endogamous Conduct of Immigrant Groups: Matrimonial Alliances among Italians in the Neighborhood of La Boca in 1895). ♦ Estudios Migratorios Latinoamericanos, 1986, 2, 4, Dec, 483-495 (SPA)

¶ Various studies of Italian immigrants in Argentina are reviewed, & an analysis of one specific aspect is presented here: the marriage contracts of Italians in La Boca—a predominantly Italian neighborhood of Buenos Aires—in 1895. Marriage choices are analyzed according to both nationality & town or region of origin, based on data drawn from the national census & the civil register, which include a record of the birthplace of the spouses. A strong trend of endogamy is revealed: in 90+% of the 234 cases examined, both spouses were Italian, & in 44%, both were from the same community of origin. 4 Tables. C. Waters

88T3594

Rhodes, Colbert (U Texas Permian Basin, Odessa 79762). Amnesty for Illegal Aliens: The Australian Experience. ♦ U.S. Policy Studies Review, 1986, 5, 3, Feb, 566-581

¶ It is indicated that the three amnesties granted by Australia in the mid-1970s did not remove the presence of illegal aliens nor end the movement of persons into Australia who would become illegal residents. Instead, amnesty encouraged the growth of an illegal alien population: some persons who were unable to get an immigrant visa decided to come to Australia & remain as illegal aliens living anonymously within an ethnic community, expecting that pressures from their ethnic communities would compel the government to grant another amnesty. Amnesty appears to be only a temporary expedient used by the government to appear humane & to relieve pressures from nonethnic Australians who want to end the presence of illegals, & from ethnic communities who want their coethnics legalized. It is concluded that amnesty is not a long-term solution to the illegal alien problem. 9 Tables, 16 References. HA

88T3595

Rich, Harvey (U Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4). Genocide as a Socio-political Process. ♦ Canadian Journal of Sociology/Cahiers canadiens de sociologie, 1987, 12, 4, winter, 393-404

¶ A review essay on a book by Raul Hilberg, The Destruction of the European Jews (New York: Holmes & Meier, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). This monumental work (1,274 pages) discusses the important events in the attack on European Jews conducted between 1933 & 1945 in Germany & fourteen other European nations. Focusing on Germany & Poland, Hilberg examines the administrative apparatus of destruction, which involved the cooperation of the ministerial bureaucracy, industry, the armed forces, & the National Socialist Party in maintaining a facade of legality over a process of extermination. Hilberg tends to overestimate the unity of the administrative apparatus, when the archival materials that he relies on reveal competitive empire-building. In addition, Hilberg does not examine the moral crisis faced by Germans in sufficient depth. 10 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3596

Riggs, Fred W. (Dept Political Science U Hawaii, Honolulu 96822). Research Note: For Writers about 'Ethnicity': A New Kind of Reference Work. ♦ U.S. International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 66, 119-127

¶ Discussed is a new type of reference work produced by the International Social Science Council. Each record provides a definition for one concept, along with terms that can be used to designate that concept. It is intended to serve the needs of writers dealing with ethnicity. The glossary contains both core concepts & concepts relevant to particular disciplines. B. Annesser Murray

88T3597

Riordan, Cornelius (Dept Sociology Providence Coll, RI 02918). Intergroup Contact in Small Cities. International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 1987, 11, 2, 143-154

¶ A revised version of SA 33 3/85S17055/SSSP/1985/2463.

88T3598

Rossman, Henry Harris (Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122). A Cognitive Consistency Approach to Inter-Group Antipathy: An Empirical Assessment. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 486-A-487-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711401.

88T3599

Ryan, Christine E. (Brown U, Providence RI 02912). Indochinese Refugees in the U.S.: Background Characteristics, Initial Adjustment Patterns, and the Role of Policy. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, 1025-A-1026-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715554.

88T3600

Sanders, Jimmy M. & Nee, Victor (Dept Sociology U South Carolina 29208). Limits of Ethnic Solidarity in the Enclave Economy. U.S. American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 6, Dec, 745-767. Comment, 768-771. Reply, 771-773

¶ In contrast to the classical assimilationist view that segregation retards minority economic achievement, the enclave economy hypotheses advanced by Alejandro Portes ("Modes of Structural Incorporation: Present Theories of Immigration" in Kritiz, Mary M., Keely, Charles & Tomasi, Sylvano M. (Eds), Global Trends in Migration, Staten Island, NY: CMS Press, 1981) asserts that immigrants in an enclave labor market receive returns to human capital commensurate with those of immigrants in a primary labor market. Analysis of 1980 census data from 5% public use sample on the Cuban enclave in the Miami, Fla, metropolitan area & the Chinese enclave in the San Francisco-Oakland, Ca, metropolitan area only partially supports this new hypothesis. The enclave economy model applies better to entrepreneurs, but the assimilation model applies better to workers. The enclave economy hypothesis should be reformulated to recognize the difference between these two migrant groups. In What's an Ethnic Enclave? The Case for Conceptual Clarity, Alejandro Portes & Leif Jensen (Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore, Md) note that Sanders & Nee fail to distinguish between ethnic neighborhoods & ethnic enclave economies, by arbitrarily defining all ethnic residential areas as enclaves, they guarantee their results but render them irrelevant to the original hypothesis. In On Testing the Enclave Economy Hypothesis, Nee & Sanders argue that the actual operationalization they relied on used the same place of work variable that Portes & Jensen employed. Other problems with their arguments are also noted. 11 Tables, 78 References. Modified HA

88T3601

Shoham, S. Giora (Faculty Law Tel-Aviv U, Ramat-Aviv 6960, Israel). German Socialism and Anti-Semitism: Social Character and the Disruption of the Symbiosis between Germans and Jews. ♦ CLIO, 1986, 15, 3, spring, 303-320

¶ It is proposed that the cultural upsurge in the Weimar Republic at the turn of the century constituted the third cultural European upheaval after the Periclean Athens & the Italian Renaissance. This cultural flourish resulted from a symbiosis of the Germanic culture & Jews who had recently emerged from the ghetto. This symbiosis was so conspicuous that the whole concept of culture of Nazi Germany was identified with Judaism; however, this symbiosis was nipped in the bud by the Holocaust. Modified AA

88T3602

Srinivasan, Nirmala (Giri Instit Development Studies, Lucknow 226020 India). Patterns of Minority Identity: An Indian Case Study from the Perspective of Phenomenological Marxism. International Sociology, 1987, 2, 4, Dec, 373-389

¶ A revised version of SA 34 3/S18605/ISA/1986/5186. 3 Tables, Figures, 23 References

88T3603

Staples, Robert (U California, San Francisco 94143). Black Males: A Final Solution to the Race Problem in America. ♦ The Black Scholar, 1987, 18, 3, May-June, 2-11.

¶ It is argued that black Ms in the US are becoming an endangered species. Statistics from a number of sources for 1986 reveal that they are disproportionately likely to be jailed, killed in crime-related incidents, abusive with alcohol or drugs, school dropouts, afflicted with AIDS, unemployed, or working at below-poverty-level wages. Moreover, white harbor gross misconceptions about how much "progress" blacks have made toward equality; various reasons for the persistence of this black success myth are advanced. It is shown that racist attitudes & practices & black stereotypes continue to prevail, perpetuating black economic disenfranchisement, lack of political participation, & white male dominance. The contradiction of US capitalism & problems of color inherent in the internationalization of the world LF are explored, along with ways that black Ms may come to lead the struggle against them in the future. K. Hyatt

0500 culture and social structure

08 social organizations

88T3611

Banks, Marcus J. (U Cambridge, CBI 2JQ England). Defining Division: An Historical Overview of Jain Social Organization, Modern Asian Studies, 1986, 20, 3, July, 447-460

* A discussion of the progress & findings of European scholars on the issues of caste & sect in the Jain community, India, over the last two centuries. Jain social organization is outlined, with particular reference to Svetambar communities in the North. It is argued that although caste divisions in the community were given importance in the earliest reports, the focus of attention gradually shifted to sectarian divisions. It is suggested that this trend created a false perspective on the history of the Jain community that has confused many scholars into making assumptions about lay beliefs & behavior not supported by ethnographic research. 31 References. HA

88T3612

Bonte, Pierre (Centre national recherche scientifique, F-75700 Paris France). Donneurs de femmes ou preneurs d'hommes? Les Awlād Qaylān, tribu de l'Adrar mauritanien (Giving Women or Taking Men? The Awlād Qaylān, a Tribe of the Mauritanian Adrar), L'Homme, 1987, 27, 2(102), 54-79 (FRE)

* In Moorish society, the tribe sees itself as a group of filiation descended from a common ancestor & united through its genealogy. However, an analysis of the history of the Awlād Qaylān tribe of the Adrar (Mauritania), using evidence from various published studies, shows that this is in fact a status group, to which members of diverse origins are affiliated mainly through marriage. The genealogical discourse expresses an ideology of status position. In alliances, especially matrimonial ones, the issue is to reproduce or modify these positions. By practicing "open" matrimonial strategies the Awlād Qaylān "take men," & thus strengthen—demographically, militarily, & politically—their tribe, which makes & unmakes emirs. They, in turn, are considered "givers of women," of a rank lower than the other hassān tribes that exercise emiral political power or are close—in terms of genealogy & status—to the emiral family. 5 Figures, 16 References. Modified HA

88T3613

Chairetakakis, Anna, L'esistenza in America della musica folkloristica del Sud d'Italia ed i suoi legami con la madrepatria (The Existence in America of Folk Music from the South of Italy, and Its Links with the Mother Country), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986-87, 80, Jan-Mar, 93-105. (ITA)

Translated by Maricla Sellari.

* Research from the 1950s to the present on Italian folk music in Italy & in the US is briefly reviewed. In 1979, a group of anthropologists investigated Italian folk arts in the Italian-American community of Buffalo, NY. As a result of their study, about 70 singers & musicians were brought together in a festival of Italian folk music. Some details of the study & biographies of some of the musicians are presented. The interaction of musical styles—from Western Europe, the Mediterranean, & "old" or central Europe—in Italian popular music is discussed. Changes in lifestyle & culture resulting from emigration are investigated. C. Waters

88T3614

Conte, Edouard, Alliance et parenté élective en Arabie ancienne. Eléments d'une problématique (Fictive Kinship and Marriage in Old Arabia. Some Preliminary Considerations), L'Homme, 1987, 27, 2(102), 119-138. (FRE)

* Various studies of early Arabian society reveal a discrepancy between the oft repeated assertion that the "unity of the Arab tribe" derives exclusively from the common agnatic ancestry of its members, & the realization that descent group membership could be based on voluntary bonds outside the realm of kinship proper. Different forms of adoption & oaths of brotherhood contributed to found legitimacy in the M line or were used to consecrate relations of equality between nonkin. Such practices could pave the way for isogamy, of which patrilineal parallel cousin marriage is, in the Arab context, a paradigmatic expression. By restricting these practices, the Islamic tradition accentuates the tendency to obliterate the memory of nonagnatic relationships. It thus contributes to reinforce the claim of a unilineal transmission of honor & legitimacy within the framework of an effectively complex & cognatic kinship system that favors marriage between cousins of all categories. 41 References. Modified HA

88T3615

Digard, Jean-Pierre (Centre national recherche scientifique (ER252), F-75700 Paris France). Jeux de structures. Segmentarité et pouvoir chez les nomades Baxtyârî d'Iran (The Interplay Of Structures: Segmentarity and Power among the Baxtyari Nomads of Iran), L'Homme, 1987, 27, 2(102), 12-53 (FRE)

* An analysis of the social organization of the Baxtyari nomads of Iran draws evidence from numerous published studies. This social organization brings together two antagonistic structures, a patrilinear lineage system, & a strongly hierarchized & centralized chieftaincy (khans). Solidarity during conflicts follows three contradictory principles: hincu (blood relationships, whether real or fictive), lamizur (the duty to help the weak), & hasie (the distribution of tribespersons between two rival factions, linked to tribal power). These contradictions can be interpreted in terms of "households," which seem to be the units through which the dominant class of the khans manage the transition from a segmentary to a state organization. 12 Figures, 7 Photographs, 78 References. Modified HA

88T3616

Fernandez, Raul (School Social Sciences U California, Irvine 92717). Evaluating the Loss of Kinship Structures: A Case Study of North American Indians, UM Human Organization, 1987, 16, 1, spring, 1-9

* An examination of the economic value of the kinship transformations suffered by the Soboba Indians, who reside on a reservation in Riverside, Calif. The kinship structures (or clans) disintegrated after water supplies dried out on the reservation in the 1930s. Elements borrowed from a technique of cost-benefit analysis termed social impact assessment methodology & lessons from the experience of Third World economic development are applied to produce intuitively reasonable valuations of a cultural intangible. 1 Table, 18 References. Modified HA

88T3617

Gokalp, Altan (Centre national recherche scientifique, F-75700 Paris France). "Le Dit de l'os et du clan." De l'ordre segmentaire oghouz au village anatolien ("The Saying of the Bone and of the Clan" From the Oghouz Segmentary Order to the Anatolian Village), L'Homme, 1987, 27, 2(102), 80-98 (FRE)

* Social structures in modern Ru Turkey are analyzed from the perspective of their historical development, drawing on various studies & archaeological evidence. Although nomadic pastoralism is no longer the sociological reality of contemporary Turkey, it reappears in coded form in Ru Anatolian social life, eg. in the kinship system, as a cultural paradigm inherited through the Oghouz chieftaincies from central Asia. The level of tribal integration of the oba (lineage, clan, or local community) reveals the history of the social system of these chieftaincies as well as the adjustments this system has had to make under the twofold constraints of the central Ottoman state & the segmentary systems of the Islamic-Arabic world. 1 Figure, 8 References. Modified HA

88T3618

Hamès, Constant (Centre national recherche scientifique, F-75700 Paris France). La Filiation généalogique (nasab) dans la société d'Ibn Khaldūn (Genealogical Filiation (nasab) in the Society of Ibn Khaldūn), L'Homme, 1987, 27, 2(102), 99-118 (FRE)

* The importance of the notion of nasab (genealogy through M descent) in the work of fourteenth-century writer A. Ibn Khaldūn is investigated. Nasab is viewed as a guiding force in the history of peoples, which leaves room for the manipulation & adjustment of SS. The concept of nasab, of a common ancestor—even though it may be an a posteriori explanation of geographical closeness—creates real social bonds & a feeling

International Journal of Sociology & Social Policy

The International Journal of Sociology & Social Policy publishes a wide variety of articles outlining the latest developments internationally within the fields of sociology and social policy.

Occasionally special issues are produced on specific areas of interest. These have included issues on Religion and Change, Area Policy and Area Strategies, Children and Marriage, Democratic Enterprise and The Problems of Values and Value-Judgements.

Editor

Professor Barrie O. Pettman, International Institute of Social Economics

Associate Editors

Peter Morley, University of Utah

Robert Hill, Memorial University of Newfoundland

Mike Jackson, University of Stirling

Review Editor

Robert Chester, University of Hull

Publication details

The International Journal of Sociology & Social Policy is published quarterly.

Volume 6 Nos. 1-4, 1986

$US164.95

To subscribe, send your order to:

MCB University Press

62 Toller Lane

Bradford

West Yorkshire BD8 9BY

88T3627

Hettlage, Robert (U Regensburg, D-8400 Federal Republic Germany), Der kulturelle Kontext alternativer Technik: Technikkritik zwischen "Neuer Ethik" und Traditionellem Wertbezug (The Cultural Context of Alternative Technology: Technology Critique between "New Ethics" and Traditional Values), Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Soziologie/Revue Suisse de sociologie, 1987, 13, 2, Oct., 143-172 (GER)

* The debate over dominant vs alternative technology is examined in order to determine & analyze the value basis of the alternative technology movement. Critical aspects & ethical presumptions of biological, human-scale, & "soft" technologies are discussed. The ethical appeals made by proponents of alternative technologies are shown to have a long premodern tradition, especially in the emphasis on asceticism & respect for nature. The possibilities for legitimation of this new technology critique are questioned, since the legitimation in past values is denied it by changes in the social conditions that once gave meaning to those values. 63 References. Modified AA

88T3628

Hoge, Dean R., Hoge, Jann L. & Wittenberg, Janet (Center Study Youth Development Catholic U America, Washington DC 20064), The Return of the Fifties: Trends in College Students' Values between 1952 and 1984, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 3, summer, 500-519

* An analysis of value trends during the 1950s-1980s using questionnaire data obtained in (1) a 1952 survey of M students (N not provided) at 11 US Colls & Univs, & (2) replication studies conducted in 1968/69, 1974, 1979, & 1984 at Dartmouth Coll, NH (N = 360, 366, 316, & 334, respectively), & the U of Michigan (N = 400, 348, 331, & 364, respectively). In most value domains the trends are U-shaped, reversing from the 1950s direction in the 1960s & 1970s, by 1984, attitudes were similar to those of the 1950s or moving in that direction. Domains examined include: traditional religion, career choice, faith in government & the military, advocacy of social constraints on deviant social groups, attitudes about free enterprise, government, & economics, sexual morality; marijuana use, & personal obligations. Two attitude areas do not show a return to 1950s values: (1) other-direction was high in 1952, then dropped in the 1960s & did not rise, & (2) the level of politicization rose greatly from 1952 to the 1960s, then dropped again only slightly. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 24 References. Modified HA

88T3629

Horigan, S. (U Essex, Wivenhoe Park Colchester CO4 3SQ England), Nature and Culture in Western Discourses: Wildness, Primitivism and Feral Children, * Dissertation Abstracts International (European Abstracts), 1987, 48, 3, fall, 481

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T3630

Hutchinson, John (School Humanities Griffith U, Nathan Queensland 4111 Australia), Cultural Nationalism, Elite Mobility and Nation-Building: Communitarian Politics in Modern Ireland, The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 4, Dec, 482-501

* Although generally ignored by scholars, cultural nationalism has been a significant ideological force that has regularly been adopted by a rising intelligentsia as a political option against the state. A case study of Ireland's three major cultural nationalist revivals (in the 1750s, the 1820s, & the 1880s) reveals a characteristic historical sequence of gestation, crisis, major crystallization, sociopolitical articulation, first social base, & outcome, which alternates with political nationalism. The attraction of the intelligentsia to nationalism can be explained in terms of the patterns of recruitment practiced by the British state in Ireland. In an alternating cycle, the communitarian goals of cultural nationalism periodically challenge the state-oriented objectives of political nationalism to provide a matrix of national development in opposition to the British state. 2 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T3631

Kavolis, Vytautas (Dickinson Coll, Carlisle PA 17013), History of Consciousness and Civilization Analysis, ♦ Comparative Civilizations Review, 1987, 17, fall, 1-19.

* An exploration of two scientific programs: civilization analysis & history of consciousness. Emphasis is given to how each appears from the perspective of the other & to points of contact between them. Ultimately, either without the other remains incomplete. W H Stoddard

88T3632

Kawai, Hayao (Dept Clinical Psychology Faculty Education Kyoto U, 606 Japan), The Japanese Mind as Reflected in Their Mythology, ♦ Psychologia, 1985, 28, 2, June, 71-76

† An analysis of the unique features of the Japanese mentality as reflected in its mythology. The most important Japanese deities are the Sun Goddess, the Moon God, & the Storm God, however, the Moon God is absent from from Kojiki (The Record of Ancient Matters), the document that records the major myths of Japan, although there are many tales of confrontation between the Sun Goddess & the Storm God. Rather than place some basic principle or powerful entity in the central position as an overall ruling factor, the center is left inactive & empty in order to allow a harmonious balance among the surrounding entities to bring a sense of organized fulfillment to the whole. The hollow center balanced model is proposed to describe this organization. In terms of both the internal structure of the Japanese mentality & the mutual social relationships that the Japanese create with each other, this model is appropriate & effective. The structure it describes acts as a strong but invisible support to Japanese ideology, religions, & social structure. Modified HA

88T3633

Kracke, Waud (Dept Anthropology U Illinois, Chicago 60680), Encounter with Other Cultures: Psychological and Epistemological Aspects, ♦ U Ethos, 1987, 15, 1, Mar, 58-81

† Some epistemological problems confronting anthropologists doing fieldwork in other cultures are explored, with focus on whether it is possible to overcome ethnocentric prejudices & truly achieve empathy with the different life experiences of those in alien cultures, & if so, how this might be achieved. Previous discussions of culture shock do not fully explain the ways that anthropologists are affected by having to adapt to different cultures & form close relationships with people of quite different & diverse experiences. Some negative & positive elements that underlie this intercultural encounter process are identified & discussed from a psychoanalytic perspective, illuminating the psychological aspects of this socialization, particularly the unconscious process of transference. Personal experiences with the Kagwahiv (Parintintin) Indians of Brazil during 1967/68 are used as illustration. It is shown how these various aspects of the intercultural process correspond to different ways of conceptualizing & analyzing cultural phenomena. 34 References. K Hyatt

88T3634

Long, Elizabeth (Rice U, Houston TX 77251), The Book as Mass Commodity: The Audience Perspective, ♦ Book Research Quarterly, 1987, 3, 1, spring, 9-27

Comment, 27-30

† An examination of the issue of literary massification & degradation of taste in light of how locally organized reading groups select & respond to books. Ethnographic analysis of the 70+ such groups in Houston, Tex, reveals that although commodification does somewhat narrow the universe of choice, it seems less important in shaping their use of books than do the opinions of cultural authorities or readers' personal experiences. Furthermore, there are similarities between the responses of these readers of so-called good books & those of readers of mass market books, a finding that undermines a rigid dichotomy between high & mass culture. In Comment, Janice Radway (U of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia) explores some potential dangers in ethnography's "ability to legitimate & rehabilitate popular taste." The critique of mass culture is characterized as a version of "blaming the victim," a means by which the culturally & intellectually privileged seek to maintain power over the less-endowed masses. Modified HA

88T3635

Naumova, Nina Fedorovna & Rogovin, Vadim Zakharovich, Tadachana spravedlivost' (Social Justice), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 12-23 (RUS)

† A philosophical discussion on the relationship between personal & social justice. Examination of letters to the editors of Komsomol'skaya pravda, from 1985 to 1986, reveals that while young people know what constitutes just behavior, they have trouble translating this knowledge into a proper course of action when questions of material interest arise. It is emphasized that personal morality is not an innate quality, but is learned by example. Young people are exposed to adults with ill-gotten material possessions & begin to question whether personal honesty pays off in the long run. Improved moral education is required as the USSR initiates its economic restructuring program. 2 Photographs, 11 References. G. Prostavkov of family membership. This can lead to 'asabiya, a strong group effect implying a feeling of self-identity based on the "familial" illusion of its members & leaders. It is suggested that nasab & 'asabiya, rather than being applied literally to groups of agnatic unification, may offer a generalized explanation of collective forms of Arabic or Islamic solidarity. 1 Illustration, 23 References. Modified HA

88T3619

Smith, Martin S., Kish, Bradley J. & Crawford, Charles B. (Dept Psychology Brock U, Saint Catharines Ontario L2S 3A1), Inheritance of Wealth as Human Kin Investment, Ethology and Sociobiology, 1987, 8, 3, 171-182

¶ Like many other animals, humans appear to have evolved to invest time & energy in their relatives in order to maximize inclusive fitness. Inheritance of material wealth may be a uniquely human form of kin investment. If fitness-maximizing dispositions do influence will-makers, beneficiaries may be favored according to their relatedness & reproductive value. An analysis of 1,000 probated wills in Vancouver, British Columbia, showed that this was the case. Close relatives were favored over distant kin, as were kin of higher reproductive value. Wealthier decedents favored M kin, while poorer decedents favored Fs. This pattern might reflect a facultative shifting of resources toward Ms when the family's resources are sufficient to ensure reproductive competitiveness, & toward the safer option of Fs when resources are less abundant. The results support the possibility that fitness-maximizing dispositions do influence will-makers. It is likely that such dispositions are flexible & responsive to physical & social environment. 5 Tables, 23 References. HA

88T3620

Ziman, Oleg (Dept Economics U Cincinnati, OH 45221), Economic Controls, Quality of Life, and Human Dignity, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 1-2, Jan-Apr, 133-148

¶ The economic controls embodied in the customs & traditions of society, as well as explicit controls formulated by lawgivers, are maintained by societal organizational & power structures. The differences between the effects of centralized & decentralized power structures are discussed with emphasis on quality of life & human dignity. Since freedom is an important ingredient of the quality of life, the study of the impact of alternative social organizations on individuals' effective freedom is of paramount importance. Both theoretical analysis & historical evidence suggest that controls are necessary to maintain freedom, & that improvements in efficiency can be attained at the expense of freedom. Yet if controls are carried beyond the optimal point, freedom & efficiency become complementary, & to improve efficiency, controls have to be reduced. Modified AA

13 culture

88T3621

Argyle, Michael (Oxford U, OX1 2JD England), Rules for Social Relationships in Four Cultures, Australian Journal of Psychology, 1986, 38, 3, Dec, 309-318

¶ A British study of the rules for 22 social relationships was replicated in Hong Kong, Italy, & Japan (see Argyle, M., Menderson, M., Bond, M., Contarello, A., & Inauka, T., "Cross-Cultural Variations in Relationship Rules," International Journal of Psychology, 1980, 12, 287-315), & a number of cross-cultural hypotheses were tested. It was found that there were rules for all relationships, & that for each relationship, certain rules were endorsed in all 4 cultures. In Hong Kong, Italy, & Japan, the relationships formed 3 clusters, in terms of similar rules. However, in GB only 2 clusters were found. In the Eastern cultures, especially in Japan, there were more rules about obedience, avoiding loss of face, maintaining harmonious relations in groups, & restraining emotional expression. Also, in Japan, there were more rules for hierarchical work relations, fewer for family. In Hong Kong, rules about respect for parents were important. In Italy, there was more endorsement of rules prescribing emotional expression, & for keeping up intimacy in intimate relations; sex was endorsed as permissible in a wide range of relationships. It is acknowledged that a more emic approach would have been desirable. There were some negative results that might be explicable in terms of cultural variations in the expression of basic processes; eg, there was no greater endorsement of exchange of rewards in Japan. The fact that more rules were endorsed in the British sample is probably because the rules were taken from a British study. Suggestions are made for rules that might have been included if the study had originated in Japan. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 27 References. Modified HA

88T3622

Bachnik, Jane M. (U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Native Perspectives of Distance and Anthropological Perspectives of Culture, Anthropological Quarterly, 1987, 60, 1, Jan, 25-34.

¶ A revised version of SA 35 2/87R3177

88T3623

Carmeli, Yoram S. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Tel-Aviv U, Ramat-Aviv 69978 Israel), Played by Their Own Play: Fission and Fusion in British Circuses, The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 4, Nov, 744-774

¶ An analysis of the dynamics of the frequent disappearance & reappearance characteristic of traveling circus shows in GB, based on field work conducted in a circus between 1975 & 1979. These dynamics are to be understood in terms of economic, social, & semiotic constraints. Appearance & disappearance is evidence neither for the decline nor for the continuity of circuses, but is a structural characteristic derived both from the precariousness of the circus & from its endurance within the general sociohistorical context. 1 Figure, 21 References. Modified HA

88T3624

Charsley, Simon, What Does a Wedding Cake Mean?, The Sociologist, 1987, 81, 1279, 3 July, 11-14

¶ Various symbolic meanings attached to the wedding cake & ceremonies surrounding it in the UK are examined from an anthropological perspective. Shown is how different interpretations can either support established practices or challenge them, in particular, new interests & values of marrying couples, eg, feminism, can cause traditions to be modified or abandoned altogether. It is argued that the composition of the cake itself symbolizes the glories of the Victorian age & represents an opportunity for couples to participate in a long tradition of English feasting. Photographs, 2 References. K. Hyatt

88T3625

Fluehr-Lobban, Carolyn (Dept Anthropology & Geography Rhode Island Coll, Providence 02908), Marxism and the Matriarchate: 100 Years after The Origin of the Family, Private Property and the State, Critique of Anthropology, 1987, 7, 1, summer, 5-14

¶ Frederick Engels's The Origin of the Family, Private Property and the State (1884) is considered by Western feminist scholars as one of the foundations in the critical scholarship that has reevaluated Western thought regarding women. The transformation of women's status in society, according to Engels, occurred with the replacement of matriarchal forms of kinship with paternal descent & patriarchy, amounting to what Engels called "the world historical defeat of the F sex." Mother-right has also been interpreted as mother-rule or the matriarchate, which has been criticized & eventually repudiated in Western anthropological theory. The works of J. J. Bachofen & Lewis Henry Morgan, which take positions similar to Engels, have been similarly criticized. In socialist scholarship in the USSR & Eastern Europe, the idea that a period of mother rule (ie, matriarchy) preceded patriarchy has been subjected to critical review since the 1950s; however, the question of historically prior forms of F kinship & descent is still actively being debated in socialist scholarship. 30 References. Modified AA

88T3626

Goudsblom, Johan (Sociologisch Instituut U Amsterdam, NL-1012 CA Netherlands), The Domestication of Fire as a Civilizing Process, Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 457-476

¶ The ability to handle fire is, along with language & the use of tools, a cultural universal. This ability forms a part of the infrastructure of known human societies, involving a set of interrelated controls over the natural environment, social relations, & individual emotions. Norbert Elias's sociological theory in The Civilizing Process (see IRPS No 3 83c00199 & 83c00200) is used in combination with current paleoanthropological evidence in an attempt to reconstruct the first stages of the domestication process. Special attention is paid to the problem of how the control of fire became a "species monopoly" in which all human societies share & from which all other animals are excluded. 50 References. AA

14 social anthropology

88T3646

Baroin, Catherine (Laboratoire anthropologie & préhistoire des pays de la Méditerranée Occidentale, Aix-en-Provence France), The Position of Tubu Women in Pastoral Production: Daza Keshberda, Republic of Niger, Ethnos, 1987, 52, 1-2, 137-155

¶ The Tubu live in northern Chad, eastern Niger, & southern Libya. They keep cattle & camels for milk & goats for meat. An account is offered of the women's role in the practical DoFL tasks & their position in the structure of rights to livestock. It is noted that Tubu women's limited stock rights tend overwhelmingly to derive from the relation they have to other people; these rights to livestock are fundamental for understanding the position of Tubu women in society. 1 Map, 3 References. HA

88T3647

Bourgeot, André (Centre national recherche scientifique, F-75700 Paris France), The Twareg Women of Ahaggar and the Creation of Value, Ethnos, 1987, 52, 1-2, 103-118

¶ The Ahaggar Twareg are herders of camels & small stock who live in the desert of southern Algeria. Their society is divided into categories of noblemen, tributaries, & slaves. Focusing on the colonial & precolonial period, demonstrated is how among noblemen & tributaries, M supremacy over Fs builds on Ms' control over the process that creates exchange-value rather than use-value. Also described is how the gender-based & class-based forms of DoFL interlock. 10 References. HA

88T3648

Brown, Paula (State U New York, Stony Brook 11790), Simbu Aggression and the Drive to Win, Anthropological Quarterly, 1986, 59, 4, Oct, 165-170.

¶ An examination of aggressive behavior in the Simbu, a tribal people of the Papua New Guinea highlands, based on fieldwork & secondary data. The Simbu were traditionally warriors; aggressive behavior is stimulated in youths & admired in men. Sexual segregation, M dominance, group solidarity, & rivalry directed by big men (aggressive group leaders) against opponent individuals & groups continue to support men's aggression. In the 1970s this has taken the form of resurgence of violent tribal warfare & political conflict. Modified HA

88T3649

Durán Pérez, Teresa (Catholic U Chile Sede Temuco, Santiago), Identidad mapuche. Un problema de vida y de concepto (Mapuche Identity A Problem of Life and Concept), ♦ América Indígena, 1986, 46, 4, Oct-Dec, 691-722. (SPA)

Based on historical evidence & various anthropological studies, a set of systematic hypotheses is proposed in order to understand how the Mapuche people of Chile are identified in their own communities, & how they identify themselves. The Mapuches' own perceptions of identity are examined from two perspectives: within the Mapuche community, & in the national, Chilean society. This approach reveals an epistemological contrast between meaning & nomothetic theory. 46 References. Modified HA

88T3650

Earl, Duncan M. (Dept Modern Languages & Linguistics U Maryland Baltimore County, Catonsville 21228), El simbolismo de la política y la política del simbolismo. El Carnaval Chamula y el mantenimiento de la comunidad (The Symbolism of Politics and the Politics of Symbolism: The Carnival of the Chamulas and the Maintenance of Community), ♦ América Indígena, 1986, 46, 3, July-Sept, 545-567. (SPA)

¶ An analysis of the symbolic representations that characterize the tajimoltik (carnival) among the Tzotzil-speaking Chamula Indians in the highlands of Chiapas, Mexico. The functions of these activities are described in both the historical & present-day context of these Indian communities. Information is drawn from field research & published studies. Through its use of rituals & paraphernalia, the carnival symbolizes community solidarity, validates & reinforces the local power structure based on political-religious hierarchies, & expresses a collective recognition of community authority & tradition. Observation of the carnival celebrations in two newly established but contrasting communities on the edge of the Lacandon jungle shows how the development of differentiated ritual models corresponds to different sociocultural conditions. 7 References. Modified HA

ences Modified HA

88T3651

Ensminger, Jean (Northwestern U, Evanston IL 60201), Economic and Political Differentiation among Galoloe Orma Women, Ethnos, 1987, 52, 1-2, 28-49

¶ The Orma are cattle-herders living close to the Tana River in Kenya. Following an outline of Orma propertyholding & of women's contributions to production in terms of labor, the relationship between control over resources (either outright ownership, rights over use, or indirect control through children's ownership) is discussed with regard to the influence that women wield in issues such as sale of stock, decisions to shift or not, & use of child labor. Formal & informal positions of power held by Orma women are analyzed in relation to the effectiveness of women's influence over production decisions. The access that Orma women have to property varies with the degree of integration into the cash economy & their position on the nomadic-sedentary continuum. With greater sedentarization & integration into the cash economy, women seem to lose control over economic resources in terms of outright ownership. They participate less in manual tasks of production. However, by a variety of informal & formal means, they gain more control over economic decision making. 42 References. HA

88T3652

Herd, Gilbert (U Chicago, IL 60634), Aspects of Socialization for Aggression in Sambia Ritual and Warfare, Anthropological Quarterly, 1986, 59, 4, Oct, 160-164

¶ Selected aspects of aggression are described among the Sambia of the Eastern Highlands, Papua New Guinea, based on previously published studies. Two types of aggressive behavior are studied in the context of the developmental cycle of Sambia: instrumental aggression, in which the agent produces distress in others to achieve pragmatic goals, & hostile aggression, in which hurting the other person is an end in itself & serves to establish a power balance between agent & object. Initiation ceremonies are viewed as the main mediating mechanism in changes in aggressive behavior between childhood & adulthood. The Sambia findings are discussed in contrast to data on other Melanesian societies. HA

88T3653

Irwin, John (San Francisco State U, CA 94132), Reflections on Ethnography, Journal of Contemporary Ethnography, 1987, 16, 1, Apr, 41-48

¶ It is argued that any approach to ethnography not based on a phenomenological perspective, especially any objectivist approach, is a distortion & indeed a corruption. Personal experience in criminological research is cited to illustrate this thesis. A major virtue of ethnographic approaches is that they promote recognition of common humanity with their Ss. 6 References. W H Stoddard

88T3654

Klein, Gary D. (Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122), South Africans of Gujarati-Indian Descent: Cultural, Structural, and Ideological Dynamics within Their Community, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1024-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8716378.

88T3655

Lawuyi, Olantunde Bayo (Obafemi Awolowo U, Ife-Ife Nigeria), Obituary and Ancestral Worship: Analysis of a Contemporary Cultural Form in Nigeria, ♦ Sociological Analysis, 1988, 48, 4, winter, 372-379.

¶ Data from content analysis of obituary notices (N = 202) in the Daily Times of Nigeria are analyzed to assess the relationship between age & death in ancestral beliefs among the Yoruba. Since these obituary notices represent a form of communication among the living & between the living & the dead, changes in ancestral beliefs between different age groups & among family members can be examined. Results indicate the cultural preferences for older Ms & the continued appreciation of the role of the dead in human affairs among the Yoruba. 4 Tables, 12 References. F. Rasmussen

88T3636

Nowotny, Helga (U Vienna, A-1010 Austria), Dal futuro al presente esteso: il tempo nei sistemi sociali (From the Future to the Extended Present Time in Social Systems), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug, 7-26 (ITA)

Translated by Rosella Fongoli.

¶ The concept of time is examined as a social & cultural construction & in industrial societies as the dimensional base of technology. Time is considered at the macrosocial level. Three logical qualities—mobility, scarcity, & flexibility characterize time-space relations, the conversion of material objects into time, & information-intensive technologies. It is argued that in postindustrial or programmed societies, there is a new concept of time, in which the idea of "extended present" (which is programmable) is replacing the old category of "future." 30 References. Modified HA

88T3637

Pandian, J. (California State U, Fullerton 92634), The Mythology of the Other and the Roots of Modern Anthropology, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 1-2, Jan-Apr, 1-31

¶ An exploration of the historical roots of anthropology in Judeo-Christian myths & perspectives. The central theme of anthropology as a myth is the human other as a source of insight into one's own condition. This historically unique myth can be traced to the Renaissance, it assumed its modern form during the nineteenth century. The other became the repository of attributes excluded from the West's description of itself as the subject of progressive revelation of knowledge & of the divine other. W. H. Stoddard

88T3638

Peterson, Eric E. (Southern Illinois U, Carbondale 62901), The Stories of Pregnancy: On Interpretation of Small-Group Cultures, U Communication Quarterly, 1987, 35, 1, winter, 39-47

¶ Stories of pregnancy are examined to illustrate the strategic nature of family storytelling. Phenomenology is used to explore the nature & function of storytelling as a cultural strategy for the generation & reproduction of small-group cultures. An eidetic analysis reveals the way stories of pregnancy organize communication & constitute "the family" as a small-group culture. 36 References. HA

88T3639

Rindos, David (5137 Bower Rd, Trumansburg NY 14886), The Evolution of the Capacity of Culture: Sociobiology, Structuralism, and Cultural Selectionism, Current Anthropology, 1986, 27, 4, Aug-Oct, 315-326

¶ Cultural selectionism is a Darwinian approach to understanding human culture, which, in contrast to sociobiology, holds that cultural evolution proceeds solely on the phenotypic level. Unlike structuralism, cultural selectionism predicts that the form taken by any culture will reflect selective episodes occurring within specific historical settings rather than being predetermined by underlying, genetically induced biases of the human mind. Genetic selection, however, must be invoked to understand the difficult issues of the origin of the human cultural capacity & the maintenance of this capacity in modern humans. Both the origin & the maintenance of the genetic capacity for culture in humans is most realistically modeled if it is assumed that culture is fundamentally an adaptation to the social, as opposed to the natural, environment. AA

88T3640

Robertson, Roland (U Pittsburgh, PA 15260-0001), Globalization Theory and Civilizational Analysis, Comparative Civilizations Review, 1987, 17, fall, 20-30

¶ A response is offered to the critical comments made by Vytautas Kavolis on globalization theory in this issue of Comparative Civilizations Review (see abstract in this section), in which the closeness of globalization theory to civilization analysis is argued. The need to recognize globalization theory as a corrective to Western-centered accounts of world history is emphasized. 12 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3641

Rowbotham, Sheila, Rock Candy Mountain, U New Society, 1987, 80, 1272, 15 May, 25

¶ A bemused look at the culture of southern Calif from the perspective of a F literary guestworker from GB. This "environment which makes you feel as if you are continually part of a TV set" is seen as epitomizing the US culture of consumption; here, even among the have-nots, there is the possibility & hope of achieving the good life. It is a land that co-dicts itself: affirmative self-expansion is bridled by the self-denial evident in the health club, & new hypermarkets coexist alongside the traditional farmers' markets & street vendors. The strong sense of past that permeates Europe is absent here, "as if the sun bleaches out memory." It is concluded that Calif epitomizes the extremities of the modern paradox between the needs of having & of being. K. Hyatt

88T3642

Stavenhagen, Rodolfo (Colegio México, 10740 Mexico DF), Culture and Society in Latin America: A Reappraisal, Ethnic Studies Report, 1986, 4, 1, Jan, 50-58

¶ The attempt by Latin American intellectuals, in a movement separate from that of political elites, to develop a national culture & identity in the past century is chronicled. Major contradictions that have impeded this effort include (1) the rejection of a colonial & feudal past in a desire for progress & modernity, which has meant accepting foreign cultural models & values, (2) competing demands from national & regional interests vs continental ideas of culture & objectives; & (3) a highly differentiated ethnic & cultural population characterized by a persistent racial conflict, particularly regarding the position of Indian cultures in relation to white & mestizo populations. Recently, efforts to integrate these Indian cultures have been advanced, though the belief that they have little to contribute to Latin American culture remains. Indians' retaliatory demands for equality, particularly in the areas of basic human rights, land acquisition, & collective linguistic/cultural acceptance, are examined, & implications for government cultural & educational policies & traditional notions of the nation state are discussed. K. Hyatt

88T3643

Stratton, J. (Dept English U Queensland, Brisbane 4 Australia), Sociology and the Category of Culture: The Problem of Specificity, U The Australian and New Zealand Journal of Sociology, 1987, 23, 2, July, 246-260

¶ The relationship between the discursive areas classified under the terms sociology & culture are examined from a historical perspective leading up to the modern sociological understanding of culture as articulated through the dominant, Parsonian originated paradigm. It is suggested that the success of Parsonian inflected sociology has led to neglect of questions concerned with sociocultural specificity in favor of a movement toward normative universalization. One way in which this has been achieved has been through a very particular redefinition of the meaning of culture. One concrete effect of the acceptance of this redefinition has been that the problem of sociocultural distinctiveness has been hard to formulate, let alone come to terms with. 22 References. HA

88T3644

Yokoyama, Hiroshi (3-3-53-701 Nagahigashi Sumiyoshiku, O-558 Japan), The Comparative Theory of Religion: The Symbolism of the Mountain in the Japanese Folk Religion and Buddhism, Psychologia, 1985, 28, 2, June, 115-127

¶ The mountain has been very important in the Japanese culture since ancient times, playing an especially significant role in Japanese folk religions & Buddhism. It is shown that the maternal aspect of the mountain is more important than the paternal one, especially in Shintoism. The deity of the mountain is a protector of the Japanese people & assumes the figure of a goddess. In Buddhism, the spiritual aspect of the mountain is more accentuated. In European culture, the relationship between society & nature tends to be an opposite one; the close relationship with nature is the most important aspect of Japanese spirituality. Japanese Buddhism typically expresses this quality. 17 References. Modified HA

88T3645

---, Comments, Current Anthropology, 1986, 27, 4, Aug-Oct, 326-329.

Reply, 329-332.

¶ Comments on David Rindos's "The Evolution of the Capacity for Culture: Sociobiology, Structuralism, and Cultural Selection" (see abstract in this section) are offered by: R. C. Dunnell (Anthropology Dept, U Washington, Seattle), Susantha Goonatilake (Research Dept, Prof Bank, PO Box 728, Colombo 2, Sri Lanka), William Irons (Anthropology Dept, Northwestern U, Evanston Ill), Peter J. Richerson & Robert Boyd (Inst of Ecology, U of California, Davis), Ino Rossi (235 Shrewsbury Dr, Great Neck, NY), Jan F. Simek (Anthropology Dept, U Tennessee, Knoxville), & Jan Wind (Inst of Human Genetics, Free University of Amsterdam, the Netherlands), with a Reply by David Rindos that reiterates his central thesis: the origin of the human capacity for culture through a process of natural selection. W. H. Stoddard

0600 complex organization

21 sociology of work

88T3664

Afanasyev, Vyacheslav Stepanovich (Leningrad State U, USSR), Prichiny sotsial'no-ekonomicheskikh poter' na proizvodstve (The Reasons for Social and Economic Losses in Industry), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 85-89 (RUS)

* To find ways to decrease SE losses in labor resources, questionnaire data were obtained from Petrozavodsk, USSR, workers (N = 1,574) in 1983/84. The most frequently cited reasons for lost work time were lateness, absenteeism, & leaving early from the job site. Almost 20% felt that alcohol use lowered worker productivity. Official sources suggest that alcohol accounts for up to 30% of lost labor productivity. For every ruble the state earns on sale of liquor, up to 3 are lost in work productivity. The relationship between alcohol abuse & worker turnover is also reviewed. 1 Photograph, 14 References. G Prostakov

88T3665

Almqvist, Elizabeth M. (North Texas State U, Denton 76203), Labor Market Gender Inequality in Minority Groups, ♦ Gender & Society, 1987, 1, 4, Dec, 400-414

* Women's small share of professional & managerial occupations compared with their share of the total LF is examined for the 11 largest racial & ethnic minority groups in the US, with an eye toward uncovering some correlates of this within-group inequality. Aggregate-level 1980 census data indicate that gender-related characteristics, SC, & ethnic variables influence women's share of the top jobs. Labor market inequality is greatest among smaller, more affluent minorities, many of whom are recent immigrants. Minority & gender status intersect, so that Ms monopolize surplus resources among more affluent minority groups & use them to secure a more advantaged labor market position. 3 Tables, 16 References. Modified HA

88T3666

Bennett, Nathan & Kelley, Linda S. (Coll Management Georgia Inst Technology, Atlanta 30322), Assessing the Acceptance of the Disease Concept of Alcoholism among EAP Practitioners, Journal of Drug Issues, 1987, 17, 3, summer, 281-299

* An investigation of the degree to which the disease model of alcoholism is accepted by those variously charged with administering work-based employee assistance programs (EAPs), along with their attitudes toward the employment of recovering alcoholics in EAP positions. Interview & mail questionnaire data were collected from EAP administrators & liaisons (N = 308) from 480 private sector work organizations in Calif, NY, Tex, NC, Minn, & Mich. Results indicate that personal recovery from alcoholism, the role of co-alcoholic, & the occupational setting of EAP personnel all affect their attitudes toward alcoholism & recovering alcoholics. 6 Tables, 14 References. Modified HA

88T3667

Benokraitis, Nijole & Feagin, Joe R. (U Baltimore, Charles Mount Royal MD 21201), Subtle and Covert Mechanisms of Sex Discrimination: A Theoretical and Empirical Analysis, National Journal of Sociology, 1987, 1, 2, fall, 208-236

* Social scientists have devoted considerably more attention to documenting the results rather than the day-to-day mechanisms of sex discrimination in employment. A content analysis of intv data from 310 US Rs suggests that discriminatory mechanisms—which include defining & treating women primarily as sex objects, subordinates in a sex hierarchy, service providers, & exploited workers—operate across a variety of occupational levels. It is shown that many of the most effective discriminatory mechanisms are subtle & covert rather than blatant & overt. 17 References. HA

88T3668

Bills, David B. (U Iowa, Iowa City 52242), Costs, Commitment, and Rewards: Factors Influencing the Design and Implementation of Internal Labor Markets, Administrative Science Quarterly, 1987, 32, 2, June, 202-221.

† Much research on internal labor markets (ILMs) has been hampered by failure to differentiate the wide variety of internal ILMs, accounts of their determinants that emphasize isolated causal factors, lack of detailed material describing the economic & organizational dimensions of their design & implementation, & neglect of managerial perceptions of & motivations for constructing ILMs. Detailed case studies are presented of three US organizations: a manufacturing firm, consulting firm, & not-for-profit hospital—that have constructed very different ILMs. Based primarily on semistructured interviews conducted with managers & personnel at various other levels (N not provided) a model of the determinants of ILMs is developed that centers around the concepts of costs, commitment, & rewards in an attempt to assess the interactions of effects of markets & hierarchies on ILMs. The model is built on the premise that the underlying imperatives typically held to affect ILMs are inevitably filtered through managerial beliefs & the constraints on managerial decision making. The implications of these findings for theory & research on ILMs are discussed. 1 Figure, 40 References. Modified HA

88T3669

Bills, David B. (N426 Lindquist Center U Iowa, Iowa City 52242), Educational Credentials and Promotions: Does Schooling Do More Than Get You in the Door?, Am Sociology of Education, 1988, 61, 1, Jan, 52-60

† The relationship between educational credentials & the ways in which employers assign promotions is examined based on an analysis of specific hiring & promotion decisions in five organizations in Chicago, Ill. Interviews with appointees, appointing managers, & personnel officers (N not provided) indicate that educational credentials are more important for entry into an organization (being hired) than for advancement in an organization (being promoted), experience is greatly valued by those managers who hire from outside & those who promote from within; & although most appointing managers value personality, they evaluate it differently, depending on the nature of the transaction. It is suggested that models that attribute either excessive rationality or irrationality to employers are overstated & that more detailed data on organizational processes are required to explicate the demand side of labor markets more fully. 2 Tables, 28 References. HA

88T3670

Block, Richard N. & Stieber, Jack (School Labor & Industrial Relations Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824), The Impact of Attorneys and Arbitrators on Arbitration Awards, Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 1987, 40, 4, July, 543-555.

† An analysis of the impact of attorney representation & the identity of the arbitrator on a sample of 1,213 grievance arbitration awards in US cases involving employee discharge for just cause. Regression analyses indicate that, as compared to cases in which neither side is represented by an attorney, each party has more favorable arbitration awards when it has attorney representation & the other party does not. When both sides have attorney representation, however, the awards do not differ from those given when neither side has attorney representation. The awards of certain arbitrators are consistently more favorable to one of the parties than the other, suggesting that an arbitrator's identity can make a substantial difference in these types of cases. 4 Tables, 10 References. Modified HA

88T3671

Bloom, Howard S. (New York U, NY 10003), Lessons from the Delaware Dislocated Worker Pilot Program, Evaluation Review, 1987, 11, 2, Apr, 157-177

† A summary of some lessons learned from an innovative employment & training program for dislocated workers—ie, persons who have lost stable, long-term jobs due to changing technology &/or increased international competition—conducted as a randomized experiment by the Del Dept of Labor between Jan & June 1983. Specific information about program design & services is provided to illustrate how social experimentation can be used by state & local governments &, additionally, how qualitative & quantitative information from process & impact analyses can be integrated to provide a richer picture of the program experience than would be possible otherwise. 4 Tables, 3 Figures, 1 Appendix, 7 References. Modified HA

88T3656

Marzouki, Ilhem (U Tunis, Tunisia). Pour une étude du changement social dans les tribus berbères. Présupposés théoriques (Toward a Study of Social Change among the Berber Tribes Theoretical Assumptions), IBLA. Revue de l'Institut des Belles Lettres Arabes a Tunis, 1986, 49, 2(158), 263-296. (FRF)

¶ A discussion of the theoretical basis of research on tribal groups in Tunisia. Basic questions concerning the concept of the tribe & the definition of the object of research are considered, & aspects of methodology & research techniques are reviewed. In studying the conservation/dislocation of Berber tribal structures in the context of modern Tunisian society, it is felt that the notion of identity is a key indicator of the level of permanence. A projected study of Douiret, a Berber village in southern Tunisia, is outlined. This community gives evidence of the erosion of traditional social structures, but also of the survival of certain characteristic features, eg, collective administration, egalitarianism, reciprocal lending, & the persistence of cultural models. The approach chosen is an anthropological study based on participant observation. AA Tr & Modified by C Waters

88T3657

Masferrer Kan, Elio (National Instit Anthropology & History, Cordoba 45 Mexico 7 DF), Religion y política en la Sierra Norte de Puebla (Religion and Politics in the Northern Sierra of Puebla), América Indígena, 1986, 46, 3, July-Sept, 531-544. (SPA)

¶ Capitalistic penetration in the Indian communities in northern Puebla, Mexico, is analyzed in terms of its impact on the traditional political & religious systems. Early documents of the Spanish colony show that the system of leadership among the Totonac Indians was affected by historical processes in Mexico. Contemporary ethnographic information demonstrates how the system of authority adapts to new circumstances, revealing a definite continuity. A characteristic of this continuity is the persistence of nondifferentiation between political & religious systems, since religion is seen as an entire system explaining all aspects of social life. This religiosity can thus be influential in social movements aimed at regaining land or civil rights, & in the appearance of SC consciousness, as well as in the culture & value system. 1 Appendix, 35 References. Modified HA

88T3658

Robarchek, Clayton A. (Wichita State U, KS 67208), Helplessness, Fearfulness, and Peacefulness: The Emotional and Motivational Contexts of Semai Social Relations, Anthropological Quarterly, 1986, 59, 4, Oct, 177-183.

¶ Much of the controversy over the sources of human violence is traceable to conflicting conceptions of human action as determined or as motivated. Here, the pervasive nonviolence of the Semai Senoi of Malaysia, based on a psychometric test administered to members of a village community (N = 19), showing it to be rooted in understandings of the world & meanings imparted to it, ie, in appraisals & interpretations of experience based in culturally given conceptions, definitions, & assumptions. Focusing on human motives & on the psychological & cosmological spaces within which they are generated, the dynamics of two important psychocultural themes: dependence & danger—are explored as they interact in defining reality for Semai. Cultural beliefs & values, individual cognitive & affective orientations, & the institutional orders in which they are manifested are examined, as these constitute the motivational context of Semai social action, defining a reality where violence is essentially precluded as an option. HA

88T3659

Scholte, Bob (U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands), The Literary Turn in Contemporary Anthropology. Critique of Anthropology, 1987, 7, 1, summer, 33-47. Comment, 49-51.

¶ A review essay on a book edited by James Clifford & George E. Marcus, Writing Culture: The Poetics and Politics of Ethnography (Berkeley & Los Angeles, U of California Press, 1986 (see listing in IRPS No. 42)). Clifford & Marcus address the question of ethnographic literacy: how another culture is written up. This concern with literacy reflects a recent shift from an observational & empirical methodology to a communicative & dialogical epistemology. Its central question has two aspects, how ethnographic authority & ethnological legitimacy are constituted, & why anthropological viability has recently become problematic. The various essays in the collection address several facets of these questions, offering some provocative theoretical proposals. In Still Rayting: to Scholte, Stephen A. Tyler (Rice U, Houston, Tex) agrees that anthropology has lost legitimacy but suggests that this is a result of the emergence of a new mass audience for ethnography. The problems, book lie mainly in its still being too trapped in politics & too conservative in its literary expression. It fails to attain postmodernism, since postmodernism gives no priority to any discourse. Ultimately the varying degrees of demystification it pursues are simply tedious. W H Stoddard

88T3660

Seda, Eduardo (U Puerto Rico, Río Piedras), Dos modos de asimilación y sus efectos para la integración nacional (Two Kinds of Assimilation and Their Effects on National Integration), América Indígena, 1986, 46, 4, Oct-Dec, 659-689. (SPA)

¶ Some conceptual errors rooted in racism are analyzed, especially they operate against Latin Americans in US society, the specific example of discrimination against Puerto Ricans in New York City is discussed. A theoretical model is used to explain this process of marginalization which establishes a dichotomy between what Wallace E. Lambert called "additive or co-cultural assimilation" & "subtractive assimilation" ("The Effects of Bilingualism on the Individual: Cognitive and Cultural Consequences" in Hornby, Peter (Ed), Bilingualism, Psychological, Social and Educational Implications, New York: Academic Press, 1977). The former emerges when the insertion of a group's values or lifestyle within a second culture does not bring about the loss of this lifestyle in the original culture; the latter refers to the split between two cultures, which produces incomplete individuals. The conceptual differences between social & cultural assimilation are discussed, as is the reality of the "statehood" of Puerto Rico. The role of anthropologists in Puerto Rican intellectual life is criticized. It is concluded that non-Americans in the US will never be assimilated within the society. 30 References. Modified HA

88T3661

Talle, Aud (U Stockholm, S-10691 Sweden), Women as Heads of Houses: The Organization of Production and the Role of Women among Pastoral Maasai in Kenya, Ethnos, 1987, 52, 1-2, 50-80.

¶ The Maasai are cattle pastoralists, living on the grass savanna in southern Kenya & northern Tanzania. Focusing on Kenya, Maasai women are described as "heads of houses." The house as a physical structure which symbolically embodies a matrilineal unit of consumption & resource sharing that is the smallest unit of Maasai society. In terms of livestock property, such units are subordinated to larger, patriarchal units. However, it is argued that the relative autonomy of Maasai houses & women's control over food resources are significantly decreasing, due to present commercialization of Maasai production. 29 References. Modified HA

88T3662

Tavakolian, Bahram (Denison U, Granville OH 43023), Sheikh Women: Sisters, Mothers and Wives, Ethnos, 1987, 52, 180-199.

¶ The Sheikhanzai are goat- & sheep-herding pastoralists who migrate from winter pastures near the Iranian & Soviet borders of Afghanistan to highland summer pastures in the western Hindu Kush. An attempt is made to show that Sheikhanzai women's management of economic resources provides a source of power that is frequently unavailable to men in sedentary communities. The domestic work & productive activities of Sheikhanzai women are examined in the context of their roles as herders & -brokers. Attention is drawn to intrasocietal variations between different categories of women. 20 References. HA

88T3663

Watson-Franke, Maria-Barbara (San Diego State U, CA 92182), Women and Property in Guajiro Society, Ethnos, 1987, 52, 229-245.

¶ Property-related issues & concepts among the Guajiro—a matrilineal cattle pastoralist society in Colombia & Venezuela—are discussed from a woman's perspective, focusing on types, acquisition, & management of property as well as death- & compensation-linked property transactions. Also considered are questions pertaining to fertility & productivity in pastoral societies & women's significance as resources & potential property. 33 References. HA ing Women) as well as interviews with 72 office workers (both BWB members & nonmembers). Results indicate that job security, supportive bosses, & experience in protesting inequities eased some of the difficulties associated with activism, & commitment to working women's issues helped sustain activism. Workers who feared reprisals from unsupportive bosses & coworkers, but joined BWB for reasons of friendship, tended not to be active. Nonmembers' loyalty to employers & family demands muted their potential as recruits. Implications for other organizations of collective action are discussed. 3 Tables, 30 References. Modified HA

88T3683

(epollaro, Giancarlo, Il turno in vestaglia. Las prospettiva del telelavoro tra mito, problemi e realtà (Working in a Dressing Gown: The Prospects for Telework: Myths, Problems, and Reality), Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 135-159 (ITA)

The possibility that many people can work at home, using computer terminals connected to a central base, is by now a concrete prospect, both technologically & economically feasible. However, beyond considering the technical practicalities of "telework," there is an area of social experimentation. This phenomenon brings into discussion individual habits, social relationships, the nature & operation of organizations, & elements of collective life. Different models & possible organizational solutions are examined here, using data from various studies. The costs & benefits for workers, employers, & society in general are investigated. 8 Tables. Modified HA

88T3684

(esareo, Vincenzo (Dipt Sociologia U Cattolica Milano, I-20123 Italy), Valori e bisogni dei lavoratori italiani (Italian Workers' Values and Needs), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 2, Apr-June, 111-122 (ITA)

It is suggested that Italy's transition to a postindustrial society requires a redefinition of the value of work, especially for workers in the manufacturing industries. Drawing on the theories of Agnes Heller & Ronald Inghart, a new concept of work is outlined, in which its values are polydimensional & conditioned. This concept combines materialist & post-materialist approaches. While the value of work will continue to play an important role in the life of the individual, it will no longer represent the main value sphere of existence. In future, work is expected to become more flexible, open to the differing needs of individual workers & also to the increasingly complex demands of the postindustrial society. Modified HA

88T3685

(habaud, Corinne & de Terssac, Gilbert (Centre recherches sociologiques U Toulouse II, F-31058 Cedex France), Du marbre a l'ecran: rigidité des prescriptions et régulations de l'allure de travail (From Slab to Screen: The Rigidity of Prescriptions and Regulations about Work Speed), Journal of Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 3, 305-322, (FRE)

An investigation of the difference between formal rules & implicit norms in the workplace. A detailed analysis of the actual daily work activities of 28 keyboard operators working for a daily newspaper in France was conducted over 2 months. The ways in which regulations about work speed are applied, & deadlines met, show that there is a logic of efficiency in the way official regulations are challenged, & that productive & clandestine activities are often complementary. 49 References. Modified HA

88T3686

(chernina, Natal'ya Vladimirovna (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leningrad Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Opyt sotsiologicheskikh issledovaniy trudovogo povedeniya rabotnikov promyshlennosti (An Experience of Sociological Research in the Field of Labor Behavior of Industrial Workers), Izvestiya Sibirskogo otdeleniya Akademii nauk SSSR, Seriya Ekonomika i prikladnaya sotsiologia, 1987, 2(8), May, 30-40 (RUS)

Despite recent attempts by Soviet officials to raise labor productivity, it is estimated that 70%-80% of workers are underutilized. Analysis of worker behavior through a survey of the literature shows important subconcepts: adherence to production schedules, quality of work, care in use of materials, discipline, initiative, & participation in innovation programs. SE regulators of worker behavior include financial remuneration, supplementary vacation, opportunities for travel, rewards for production in excess of quotas, conferring of special honors, access to consumer goods in short supply, & informing the worker's family about his good level of performance. 2 Tables. G. Prostavkov

88T3687

(Ciampi, Silvia, L'organizzazione del lavoro negli impianti nucleari in fase di decommissioning: il caso del Garigliano (The Organization of Work in a Nuclear Plant in a Decommissioning Phase: The Case of Garigliano), Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 285-297 (ITA)

Problems of the organization of work in an electronuclear power station during the phase of deactivation of the plant preceding its dismantling are investigated. The theoretical frame of reference is the application of systems theory to the study of organizations, centered on the concept of the social-technical system. In a case study of the nuclear plant at Garigliano, Italy—which ceased production in 1978, having reached its technical limit of useful life (25-30 years)—differences are identified between management structure & operational structure. 1 Figure. Modified HA (Cooke, Kenneth (Social Policy Research Unit U York, Heslington YO1 5DD England), The Withdrawal from Paid Work of the Wives of Unemployed Men: A Review of Research, Journal of Social Policy, 1987, 16, 3, July, 371-382.

88T3688

Evidence from British, US, & Australian surveys suggests that when married men become unemployed, their wives tend also to withdraw from paid work. One of the most frequently cited reasons for this effect is the very small amount that wives are able to earn without incurring deductions from the family's social security benefits, but other factors may be equally, or more, important. The evidence of this effect is reviewed, & a number of reasons that have been adduced to account for it are described. Proposals for further explanatory research are outlined. 1 Table, 34 References. Modified HA

88T3689

(Crockett, Geoff & Hall, Ken (School Economics & Finance Curtin U Technology, South Bentley West Australia 6102), Salaried Professionals and Union Membership: An Australian Perspective, The Journal of Industrial Relations, 1987, 29, 1, Mar, 49-65

Using 1970s survey data from 1968-1975 Western Australian Instit of Technology graduates (N = 88), a logistic regression approach was used to identify individual & institutional characteristics of salaried professionals that significantly increased the probability of belonging to a union. Individual endowments & characteristics such as sex, marital status, & previous unemployment history were shown not to be important determinants of union membership. Several individual characteristics such as level of full-time work experience, & an individual emphasis on job security were identified as important determinants of union membership among this group of salaried professionals, however, institutional characteristics, such as industry & public vs private sector employment, tended to dominate as predictors of union membership. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 24 References. HA

88T3690

(Culley, John Arthur (State U New York, Albany 12203), Height Standards and Policing: Rationale or Rationalization?, Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1021-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714395.

88T3691

(Dahrendorf, Ralf, Se alla società del lavoro viene a mancare il lavoro (If There Is a Lack of Work for the Working Society), Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 47-61 (ITA)

Translated by Alberto Noceti.

Unemployment is one of today's most troublesome problems. Modern society is by definition a working society, yet there is often a lack of work. The two solutions that have been attempted—a "liberal" economic orientation concerning the offer of work, or political intervention toward restoring the working society—have both proved inadequate. Possible alternatives are discussed here. The optimistic view is that the concept of "activity" can increasingly & successfully substitute for work, but the pessimistic view sees the growing phenomenon of unofficial or "black market" work as an indication of a retrograde movement back to the harsher working conditions of an earlier age, which would suit the interests of exploitive employers, who will therefore try to block the transition from a "working society" to an "activity society." Modified HA

88T3672

Bóhm, Antal, "Ingázó ország"—az ingázás előzményei hazánkban (A "Commuting Country": Antecedents of Commuting in Our Country). Szociológia, 1983, 4, 433-443. (HUN)

¶ Abstract not currently available

88T3673

Borek, C. (Politechnika Wroclawska, Poland), Rola czynników meteorologicznych i osobniczych w powstawaniu wypadków przy pracy (The Role of Meteorological and Individual Factors in Occurrence of Work Accidents). * Dissertation Abstracts International C: European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 477 (POL)

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T3674

Borjan, George J. (U California, Santa Barbara 93106), Immigrants, Minorities, and Labor Market Competition. Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 1987, 40, 3, Apr, 382-392

¶ The extent of labor market competition among immigrants, native minorities, & the native majority population is investigated. An analysis of 1980 US Census data reveals that immigrants tend to be substitutes for some labor market groups & complements for others. The effects of shifts in immigrant supply on the earnings of native-born men are, however, very small. On the other hand, increases in the supply of immigrants do have a sizable impact on the earnings of immigrants themselves: an increase of 10% in the supply of immigrants, for example, reduces the immigrant wage by about 10%. 7 Tables, 18 References. HA

88T3675

Botti, Hope Finney, Analisi strategica di una fondazione scientifica allo stato nascente (Strategic Analysis of a Scientific Foundation in Its Initial Stages). Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 183-215 (ITA)

¶ The findings of a 1984/85 empirical study of the creation of "Fondazione S" a feminist, scientific foundation in Italy are presented. Some background on the women's movement in Italy since 1970 is also provided. The method of analysis is based on the organizational-strategic approach of M. Crozier & E. Friedberg (Attore sociale e sistema sociologia dell'azione organizzata [Social Actor and System: Sociology of Organized Action], Milan: Etas Libri, 1978). The fecundity of this method is demonstrated, even in the analysis of extremely informal systems having a voluntaristic character. 3 figures, 45 References. Modified HA

88T3676

Bradley, Keith & Hill, Stephen (London School Economics & Political Science, Aldwych WC2A 2AE England), Quality Circles and Managerial Interests. UM Industrial Relations, 1987, 26, 1, winter, 68-82

¶ Quality circles: part of quality of working life (QoWL) programs that emphasize employee participation in decision making & organizational redesign are examined, with focus on the role of management. Data were gathered from a pilot study, in which 20 senior managers at 10 manufacturing firms in the US & GB were interviewed, & from 2 case studies of chemical & pharmaceutical plants in London (England), & Pa., involving interviews with managers & executives (ΣN = 35+) & questionnaires completed by quality circle members & nonmembers (ΣN = 277). Results indicate that the extent of organizational redesign necessary to accommodate new participative institutions is contingent on managers' attitudes, interest, incentive, & power. The economic & health/safety effects of participation in quality circles are summarized: both the corporation & the individual employee benefit, but not in ways that are often promised by QoWL advocates. It is argued that quality circles do not significantly change workplace industrial relations, nor do they present administrative or organizational challenges to management. 17 References. K. Hyatt

88T3677

Bramel, Dana & Friend, Ronald (State U New York, Stony Brook 11794), The Work Group and Its Vicissitudes in Social and Industrial Psychology. The Journal of Applied Behavioral Science, 1987, 23, 2, May, 233-253.

Social science theory & research have viewed the small group in the workplace as either the organization's means of controlling workers or a response to increasing power & demands. A historical survey reveals that the image & reality of work groups during 1935-1981 depended on the relative power of labor & capital as indicated by strikes & employment rates in specific periods. At times when worker power peaked, democratic, group-oriented methods were advocated; when worker power declined, individualistic, authoritative approaches prevailed. As more psychologists became unionized the needs of workers rather than management—particularly alienating work conditions & harmful consequences of lack of worker control—could be an increasing focus of their attention. 1 Figure, 82 References. Modified HA

88T3678

Braun, Dietmar (Insti Wetenschap Politiek U Amsterdam, NL-1012 GA Netherlands), Politiek-institutionele verklaringen van werkloosheid: een kritisch overzicht (Political-Institutional Explanation of Unemployment: A Critical Overview). Acta Politica, 1987, 22, 1, Jan, 87-107 (DUT)

¶ A review of the literature on the comparative analysis of the unemployment problem in Organization for Economic Cooperation & Development countries, with attention to whether these findings can be fruitful for a more policy-centered discussion of mass unemployment in the Netherlands. Three theoretical & empirical contributions explaining the divergent reactions to the unemployment problem are considered: the power-structure approach of Manfred G. Schmidt, which leans heavily on a class-politics thesis & the neocorporatist debate; the historical-materialistic viewpoint, which focuses on the institutional past of countries, & the action-oriented & institutionalist-cultural theory. It is suggested that a political-institutional analysis should assess the structures of policy making, the logic of collective action of the major interest organizations, & the logic of accommodation between the state & the major interest organization. 1 Table, 50 References. Modified AA

88T3679

Bronzo, Nadia, La modernizzazione organizzativa in un'amministrazione comunale (Organizational Modernization in Local Public Administration). Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 275-284 (ITA)

¶ The modernization of local public administration is examined in a case study of Città di Castello, a small community (under 20,000 inhabitants) in the province of Perugia, Italy. The process of reorganization is traced from its original cause—a 1977 law that transferred certain functions from the central state to the local government—to the solutions adopted. The problems encountered in the transition from a passive bureaucracy to an organization that promotes the SE development of the area are discussed. Modified HA

88T3680

Burawoy, Michael & Lukács, János, Mítoszok a munkáról: gyárak összehasonlítása egy szocialista és egy fejlett tőkes országban (Myths on Work: A Comparison of Factories in a Socialist and in an Advanced Capitalist Country). Társadalomkutatás, 1987, 2, 43-62 (HUN)

¶ In contrast to published comparisons of capitalist & socialist enterprises, which have been based on comparisons of ideal types or of an ideal model of one system with empirical data on the other, an attempt is made here to compare actually existing enterprises, one in Hungary & one in the US. Seven stereotypes are identified that grow out of the presumption that enterprises working within an economy of shortage are necessarily less effective than capitalist enterprises. It is argued that a technologically efficient socialist productive factory not only is possible but may have a higher level of efficiency than a capitalist factory under certain specific circumstances. However, the level of technical efficiency & the level of economic efficiency are not necessarily directly related. 69 References. Modified HA

88T3681

Burg, Mary Ann (U Florida, Gainesville 32611), Disabled Persons' Labor Force Response: Medical and Non-Medical Factors. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1020-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715973.

88T3682

Burton, Joan Keller (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Women's Studies Program Goucher Coll, Towson MD 21204), Dilemmas of Organizing Women Office Workers. ♦ Gender & Society, 1987, 1, 4 Dec, 432-446.

¶ Conditions that facilitate or hinder office worker activism are investigated using data from participant observations in Baltimore Working Women (BWW—a local Md affiliate of 9 to 5, National Assoc of Work

88T3701

Echeverría, Mirta. Formas de reclutamiento y fijación de la fuerza de trabajo en los yerbatales misioneros, en la primera mitad de siglo (Forms of Recruitment and Fixation of the Labor Force on the Maté Farms of Misiones, in the First Half of the Century). ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 66, May-Aug, 29-37 (SPA)

Maté farms of the Misiones province of Argentina in the early twentieth century are known to have corresponded to the form of plantation agriculture in all respects save their relation to the labor market, in which they corresponded more to the hacienda. An attempt is made to explain this discrepancy. The history of the development of the maté industry is reviewed, & the capital structure of farms & the major companies involved are described. An analysis of methods for recruitment & fixation of labor shows that, rather than dealing with labor on the free market, these farms employed coercive mechanisms designed to impoverish & tie up the family group, in order to guarantee the stability & cheapness of labor. These differences are attributed to the particular characteristics of the area & the industry. 5 References. J. Anderson

88T3702

Endo, Soichi. Title appears in Japanese (Some Problems of Management Labor, and Industry in Japan after World War II). Shakaigaku Hyoron/Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 2, Sept, 72-85 (JPN)

After WWII, industrial sociology in Japan began to study the social structure & function of the workplace as the smallest unit of the enterprise, adopting the human relations approach used by industrial sociologists in the US. Since then, the discipline has enlarged its scope of study from the micro- to the macrolevel, i.e., enterprise organizations, trade unions, industrial relations, & the industrial society as a whole. In light of Japan's rapid economic development since 1955, previous views of Japanese management as irrational have changed. Aspects of its success are explored, particularly its adaptability to both the institutional & cultural dimensions of organizations. It is suggested that the main characteristics of Japanese management will change substantially in the future through changes in fundamental beliefs toward managerial authority, aging personnel, & internationalization of enterprises. Various labor problems & the impact of recent technological changes are also investigated, suggestions offered for further research. 11 References. Modified HA

88T3703

England, George W. & Misumi, Jyuji (Center Economic & Management Research Coll Business Administration U Oklahoma, Norman 73019), Work Centrality in Japan and the United States. ♦ Journal of Cross-Cultural Psychology, 1986, 17, 4, Dec, 399-416

The concept of "work centrality" is developed to represent the general importance of work to individuals, & is measured as the ordinal importance position of work among a set of 5 significant life areas. The concept is used to compare the meaning of work in Japan & the US via structured interviews conducted with a stratified random sample of each country's employed LF ($\Sigma N = 4,228$). Results indicate that though work is important in both countries, it is considerably more important to members of the Japanese LF. Further analysis reveals that this large work centrality difference is a clear national-level difference rather than merely an occupational one. Several potential explanatory rationales for this difference are examined. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 35 References. Modified A

88T3704

Evans, Mary Kathryn (421 South Van Ness Ave #36, Los Angeles CA 90020), Department Secretaries: Unsung Heroines in the Resolution of Professional-Organizational Conflict. ♦ Human Organization, 1987, 46, 1, spring, 62-69.

An examination of the role & status of clerical workers in contemporary society based on data from participant observation in a community health center & unstructured interviews with departmental secretaries ($N = 22$) working for teams of clinical professionals. These clerical workers buffer conflicts between the professionals & the bureaucratic environment, provide the administration with numerical data needed to obtain funding. Conflicts inherent in this role have led both to collective action—the formation of a Secretaries' Group & to individual action—based on the formation of mutually beneficial relationships with supervisors & other clinical staff. Implications are noted for research in several areas: the nature of the occupation of clinical work, control in organizations, the professional/organization conflict; power in organizations, & supervision. 47 References. Modified AA

88T3705

Farkas, Zoltán. Munkások érdek-és érdekeltiségi viszonyai (Interest Relations of Workers). Szociológia, 1983, 1-2, 27-52. (HUN)

¶ Data from a case study of a Hungarian factory are used to examine production behavior as the realization of interests. The workers surveyed (N not given) were machine cutters earning an individual task wage. The most important features of their interests are constituted by optimizing their personal basic wage & output % & the number of overtime hours. Also relevant are optimization of supply, maximization of work norms, & optimization of number of shifts. Differences among workers in the extent of realization of interests are traced to their more or less favorable positions in this activity. An attempt is made to separate workers' "actual" interests & interest relations from the concrete contents of their interests, since these vary with income. Even workers with similar interests may have different levels of interest realization due to their varying positions of interest assertion, & consequently may have significantly different interest relations. 7 Tables, 11 Figures. Modified HA

88T3706

Flaherty, Sean (Dept Economics Franklin & Marshall Coll, Lancaster PA 17604), Strike Activity, Worker Militancy, and Productivity Change in Manufacturing, 1961-1981. Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 1987, 40, 4, July, 585-600

¶ A two-way causality is hypothesized between intracontractual strikes & productivity change in US manufacturing: on the one hand, strikes during the term of a contract, which are thought to reflect more broadly practiced shop floor militancy, slow the pace of productivity growth; on the other hand, periods of rapid productivity growth provoke increased intracontractual strike activity, among other forms of shop floor protest. The model is tested with quarterly data from various government sources on strike activity & productivity changes from 1961 through 1981. Modified two-stage least squares estimates support the hypothesis of two-way causality. It is also found that shop floor confrontation played a significant role in the slump in manufacturing productivity that began in the mid-1960s, but not in the more precipitous productivity slowdown post-1973. 2 Tables, 27 References. Modified HA

88T3707

Fraser, John. Sul potere sindacale, e sul potere reale (Concerning Union Power and Real Power). ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 78, June-Sept, 118-126 (ITA)

¶ The roles & ideologies of trade unions & political parties in present-day Italy are examined. It is suggested that the distance between the unions & the "formal" political world has resulted from the unions' tendency to view the crisis of the organized industrial sector in Italy in terms of either utopian Marxism or postindustrial modernization. This independence of the unions has, in turn, had an impact on political life. It is argued that the interests of the broad mass of the WC will be served only if union leaders rethink their position & make an effort to become integrated in political life. C. Waters

88T3708

Fuller, Linda (U Southern California, Los Angeles 90089), Power at the Workplace: The Revolution of Worker-Management Conflict in Cuba. ♦ World Development, 1987, 15, 1, Jan, 139-152

¶ The distribution of power at the Cuban workplace is examined by analyzing how overt conflicts between workers & managers concerning discipline & workers' rights are resolved. Variations in dispute resolution mechanisms & processes from 1959 to the present are discussed to elucidate the degree to which they have either reinforced or mitigated power inequalities between workers & managers. It is demonstrated that the procedures employed to resolve worker-management conflict during this period have granted significant powers to workers. Yet no matter how egalitarian their form, workers' ability to take full advantage of the empowerment opportunities provided by these procedures has depended, in large measure, on the overall strength of the Cuban unions. 22 References. HA

88T3709

Furnham, Adrian & Goddard, Lindsay (Dept Psychology University Coll London, WC1E 6TB England), Sex Differences in Job Satisfaction. ♦ Psychologia, 1986, 29, 3, Sept, 132-146.

¶ After surveying some methodological problems in previous research on sex differences in job satisfaction, results of two studies that attempted

88T3692

Dale, Angela M. (U Surrey, GU2 5XH England). Labor Market Structure in the United Kingdom: Evidence from Occupational Mobility, UM Work and Occupations, 1987, 14, 4, Nov, 558-590.

¶ Occupational mobility data from the 1979 & 1981 Labor Force Surveys in the UK (N not given) are used to operationalize a typology of labor markets, derived from the work of R. P. Althausen & A. L. Kalleberg ("Firms, Occupations, and the Structure of Labor Markets: A Conceptual Analysis," in Berg, I. (Ed), Sociological Perspectives on Labor Markets, New York: Academic Press, 1981), based on occupation, rather than firm or industry. It is shown that not only are there distinct differences in access to firm internal labor markets & occupational labor markets based on occupation, but also differences between men & women & full- & part-time workers. Within the same occupation, there is some evidence for the existence of separate labor markets for men & women, & for full-time & part-time workers. Part-time employees are less likely than full-timers to gain access to internal labor markets & are thereby disadvantaged during times of economic recession. 6 Tables, 3 Appendixes, 33 References. HA

88T3693

Daley, Nelda Knelson (Depts Sociology & Anthropology Radford U, VA 24142). Economic Change, Value Shifts, and the Definition of Women's Labor: A Comparison of the Coal Counties of Central Appalachia and the Beef County of Ontario, Canada, ♦ Western Sociological Review, 1986, 15, 1, 33-52

¶ The shift from diversified farming to dependence on a single industry tends to create a redefinition of the roles of Ms & Fs in both the economy & the family. Previous research has shown that women's roles are altered more radically. Data from recent studies & historical sources in central Appalachia are used to compare women's work in this region to that in the Bruce Peninsula of Ontario, using data from government reports & interviews conducted in summer 1984 with 20 organizers of Concerned Farm Women. Analysis reveals that although the particulars of the economic shifts may vary, the redefinition of women's role is the same: a devaluation of women's labor. 85 References. Modified HA

88T3694

Dalla Costa, Mariarosa, Politiche del lavoro e livelli di reddito. E le donne? (Labor Policies and Income Levels. What about Women?), ♦ UM La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 78, June-Sept, 88-101. (ITA)

¶ A discussion of poverty, inequality, working conditions, unemployment, & related phenomena in advanced capitalist societies, especially as they affect women. Data are drawn primarily from 1983 census statistics & various surveys in the US & Italy. It is shown that the young, the old, & women are increasingly disadvantaged. The growth in the proportion of Fs employed has been accompanied by a decline in their job status & qualifications. In those areas of work where greater equality has been achieved between Ms & Fs, it has tended to result from a worsening of conditions for both. C. Waters

88T3695

Daniels, Arlene Kaplan (Dept Sociology Northwestern U, Evanston IL 60208). Invisible Work, UM Social Problems, 1987, 34, 5, Dec, 403-415

¶ Folk understanding of work focuses on activities that are remunerated, women's work is correspondingly devalued, for it is either unpaid or limited by the demands of the unpaid work in the home. This understanding also includes a moral force: one should contribute to society by working. Here, the restrictiveness of these commonsense understandings is demonstrated, & the kinds of work that consequently disappear from view are discussed. Focus is on the work involved in the social construction of daily life & in the maintenance & development of institutions. Finally, a rationale is presented for expanding the concept of work to include many activities not previously considered in the folk concept: a keener awareness of the work involved in social constructions serves to dignify the labor, & engender respect for the workers who do it. 36 References. HA

88T3696

Dantico, Marilyn & Jurik, Nancy (School Justice Studies Arizona State U, Tempe 85287). Where Have All the Good Jobs Gone? The Effect of Government Service Privatization on Women Workers, Contemporary Crises, 1986, 10, 4, 421-439.

¶ An exploration of the effects of privatization of government service on working women in the US LF, based on published literature, secondary data, & a case study of privatization of several municipal services in Phoenix, Ariz. Results suggest that both relative to white Ms & absolutely, women's rank, wages, & future advancement opportunities will be negatively affected by declining government work opportunities & References. Modified HA

88T3697

Davis, Edward M. & Lansbury, Russell D. (Dept Industrial Relations U New South Wales, Kensington 2033 Australia). Worker Participation in Decisions on Technological Change in Australia, ♦ Labour and Society, 1987, 12, 2, May, 217-234.

¶ Increasing attention in Australia has been paid to extending worker participation in decision making on issues affecting worklife. Technological change has been seen to be a central issue. The Bob Hawke Labor government, the unions, the Arbitration Commission, & the Australian High Court have taken action to encourage greater worker participation. Here, private & public sector case studies are explored. It is concluded that progress has been made, but its rate has been obstructed by the resolution of many employers to ward off challenges to their decision-making prerogatives. In addition, many unions remain too small & too poorly funded to play a more effective role in deciding many matters concerning worklife. AA

88T3698

Deitch, Cynthia H. & Sanderson, Susan Walsh (Franklin & Marshall Coll, Lancaster PA 17604). Geographic Constraints on Married Women's Careers, UM Work and Occupations, 1987, 14, 4, Nov, 616-634

¶ Data collected in 1981 at a large U via 275 questionnaires & 38 interviews with faculty wives, & 50 questionnaires from faculty husbands are analyzed to study how moves for a husband's job or lack of geographic mobility for a wife's own employment may affect women's careers. Women with advanced degrees & greater career commitment are found to experience greater geographic constraint. It is suggested that, as women become more professionalized in training & aspirations, geographic mobility may become a more salient problem in dual-career marriages if one or both spouses are in fields where the market is tight or where geographic moves are necessary for advancement. 3 Tables, 31 References. HA

88T3699

Depolo, M., Fraccaroli, F. & Sarchielli, G. (Dipt Politica Sociale Trento, I-38100 Italy). Senza lavoro: un'analisi socio-psicologica dell'esperienza di Cassa Integrazione Guadagni (Unemployed A Sociopsychological Study of the Experience of Being on the Dole) Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 2, Apr-June, 153-169. (ITA)

¶ Social representations of unemployment are investigated in a pilot study of the way Italian blue-collar workers define & react to losing their jobs. Several different procedures, including interviews & daily time balance sheets, were used to obtain information from 400 workers in 4 different Italian cities who were registered with the Cassa Integrazione Guadagni (a government agency that distributes emergency & short-term unemployment benefits) in 1984-1987. Rs were asked about their images & explanations of unemployment. The results seem to outline a common universe of meaning among the workers studied, which is useful in understanding their strategies for coping with job loss. 1 Table. Modified HA

88T3700

Dunin, Vladimir Serafimovich & Zenkevich, Eduard Alfonsovich. Effekt "limita" (ob ispol'zovanii inogorodnikh rabochikh na golovnom predpriyatii ob'edineniya "AvtoZIL") (The "Limit" Effect (Usage of Workers from Other Cities at a Head Enterprise "AvtoZIL") Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 80-85. (RUS)

¶ Soviet economic planners recently decided to phase out the use of temporary workers assigned to Moscow industrial plants from other cities. To determine the level of success of this program, data were obtained from worker personnel records (N not given) at a Moscow automobile plant where non-Muscovites had been employed. Most of the temporary workers were from other parts of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic & were younger than their Muscovite co-workers. Although the temporary workers saved the plant's operation by providing necessary labor, problems occurred in the determination of just wages & in competition with local workers. It is suggested that discontinuation of this program proceed slowly, allowing the plant to make adjustment incrementally. 3 Tables, 7 References. G. Prostavov and 1970s, U Regional Studies, 1987, 21, 2, Apr, 95-106

A review of Organization for Economic Cooperation & Development statistics regarding employment change for several different countries, & different regions & cities in GB, to assess the anatomy of job creation. Three arguments are advanced: (1) manufacturing is no longer a very important source of job growth, & in GB it is not a source of growth at all; (2) what job growth does exist is in the service sectors; & (3) conventional theories do not explain the inner logic of these patterns. 8 Tables, 10 References. F. Rasmussen

3719

Henley, John S. & Ereisha, Mohamed M. (Dept Business Studies, Edinburgh U, EH8 9JY Scotland), State Control and the Labor Productivity Crisis: The Egyptian Textile Industry at Work, U Economic Development and Cultural Change, 1987, 35, 3, Apr, 491-521

A brief outline of the political factors that led to the nationalization of Egyptian manufacturing industry in the 1960s is presented, followed by a description of the range of administrative controls that have since been employed to regulate public sector enterprises. Data from an interview survey of a quota sample of 351 M employees working in different production units of a state-owned textile company located in Cairo & employing a total of 24,000+ people are used to assess the effectiveness & consequences of the system of statutorily defined rewards & disciplinary measures. Applying human capital theory & earnings function analysis, the effect of work experience explained, on average, 63% of the variance in earnings of the sample including managers, supervisors, & workers. Attitudes to the system of wages, promotion, performance appraisal, & discipline were then examined from the point of view of both management & workers. The evidence suggests that far from creating a homogeneous workforce, the bureaucratic logic of public sector enterprise in Egypt leads to fragmentation of WC interests & demoralization of managerial cadres. The most important component of managerial control over the manual workforce is the reward system, is determined externally by the state & its governing principle is based on tenure for working life & to each according to age. Managers believe they are powerless to reward productive efforts & workers' interests in state employment tend to be defined according to which of four age sets they belong. Two factors external to the enterprise reinforce the fragmentation of workers' interests: (1) the availability of secondary employment & the dynamics of the private sector labor market, & (2) the supply & pricing system of WC housing. It is concluded that, until managers & workers alike have greater incentives to consider Egyptian state employment important, machine & labor productivity are likely to remain substantially below prevailing world standards. 7 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix. Modified AA

3720

Hethy, Lajos (Instit Labor Research, Budapest Hungary), I lavoratori nei paesi socialisti dell'Europa Orientale (Workers in East European Socialist Countries), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 2, Apr-June, 208-217. (ITA)

The evolution of the WC structure & culture of work in East European socialist countries, especially Hungary, are investigated, based largely on statistical evidence. They are still heavily characterized by economy-oriented parameters rather than postmaterialistic criteria, because a set of material needs have not yet been satisfied. The informal economy is becoming increasingly important as a compensatory factor, & it is almost impossible for Eastern European workers to focus on leisure as a means for self-expression & creativity, because leisure time is regularly used for unofficial work activities. Modified HA

3721

Himmelstrand, Ulf & Horvat, Branko (Instit Sociology Uppsala U, S-75120 Sweden), The Socio-Economics of Workers' Self-Management, U International Social Science Journal, 1987, 39, 3(113), Aug, 353-364.

The impact of exogenous, noneconomic factors on the efficiency of worker-managed firms is studied from a theoretical viewpoint, in the form of mathematical equations. While traditional economic theory of capitalist-managed firms posits the worker as a factor of production & not of the cost of production, workers managing themselves must be viewed as rational economic individuals responding to incentives inherent in the structure of self-management. Conflicts between traditional management & the LF are replaced with trade-offs within the worker collectivity. The smoothness with which this occurs can only be explained by indigenous historical, organizational, & cultural factors, evidencing the need for an interdisciplinary approach. 2 Photographs, 23 References. D. Graves

88T3722

Hoyman, Michele M. & Stallworth, Lamont (U Missouri, Saint Louis 63121), Participation in Local Unions: A Comparison of Black and White Members, Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 1987, 40, 3, Apr, 323-335

The participation of black & white union members in their local unions is compared, based on 1980 survey data from Ill government employee union members (N = 876). Using more detailed measures of union participation than those employed in earlier studies, & focusing on members, not just leaders, little difference is found between the extent of participation by blacks & that by whites. This surprising result, which contradicts the finding of previous studies that blacks participate in unions less than whites, holds even with controls for gender, salary, education, number of years as a member, presence of friends in the union, strength of a sense of efficacy, confidence in the ability to gain local union office, & liberality of attitudes about civil rights. 3 Tables, 24 References. HA

88T3723

Jolin, Michael W. (Brown U, Providence RI 02912), The Occupational "Mismatching" Problem Reexamined: "Overeducation," Financial Satisfaction, and Community Participation in Rhode Island, Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1033-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715512.

88T3724

Kadish, Elisa (Smith Currie & Hancock, Atlanta GA 31706), Discrimination in Employment: A Selective Bibliography, U Law and Contemporary Problems, 1986, 49, 4, autumn, 211-235.

A bibliography that lists articles (N = 317) & books (N = 59) that discuss compliance with various employment discrimination laws by private industry. Emphasis is placed on works providing practical advice & interpretation of laws that will aid in avoiding charges of discrimination. F. Rasmussen

88T3725

Karasek, Robert, Gardell, Bertil & Lindell, Jan (Dept Industrial & Systems Engineering U Southern California, Los Angeles 90089-1452), Work and Non-Work Correlates of Illness and Behaviour in Male and Female Swedish White Collar Workers, U Journal of Occupational Behavior, 1987, 8, 3, July, 187-207.

Questionnaire data from 8,700 members of a Swedish labor federation of white-collar workers are used to explore the relations of 4 classes of dependent variables: psychological strain, physical illness symptoms, health behavior, & social participation to 11 categories of stressors & stress moderators. Multiple logistic regression analysis reveals that 50% of the associations are significant at the 5% level in the predicted direction, though only 5% are as strong as the link between smoking & heart disease. After age, job factors are the strongest set of predictors of health & behavior. Similar results are obtained for both sexes. No clear linkage is found of particular stressors to particular illnesses; family problems also explain some aspects of the dependent variables. 5 Tables, 38 References. Modified HA

88T3726

Kaur, Satnam, Punia, R. K. & Kaur, Malkit (Dept Sociology Haryana Agricultural U, Hissar 125004 India), Role Conflict in Working Women, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 114-122

Traditional Indian women remained inside the home throughout their lives. Here, the impact of work outside the home on Indian women is examined using data from 105 women in villages of Haryana State, with focus on role conflict. The effects of age, health, job motivation, husband's personality, age of the youngest child, & family income are measured. The majority of Rs were able to function without great difficulties despite the objective presence of conflict. 6 Tables, 7 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3727

Kekovole, John (U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104), Aspects of Female Labor Force Participation in Kenya: A Study of the Impact of Demographic, Socio-Economic and Environmental Factors, Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 754-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714063.

to overcome these problems are reported. In the first, sex differences in lay beliefs about the causes of job satisfaction were investigated using questionnaire data from 144 GB adults. Three statistical analyses revealed that age, education, & belief in the Protestant work ethic related to these beliefs, but gender did not. In the second study, biological sex & sex-role differences in job satisfaction were explored in a sample of 82 employed adults in GB who completed the Bem Sex-Role Inventory & the Index of Organizational Reactions. Analysis of variance indicated that neither sex nor sex-role orientation yielded many differences in job satisfaction, even when a wide range of possibly confounding variables was partialled out. Results are discussed in terms of earlier methodological problems & specific changes in women's working habits; implications for employers are noted. 3 Tables, 57 References. Modified HA

88T3710

Gasparini, Giovanni (Dipartimento Sociologia U Cattolica Milano, I-20123 Italy), Il futuro del lavoro (The Future of Work), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 2, Apr-June, 123-131. (ITA)

¶ A discussion of the future prospects of work examines several dimensions. (1) the quality of working life, work organization, & the meaning of work, (2) the future of certain occupations & forecasts of employment rates, (3) the future for companies & their prospects of success in the postindustrial society, & (4) leisure, which is expected to be more closely linked with the development of work. Several middle-term analyses (up to the year 2000) are reviewed. It is emphasized that the work schedule is of crucial importance. Working hours are expected to be progressively shortened & organized in module format, while leisure time will become increasingly important. Modified HA

88T3711

George, Donald A. R. (U Edinburgh, EH8 8YL Scotland), Worker Participation and Wage-Bargaining in Denmark, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 3, Aug, 351-360.

¶ Union wage-bargaining power in Denmark is analyzed for the 1970s, using earnings drift between centrally bargained & firm-level earnings as the basis for a measure of bargaining power. This measure is justified in terms of bargaining theory. During the 1970s, various forms of worker participation were introduced in Denmark. They are described & analyzed, & an attempt is made to relate changes in bargaining power to these developments. 3 Tables, 3 References. HA

88T3712

Giraud, Claude, L'Absentéisme: un symptôme organisationnel. Une lecture sociologique du cas d'une administration au plan régional (Absenteeism, an Organizational Symptom. A Sociological Interpretation of a Case Study of Administration at the Regional Level), Revue de Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 3, 323-337. (FRE)

¶ The analysis of a case study of absenteeism sheds light on the pertinence of concepts & methods borrowed from the sociology of organizations. Statistical information on absenteeism in the telecommunications branch of the state administration in the Provence-Côte d'Azur region of France is broken down according to the age, sex, family situation, & level & type of job of the employees. Absenteeism was found to be highest among younger workers, Fs (regardless of whether or not they had children), & those in the least skilled job categories. Breaking with the motivational approach, it is shown that absenteeism can be understood as an exit from the system of interaction within the organization. Produced by the construct of collective action, absenteeism is a behavior, a rational strategy, & a tactical escapeway in a logic of specific chain reactions. Modified HA

88T3713

Godoy, Ricardo A. (Harvard Institut International Development, 1737 Cambridge St Cambridge MA 02138), Production Strategies of Bolivian Miners: Methodological and Empirical Considerations, Human Organization, 1987, 46, 1, spring, 48-54.

¶ Three questions are addressed: how to explain the growing number of small-scale miners in developing countries; what production strategies they use to allocate capital & labor; & how efficient they are compared to large mining ventures. Examining the situation of Bolivia as a case in point, it is suggested that three factors tend to encourage the expansion of small-scale mining: appropriate geological formations, excess labor supplies, & shortage of investment capital. Little is known about production strategies. A cautionary middle-level approach between the statistical & ethnoscientific approach is encouraged to discover how miners use native knowledge systems in production. Finally, small-scale mining is shown to be economically efficient in minimizing costs. 74 References. Modified AA

88T3714

Goodijk, R. (Technische Hogeschool Twente, NL-7500 AE Enschede Netherlands), Ondernemerschap en medezeggenschap: een onderzoek naar de spanningsrelatie tussen het ondernemerschap en de medezeggenschap van de werknemers bij het installatiebedrijf Breman (Entrepreneurship and Workers' Participation in Decision Making), Dissertation Abstracts International. C. European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 477. (DUT) Unavailable from UMI; reference copy at U of Twente, Holland, in Bedrijfskunde, Postbus 217, NL-7500 AE Enschede.

88T3715

Guarasci, Richard & Peck, Gary, Beyond the Syndicalism of Workplace Democracy, The Insurgent Sociologist, 1987, 14, 2, summer, 49-76.

¶ The possibility of workplace democracy is explored through a critical examination of the Weberian implications of Harry Braverman's Labor and Monopoly Capital. The Degradation of Work in the Twentieth Century (New York: Monthly Review Press, 1974). Braverman overestimates the rigidity of the iron cage of work discipline, failing to recognize the flexibility of managerial decisions in advanced capitalist societies. C. Pateman (Participation and Democratic Theory, New York: Cambridge U Press, 1970) offers a departure point for a richer model. Her argument for democratic decision making in the workplace. However, empirical evidence gives little support for belief in the radicalizing social impact of workplace democracy. In fact, successful spillover seems to depend on a specific type of workplace culture that the deskilling Braverman describes has eroded. 59 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3716

Gwartney-Gibbs, Patricia A. & Taylor, Patricia A. (Dept Sociology U Oregon, Eugene 97403), Black Women Workers' Earnings Progress in Three Industrial Sectors, SAGE, 1986, 3, 1, spring, 20-25.

¶ An examination of black women's earnings in 1960 & 1980 in 3 industrial sectors, comparing them to black men's, white men's, & white women's earnings, based on US Census data. Three research questions are addressed: (1) What were black women's actual earnings relative to the other 3 race/sex groups? (2) Addressing human capital theory, what would black women have earned, hypothetically, if they had had the same average human capital & employment characteristics as the other groups? (3) Addressing discrimination theory, what would black women have earned, hypothetically, if they had had the same rates of return on their employment characteristics as the other groups. Results show that black women workers progressed in their earnings relative to the other 3 groups in all 3 industrial sectors in the 2 decades. Nevertheless, substantial earnings differentials persist in peripheral industries, while government employment was the least discriminatory industrial sector for black women. Results also suggest that eliminating discriminatory pay structures will do more to eliminate earnings inequality in all 3 industrial sectors than improving the employment characteristics of black women workers. 1 Table, 3 Figures. Modified AA

88T3717

Hacker, Sally L. & Elcorobairutia, Clara (Oregon State U, Corvallis 97331), Women Workers in the Mondragon System of Industrial Cooperatives, Gender & Society, 1987, 1, 4, Dec, 358-379.

¶ A feminist analysis is offered of the Mondragon system of industrial cooperatives in Euskadi, a semiautonomous Basque country in northern Spain. Data collected via participant observation & interviews with approximately 50 cooperative & private employees & unemployed community members indicate that women fare somewhat better in cooperatives than in private firms in terms of employment, earnings, & job security. However, market phenomena & the family as basic economic unit obstruct the goal of workplace equality for women, as does increasing professionalism among Ms in the technical core of the system. Similarities in gender stratification & segregation in capitalist, socialist, & cooperative workplaces call into question the ability of all three to deal adequately with gender equality. Suggestions for achieving full workplace democracy are offered. 2 Tables, 58 References. Modified HA

88T3718

Hall, Peter (Dept Geography U Reading, RG6 2AB England), The Anatomy of Job Creation: Nations, Regions and Cities in the 1960s

ed during 1970-1982 in US central cities, as the absolute gap in unemployment between blacks & whites increased substantially, (3) the significance of race increased over time, regardless of age group, level of education, or temporal macroeconomic shifts, & (4) the effects of education & age increased over time, suggesting a growing SC- & age-based variation in the adequacy of employment in US central cities. 6 Tables, 1 figure, 48 References. HA

88T3738

Lindsey, Michael L. (State U New York, Albany 12203), Interorganizational Resource Certainty and Independence: Determinants of Relationship Effectiveness in a Network of Community Mental Health Agencies. * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1031-A-1032-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714402.

88T3739

Lisena, Marzia, Lavoro e soluzioni organizzativo-gestionali nelle agenzie di pubblicità (Work and Organizational Management Solutions in Publicity Agencies), Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 217-248. (ITA)

As a contribution to studies of the tertiary economic sector, the particular organization & management solutions adopted by publicity agencies in the context of their specific market situation are analyzed. Interviews are conducted with representatives of 45 agencies in Rome, Italy, who responded to a census of the full-service agencies in the area. The agencies' functions included market research, marketing, merchandising, sales promotion, & advertising. In size, they ranged from small agencies having 6 or fewer employees to those with a staff of 20+. The agencies are divided into 3 categories: international, national, & local. Their organizational structure & strategies are examined in a comparative analysis. Figures. Modified HA

88T3740

Lorence, Jon (U Houston, TX 77004), Age Differences in Work Involvement: Analyses of Three Explanations, WM Work and Occupations, 1987, 14, 4, Nov, 533-557.

Utilizing cross-sectional & panel data from the 1973 Quality of Employment surveys (N = 1,455 & 1,515 Rs, respectively), three explanations of age differences in work involvement are investigated. Differences in cohort & job characteristics appear to be more plausible determinants of differences in psychological involvement with a specific job, while overall subjective commitment to the LF may be more influenced by developmental aging processes. However, the effects of age on the general work role may vary by gender & occupation, thus suggesting that the nature of developmental aging processes are partially a function of an individual's position in the social structure. 4 Tables, 53 References. HA

88T3741

Marchant, Helen (Dept Social Work U Sydney, Australia 2006), Women and Technology, Social Development Issues, 1986, 10, 3, winter, 54-69.

To illustrate the relationship between SC & gender relations within work organization, a case study of industrial organization in the confectionery industry in New South Wales, Australia, between the 1850s & 1885 is presented. The way in which M craftsmen struggled to maintain their elevated position in the LF is documented as their status became threatened by the introduction of new machinery, these Ms resisted changes in work organization that may have benefited F workers. As the government forced increases in wages paid to Fs, Ms responded by asserting their superior value to the employer, eg, by maintaining that only Ms could lift heavy items. Such arguments reinforced the sexual Doff. This analysis of gender relations at work in the face of technological innovation contributes to an understanding of the persistence of sex segregation. 30 References. Modified HA

88T3742

Mercure, Daniel, Regimbald, Daniel & Tanguay, Alain (U Quebec, Hull J8X 3X7), Le Travail de nuit volontaire: pour préserver son autonomie (Voluntary Night Work. To Remain Autonomous). ♦ WM Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 3, 359-363. (FRE)

A group of 40 employees (foremen, equipment operators, & mechanics) of the municipal highways department of Quebec who had chosen to work on the night shift were surveyed by questionnaire, at the time (winter 1985/86), their main work was snow removal. It is shown that the voluntary choice of night work may be motivated by certain differences in how the work is organized, which make it possible for workers to escape the control & supervision of the day shift. 11 References. Modified HA

88T3743

Meunier, F. (INSEE Service Conjoncture, 18 blvd Adolphe Pinard F-75675 Paris France), The Effects of the New Communications Media on Employment, Information Economics and Policy, 1986, 2, 3, Sept, 195-209.

¶ In the 1970s, the pattern of economic growth begun after WWII in most Western economies reached a crisis point: productivity gains lagged in the industrial sector, while no visible changes occurred in productivity in the service sector. With the more widespread use of data processing & the emergence of new communication media, this trend showed signs of reversal. Information handling activities showed considerable productivity gains, & the spur for technical progress, once limited to industry, appears to have spread to the services & information sector. However, it has been argued that this tendency could lead to a reduction in employment in the tertiary sector at a time when unemployment is already high in Western economies. There has thus been a tendency to delay the process through the adoption of a "two-speed growth strategy," enhancing productivity gains in the traded (industrial) sector where foreign competition is most prevalent, while maintaining low productivity levels in the protected (service) sector. Five independent scenarios are hypothesized, & their aspects of technological innovation, particularly its flexibility, encourage the emergence of new services & needs & can bring about the creation of new economic activities & employment opportunities. 4 Tables, 1 Appendix, 7 References. Modified HA

88T3744

Milton, David (U Oregon, Eugene 97403), Late Capitalism and the Decline of Trade Union Power in the United States, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 3, Aug, 319-349.

¶ The power of organized labor in the US, measured by union representation in the LF, political influence in Congress, & public support for trade unions, has been in decline for two decades. During the 1980s, a historic shift in political, economic, & social power in favor of large corporations has altered the configuration of US society. As a result, a number of business administration faculties & industrial relations specialists believe that a new US industrial relations system may be emerging that will eliminate unions altogether or at least make organized labor irrelevant as an influence on the US social order. The causes & effects of the erosion of union power in the US are traced, & it is suggested that no decisive gains by US workers in the direction of economic & industrial democracy can be expected in the absence of a strong labor movement. A new cooperative era of industrial relations is not at hand. 69 References. HA

88T3745

Misumi, Iyuju (U Osaka, 1-1 Yamadaoka Suita-shi 565 Japan), Il significato del lavoro (SDL) per i Giapponesi (The Meaning of Work for the Japanese), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 2, Apr-June, 218-222. (ITA)

¶ A discussion of values relating to work in Japanese society. Findings of a 1978 comparative questionnaire survey conducted in 8 countries (Japan, the US, the Netherlands, Belgium, West Germany, GB, Yugoslavia, & Israel) are briefly described (see also abstract of article by B. Wilpert et al in this section). It is argued that the Japanese attitude toward industrialism is deeply rooted in the national cultural tradition. Work has historically been considered the place where a person can express himself best. Only on this basis can the particular management style of big Japanese companies be understood. Participation is possible for the Japanese in a context that would be defined as paternalistic by Western standards. However, changes are taking place in modern Japan, & work is gaining a more instrumental & less expressive character for the younger generation. Modified HA

88T3746

Moulaert, Frank (Johns Hopkins European Centre Regional Planning & Research U Lille I, F-59650 Villeneuve d'Ascq France), An Institutional Revisit to the Storper-Walker Theory of Labour, International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 3, Sept, 309-330.

¶ M Storper's & R Walker's "The Theory of Labor and the Theory of Location" (International Journal of Urban & Regional Research, 1983, 7, 1) argues that labor should be an essential element in the theory of lo-

88T3728

Kornbluh, Hy, Pipan, Richard & Scherman, Susan J., Empowerment Learning and Control in Workplaces: A Curricular View, Zeitschrift für Sozialisationsforschung und Erziehungssoziologie, 1987, 7, 4, Oct, 253-268

¶ On the assumption that most workplace participation programs fail because they are based on a zero-sum model of power & control, a model is proposed that assumes the total amount of power available to an organization can be expanded through an empowerment learning process as the core dynamic of organizational effectiveness. With the workplace viewed as an educational entity, theoretical curricular views of it are explored using critical rationality as the paradigm for articulating a conceptualization of a non-zero-sum power framework for empowerment learning to take place. Some North American sociotechnical & quality of worklife case studies are analyzed in the framework of this control & learning paradigm. 47 References. HA

88T3729

Kristofic, Branko (Institut društvena istraživanja, Zagreb Yugoslavia), Društvene grupe i zadovoljstvo poslom (Social Groups and Job Satisfaction), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 31-40. (SCR)

¶ To measure job satisfaction among Yugoslav workers, questionnaire data were obtained from adults (N = 2,813) of specific SCs as defined by their position in the technical DoFL. Analysis shows that the DoFL produced different levels of SS for each kind of job. Job satisfaction in this context is defined as acceptance of the conditions & SS associated with a particular job. Thus, job dissatisfaction can indicate a desire to change individual SS or to raise SS & conditions for one's coworkers as well. Membership in a SC defines the boundaries within which job satisfaction can be expressed. 4 Tables. Modified HA

88T3730

Larson, Mark Dennis (Ohio State U, Columbus 43210), The Influence of Ideas on the Practice of Worker Participation, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1030-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710020.

88T3731

Laurell, Asa Cristina (U Autónoma Metropolitana, Del Xochimilco 16000 Mexico DF), El estudio del proceso de trabajo y salud: análisis crítico de tres propuestas metodológicas (The Study of the Work Process and Health: Critical Analysis of Three Methodological Propositions), Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 191-211. (SPA)

¶ Recent research on workers' health in Latin America takes into consideration social aspects as well as purely medical ones. A critical analysis of three existing methodologies for this type of study examines: their underlying theoretical conception of the relationship between work & health, the logic that organized the exploration of reality, what elements are selected for study, the relationship between quantitative & qualitative elements, the role of the subjective & the objective, & how the investigative process is articulated in defining the subject of knowledge. It is found that: (1) The method of inspection used by Mexico's Secretariat of Labor (Dirección General de Inspección del Trabajo, Compendio de la ruta básica de inspección de la industria minera [Compendium of Basic Guidelines for the Inspection of the Mining Industry], Mexico, STPS, 1975) has serious limitations & takes into account only certain elements for the prevention of accidents. (2) The LEST method (Guélaud, F., et al., Para el análisis de las condiciones del trabajo obrero en la empresa [Toward an Analysis of the Conditions of Manual Labor in Factories], Mexico: INET-INDA, 1981) offers a useful instrument, but has limitations deriving from its methodological eclecticism & its definition of the workplace as the unit of study, which hinders an understanding of the global logic of the process of production. (3) The Italian "worker model" (Oddone, I., et al., L'Ambiente di lavoro: la fabbrica nel territorio [The Work Environment: The Factory in the Region], Rome, Italy, Ed. Sindacale Italiano, 1974) treats the worker's experience as the central element of the investigative process, but its theoretical bases are ambiguous, & this could result in more than simple identification of risk factors. AA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T3732

Lawlor, Edward F. (School Social Service Administration U Chicago, IL 60637), The Impact of Age Discrimination Legislation on the Labor Force Participation of Aged Men: A Time-Series Analysis, Evaluation Review, 1986, 10, 6, Dec, 794-805.

¶ The 1978 Amendments to the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (PL 90-902) outlawed mandatory retirement for most categories workers aged 65-70. Here, official statistics are used to examine the participation rates of Ms aged 65+ to determine if the legislation had any discernible impact. An intervention model based on an autoregressive moving average representation of the LF participation of aged 1 fails to find any evidence that the amendments led to a change in the employment behavior. 1 Figure, 18 References. HA

88T3733

Lelli, Marcello (U Sassari, I-07100 Sardinia Italy), La crisi del lavoro: dal lavoratore collettivo al lavoratore tecnico (The Crisis of Work: From the Collective to the Technical Worker), Sociologia Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug, 45-60. (ITA)

¶ The development, in contemporary SE systems, of the category of technical workers—intermediate between the bourgeoisie & the proletariat seeking new forms of autonomy & self-management—has contributed bringing traditional, dichotomous, Marxist social theory to a state of crisis. However, it is argued here that the global political structure remains unaltered, & that the Marxian statement that the greatest alienation found among creative & intellectual workers is still valid. 68 References. Modified HA

88T3734

Lencsés, Ferenc, A napi ingázás negyedszázada (1960-1984) (Twenty-Five Years of Commuting (1960-1984)), Társadalomkutatás, 1986, 3-4, 50-68. (HUN)

¶ Questions on commuting were included in the national censuses 1960, 1970, & 1980 & in the microcensus of 1984 in Hungary. In 1984 25% of the economically active population were commuters, but by 1984 their number had been reduced by 100,000. The educational level of commuters has always been lower than that of resident workers, though their occupational status has risen steadily. Government policy measures have attempted to limit major immigration into Budapest. Modified HA

88T3735

Lerman, Charles (Brown U, Providence RI 02912), Workers in Transition: Patterns of Occupational Attainment and Migration in Semarang, Indonesia, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1023-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715529.

88T3736

Leymann, Heinz, Lernen und Aktivieren am Arbeitsplatz—Erfahrungen in Skandinavien (Learning and Activation at the Workplace—Scandinavian Experiences), Zeitschrift für Sozialisationsforschung und Erziehungssoziologie, 1987, 7, 4, Oct, 290-302. (GER)

¶ Two workplace reform projects in Sweden are described that encouraged worker self-activation using pedagogical methods. This activity was correlated with cognitive processes of perception & concept building. Participation & autonomy in action were important to foster these processes in individuals. Organizational communicative infrastructures were found to play a central role in the development of self-activation. 14 References. Modified HA

88T3737

Lichter, Daniel T. (Dept Sociology Pennsylvania State U, University Park 16802), Racial Differences in Underemployment in American Cities, American Journal of Sociology, 1988, 93, 4, Jan, 771-792

¶ The geographic mismatch between where blacks reside & where jobs are located is frequently cited as contributing to the growing black underclass in the nation's Ur centers. The "spatial mismatch" hypothesis provides a framework for identifying several facets of change in the comparative employment circumstances of central city black & white men. Specifically, black-white differences in underemployment are examined during the 1970-1982 period, employing the Labor Utilization Framework of Clifford C. Clogg & Teresa A. Sullivan (see SA 32:4/84O213). Using data from the Current Population Survey, the results provide little basis for optimism about the absolute or relative employment circumstances of Ur black men. The analysis reveals that: (1) underemployment increased over time for both whites & blacks, but especially among young adults & those with low education; (2) racial polarization accelerated

13757

Pérez, Sáenz, J. P., Clase obrera y reproducción de la fuerza de trabajo en Ecuador (el caso de los obreros textiles en Quito) (Working Class and the Reproduction of the Labor Force in Ecuador (The Case of Textile Workers in Quito)), ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 66, May-Aug, 87-112. (SPA)
The question of whether the use & exchange of industrial labor power in Ecuador is in harmony with the reproduction of the LF is addressed. Study of workers in the textile industry of Quito, using census data & surveys serves as the basis for an investigation of proletarianization & family. The historical development of the textile industry & its LF are accounted. An analysis of family incomes according to firm, & type & location of labor, along with an analysis of the economics of the family to permit inferences to be drawn about the material reproduction of labor. It is concluded that the reproduction of labor is not yet controlled by the logic of capital, as this process does not depend solely on wages & profits. Implications for the multiple identities of the WC are noted. 11 Tables, References. J. Anderson

13758

Petersen, Trond Karl (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Incentives and Wage Inequality, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 489-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8708104.

13759

Pollock, Kaye Msury Hood (U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104), My Mom Works: Adolescent Daughters Consider Maternal Employment, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 757-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714109.

3760

Provis, Chris, Comparative Wage Justice, The Journal of Industrial Relations, 1986, 28, 1, Mar, 24-39.
Critiques of comparative wage justice generally conflate different versions of the doctrine: a core version is that identical jobs should be paid equally, while extended versions advocate proportional payment of different jobs & maintenance of established relativities. Here, it is argued that issues of comparative wage justice can be defended on philosophical grounds derived from the classic principle of justice that equals should be rewarded equally & unequals in proportion to their differences. Even comparative wage justice is not an absolute requirement, & can be weighed by countervailing factors. Modified HA

3761

Pusic, Vesna (Dept Sociology U Zagreb, YU-41000 Yugoslavia), Economic Democracy and Civil Society, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 3, Aug, 275-295.
An analysis of the political economic democratic context of workers' management. Meeting workers' interests is one of the main goals of industrial democracy. The concept of interest is also what makes industrial democracy closely related to the democratic political system, which uses consultation of collective interests as a strategy for social regulation. Social ownership is also analyzed as, in theory, the most democratic scheme of ownership distribution, although its dual role as a program for social transformation is problematic. 28 References. Modified HA

3762

Ratier-Coutrot, Laurence, Manager ou professeur? Les Entreprises américaines face à l'enjeu éducatif (Manager or Professor? American Firms and Continuing Education), ♦ Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 3, 339-357. (FRE)
Taken from a report by the scientific mission of the French Embassy in the US, the system of higher education & adult education in the US is described. Focus is on recent developments in continuing education, & breakthroughs made by firms in this flourishing market. The relations between firms & US & the role of corporate Colls are discussed. Case studies of 3 institutes are included: the Wang Instit, the Arthur D. Little Management Education Instit, & the Rand Graduate Instit. 2 Figures, Appendixes, 24 References. Modified HA fall, 292-302.

13763

Rebitzer, James B. (Dept Economics U Texas, Austin 78712), Establishment Size and Job Tenure, ♦ Industrial Relations, 1986, 25, 3,

¶ The hypothesis that large employers establish circumstances of employment that foster employment stability is tested. Using the May 1979 Current Population Survey, estimates of the effect of plant size & firm size on job tenure are presented. The equations estimated employ two-stage least squares techniques to eliminate the bias created by the simultaneous determination of wages & job tenure. Findings indicate that employer size has a significant & positive association with job tenure, & plant size enhances job tenure even when controls for job skill, current compensation, & unionization are introduced. These results are consistent with the theory of labor market segmentation that associates large firms with tenure-enhancing internal labor markets. 3 Tables, 31 References. Modified AA

88T3764

Reed, Rosslyn (Kuring-gai Coll Advanced Education, Lindfield New South Wales 2070 Australia), Making Newspapers Pay: Employment of Women's Skills in Newspaper Production, The Journal of Industrial Relations, 1987, 29, 1, Mar, 25-40.

¶ Technological change blurs the distinction between "men's work" & "women's work" & raises questions concerning the nature & definition of skill. A case study is presented that focuses on changes in the organization of work in the classified advertising telephone room beginning in 1984, following the introduction of computerized photocomposition at the Age, a Melbourne, Australia, newspaper. Account is taken of the design of the women's jobs both before & after technological change as well as the specific historically developed nature of both product & labor markets. The extent to which women's skills are devalued when analysis focuses on the nature of changes in traditional M occupations like trades & crafts is demonstrated. When conventional approaches to skill analysis are used, a significant aspect of "women's work"—emotional labor—is ignored. Consequently the lower value of traditional F occupations is reinforced. Some tentative suggestions are advanced for a reappraisal of the notion of skill. 1 Table, 31 References. HA

88T3765

Regensburger, William Edward (U California, Los Angeles 90024), "Ground into Our Blood": The Origins of Working Class Consciousness and Organization in Durably Unionized Southern Industries, 1930-1946, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 489-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711692.

88T3766

Roche, William K. (University Coll Dublin, Belfield 4 Republic Ireland), Systems Analysis and Industrial Relations: Double Paradox in the Development of American and British Industrial Relations Theory, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 1, Feb, 3-28.

¶ A discussion of the emergence of a distinct theoretical tradition in industrial relations commencing with John T. Dunlop's theory (Industrial Relations Systems, New York: Holt, 1958). The debate engendered by this theory is critically appraised, & the theory's many rehabilitators are seen as failing to provide a cogent reformulation. Dunlop's industrial relations system is of little theoretical utility in itself; however, his often-neglected theory explaining the structural differences in national systems of industrial relations may well be of greater significance than the part of his thought that has received major attention. 1 Figure, 73 References. Modified HA

88T3767

Rudd, Nancy M. & McKenry, Patrick C. (Dept Family Resource Management Ohio State U, Columbus 43210), Family Influences on the Job Satisfaction of Employed Mothers, ♦ Psychology of Women Quarterly, 1986, 10, 4, Dec, 363-371.

¶ The relationship between job satisfaction (JS) & selected family variables that might constrain or enhance the JS of employed mothers is explored. Analyzing mailed questionnaire data from 165 R & 72 U working mothers in Ohio, results of stepwise regression indicate that 4 family variables were more useful in explaining variation in JS than 6 background variables that had been expected to influence JS. These findings suggest that JS could be enhanced by increasing family support for women's employment. 3 Tables, 17 References. Modified HA

88T3768

Sandberg, David E., Ehrhardt, Anke A., Mellins, Claude A., Ince, Susan E. & Meyer-Bahlburg, Helmo F. L. (New York State Psychiatric

cation (of capital); this notion is expanded to include an institutional perspective. The original theory is explained & critiqued with regard to four shortcomings: (1) its lack of institutional perspective; (2) an underemphasis on supply behavior; (3) inadequate emphasis on the process of skilling & deskilling labor; & (4) its limitation to industrial relations, without having the flexibility to apply to tertiary work processes. It is argued that scientific analysis of labor exchange is only possible by considering the interaction between market mechanisms & a variety of institutional regulating mechanisms. 4 Figures, 51 References. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T3747

Mueller, J. (Technische U Wien, A-1010 Austria). Entwicklung der Rechtsvorschriften auf dem Gebiet des technischen und arbeitshygienischen Arbeitnehmerschutzes für die gewerblichen Betriebe in Österreich von 1786 bis 1986 (Development of Judicial Regulations concerning the Technical and Hygienic Protection of Industrial Employees in Austria from 1786 to 1986). * Dissertation Abstracts International C. European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 477-478. (GER) Unavailable from UMI; reference copy at Technische U Wien.

88T3748

Negri, Antimo. Rileggendo "Americanismo e fordismo" di Antonio Gramsci (Re-Reading Antonio Gramsci's "Americanismo e fordismo"). ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986-87, 80, Jan-Mar, 16-40. (ITA)

¶ A new reading of Antonio Gramsci's "Americanismo e fordismo" ((Americanism and Fordism) in Quaderni del carcere (Writings from Prison), Vol 3, Gerratana, V (Ed), Turin: Einaudi, 1975) Focus is on the social & psychological effects of the DoFL. A connection with the main contention of Emile Durkheim's La Division du travail social ((The Division of Labor in Society), 1893) is suggested. The concept of "organic corporatism" is reexamined. Modified HA

88T3749

Nelson, Debra L. (Coll Business Administration Oklahoma State U, Stillwater 74078). Organizational Socialization: A Stress Perspective. ♦ Journal of Occupational Behavior, 1987, 8, 4, Oct, 311-324.

¶ Socialization & adjustment processes of newcomers to organizations are examined as stressful events. A theoretical synthesis of the literatures of organizational socialization & stress is proposed. From this integration, a model is developed that facilitates (1) an examination of the task, role, & interpersonal demands that individuals face in the stages of socialization, & (2) an analysis of the interrelationship of these demands & their effects on individual & organizational outcomes of the socialization process. Directions for future research are proposed for extending understanding of this crucial part of organizational entry. 1 Figure, 103 References. Modified HA

88T3750

Neubert, Jurgen. Arbeitsgestaltung in, mit und für Gruppen (Work Design in, with, and for Groups), Zeitschrift für Sozialisationsforschung und Erziehungssoziologie, 1987, 7, 4, Oct, 269-289. (GER)

¶ Traditional conceptions & methods of work design & training refer the functions of analyzing, designing, & teaching to the competence of outside experts. An alternative participative approach is proposed that intertwines work design & training. Workers & experts elaborate together the information & the solutions required for the improvement of working conditions & for better coping with the task demands in a group problem-solving procedure. The general procedure of using this approach in industry is described, & some field studies of its application are presented. Implications for work analysis & work design, quality & acceptance of solutions, & personality development in workplaces are discussed. 1 Figure, 39 References. HA

88T3751

Offe, Claus. Lavoro come categoria sociologica centrale? (Work, as a Central Sociological Category), Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 17-46. (ITA)

¶ The classical tradition of sociology, whether bourgeois or Marxist, is completely associated with the idea that work is the central social factor. Recent reflections & research that are bringing this orientation into question are examined. The new focus of attention is the "sphere of existence." Some justifications for the notion that there has been an inward collapse of the category "work" are offered: in modern society, work less & less expresses the content of actions, the perseverance of interests, or a way of life. Work is central for the individual under two conditions: because it is normalized as a duty, or because it is imposed as a constraint. Its loss of centrality & subjective valency can be explained by factors that block one or the other of these two mechanisms. Modified HA

88T3752

Offe, Heinz (FB Sozialwesen Fachhochschule Bielefeld, Federal Republic Germany). Individuelle und soziale Folgen der Massenarbeitslosigkeit (Individual and Social Consequences of Mass Unemployment), Soziologische Revue, 1987, 10, 4, Oct, 394-403. (GER)

¶ A review essay on 7 works on the topic of unemployment (see listing in IRPS No. 42). Research on unemployment since the mid-1970s has generally focused on the psychological, social, & economic problems of the unemployed individual. More recently, emphasis has been on the different life situations & different contexts of unemployment, & on coping strategies. The latter approach is represented by three of the books reviewed here. The works also provide specific empirical studies, which have widely differing methodological approaches, & overviews of wide fields in research on unemployment. C. Waters

88T3753

Ore, Timothy Olorunjuwon (U New South Wales, Kensington 20, Australia). Conflict and Accommodation: The Role of the Waterside Workers' Federation on the Sydney Waterfront, 1947-1983. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 758-A Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T3754

Pahl, Raymond E. (U Kent, Canterbury CT2 7NZ England). Does Jobless Mean Workless? Unemployment and Informal Work. ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 493, Sept, 36-46

¶ The spate of interest in informal work in recent years may be related to the hope that such work provides a safety net or survival strategy for those who would otherwise be seriously disadvantaged. Closer examination of this notion requires the disaggregation of informal work into its different forms, & also the disaggregation of the unemployed into distinctive categories. The so-called new unemployed people, produced by the economic circumstances of the last decade, have no tradition of working informally to get by. Indeed, most evidence suggests that those in employment are best placed to do other forms of work as well. Household interview data (N = 730) collected in 1981 on the Isle of Sheppey in Kent, England, illustrate divisions in participation in forms of work between men & women, & also a process of polarization between work-rich households, with multiple earners engaging in all forms of work, & work-poor households, typically headed by elderly people, single parents, or unemployed people. The social polarization is likely to increase. It is concluded that jobless indeed means workless. 2 Tables. HA

88T3755

Parcel, Toby L. & Benefo, Kofi (Ohio State U, Columbus 43210). Temporal Change in Occupational Differentiation, ♦ Work and Occupations, 1987, 14, 4, Nov, 514-532.

¶ A revised version of SA 32.5/84SI6559/ASA/1984/3750

88T3756

Payne, Roy L. & Jones, J. Graham (Dept Psychology U Sheffield S10 9TN England). The Effects of Long-Term Unemployment on Attitudes to Employment, ♦ Journal of Occupational Behavior, 1987, 8, 4, Oct, 351-358.

¶ An investigation of whether long-term unemployment (6-24 months) affects people's attitudes to employment once they have found a new job. A sample of 144 unemployed, married Ms aged 25-39 who had been interviewed in 1981 were reinterviewed 2-3 years later after they had been re-employed to determine whether they felt various aspects of employment (eg, job security, pay) had become more important to them as a result of being unemployed. The effects of mental well-being when unemployed on attitudes to employment were also explored. Unemployment was found to have made most aspects of employment more important. Those whose mental health was worst when unemployed reported that job security was most important to them. 3 Tables, 11 References. Modified HA phion(s) of feelings. Generally, the researchers who have supported Herzberg's, Mazur's, & Snyderman's two-factor propositions have used an interview technique, while those who have contended with the two-factor theory have used a rating scale technique; both research techniques have been soundly criticized. Results are reported of studies of 92 educators in Tulsa, Okla., & Chicago, Ill., that attempted to test the two-factor propositions using paper & pencil questionnaires in order to circumvent the shortcomings of both personal interviews & rating scales. 4 Tables. 1 Appendix, 22 References. Modified HA

813776

Smith, Joan (Dept Sociology State U New York, Binghamton 13901). Transforming Households: Working-Class Women and Economic Crisis, U Social Problems, 1987, 34, 5, Dec, 416-436. An analysis of changes in the nature of household-based labor, & the relationship between those changes & recent economic crises, based on 1980-1984 US census data & secondary data. The recession of the 1970s-1980s was considerably different than that of the 1930s, mainly because, in contrast to earlier periods, consumer demand did not slacken despite of falling real wages & rising unemployment, the demand for goods & services continually increased. Changes in the ordinary activities of working women were crucial in shoring up consumer demand, indeed, these changes were central to the operation of the political economy itself. 8 Tables, 64 References. HA

813777

Sosin, Yuriy Petrovich, Poteri rabochego vremeni: puti sokrashcheniya (Ways of Eliminating the Waste of Labor Time), Izvestiya Sibirskogo otdeleniya Akademii nauk SSSR, Seriya Ekonomika i prikladnaya sotsiologiya, 1987, 2(8), May, 41-47. (RUS) While economic statistics from the Krasnoyarsk district of the USSR show some positive trends in labor productivity, the district lost the equivalent of 148.9 million rubles in 1982 due to missed workdays. About 1% of the instances of lost time were due to inexcused absences from the workplace, 30% to excused absences, & 30% to overextension of allotted work time. Additional losses occurred due to time wasted on waiting for equipment to be repaired & for spare parts to arrive. Suggestions for improving this situation collected by questionnaire data from workers (not given) include improving worker discipline, raising workers' level of understanding of basic economic principles, & improving the pay scale, supply of materials, working conditions, repair services, & management techniques. 4 Tables. G. Prostavov

813778

Staudenmeier, William J., Jr. (Dept Sociology Drake U, Des Moines IA 50311). Context and Variation in Employer Policies on Alcohol, Journal of Drug Issues, 1987, 17, 3, summer, 255-271. Though innovative policies & employee assistance programs (EAPs) have been adopted by US employers over the past decade to address the alcohol problems of their employees, traditional employer alcohol-related policies persist. Four patterns of policy are discussed relating to: (1) drinking on the job, (2) drinking off the job, (3) employer prohibition, & (4) occupational alcoholism programs (including EAPs). Systematic variation among employers' policies are examined in terms of the conflicting cultural positions toward alcohol, & the relationship between culture, theory, & practice, in the US. 34 References. Modified HA

813779

Stepina, Lee P. & Fiorito, Jack (Coll Business Florida State U, Tallahassee 32306). Toward a Comprehensive Theory of Union Growth and Decline, U Industrial Relations, 1986, 25, 3, fall, 248-264. A comprehensive approach to the study of aggregate US union growth decline is offered. The historical & saturationist approaches & previous empirical works are briefly reviewed, & a model incorporating great attention to structural factors & historical influences is formulated & tested using published & unpublished secondary data. In addition to conventional autoregressive regression methods, moderated regression techniques are used to examine the question of whether the Wagner Act induced major structural change in the model. The results indicate that, while certain structural factors exert a consistent influence, a simple single equation model is probably insufficient to account for twentieth-century union growth & decline. 2 Tables, 32 References. AA

813780

Tarallo, Bernadette Mary (U California, Davis 95616). The Production of Information: An Examination of the Employment Relations of Software Engineers and Computer Programmers, * Dissertation Abstracts International. A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 758-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714198.

88T3781

Tokman, Victor E., La crisis del empleo en América Latina (The Crisis of Employment in Latin America), U Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 7-19. (SPA)

¶ The employment situation in Latin America since the 1970s is discussed, using statistical data & evidence from various surveys, & focusing on the problem of underemployment. Reasons for the serious increase in underemployment include: (1) extensive rural to urban migration, (2) insufficient absorption of the LF in modern sectors, especially in the manufacturing industries, & (3) great differences of productivity both within & among the different sectors. Some tentative policy recommendations are made: a redefinition of the leading actors & sectors; & a reorientation of public spending. 2 Tables, 9 References. C. Waters

8813782

Tootle, Deborah M. (Dept Sociology U Georgia, Athens 30602). Social Acceptance of the Recovering Alcoholic in the Workplace: A Research Note, Journal of Drug Issues, 1987, 17, 3, summer, 273-279.

¶ Labeling theory suggests that individuals identified & subsequently labeled as deviant drinkers will become stigmatized & subject to impaired social interactions. Within the workplace, this can have dire consequences for both the individual & the organization. Attitudes toward the alcoholic employee of 2,083 supervisors in a sample of 100 federal installations in Atlanta, Ga., & Dallas, Tex., are examined via interviews & a social distance scale used to measure supervisors' social acceptance of the recovered alcoholic. Results reveal that the labeled, stigmatized alcoholic is at least partially disqualified from full social acceptance in the workplace. 1 Table, 1 Appendix, 17 References. Modified HA

8813783

Trent, Roger B. & Stout-Wiegand, Nancy (Division Safety Research National Inst Occupational Safety/Health, Morgantown WV 26501). Attitudes toward Women Coal Miners in an Appalachian Coal Community, U Journal of the Community Development Society, 1987, 18, 1, 1-14.

¶ In an Appalachian coal mining community, a 1983 telephone survey of 101 households revealed that the overall level of negative sentiment toward female coal miners was substantial & varied by gender role. Although male coal miners generally were negative toward female miners as coworkers, they strongly supported women's right to coal mine jobs. In contrast, female homemakers were somewhat more favorable toward women as coal miners, but they were less likely to support women's right to hold jobs in coal mines. There is evidence that attitudes toward women coal miners are changing. Findings also suggest that existing models used to account for women's work patterns, eg, human capital or dual labor market models, are better suited to anonymous urban settings than to tightly knit rural communities where community culture may influence women's work opportunities. Recommendations are offered for community development practitioners to help increase acceptance of women as miners. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 25 References. Modified HA

8813784

Van Houten, Donald R. (U Oregon, Eugene 97403). The Political Economy and Technical Control of Work Humanization in Sweden during the 1970s and 1980s, U Work and Occupations, 1987, 14, 4, Nov, 483-513.

¶ A review of the nature of the Swedish production system's incorporation of autonomous work groups, & the historical course the innovation has taken from its emergence in the early 1970s to its reversion in the 1980s. Examined are: (1) whether managers were motivated by idealism or by labor shortages & protest, (2) whether or not the production system is a sophisticated form of technical control; (3) whether or not the innovation produces mixed outcomes for labor & for employers; & (4) whether or not the managers' interest in the innovation has diminished as unemployment has risen in the late 1970s & 1980s. Based on 1980/81 interviews with unionists & employers (N = 100) in Sweden & secondary sources in English & Swedish, it is concluded that the adoption & diffusion of a workplace innovation cannot be fully understood without considering (A) the characteristics of the production system in which the innovation is implanted that may simultaneously embrace rationalization Instit. Box 10 722 West 168 St New York 10032). The Influence of Individual and Family Characteristics upon Career Aspirations of Girls during Childhood and Adolescence, Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 11-12, June, 649-668

¶ The personal & family characteristics of girls aspiring to M-dominated careers—i.e., "pioneers"—are examined, based on a longitudinal assessment, involving psychological tests, questionnaires, & interviews, of a sample of 68 Mc girls during childhood (ages 8-13) & again during adolescence (ages 13-18). Ss were originally selected for exposure vs nonexposure to exogenous hormones during pregnancy. In childhood, pioneers were somewhat older, were more often persistent tomboys, had higher IQs, & had parents with higher educational attainment. In adolescence, paternal education was the only variable that showed the same relation to career choice. Ss who had wanted to get married at the time of the childhood assessment were less likely to choose pioneering careers as adolescents. Also, adolescent pioneers had higher educational aspirations than nonpioneers & less likely anticipated being married within ten years than nonpioneers. A number of statistically borderline relationships were also observed: pioneers had somewhat fewer older brothers than nonpioneers, less often came from homes in which traditional femininity was stressed, & more frequently had mothers who had worked outside the home throughout their daughter's school years than mothers of nonpioneers. Prenatal exposure to exogenous sex hormones was not related to career choice during either childhood or adolescence. 5 Tables, 40 References. AA

88T3769

Sethi, Amarjit S., Caro, Denis H. J. & Schuler, Randall S. (Faculty Administration U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5). Technostress Management, ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1986, 13, 41-60

¶ A new concept of technostress, defined as perception of uncertainty, is presented, & an adaptive response mediated by sociopsychological processes, & influenced by the introduction or exposure to information technology, is presented. Technostress is viewed as a process of adaptation to the experience of information technology, determined by technological innovation, strategies for its implementation, & the rate at which it is diffused into the workplace. Drawing on existing theoretical & empirical research, it is shown that technostress can be both positive & negative, individual, organizational, & societal strategies for preventing negative stress are outlined. A strategic choice model is presented for managing technostress, including (1) the environment & its dimensions, (2) actor's perception & creativity in interpreting the environment, (3) moderators of the experience & reactions to uncertainty generated by new technology (eg, power, feedback, task interdependence, & group cohesiveness), & (4) outcomes measured in terms of organizational effectiveness & quality of worklife. It is concluded that the strategic choice approach is significant for coping & managing the inevitability of information technology due to national & international competitiveness. 4 Figures, 53 References. Modified AA

88T3770

Sethi, Amarjit S. & Dimmock, Stuart J. (Faculty Administration U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5). A Transactional Model of Industrial Relations, ♦ Labour and Society, 1987, 12, 2, May, 177-195

¶ It is argued that industrial relations, including collective bargaining, must be understood in terms of the values & strategic decisions made by parties in shaping processes & outcomes in a system, as well as internal & external influences from legal, economic, & sociopolitical subsystems. Various industrial relations frameworks are critiqued, & the inadequacies of a pure structural functionalist approach are illuminated. Two models of value theory: the consensus approach of Talcott Parsons & the conflict approach of Karl Marx are summarized, & a transactional model of industrial relations (TMIR) is proposed as a convergent approach. The matrix & variables in the TMIR framework are described, with focus on how it deals with the concept of strategic choice & value theory. Implications of the model for future research in industrial relations & collective bargaining are discussed. 4 Figures, 79 References. K Hyatt

88T3771

Seyfarth, John T. & Bost, William A. (School Education Virginia Commonwealth U, Richmond 23284). Teacher Turnover and the Quality of Worklife in Schools: An Empirical Study, ♦ Journal of Research and Development in Education, 1986, 20, 1, fall, 1-6.

¶ Factors related to quality of teachers' worklives in school districts in a mid-Atlantic state were examined. Data regarding 6 quality of worklife categories & other district characteristics were collected from district superintendents (N = 126) by means of a questionnaire that included multiple choice & open-ended items to determine the r between teacher turnover & each of 25 district characteristics. Median turnover rate for the 129 districts was 6.5%, very close to the National Center for Educational Statistics' 1983 estimate of 6.0%. The strongest r occurred between turnover rate & beginning salary, provision of hospital insurance, provision of educational leaves, proportion of commuting teachers, & age & condition of school buildings. Highest mean turnover rates occurred in districts with larger numbers of commuting teachers & lower salaries. Turnover was lower in districts with higher salaries, irrespective of number of commuters. 2 Tables, 13 References. Modified AA

88T3772

Sieh, Edward W. (Stockton State Coll, Pomona NJ 08240). Garment Workers: Perceptions of Inequity and Employee Theft, British Journal of Criminology, 1987, 27, 2, spring, 174-190.

¶ An examination of whether perceived unfair treatment leads to employee theft, based on 16 semistructured interviews conducted with tired garment workers. Qualitative analysis indicates that neither employee theft nor other forms of deviance were often selected when responding to matters involving inequity. In only a few cases was there an indication that theft occurred as a result of the worker feeling he or she did not receive what was owed to him or her. The findings are attributed to the influence of the work group & the institutional mechanisms developed by the union. 57 References. Modified HA

88T3773

Siena, Silvano (Facoltà Giurisprudenza Istit Filosofia & Sociologia Diritto U Milano, I-20122 Italy). Gli uffici vertenze dei sindacati e loro impatto sulla professione forense (Trade Union Legal Agencies and Their Impact on the Legal Profession), Sociologia del Diritto, 1987, 14, 2, 93-107 (ITA)

¶ In recent years, the establishment of Trade Union Legal Agencies (TULAs) has become usual in Italy. The impact of such agencies on the practice & development of the legal profession is investigated. The structure & organization of the TULAs are described. The relationship between unions & lawyers is examined on three levels: technical professional collaboration, political participation, & ideological homogeneity. The analysis considers: the lawyer's function as intellectual technician; the lawyer's role as a mediator of interests, & the public relevance of this professional activity. It is concluded that the role assumed by lawyers working with TULAs differs from the traditional view of the independent professional. Modified HA

88T3774

Sik, Endre, Egy alkalmi munkaerőpiac (A Chance Labor Market), Szociológia, 1983, 4, 389-401. (HUN)

¶ The labor market for social scientists in Hungary—specifically for occasional intellectual work—has several distinctive features: instability & oligopolistic nature of demand, concentration in Budapest, & articulation into closed internal markets. Supply is characterized by high qualifications & primary concern with gross income. Information & benefits are distributed by a network of personal relations based partly on nonmarket primary groups & partly on cliques within workplaces. It is highly personal & exclusive. These characteristics result from the uncontrollable nature of intellectual work, its demand for legitimacy, feudal social traditions, the exclusiveness of the group involved, & the inability of labor exchange offices to function effectively. In addition, social science researchers themselves are often job seekers & thus have interests identical with those of their employees. Modified HA

88T3775

Silver, Paula F. (U Illinois, Urbana 61801). Job Satisfaction and Dissatisfaction Revisited, Educational and Psychological Research, 1987, 7, 1, winter, 1-20

¶ When Frederick Herzberg, B. Mausner, & B. Snyderman introduced their theory of job attitudes & motivation in 1959 (The Motivation to Work, New York: Wiley), they launched a theoretical & methodological controversy that remains unresolved to this day: i.e., whether job attitudes—particularly satisfaction & dissatisfaction, constitute a single continuum with a negative & a positive pole or two continua, each with a neutral & an extreme pole. The debate also centers on how best to discover employees' job attitudes & determine whether they comprise one or two consti-trality of work is less for Germans than for all other nationals except the British. For German Rs, the most important functions of work, apart from providing income, were: (1) the work is interesting & satisfying in itself, & (2) work provides interesting contacts with other people. If work time is to be reduced, German Rs would like a shorter working day, longer vacations, & earlier retirement, in that order of preference. 2 Tables, 5 Figures. C. Waters

88T3795

Wilson, Gail (51 Ellington St, London N7 8PN England), Women's Work: The Role of Grandparents in Inter-Generational Transfers, U The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 4, Nov, 703-720

¶ An examination of the role of grandparents in providing a continuing level of material support in 61 inner-city households with dependent children. Data collected in interviews with mothers-to-be, structured by sex, income level, household financial organization, residential proximity, need, & ideology, show that grandmothers give more assistance than grandfathers, & they direct it where it is most needed. The ideology of assistance is differentiated by SC in professional families, the married couple is the unit of transfer, but for Wc families, the solidarity of F relatives—in particular, of daughters with mothers & daughters-in-law with mothers-in-law—is more important. 16 References. Modified HA

88T3796

Wilson, John R. (Dept Production Engineering/Management U Nottingham, University Park NG7 2RD UK), Whose Attitudes to Which Aspects of Work? Or Cool Media for High Participation, Work & Stress, 1987, 1, 4, Oct-Dec, 385-395

¶ Current approaches to the assessment of job attitudes—for use in job redesign—seem to center on the importance of job characteristics. Data collection is largely through well-founded, repeatable, formal questionnaires. It is argued that a broader, ergonomics perspective is required, stressing the importance of job holders' attitudes toward the technology being used, the physical environment & workplace, & procedures in support of work, such as training. Further, to encourage the participation of those whose work is being redesigned, the traditional questionnaire may not be the correct instrument, informal semistructured discussions may better reflect the concerns & priorities of the workers. Perhaps, to paraphrase Marshall McLuhan (Understanding Media, London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1964), formal job attitude instruments used alone are "hot media," in the sense of being well-filled with data but low in participation. Informal discussion methods could be seen then as a "cool medium," high in participation or completion by the audience. 50 References. Modified HA

88T3797

Zapata, Francisco (Centro Estudios Sociologicos Colegio Mexico, 10740 Mexico DF), Hacia una sociologia del trabajo latinoamericano (Toward a Sociology of Work in Latin America), Nueva Antropologia, 1986, 8, 29, Apr, 7-27 (SPA)

¶ The development of a sociology of work in Latin America is traced. Areas reviewed include worker consciousness & social & political evolution, union activities & union/state relations, labor conflict; the action of workers in certain strategic sectors; & the political behavior of the Wc. For a long time, studies focused on the political aspects of the workers' movement, however, recent analytical approaches are less rigid, & go beyond earlier ideological perspectives in an effort to understand the relationship between work & social life. 66 References. C. Waters

88T3798

Zeleny, Milan (Fordham U Lincoln Center, New York NY 10023), On Human Systems Management: An Emerging Paradigm, Human Systems Management, 1986, 6, 2, 181-184.

¶ A discussion of how a new paradigm of management—human systems management—emerges naturally from the spontaneous dynamics of the ongoing processes of DoFL, division of knowledge, high technology, & systems thinking. The shift from a "systems-coordinative" paradigm to the requisite "systems integrative" paradigm is also identified. 1 Figure, 7 References. HA

88T3799

Zylverstajn, Helio (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Collective Bargaining in Brazilian Public Enterprises, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 758-A-759-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711061.

88T3800

—, Black Employment Opportunities: Macro and Micro Perspectives, ♦ The Journal of Social Issues, 1987, 43, 1, spring, 1-78. Comments, 79-132, Replies, 133-156.

¶ In Discrimination in Employment: Insight and Action, George Levinger (U of Massachusetts, Amherst) introduces this special issue of Journal of Social Issues devoted to black employment opportunities. The two lead articles, written from complementary macro & micro perspectives, inaugurate a new dialogue-type format for the journal. In How Minorities Continue to Be Excluded from Equal Employment Opportunities: Research on Labor Market and Institutional Barriers, Jomills Henry Braddock II & James M. McPartland (Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore, MD) use data from a recent national survey of 4,078 employees to examine special employment difficulties faced by blacks & Hispanics. Problems arise at varied stages of the process: the job-candidate, job-entry, & job-promotion stages. Implications for process-based & outcome-based equal opportunity programs are noted. In Shaping the Organizational Context for Black American Inclusion, Thomas F. Pettigrew & Joanne Martin (Stevenson Coll, U of California, Santa Cruz) examine barriers to black employment opportunity from the perspectives of social psychology & organizational research. Gains against racial discrimination attained through governmental action have created new interracial situations, including more subtle & indirect forms of discrimination. Social-psychological research has revealed ways in which blacks are discouraged during recruitment & ways in which cognitive distortions arise concerning blacks. Possible remedies are considered at the social-psychological, organizational, & sociological levels. In Modern Prejudice and Institutional Barriers to Equal Employment Opportunity for Minorities, William T. Bielby (U of California, Santa Barbara) critically examines the strategies recommended for reducing discrimination & notes likely sources of resistance. In Changing Black Americans to Fit a Racist System? Joe R. Feagin (U of Texas, Austin) points out the dearth of scholarly research on blacks in the 1980s & welcomes these two contributions. However, neither examines the historical & social context of racial discrimination in employment. A case study of a suicide by a young black woman journalist in Chicago, Ill, illustrates some aspects of the problem. The need for an approach that recognizes the influence of both race & SC is argued. In Racial Trends and Countertrends in American Organizational Behavior, A. Wade Smith (Arizona State U, Tempe) questions the assumption that covert racism in corporate organizations differs from a general tendency to liberalization in US society, suggesting that covert racism is typical of society in general. For US businesses to counter such racism, they need simply to give black managers power over the jobs of other (white) employees. In Getting the Population Straight: Young Workers, Women Workers, and Black Workers, Lauri Perman (Pennsylvania State U, University Park) critically reviews the various claims of Pettigrew & Martin & of Braddock & McPartland, suggesting that both are too ready to generalize from one population to another—Braddock & McPartland from young to older workers, & Pettigrew & Martin from women to blacks. In Rethinking Affirmative Action, Irwin Katz & Harold M. Proshansky (Graduate Center, City U of New York, NY) question whether individual racism is a pervasive feature of US society & recommend positive cooperative strategies as desirable alternatives to increasing government regulation. In Behavior-Change Implications of Low Involvement in an Issue, Stuart W. Cook (Instit Behavioral Science, U of Colorado, Boulder) explores the implications of the Braddock & McPartland findings for improving employment opportunities for blacks. Policy must recognize that white employers have favorable or neutral attitudes toward black employment but low involvement in it as an issue. In On the Road: Comment on the Cognitive Stereotyping Literature in Pettigrew and Martin, Susan T. Fiske (U of Massachusetts, Amherst) largely agrees with Pettigrew & Martin's approach, but raises questions about the ability of cognitive approaches to stereotyping to account for actual interracial encounters, suggesting that they fail to consider intention, motivation, & behavior. In Hazards in the Translation of Research into Remedial Interventions, Norman Miller (U of Southern California, Los Angeles) recommends microlevel research & intervention as means of increasing black employment opportunities. Caution in moving from theoretical analysis to intervention is urged, & the role of judgments in selecting interventions is emphasized. In Social Psychology and Affirmative Action: The Importance of Process in Policy Analysis, Rupert W. Nacoste (Auburn U, Ala) examines the social-psychological costs of affirmative action programs. In Social Science Evidence and Affirmative Action Policies: A Reply to the Commentators, Braddock & McPartland examine two questions raised by commentators: whether there are better means than affirmative action of improving minority employment opportunities, & how social sci-

& humanization, (B) the task environment of the firm that may compel managers to design production innovations with an eye to competition & market fluctuations; & (C) economic cycles & shifts in the political climate; which can influence (D) the relative strengths of labor & management to demand arrangements in a labor process favoring them. 1 Table, 116 References. HA

88T3785

Vaselli, Paolo, Strutturazione del tempo e attore sociale (The Structuralization of Time and the Social Actor), Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 63-95. (ITA)

¶ The principal sociological aspects of the relationships among working time, leisure time, & daily life as a whole are examined. The dimension of time is considered from the perspective of its significance for the social actor whose behavior it regulates. Points for discussion are drawn from different disciplinary contexts & include rites of passage; the use of time, time & social role, & shifting involvements. Questions of research methodology are also investigated. 72 References. Modified HA

88T3786

Volpert, Walter (Institut Humanwissenschaft Arbeit und Ausbildung Technische U Berlin, D-1000 10 Federal Republic Germany), Lernen und Aufgabengestaltung am Arbeitsplatz (Learning and Task Design in the Workplace), Zeitschrift für Sozialisationsforschung und Erziehungssoziologie, 1987, 7, 4, Oct., 242-252. (GER)

¶ A discussion of learning & task design at the workplace, focusing on didactics & methods of on-the-job training, & how to combine this training with participatory job design. Some models & field studies from Sweden, the US, & the German Democratic Republic are presented. A correspondence between tasks & skills must be achieved in such a way that a continuation of participatory redesign of tasks is enhanced. This goal presupposes a changed attitude of management to work design, i.e., the technocentric view has to be replaced by a holistic problem approach. 10 References. Modified AA

88T3787

Vranješ, Božo, Mikšić, Dragutin & Čaldarović, Ljerkica Jaeger (Fakultet strojarstva i brodogradnje U Zagreb, YU-41000 Yugoslavia), Kraj jednog pokušaja: autonomne radne grupe kao tehnički i ljudski problem (The End of One Effort: The Autonomous Work Group as a Technical and Human Problem), Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 3-4, July-Dec., 217-229. (SCR)

¶ The application of a model of relatively autonomous work groups in a Yugoslav factory is evaluated, using questionnaire data collected from workers (N not given). Analysis shows that the model was successfully implemented even in cases where the production system had different structures & low levels of worker autonomy. Group production organization is desirable because it raises the productivity of the system, the quality of the work, worker satisfaction, & the direct input of participants into the design of the production process. Modified HA

88T3788

Wall, Toby D., Clegg, Chris W., Davies, Robert T., Kemp, Nigel J. & Mueller, Wally S. (MRC/ESRC Social & Applied Psychology Unit Dept Psychology U Sheffield, S10 2TN England), Advanced Manufacturing Technology and Work Simplification: An Empirical Study, ♦ Journal of Occupational Behavior, 1987, 8, 3, July, 233-250.

¶ An argument from labor process theory suggests that advanced manufacturing technology works to simplify & deskill jobs & to reduce the quality of working life. Questionnaire data from 112 employees in 4 jobs—2 based on traditional manual assembly & 2 on applications of information technology—within a large electronics company reveal no uniform deskilling effects of advanced manufacturing technologies. The responses of Rs in the 2 traditional vs the 2 technologically innovative jobs display large differences, suggesting that specific choices of technology & work organization strongly affect skill use & employees' attitudes. Experience of advanced manufacturing technology was associated with more positive attitudes toward its use on the shopfloor. 3 Tables, 30 References. Modified HA

88T3789

Wallace, Michael (Dept Sociology Ohio State U, Columbus 43210), Dying for Coal: The Struggle for Health and Safety Conditions in American Coal Mining, 1930-82, ♦ U Social Forces, 1987, 66, 2, Dec., 336-364

¶ An examination of the determinants of fatal & nonfatal coal mining injuries in the US from 1930 to 1982. Three theoretical orientations are considered as explanations for the long-term secular decline in both fatal & nonfatal injury rates during this period: state regulation, industrial business climate, & resource mobilization theory. Previous research has pointed to the importance of state regulatory & enforcement activity as the key determinant in lower injury rates, & has neglected features of the industrial business climate & the collective capacities of miners to organize effectively against unsafe conditions. Multivariate analyses of time series data suggest that these neglected factors are equally or more important than state regulatory efforts for improved health & safety conditions in US coal mining. Several of the statistical results are illustrated by reference to the events surrounding the 1984 accident in the Wilberg mine in Utah that killed 27 persons. It is suggested that state regulation & enforcement of safety standards should be encompassed under the resource mobilization perspective. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 65 References. HA

88T3790

Walgrave, D. (U Aston, Birmingham B4 7ET England), Increasing Free Time, Diminishing Free Space: A Reflexive Study on Youth Unemployment, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 480

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T3791

Warr, Peter (MRC/ESRC Social & Applied Psychology Unit U Sheffield, S10 2TN England), This Unhappy Breed, U New Society, 1987, 81, 1280, 10 July, 16-18

¶ Psychological problems plaguing the chronically unemployed in GB are examined, with focus on those of middle-aged Ms, a group who consistently exhibit greater distress (eg, depression, anxiety, relationship strain) on standardized interview schedules than do their employed counterparts. Continuing unemployment causes this level of distress to remain high, but stable, however, a state of resigned adaptation often develops that locks the unemployed into chronic stasis, unmotivated & increasingly unable to participate in the outside community or in improving their personal situation. Nine environmental features that contribute to mental health are identified that can be detrimental through their absence or excess, their particular role in creating or maintaining the resigned adaptation response is explored in detail. 1 Table, 1 Drawing. K. Hyatt

88T3792

Weakliem, David Lynn (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Explaining the Outcomes of Collective Bargaining: Transaction Cost and Power Approaches, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept., 758-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711057.

88T3793

Whyte, William Foote, From Human Relations to Organizational Behavior: Reflections on the Changing Scene, Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 1987, 40, 4, July, 487-500

¶ The development since the late 1960s of two distinct streams of organizational behavior research is described: (1) a main stream, characterized by a sharp separation between research & practice & rigorous specification & measurement of variables; & (2) an alternate stream, with more applied research & occasional active involvement in organizational change. Labor & management practitioners today are far more interested in behavioral research—at least that of the alternate stream—than they were in the 1940s & 1950s. From an analysis of the literature on the relationship between worker participation & productivity, it is concluded that the alternate stream offers more promise for advances in both science & practice. 30 References. HA

88T3794

Wilpert, B. & Ruiz Quintanilla, S. A. (U Berlin, D-1000 33 Federal Republic Germany), I valori in relazione al lavoro: il significato del lavoro (SDL) per le forze di lavoro nella Repubblica Federale Tedesca (Values Relating to Work: The Meaning of Work for the Labor Force in the Federal Republic of Germany), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 2, Apr-June, 197-207. (ITA)

¶ Results are reported of an international study of the meaning of work, focusing on the findings of a questionnaire survey in West Germany in comparison to 7 other countries: Japan, the US, the Netherlands, Belgium, GB, Yugoslavia, & Israel. The centrality of work & the most important aspects of work for the individual are investigated. The West German sample (N = 1,264) is subdivided by sex & age groups. The center, 255-275.

§ Research in Latin America has so far failed to demonstrate a significant connection between regime type & pattern of military spending in Latin America. It is suggested that whether regimes are military or civilian does not usefully measure military influence over budgetary decisions, & that regime type be replaced as an independent variable by dominant patterns of civil-military relations. Statistical analysis of military budget shares for 26 regimes between 1967 & 1980 suggests that regimes are a useful unit of analysis & that patterns of civil-military relations can account for some trends in military spending. 5 Tables. Modified HA

88T3810

Horowitz, Dan (Dept Sociology & Political Sciences Hebrew U Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel), Strategic Limitations of "A Nation in Arms", U Arm Forces and Society, 1987, 13, 2, winter, 277-294

§ Relatively small nations can compensate for their limited demographic resources by a high military mobilization level, a large, well-trained, combat-ready reserve force can contribute to this, minimizing redundancies in the military's peacetime strength without reducing the size of its effective wartime strength. The use of this system has enabled Israel to become an effective regional power despite inferiority in size of regular forces, as demonstrated in the 1956, 1967, 1973, & 1982 wars. However, these wars also have revealed sociopolitical constraints & military-operational limitations that reduce the range of strategic options open to a "nation in arms." Some strategic objectives may be unattainable because the use of force needed to achieve them overburdens the civilian component of the nation's armed forces. Modified HA

88T3811

MacBride, Sean, Reflections on Intelligence, ♦ Intelligence and National Security, 1987, 2, 1, Jan, 92-96.

§ Some issues surrounding intelligence operations & national security are explored from the perspective of a former Irish Minister for External Affairs, revolutionary nationalist, politician, & lawyer, who had a life-long exposure to Britain intelligence operations. Some factors that changed the nature & increased the scope of the secret services worldwide during the twentieth century are discussed, including new forms of communication & the development of colonial empires & attendant nationalist elements. The activities of the British Secret Service in Ireland are detailed, which included the commission of terrorist acts that were subsequently blamed on nationalist groups. This expansion of the British Secret Service activities is paralleled by the spread of the US Central Intelligence Agency into political activities in the Third World & elsewhere. K. Hyatt

88T3812

Martin, Randy (202 8th Ave #4, Brooklyn NY 11215), The Professional Army and Military Labor: The Battle for Internal Control, Sociological Spectrum, 1987, 7, 4, 367-382.

§ A SC analysis of the soldier in the contemporary armed services examines the theoretical basis for considering the soldier's services as labor. The soldier is placed in the context of the tension between nationalism & professionalism in the army. The uncertainty of securing military labor in the aftermath of the antiwar movement & the army's responsibility for rationalizing its own terms of employment generate problems of labor control. The military has attempted to address these problems within the context of the technicization of the armed forces. As in other industries, technological innovation can have unintended consequences that exacerbate the problem of control, one being polarization of relations of authority between officers & enlisted personnel. The potential opposition to battle situations invites an analysis of soldier labor within the logic of a sociology of peace. While this is theoretical in nature, it is based on empirical evidence. An extensive & intensive survey of Vietnam war veterans (N not given) provided a wealth of ethnographic material detailing soldiers' combat experiences, & broader demographic & sociopsychological data. The ideas were germinated between a year's work with the survey data & the emphasis that war & antiwar issues have received in the press. 24 References. HA

88T3813

Moskos, Charles C. (Dept Sociology Northwestern U, Evanston IL 60201), La Banalisation de l'institution militaire. L'Armée américaine: du modèle institutionnel au modèle industriel (Trivialization of the Military Institution. The American Army: From an Institutional to an Industrial Model), ♦ Futuribles, 1987, 111, June, 27-37 (FRE)

Translated from English by Bernard Boene.

§ The US armed forces are moving from an organizational format that is predominantly institutional to one that is becoming more & more industrial. This trend can also be detected in the armed forces of most Western nations. The trend from institutional to occupational is reflected in the shift from (1) normative values to marketplace compensation relative to military legitimacy, (2) diffuse to specific roles of military members, (3) qualitative to quantitative evaluations of performance, (4) rank-based to skill-based pay, (5) noncash to cash compensation, (6) broad to narrow purview of military justice, (7) integration to isolation of spouses from military community, (8) limited to wide employment of F's, & (9) adjacency to separation of work & residence. AA

24 bureaucratic structures/organizational sociology

88T3814

Anheier, Helmut K. (Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903), Structural Analysis and Strategic Research Design: Studying Politicized Interorganizational Networks, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 3, summer, 563-582

§ The substantive implications of conducting structural network analysis with more intensive work on research design & data collection are discussed. Based on evidence from a case study of a politicized social structure in Nigeria, the major features of strategic research design are considered, eg, cognitive & behavioral data, types of ties, multiplexity, & access restrictions. 1 Table, 3 Figures, 37 References. Modified HA

88T3815

Battistoni, Lea & Brocchieri, Giovanna Scarpetti, Organizzazione e ambiente: verso un approccio interorganizzativo (Organization and Environment Toward an Interorganizational Approach), Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 97-126. (ITA)

§ The relationship between organization & environment is investigated. Various approaches to the systematic analysis of organizations, developed over the years by the scientific community, are examined. Aspects discussed include: closed & open systems; a typology of environments; the theory of organizational contingency; the role of limits, strategies & structures, coordination & adaptation; power; & dependence on resources. A different approach is hypothesized, which, rather than focusing on the organization in its entirety & complexity, emphasizes the interorganizational context & the network of interactions. Modified HA

88T3816

Bryant, Denise D. & Merker, Stephen L. (Coll Ur & Public Affairs U Louisville, KY 40292), A Living Systems Process Analysis of a Public Transit System, U Behavioral Science, 1987, 32, 4, Oct, 293-303

§ An examination of how living systems theory (Merker, Stephen L., Living Systems Theory as a Management Tool, a General Survey of Systems Methodology, Louisville, Ky: Society for General Systems Research, 1982) can be applied at the level of the organization to assess the effectiveness of an Ur public transit authority. Living systems process analysis was utilized to survey & analyze department ratings of information & matter/energy processing. Evaluations were compared between departments that rated high & low on effectiveness criteria, such as meeting goals & objectives. Results showed significant differences between groups on many living system processes, & revealed problems for remedial action. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 30 References. Modified AA

88T3817

Burris, Val (Dept Sociology U Oregon, Eugene 97403), The Political Partisanship of American Business: A Study of Corporate Political Action Committees, U American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 6, Dec, 732-744.

§ Data on the contributions of 443 corporate political action committees to campaigns in the 1982 Congressional election are used to evaluate 6 popular theories of business political partisanship. Two theories are supported by the data: the "Yankee-Cowboy" theory of regional political ence can play a useful role in public employment policy. In The Fruits of Critical Discussion: A Reply to the Commentators, Pettigrew & Martin welcome critical discussion as a valuable contribution to social psychology's status as a science. Seven major points raised by commentators are reconsidered. (1) the complexity of modern racism, (2) the role of judgment in remedy recommendations, (3) the importance of all levels of analysis, (4) the need for governmental review of affirmative action in employment, (5) the importance of basic assumptions, (6) the need for greater specification, & (7) the need for additional remedies. W H Stoddard

23 military sociology

88T3801

Bachman, Jerald G., Sigelman, Lee & Diamond, Greg (Survey Research Center Instit Social Research U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), Self-Selection, Socialization, and Distinctive Military Values: Attitudes of High School Seniors, in Armed Forces and Society, 1987, 13, 2, winter, 169-187

¶ Do the distinctive promilitary values of military personnel arise out of socialization during military training & service, or from prior differences in values & beliefs among those who enter military service? Questionnaire data from high school seniors in 10 classes, 1976-1985, collected during large-scale surveys (N not given), clearly support the self-selection interpretation, those expecting to serve, especially those expecting to lead military careers, were consistently more promilitary than their classmates. The largest differences involved perceptions of military job opportunities, views on military supremacy, intervention, & obedience also differed, but less sharply. These findings replicate earlier research, suggesting that self-selection is dominant & that actual service may not substantially alter prior attitude differences. An all-volunteer force containing numerous careerists raises the question of a separate military ethos. 2 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T3802

Belenky, Gregory L. (Dept Behavioral Biology Walter Reed Army Instit Research, Washington DC 20012), Varieties of Reaction and Adaptation to Combat Experience, in Bulletin of the Menninger Clinic, 1987, 51, 1, Jan, 64-79

¶ Maladaptive reactions to combat range from immediate reactions, through acute, delayed, & late reactions, to chronic reactions, including posttraumatic stress disorder. Because case symptoms blend imperceptibly one into another, it is contended that these varied reactions are not separate clinical entities but rather indicate combat reaction spectrum disorder (CRSD). Diagnostic evidence for this condition is drawn from the army case records of Israeli soldiers who fought in the 1973 (N not given) & 1982 (N = 200) wars in the Middle East, & it is shown how factors associated with combat effectiveness also help prevent CRSD. Treatment approaches to CRSD are discussed briefly, including having units reconstruct battle experiences. 24 References. HA

88T3803

Bertaud, Jean-Paul (U Paris I, F-75231 Cedex 05 France), Napoleon's Officers, Past and Present, 1986, 112, Aug, 91-111

¶ Napoleon Bonaparte, as emperor, adopted a system of military promotion originally based on the three criteria of merit (length of service & bravery in battle), talent, & election by subordinates, after a time he succeeded in eliminating the third. He saw military service both as a proper career for sons of notables & as a way of gaining notable status. Officers gained a status superior to that of civilians, which was supported by high rates of pay, in addition, they were granted a variety of special legal privileges. The resulting officer corps actually mixed men from varied social backgrounds, producing conflict between young officers of education & refined manners & men who had come up from the ranks & lacked both. The notables formed the main power base of Napoleon's unusual military dictatorship. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix. W H Stoddard

88T3804

Boene, Bernard, Banalisation des armées: le cas français (Trivializing the Military: The French Case), in Futuribles, 1987, 111, June, 39-54 (FRE)

The devaluation of the French army is discussed in terms of: its internal culture & external legitimacy, identification with the military role, military remuneration, housing, spouses of the military, & social reference groups. The end of colonial fervor, the advent of nuclear force, & the revalorization of the military condition have adversely affected the army's status. While it is conceded that the decline may continue, it is suggested that the authorities be vigilant & imaginative in light of the changing historical context. D. Graves

88T3805

Boggs, Vernon W., Sr. (York Coll, Jamaica NY 11432), From Heroes to Villains: The Case of U. S. Military Deserters in Sweden, National Journal of Sociology, 1987, 1, 2, fall, 237-250

¶ A case study is presented of US military deserters & draft resisters who sought asylum in Sweden in the late 1960s. Prior studies of this group of approximately 800 men suggested that they would eventually adapt to the host society. Data from participant observation, content analysis of trial documents & newspaper accounts, & informal interviews conducted over a 15-year period indicate that these men were unable to adjust owing to the lack of a sound assimilation policy on the part of the host government, coupled with, in some cases, the men's individual pathologies. As a result, many of the men engaged in various criminal behavior. Public reaction to those activities further reduced the likelihood of successful assimilation, & by 1984 nearly 95% of the men had been deported or had left Sweden voluntarily. 1 Table, 13 References. Modified HA

88T3806

Boyd, Carl (Old Dominion U, Norfolk VA 23508), Significance of MAGIC and the Japanese Ambassador to Berlin: (I) The Formative Months before Pearl Harbor, in Intelligence and National Security, 1987, 2, 1, Jan, 150-169

¶ A discussion of the reports of the Japanese ambassador to Berlin (Germany) during WWII as observed by US intelligence via MAGIC—the deciphered Japanese transmission code—focusing on the period preceding the Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, attack. The underlying role of this source of intelligence is assessed in the conduct of military operations, strategic policy making, & international diplomacy. The nature of the source itself is analyzed, & the quality of the intelligence it produced is evaluated. F. Rasmussen

88T3807

Boyd, Carl (Old Dominion U, Norfolk VA 23508), Significance of MAGIC and the Japanese Ambassador to Berlin: (II) The Crucial Months after Pearl Harbor, in Intelligence and National Security, 1987, 2, 2, Apr, 302-319

¶ Continuation of an examination (see abstract of Part I in this section) of the role played by MAGIC—the US intelligence operation that intercepted & deciphered Japanese diplomatic messages between Tokyo's representatives abroad & the foreign ministry—in the critical period following the attack on Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. Of particular strategic importance were the communications of the new Japanese ambassador Ōshima Hiroshi in Berlin, for they contained detailed tactical military information & afforded Anglo-American analysts a comprehensive strategic perspective on the growing Axis alliance. The threat of a Japanese-German coalition was dispelled through analyses of Ōshima's messages, which revealed the lack of a genuine military, economic, & political cooperation between the two powers. K. Hyatt

88T3808

Caforio, Giuseppe, La sociologia militare in Italia (Military Sociology in Italy), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug, 27-44. (ITA)

¶ Military sociology emerged rather late in Italy compared with other countries, & the sociological approach to military defense problems has encountered serious difficulties in both the academic & military environments. Italian military sociology has generally been devoted to professional & organizational issues. There are marked differences between the approaches of U & army scholars. 83 References. Modified HA

88T3809

Grindle, Merilee S. (Instit International Development Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138), Civil-Military Relations and Budgetary Politics in Latin America, in Armed Forces and Society, 1987, 13, 2, win-

88T3827

Lucas, Rob (Faculty Administrative Studies York U, North York Ontario M3J 1P3), Organizational Diagnostics: Translating the Political into the Technical, ♦ Journal of Management, 1987, 13, 1, spring, 135-148.

¶ The consequences of misdiagnosing a problem for organizational decision making are illustrated by a case involving a public school district's handling of a complex, ambiguous, & potentially destructive issue: the closing of one of its school buildings. This problem lacked a definition that would allow it to be resolved in terms that were acceptable to organizational decisionmakers & significant external groups. Two aspects of diagnosis—framing & exclusion—are examined in detail, & the possibility that diagnosis tends to occur in either public or private decision arenas is discussed. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 30 References Modified HA

88T3828

Makó, Csaba, A folyamatos tomegtermelés alapjainak megteremtése: a fordizmus (The Creation of the Bases of Continuous Mass Production: Fordism), Szociológia, 1983, 3, 225-236. (HUN)

¶ An attempt is made to identify the place & role of Fordism in the development of the capitalist work process. Historical evidence supports the judgment that Fordism, unlike Taylorism, has accomplished revolutionary changes not only in the organization of work but in the capitalist process of work as a whole. Managers of companies accepting Fordism were not satisfied with regulating the work behavior of the workers but tried to extend their control over the reproduction of labor power as well. 2 Tables. Modified HA

88T3829

Manz, Charles C. & Sims, Henry P., Jr. (Dept Strategic Management & Organization U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), Leading Self-Managed Groups: A Conceptual Analysis of a Paradox, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 2, May, 141-165.

¶ Contemporary problems of modern organizations have stimulated the development of new work innovations, including self-managed work groups. One puzzling aspect of self-managed groups is the identification of an appropriate role for external work-group leaders. Why should such a leader be necessary if groups are indeed to be self-managing? Perspectives from sociotechnical systems (STS) & social learning theory (SLT) are used to develop a conceptual framework that suggests a role for this unique type of leader—a Superleader who leads others to lead themselves. The combining of STS & SLT perspectives enables an expanded view of the role of self-managed group leaders that emphasizes both contextual & motivational needs of the work groups. Limiting & contingency factors of the proposed framework are discussed, & directions for future research suggested. 2 Figures, 41 References. HA

88T3830

Masuch, Michael & Verhorst, Rik (Sociologisch Instituut U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands), Over schadelijke organisaties (On Harmful Organizations), ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 3, May-June, 176-195. (DUT)

¶ A discussion of organizations that are harmful to their environments, eg, organized crime, overactive bureaucracies, totalitarian dictatorships. Harm may occur if the constituents are sufficiently ignorant about the organization's performance or are kept from leaving its sphere of influence. Harmful organizations survive by means of selection, by which harmful organizations experience faster & greater growth than their harmless counterparts; counterproductivity, which activates the demand for output, resulting in accelerated growth; suppression or neutralization of the opposition; & conflict. The origin of such organizations is examined, as well as the conditions fostering their emergence as dominant factors in an environmental niche. 6 Figures, 105 References. Modified HA

88T3831

Merker, Stephen L. & Lusher, Connie (System Science Institut U Louisville, KY 40292), Living Systems Process Analysis of an Urban Hospital, Behavioral Science, 1987, 32, 4, Oct, 304-314.

¶ A study of a living system at the level of the organization, specifically, a review of a living systems process analysis (see Merker, Stephen L., Living Systems Theory as a Management Tool, a General Survey of Systems Methodology, Louisville, Ky: Society for General Systems Research, 1982) of an Ur hospital & its constituent departments. The relationship between a hospital department's performance of the living system's processes & its effectiveness is discussed. Recommendations emanating from the analysis are included. 11 Tables, 10 References. Modified HA fied AA

88T3832

Millett, Dennis S. & Gillespie, David F. (Colorado State U, Fort Collins 80521), The Effects of Legitimacy on Goal Change and Formalization in Organizations, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 1-2, Jan-Apr, 33-53.

¶ A review of the literature of organizational studies suggests that organizational legitimacy strongly affects organizational behavior. A path model of legitimacy is proposed in which environmental & member legitimacy lead to goal change, & these factors in turn lead to formal structure change. Analysis of interview data from informants (N not given) in a purposive sample of 27 large corporations operating in Calif supports the model. 1 Table, 2 Figures. W. H. Stoddard

88T3833

Miller, George A. & Mahmoudi, Hoda (U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112), Cross-National Research: A Comparison of Social Structure and Bureaucracy in the United States and Pre-Revolutionary Iran, International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 273-286.

¶ A causal model of organizational structure is evaluated using heterogeneous samples of organizations from the US & Iran. Structured interview data from chief executive officers &/or personnel managers at service, manufacturing, & professional organizations in Salt Lake City, Utah, & Tehran, Iran ($\Sigma N = 129$), along with data from various organizational records, suggest that organizations in both societies become less centralized as they become larger & structurally more complex, if impersonal mechanisms of control are in place. The similarity in the estimates obtained suggests that organizational structure may well be "culture-free," & that cross-national research on underlying causal processes—rather than a continued focus on simple bivariate associations—will lead to greater research correlation & theoretical synthesis. Results also demonstrate that substantive findings need not be confined to samples of homogeneous organizations within a particular country. Indeed, continued studies of particular organizational types within a single cultural context may not be the best way to advance knowledge in this area. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 45 References. Modified HA

88T3834

Morelli, Gilda, La gestione delle risorse umane in due aziende chimico-farmaceutiche (The Management of Human Resources in Two Chemical-Pharmaceutical Companies), Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 261-273. (ITA)

¶ The principal problem areas in the management of human resources in companies are discussed, based on a literature review. An empirical study is then described, which compares the management of human resources in 2 leading companies in the chemical-pharmaceutical sector in Italy. The 2 companies differ significantly in type of ownership, organization, management, & geographic location. Company A is part of a multinational group with US style management & has 160 employees; Company B belongs to an Italian group & has 400 employees. Both operate under the terms of Italy's national labor contract. Aspects examined include human resource planning, the information system of the personnel administration, & the recruitment, selection, training, & development of personnel. 1 Table, 2 Figures. Modified HA

88T3835

Morgan, Glenn & Hooper, David (Bradford & Ilkley Community Coll, Bradford West Yorks BD7 1AY England), Corporate Strategy, Ownership and Control, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 4, Nov, 609-627.

¶ The role of capital in understanding the labor process is shown via a case study of Imperial Tobacco (UK) in the 1970s, including an analysis of its corporate decision making. Paths of capital are differentiated—industrial, banking, & commercial—both within the firm & in the general economy. Although Imperial's initial investments were successful, an accumulationist strategy resulted in a disastrous investment & take-over battle. Current UK banking & financial practices indicate a trend toward consolidationist strategy, whereby assets may be liquidated to ensure the flow of production. The links between a firm, the owners, & the economy are the key to labor process. 1 Appendix, 49 References. Modified HA

88T3836

Phillips, Robert L., Blair, John D. & Schmitt, Neal (Texas Tech U, Lubbock 79409), Beyond Group Cohesion: The Concept of Organiza-

differences among US corporations, & the regulatory environment theory, which views the differential relationship to government regulation as a primary determinant of corporate political behavior. No support is found for 4 other theories of business political partisanship: the core-periphery, the inner-circle, the managerialist, & domestic-multinational theories. The 4 disconfirmed theories are all variants of a perspective known as "corporate liberalism," which hypothesizes a tendency toward greater liberalism on the part of the more dominant or central corporations in US society. 3 Tables, 58 References. Modified HA

88T3818

Carlton-LaNey, Iris (Dept Sociology/Anthropology U North Carolina, Charlotte 28223), County Social Services Directors' Perceptions of Their Policy Boards, Administration in Social Work, 1987, 11, 1, spring, 25-36

¶ Perceptions that directors (N = 75) of social services in NC counties have toward their policy boards are investigated using mail questionnaire data. The influence of several variables are examined, including the directors' training, experience, perceived level of power & influence, & membership in professional organizations. The data indicate that directors support the use of policy boards as a mechanism for citizen input. Directors generally recognize their boards' imperfections & limitations but accept the responsibility to work with the boards to ensure their involvement in the policy-making process. 4 Tables, 15 References. Modified HA

88T3819

Cogen, Marc (Seminarie Europees Recht Rijks U Gent, B-9000 Belgium), Internationale ontwikkelings-organisaties in hervorming (International Development Organizations under Reform), ♦ Tijdschrift voor Sociale Wetenschappen, 1987, 32, 4, Oct-Dec, 364-379 (DUT)

¶ The effectiveness of international organizations has been increasingly questioned in the 1980s. Here, three organizations are discussed that were severely criticized by Western governments following the initiative of the Reagan administration: UNESCO, the UN, & the IDA (International Development Assoc). The withdrawal of the US & GB from UNESCO caused it serious intellectual & budgetary loss. The financial crisis of the UN became acute when the US, which finances 25% of the UN budget, refused to pay its contribution on time. After lengthy negotiations, funds for the IDA remained well below the target proposed by its staff. In each case, the relationship between voting power & financial contribution determined the outcome of the conflict. Existing systems of voting power & procedures in international organizations impede the North/South dialogue. Western countries choose to discuss world economic affairs within groups outside the network of organizations, thereby excluding developing countries from participation. Both the reopening of the North/South dialogue & the successful reform of the organizations will depend on changes in the decision-making process, which in turn presents a challenge to international law. 1 Table, 39 References. Modified HA

88T3820

Dery, David (Dept Social Work Ben-Gurion U Negev, Beersheva 84105 Israel), Knowledge and Organizations, ♦ Policy Studies Review, 1986, 6, 1, Aug, 14-25

¶ An examination of knowledge utilization & organizational learning as organizational phenomena. As such, the question of knowledge utilization, learning, & knowledge growth in organizations, calls for the notion of organizational epistemology, which has been neglected due to the prevailing view of organizational learning as experimental learning. The notion of organizational epistemology, or theory of knowledge, is, in turn, helpful in freeing organizations from the naive empiricism attributed to them, & utilization-minded researchers from the frustration that accompanies the repeatedly documented phenomenon of nonutilization. To better appreciate the role of policy-minded social science knowledge & information, it is proposed that learning behavior be conceptualized in terms of "contest" rather than experimentation & verification. 52 References. Modified HA

8T3821

Firth, Michael (U Colorado, Boulder 80309), Multiple Directorships and Corporate Interlocks in New Zealand Firms, ♦ The Australian and New Zealand Journal of Sociology, 1987, 23, 2, July, 274-281

The extent of multiple directorships & corporate interlocks among

New Zealand Stock Exchange listed companies is examined via annual reports & lists of directors from all companies listed in 1982 (N = 221) & 1974 (N = 247). The extent of multiple directorships was found to have increased between 1974 & 1982, & the degree of corporate interlocks appears to be at least as great as those experienced in Australia, Canada, the UK, & the US. 4 Tables, 10 References. Modified HA

88T3822

Ford, G. W. (Programme Organizational Behaviour U New South Wales, Kensington 2033 Australia), Cross-Cultural Differences in Enterprise Skill Formation: Can Australia Learn from Japan?, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 2, May, 205-213.

¶ A comparison of employment in large industrial organizations in Japan & Australia, emphasizing the development of human resources & the social & organizational factors that support such development. Based on personal experiences as a low-skilled worker in Australia, data from numerous US & the Instit of Labor in Japan, & case studies of 2 new Japanese plants, various educational, ethnic, & work-related differences between the two countries are examined. Japan's commitment to continual skill formation & retention at all organizational levels is a primary factor that distinguishes it from Australia. It is argued that Australia could produce a similarly skilled & secure LF by following Japan's example, despite their vastly different cultures. K Hyatt

88T3823

Frank, Nancy & Groves, W. Byron (U Wisconsin, Milwaukee 53201), Organizational Perversion, ♦ Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 3, Aug, 315-334.

¶ Organizational perversion is defined as excessive emotional investment in organizational behavior. Drawing on the work of neo-Freudians, such as Otto Rank, Ernest Becker, & Alfred Adler, it is argued that organizational perversion offers a psychological solution to the universal human dilemma of having to live with the knowledge of life & death. Rigid adherence to organizational rules, routines, & hierarchies are used by organizational perverts as defense mechanisms against object-loss & separation. The concept of organizational perversion is also explored in relation to the traditional sociological literature of organizational behavior. Organizational perversion is also considered in relation to secularization, urbanization, industrialization, & modernization. 37 References. AA

88T3824

Grimes, A. J. & Cornwall, J. R. (Dept Management U Kentucky, Lexington 40506), The Disintegration of an Organization: A Dialectical Analysis, ♦ Journal of Management, 1987, 13, 1, spring, 69-86

¶ An examination of the creation & eventual disintegration of Innisfree, a free school that operated in Lexington, Ky, from 1971 to 1975, focusing on the dynamics of power & conflict within the organization. Qualitative methods including ideographic methodology & dialectical analysis are used, & perspectives of organization members are adopted. Ideological & structural contradictions are identified that led to the school's disintegration, which were not perceived by organization leaders & members. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 39 References. Modified HA

88T3825

Kóhégyi, Kálmán, Szervezeti változások végrehajtásának érdek-es hatalmi viszonyai (Interest and Power Relations of the Implementation of Organizational Changes), Szociológia, 1983, 1-2, 79-115 (HUN)

¶ Abstract not currently available

88T3826

Kosnik, Rita D. (Texas A&M U, College Station 77843), Greenmail: A Study of Board Performance in Corporate Governance, Administrative Science Quarterly, 1987, 32, 2, June, 163-185.

¶ Based on predictions from agency theory & a theory of managerial hegemony, the board structure of 53 US companies that privately repurchased stock at a premium above the marketplace—ie, paid greenmail—and 57 companies that resisted greenmail between 1979 & 1983 are compared using data from company proxy materials. The decision to pay greenmail reflects the board's ineffectiveness, & the inability of the board's outside directors to prevent management from making decisions—such as paying greenmail—that are in conflict with stockholders' interests. Boards that effectively resisted greenmail were found to have more outside directors, with executive experience, especially interorganizational transactions. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 71 References. Modified HA

† Three studies investigating discrepancies in published US research on participation & its outcomes are presented. The first study, a longitudinal meta-analysis of participation-outcome research published between 1950 & 1985 (N = 70 studies), revealed apparent relationships between societal issues in the US & the questions asked by US researchers, the methods used to perform research, & the magnitudes of reported effects. The second & third studies (a longitudinal meta-analysis of 89 satisfaction-performance correlations published between 1950 & 1983, & mail questionnaires assessing the social attitudes of 21 participation-outcome researchers in 1986, respectively) provided corollary evidence clarifying these findings, showing the absence of general method trends throughout the organization sciences but suggesting the existence of a relationship between researchers' social attitudes & the conduct of participation-outcome research. Besides explaining inconsistencies among published findings, results suggest that societal trends have affected the conduct of participation research. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 60 References. Modified HA

88T3846

Walsh, James P. & Dewar, Robert D. (Amos Tuck School Business Administration Dartmouth Coll, Hanover NH 03755), Formalization and the Organizational Life Cycle, Journal of Management Studies, 1987, 24, 3, May, 215-231

† After exploring the history of the concept of formalization & how its theoretical importance has often been obscured in empirical investigations, it is suggested that formalization as code, channel, & standard can best be understood within the context of the organizational life cycle. Two outcomes of formalization are discussed: administrative efficiency & influence. It is shown that formalization (as efficiency) is likely to contribute to effectiveness early in an organization's history, while later in the life cycle, it may (as influence) contribute to organizational ineffectiveness & decline. 1 Table, 67 References. Modified HA

88T3847

Yuchtman-Yaar, Ephraim & Shenkar, Oded (School Administration Tel-Aviv U, Ramat-Aviv 69978 Israel), The Meaning of Industrial Prestige: Some Evidence from Banking and Insurance, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 4, 409-423.

† In light of the growing interest in industries as distinct units in the structure of stratification, the dimensions underlying the social evaluation of industries are explored, with emphasis on the meaning of industrial prestige. The data consist of multiple ratings of the banking & insurance industries by a national sample of Israelis (N = 1,200). The empirical findings indicate (1) virtual consensus on the ratings exists across various demographic & SE categories, & (2) industrial prestige is related to instrumental rather than normative considerations of industrial behavior. These results are discussed in terms of the specific characteristics of banking & insurance as well as in terms of the general debate over the meaning of prestige scales of occupations. 5 Tables, 22 References. Modified HA

65 social network analysis

88T3848

Chiesi, Antonio M. (Dept scienze uomo U Trieste, I-34127 Italy), Software per l'analisi dei reticoli sociali (Software for the Analysis of Social Networks), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug, 73-88 (ITA)

† After outlining a theoretical framework, the characteristics & technical possibilities of three available software packages: Graphlib, Sonet 1, & Gradap—for the analysis of social networks are reviewed. Special reference is made to relational data processing in social research. 1 Table, 21 References. Modified HA

88T3849

Cohen, Carl I., Teresi, Jeanne & Holmes, Douglas (Dept Psychiatry Downstate Medical Center State U New York, 450 Clarkson Ave Brooklyn 11203), Social Networks and Mortality in an Inner-City Elderly Population, International Journal of Aging and Human Development, 1986-87, 24, 4, 257-269

† An examination of methodological problems in research on the relationship between social networks & mortality, focusing on measures of social interaction. Data are presented from interviews conducted with 155 elderly residents of midtown Manhattan, New York, NY, single-room occupancy hotels, & from a 3-year follow-up investigation, which revealed that 28 members of the sample had died. Discriminant function analysis indicates that 10 of 19 network variables were relatively strong discriminators between survivors & nonsurvivors. The network variables cut across all categories of social interaction, thereby revealing why, despite the few network variables used in previous studies, nearly all had been significant. 21 References. Modified HA

88T3850

Holman, Nicole & Arcus, Margaret (Tupper Mini School, Vancouver British Columbia V6T 1W5), Helping Adolescent Mothers and Their Children: An Integrated Multi-Agency Approach, Family Relations, 1987, 36, 2, Apr, 119-123.

† A model for an integrated, multiagency program for adolescent mothers & their children, implemented in the Tupper Mini School, established at the Sir Charles Tupper High School, Vancouver, British Columbia, is described. Each of the four agencies involved (the school board, the YWCA (Young Women's Christian Assoc), the municipal health department, & the provincial social services ministry) provides financial support & is responsible for one component of the program: education, day care, health, & counseling. This award-winning program is recognized for its innovative educational approach. Factors important in its success include a wide base of support, on-site services, established mechanisms for integration, & flexibility. Some of the policies & procedures have relevance for other programs for adolescent parents & their children. 1 Table, 15 References. Modified HA

88T3851

McPhee, Robert D. (U Wisconsin, Milwaukee 53201), A Model of Social Network Development in Organizations, Central States Speech Journal, 1986, 37, 1, spring, 8-18

† A critical review of Herbert A. Simon's "A Formal Theory of Interactions in Social Groups" (in Models of Man, New York: Wiley, 1957, 99-114), drawn from George Homans's theory of activity, interaction, & sentiment in groups (The Human Group, New York: Harcourt, Brace, & World, 1950). Simon's model is modified to account for individual-level variables in dyads, & thus for relational development in social networks in organizations. The reformulated model is tested on the data that Homans used. Deviations of model from theory are found & interpreted as due to effects of externally required activity on intensity of sentiment, rather than straightforward positivity as predicted by Homans & Simon. Limitations of the data-set & statistical methods are emphasized. 1 Table, 19 References. Modified AA

88T3852

Yamagishi, Toshio, Gillmore, Mary R. & Cook, Karen S. (Dept Sociology U Washington, Seattle 98195), Network Connections and the Distribution of Power in Exchange Networks, American Journal of Sociology, 1988, 93, 4, Jan, 833-851.

† An extension of recent work on exchange networks is presented, specifying theoretically the implications of different types of network connections for the distribution of power. Power-dependence principles are employed to make predictions concerning the distribution of power in differently organized exchange networks. The results of several laboratory experiments using 28 same-sex, 5-person groups of Coll students to test these predictions are reported. Computer simulation results are also presented. The findings demonstrate that the locus of power in exchange networks is determined by the nature of the network connections (positive, negative, or mixed) & the scarcity of resources, factors that alter the underlying dependency relations. 3 Tables, 3 Figures, 26 References. Modified HA

88T3853

Zelkowitz, Phyllis (Centre Research Human Development Concordia U, Montreal Quebec H3G 1M8), Social Support and Aggressive Behavior in Young Children, Family Relations, 1987, 36, 2, Apr, 129-134.

† The relationship between social support & aggressive behavior in children aged 5-7 from low-income families is considered, based on an inten-ditional Synergy and Its Impact on Performance, National Journal of Sociology, 1987, 1, 2, fall, 140-171.

¶ After examining the notion of group cohesion & its impact on organizational productivity & resistance to disintegration, a construct is developed labeled "organizational synergy." Literature on military organizations is used, along with literature on organizations in general to conceptualize organizational synergy & its principal components. A framework for understanding the crucial interactive effects of organizational synergy is offered, & the impact of synergy on performance & resistance to disintegration is considered. Theoretical & managerial implications are discussed, pointing to areas for future research. 1 Table, 3 Figures, 34 References. HA

88T3837

Pratnikar, Janez & Pratnikar, Vesna (Faculty Economics U Ljubljana, Yugoslavia), The Yugoslav Self-Managed Firm in Historical Perspective, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 2, May, 167-190.

¶ Any discussion of the Yugoslav self-managed firm must stress the historical changes that it has undergone & take into account real-life experience. The main institutional changes in the development of Yugoslav self management & the main characteristics of self-managed production units in four phases of post-WWII development are discussed. Emphasis is on the role that self-managed production units played in each particular period, eg, in the process of decision making, organization of the enterprise, role of management, & relations to the environment. Implications for the theory of the self-managed firm & the possible future direction of Yugoslav self management are explored. 1 Table, 2 Appendixes, 9 References. Modified HA

88T3838

Ronner, Menachem & Fannenbaum, Arnold S. (Haifa U, Mount Carmel 31999 Israel), Organizational Efficiency and Egalitarian Democracy in an Intentional Communal Society: The Kibbutz, The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 4, Dec, 521-545.

¶ Kibbutzim differ from one another in democratic & egalitarian practice & in equality itself. It is hypothesized that these differences are explainable by the opposing effects of a technological imperative based on rational striving for economic efficiency & an ideological imperative based on commitment by members to traditional kibbutz values. Cross-sectional data from economic records of the kibbutz federations & from 4 survey research studies in kibbutzim are used to test this hypothesis for a sample of 49 kibbutzim. Results suggest opposing effects of the two imperatives on democratic & egalitarian practices, although not necessarily on each other. Implications for theories about the inconsistency between technological progress & communality are discussed. 6 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 53 References. Modified HA

88T3839

Schilit, Warren Keith (Coll Business Administration U South Florida, Tampa 33620), An Examination of the Influence of Middle-Level Managers in Formulating and Implementing Strategic Decisions, Journal of Management Studies, 1987, 24, 3, May, 271-293.

¶ The upward influence of middle-level managers (M1 Ms) on strategic planning & decision making is examined using data from 60 such managers at 4 types of organizations (large-small, public/private). Rs completed Likert-type questionnaires that investigated their perceptions of their own power & competence & that of their superiors. In addition, they kept diaries of their interactions with their superiors over a 2-month period, 352 attempts to influence superiors were recorded. Stepwise regression analysis is used to describe the nature of strategic decisions, methods of upward influence used by M1 Ms, perceived causes of the success or failure of influence activity, & structural differences in strategic decision making. Results provide support for the importance of M1 Ms both in implementing decisions & in affecting the long-term success of the organization. Suggestions for future research are proposed. 7 Tables, 1 Appendix, 54 References. K. Hyatt

8T3840

Seloli, Frank P., Jr. (National Science Foundation, Washington DC 20550), Problems of Controlling the Efficiency of Bureaucratic Behavior, Policy Studies Review, 1986, 6, 1, Aug, 71-89.

Problems of controlling the efficiency of bureaucratic behavior are discussed. Two broad approaches to the topic are taken: (1) a general discussion of systemic complications that mitigate against efficiency; & (2) study of productivity & efforts at instituting program changes that result in more efficient operations. The former is by nature a more theoretical &, unfortunately, less positive statement, & the latter is more practical & optimistic; taken together, however, the two approaches provide a balanced overview of efficiency as it relates to bureaucratic behavior. 1 Table, 27 References. HA

88T3841

Shrum, Wesley & Wuthnow, Robert (Dept Sociology Louisiana State U, Baton Rouge 70803), Reputational Status of Organizations in Technical Systems, American Journal of Sociology, 1988, 93, 4, Jan, 882-912.

¶ Social factors influencing the reputational status of research organizations in large-scale, cognitively diverse, multisectoral technical systems are examined, using data drawn from interviews with personnel from a national US sample of 50 organizations engaged in research on nuclear-waste management & 47 organizations involved in photovoltaics research. The reputational status of each organization was assessed by knowledgeable Rs from other organizations in each system. A model is presented that characterizes reputational status as a function of organizational performance, organizational structure, & network position. Support is obtained for the model by the use of both subjective & objective indicators, including evidence of the mediating effects of network position. Further results obtained from a block model analysis indicate that ties to specific blocks are a more important determinant of reputational status than block membership. 7 Tables, 3 Figures, 66 References. Modified HA

88T3842

Isong-Shien Wu, Title appears in Chinese (An Analysis of Organizational Effectiveness), Chung Yang Yen Chiu Yuan Min Tsu Hsueh Yen Chiu So Chi K'an/Bulletin of the Institute of Ethnology Academia Sinica, 1986, 61, spring, 129-181. (CHI)

¶ Several major theoretical perspectives on organizational effectiveness are compared & used to guide an investigation of factors that affect the organizational effectiveness of farmers' associations in Taiwan. Three separate effectiveness factors are distinguished: education & administration, credit & finance, & supply. The effects of variables representing structure, environment, & management on these factors are assessed. A practical approach is suggested in which five effectiveness factors are distinguished: finance, extension, management, credit, & market. 19 Tables, 2 Figures, 50 References. Modified HA

88T3843

Vermillion, Joann Marie (U Florida, Gainesville 32611), A Comparison of Employee and Supervisor Perceptions of the Use of Exposure and the Solicitation of Feedback within a Large State Agency, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1030-A-1031-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8716057.

88T3844

Vlasov, E. L. & Shchelkin, A. G., Ideyno-teoreticheskie tupiki "zaorganizovannogo obshchestva" (po materialam burzhuaznoy sotsiologii) (Ideological and Theoretical Deadlocks of "Bureaucratic Society" (A Survey of Bourgeois Sociology)), Vestnik Leningradskogo Universiteta. Istoriya KPSS, Nauchnyi Kommunizm, Filosofiya, Pravo, 1987, 2(6), June, 35-40. (RUS)

¶ The growing significance of organizational problems in bourgeois ideology is due to many recent structural changes in management theory. During the 1960s, there was an impetus for structural changes initiated not only from the management level but also from rank-&-file workers corresponding to demands for political democratization. This movement was superseded by the organizational imperative movement of the 1970s, seeking greater centralization of business enterprises. Special attention is given to the shift in the 1980s toward neocorporatism, weakening traditional bourgeois democratic institutions & strengthening nonparliamentary & nonpartisan mechanisms (lobbies, functional representation, & consultative groups). The development of special interest groups dominating the government also occurs in socialist nations. The task before both capitalist & socialist countries is to eliminate forms of organization hindering the democratic process. Modified AA

88T3845

Wagner, John A., III & Gooding, Richard Z. (Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824), Effects of Societal Trends on Participation Research, Administrative Science Quarterly, 1987, 32, 2, June,

0700 social change and economic development

15 social change & economic development

88T3857

Abbruzzese, Salvatore, Conflittualità e bisogno del sacro nel Mezzogiorno industriale (Conflict and the Need for the Sacred in Industrialized Southern Italy), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec, 125-139. (ITA)

¶ Preliminary findings of field research in progress (methodological details not given) in the province of Frosinone, southern Italy, are presented. The theoretical bases of the study are Franco Ferrarotti's studies of the emergence of the sacred in contemporary society; & the phenomenological tradition in the work of A. Schutz, as translated & interpreted by Alberto Izzo (no reference given). Frosinone is an area of rapid industrial development, centering on the Fiat automobile factory. The emergence of an unexpected conflict in the workplace & community is discussed. Focus of the conflict is a dispute whether the Fiat workers should be granted holidays for certain religious festivals. The nature of these festivals is described, & a sociological analysis of popular religiosity is attempted. Economic factors influencing the conflict are also discussed. C. Waters

88T3858

Adhikari, Kamini (Indian Instit Management, Alipore PO Box 16757 Calcutta 700027 India), Science, Society and the Indian Transformation, ♦ Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 33-56

¶ A revised version of SA 34 3/86S17561/ISA/1986/4142

88T3859

Akinchan, S. & Verma, U. K. (Dept Sociology Ranchi U, 834008 Bihar India), Development: Available Concepts and Actual Imperatives, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 11-25

¶ Social scientists have become very concerned with identifying the causes of development & with predicting its future course. At the same time, they lack any one well-defined consensus on what development is. Several aspects of development are examined: economic, political, cultural, psychological, & societal. Based on these, nine characteristics definitive of underdevelopment are identified: reliance on human & animal rather than inanimate power sources, low productivity, low urbanization, low standards of living, poor work discipline, social stratification, ideologies of inequality, a pyramidal educational structure, & control of land as central to political processes. 11 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3860

Baburoglu, Oguz Nuri (U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104), A Theory of Stalemated Social Systems and Vortical Organizational Environments: The Turkish Experience and Beyond, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 759-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714004.

88T3861

Baird, Charles W. (California State U, Hayward 94542), Comparable Worth: The Labor Theory of Value and Worse, ♦ Government Union Review, 1985, 6, 1, winter, 1-29.

¶ The fact that in the US, women's full-time wages are, on average, 62% of men's full-time wages has nothing to do with discrimination. Bureau of Labor Statistics data reveal that there is no statistically significant difference between the full-time wages paid to women & men who do the same work & who have the same rank & tenure. Rather, the sources of the 62% discrepancy are differences in rank & tenure between men & women who do different work. Except by looking at wage rates determined in unhampered labor markets, there is no logically or empirically valid way to determine whether two people who do different work have jobs that are of comparable worth. The attempt to make such a determination based on the notion that two people who have jobs that require similar education, training, & skills necessarily do work of comparable worth resorts to the use of the thoroughly discredited nineteenth-century labor theory of value. Even Karl Marx, with his concept of "socially necessary" labor, recognized that only the market can reveal the value of any job. 4 Tables, 1 Figure. AA

88T3862

Bakx, K. (U Liverpool, L69 3BX England), Peasant Formation and Capitalist Development: The Case of Acre, Southwest Amazonia, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 480.

Unavailable from UMI; reference copy at U of Liverpool.

88T3863

Batygin, Gennadiy Semenovich (Instit Sociological Research Soviet Academy Sciences, Novoheremushkinskaya ul 46 Moscow 117418), "Dobrodetel'" protiv interesa (zametki ob otrazhenii raspredelitel'nykh otnosheniy v massovom soznanii) ("Virtue" vs Self-Interest (Notes on Distribution Relationships in Mass Consciousness)), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 24-36. (RUS)

¶ The new Soviet law legalizing individual labor activity went into effect in Nov 1986, destroying old stereotypical ideas about the egalitarian nature of socialism & facilitating a more effective utilization of the human factor in raising productivity. Sociologists need to demonstrate that individual small businesses do not represent materialistic self-interest in the pejorative sense by definition; entrepreneurs can deliver certain types of goods & services at a lower price & with better quality than can bureaucratic state agencies. In this light, the conservative reaction in the USSR against reintroduction of small business is analyzed as a mindset full of inhibitions against any type of change. 1 Photograph, 19 References. Modified HA

88T3864

Chichkanov, V. P. (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Sotsial'no-ekonomicheskie problemy khozyaystvennogo osvoeniya zony BAMA (Socioeconomic Aspects of the Development of the Baykal-Amur Railway), Vestnik Akademii Nauk SSSR, 1987, 57, 9, Sept, 73-85. (RUS)

¶ From its inception, the Baykal-Amur Railway has been an impetus to the economic development of a huge, sparsely populated territory in the eastern USSR. Enormous problems result from the severe climate & remoteness vis-à-vis access to essential goods & services. Although almost two million residents now live in the area, there is a constant labor shortage. Key problems include regulation of worker turnover, formation of a social infrastructure, & supply of adequate nutrition. 5 Photographs. G. Prostavov

88T3865

Coenen-Huther, Jacques (Dept Sociology U Geneva, CH-1211 4 Switzerland), Economie et sociologie: vers une approche intégrée (Economics and Sociology: Toward an Integrated Approach), Recherches Sociologiques, 1987, 18, 3, 193-207. (FRE)

¶ The disciplines of economics & sociology are compared on the basis of six criteria: subject matter, dependent variables, independent variables; ways of theorizing, methodology; & research techniques. An integrated approach is suggested that would combine models from both disciplines: the independent variables of economic models would become intermediate variables, & the constants of economic analysis would become sociological variables. 19 References. Modified HA

88T3866

Daniels, P. W. (Dept Geography U Liverpool, L69 3BX England), The Geography of Services, Progress in Human Geography, 1987, 11, 3, Sept, 433-447.

¶ The principal findings of research on producer services in Western Europe & North America during 1986 are reviewed. The Producer Services Working Party's 1986 report, Uneven Development in the Service Sector:

sive field study of 39 such families ($N = 20$ white & 19 black). Support networks were defined to include older siblings, fathers, & other adults who performed any of three child-care functions: physical maintenance, nurturance, & discipline. Both interviews & observational data were used to assess the child's support network. The results indicate that the relationship between social support & aggression is influenced by both the category of network member & the type of support offered. Applications of network analysis in the provision of services to families under stress are discussed. 3 Tables, 37 References. Modified HA

74 voluntary associations

88T3854

Balme, Richard (Centre étude et recherche vie locale Institut études politiques Bordeaux, BP 101 F-33405 Talence France). La Participation aux associations et le pouvoir municipal: capacités et limites de la mobilisation par les associations culturelles dans les communes de banlieue (Participation in Associations and Local Power Possibilities and Limits of Mobilization by Cultural Associations in Suburban Municipalities). Revue française de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 4, Oct-Dec, 601-639 (FRE.)

¶ The impact of cultural associations on municipalities is examined, especially with regard to the forms & effect of collective action, by studying the case of such associations in suburban communities. The professions & social categories of association presidents ($N = 72$) & association activists ($N = 370$ from 72 different associations) in France are analyzed. The type of hierarchy that emerged is characterized by a cultural market structured by professionals, lines of communication opened by influential social position, & a heterogeneous group of association directors, removed from the active minority who execute association projects. Such class consciousness in an endeavor over an interclass issue limits the capacity for collective action. 2 Graphs, 24 References. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T3855

Eltorre, Betsy (Addiction Research Unit Institut Psychiatry, De Crespigny Park London SE5 8AF England). A Study of Voluntary Drug Agencies: Their Roles in the Treatment and Rehabilitation Field. British Journal of Addiction, 1987, 82, 6, June, 681-689

¶ A report from the Drug Agencies Information Gathering Exercise that explores voluntary agencies' direct service provision, the extent of partnership with other agencies, & service areas where gaps exist. A detailed description is provided of agencies' work in relation to clients' special needs, both drug- & non-drug-related, based largely on questionnaire, interview, & document analysis data from a survey of 25 voluntary drug agencies in London, England. The overall position voluntary agencies have in the network of treatment & rehabilitation services for problem drug users is illustrated through specific discussions of their roles as specialists & in assessment, referral, innovation, & campaigning. 3 Tables, 13 References. Modified HA

88T3856

Pallai, Bartolomeo J. (California State U., Fullerton 92634). Voluntary Associations and Well-Being in Three Metropolitan Areas: Cross-Cultural Evidence. International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 3-4, July-Oct, 265-288

¶ Social exchange theory is used to predict how involvement in voluntary associations affects subjective well-being. Based on the logic that involvement would have to be seen as profitable for it to continue, it was hypothesized that subjective well-being would be positively correlated with involvement in voluntary organizations. In addition, it was hypothesized that low-SES, young, unmarried, & foreign-born people would experience higher subjective well-being through involvement in voluntary organizations, but higher-SES, older, married, & native-born people would not, since they invested less in such involvement. To test these hypotheses, closed-ended questionnaires were mailed to systematic samples of 750 adult Ms in Sydney, Australia, Los Angeles, Calif., & London, England (in 1976, 1978, & 1980, respectively), yielding usable responses from about 33% of addressees. Subjective well-being was measured by Norman Bradburn's Multiple Attitude Balance Scale ([MABS] The Structure of Psychological Well-Being, Chicago: Aldine (no year given)) & a question regarding perceived happiness. Findings indicate that hypothesis 1 is most strongly supported in Sydney, where MABS & happiness were both positively correlated with involvement. In Los Angeles, MABS was correlated with involvement, but happiness was only correlated with attendance in voluntary organizations. In London, there was little evidence of a relationship between subjective well-being & involvement. It was also found that the relationship between subjective well-being & involvement was not consistently higher for low-SES, young, unmarried, or foreign-born Rs. There was considerable variability among metropolitan areas in how status variables interacted with involvement to affect subjective well-being. 5 Tables. Modified AA case suggests that such strategies are not an effective means of encouraging equitable growth in the context of a regional capitalist economy. The implications of development trends for the future of Tubuai society are projected. 6 Tables, 42 References Modified HA

88T3874

Kim, Eun Mee (Brown U, Providence RI 02912). From Dominance to Symbiosis: State and Chaebol in the Korean Economy, 1960-1985. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1034-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715520.

88T3875

Kiser, Edgar Vance (U Arizona, Tucson 85721). Kings and Classes: Crown Autonomy, State Policies, and Economic Development in Western European Absolutisms. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 759-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712887.

88T3876

Kolosi, Tamás & Tucek, Milan. Differenciálódás és közeledés (Az ipari dolgozók belső rétegződése hat szocialista országban) (Differentiation and Rapprochement). Szociológia, 1983, 1-2, 1-15 (HUN)
¶ Between 1976 & 1978, six European socialist countries conducted empirical comparative research on the internal stratification of the industrial LF. Examined were nature & conditions of work; origins, career, schooling, & training, material conditions of work, cultural & sociopolitical activities, & leisure time activities. The general mechanisms of differentiation & the internal system of relationships of social differences were identified by factor analysis. The relationship between this system of stratification & the differences between unskilled & skilled workers & low & high level nonmanual workers was investigated using discriminant analysis. 4 Tables, 1 Figure Modified HA

88T3877

Kutta, František (Instut Philosophy & Sociology Czechoslovak Academy Sciences, Jilská 1 CS-110 00 Prague 1). Základní vztahy prognózy sociálního rozvoje (Basic Relations of the Social-Development Prognosis). Sociologický Časopis, 1987, 23, 5, 425-439 (CZE)
¶ Findings of sociological studies of Czechoslovakia are summarized & a program for further research is outlined. The central goal is offered of attaining a general prognosis for social conditions in Czechoslovakia. Both advances in production & increased popular self-government are needed for the realization of Czechoslovakia's potentialities. Methodologically, a prognosis cannot rely solely on macrostatic analysis, but must be based on a concrete historical analysis of a society. A complex, interdisciplinary system approach to the subject is needed. Modified HA

88T3878

Leydesdorff, Loet & Van den Besselaar, Peter (Dept Science Dynamics U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands). Squeezed between Capital and Technology: On the Participation of Labour in the Knowledge Society. ♦ Acta Sociologica, 1987, 30, 3-4, 339-353
¶ The impact of the development of a labor-oriented technology on science & technology (S&T) is analyzed. The assertion that S&T are dependent on social interests implies interaction with trade unions. The 1976 Lucas Aerospace Alternative Corporate Plan, a combined effort of workers & professionals as an alternative to job reductions, was the precedent for many such combined efforts in Scandinavian industry. However, such workers' plans were largely in response to the threat of a plant closure or reorganization. A questionnaire was sent to 65 labor/technology researchers in West Germany in the mid-1980s, concerning suggestions as to the definition of & obstacles to a labor-oriented technology. The 53% who responded indicated no clear research programs in the field. Responses to the same questionnaire sent to 50 international social scientists in the field of labor & technology indicated that the organization of the labor process was the greatest deterrent to labor's impact on technology. Positive feedback & initiatives from labor & the general public are necessary if S&T are to benefit society. 53 References. D. Graves

88T3879

Magatti, Mauro (Dipt Sociologia U Cattolica Milano, I-20123 Italy). Continuità e cambiamento: l'analisi di J. Schumpeter (Continuity and Change: J. Schumpeter's Analysis). Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 2, Apr-June, 170-188 (ITA)

¶ The work of Joseph Schumpeter is considered an interesting starting point for the study of the transformation process taking place in advanced societies. Schumpeter's concept of innovation & his analysis of entrepreneurial actions still constitute two important analytical categories for explaining some aspects of current economic changes. Difficulties arise when his model is extended beyond the economic system. However, his approach remains rich in suggestions, especially as regards his capacity for linking old & new, innovation & preservation, & continuity & change. Modified HA

88T3880

Matejko, Alexander J. (Dept Sociology U Alberta, Edmonton T6G 2H4 Canada). The Limits of Western Growth. ♦ International Journal of World Peace, 1987, 4, 1, Jan-Mar, 59-68
Comments, 68-73, Rejoinder, 73-75

¶ The crisis of the modern world stems mainly from its faulty social organization. The bureaucratic burden does not allow full utilization of the human potential & many resources are wasted due to the lack of organizational imagination. The major contradictions faced by the democratic developed societies of the West are reviewed: unemployment among youth, declining productivity, low trust of institutions, low organizational loyalty, governmental policies badly designed & poorly implemented, etc. There is an obvious need for the more imaginative organizational forms that would mobilize collective energy & reinforce the trust relationships within the task-oriented teams. To this end, a dialectic paradigm for management training is proposed. In Comments Adam Podgorecki (Carleton U, Ottawa, Ontario) & Witold Kiezun (U of Montreal, Quebec) explore characteristics of Western society that support Alexander Matejko's views. Kiezun, however, identifies economic & ideological improvements in the US. In Rejoinder Matejko disputes Kiezun's contention of US improvements. Modified AA

88T3881

Natoli, Gabriella. L'avvento post-industriale in Italia (The Post-industrial Advent in Italy). Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 161-179 (ITA)

¶ A discussion of the profound SE change that has taken place in advanced industrial societies in recent years. Possibly the most important feature is the transformation of the occupational structure, in which the tertiary sector has expanded & evolved at the cost of the industrial sector, to the point where industry can no longer be considered as central in the SE system. An analysis is presented that takes the tertiary sector as its point of departure. Theoretical approaches & statistical data are reviewed in an attempt to characterize the postindustrial society in Italy. 11 Tables. C. Waters

88T3882

Niosi, Jorge & Faucher, Philippe (Centre recherche développement industriel & technologique U Québec, Montreal H3C 3P8). Les Marchés publics comme instrument de développement industriel: le cas d'Hydro-Québec (Public Markets as an Instrument of Industrial Development: The Case of Hydro-Québec). ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 1, 9-28 (FRE)

¶ Whatever their initial mandate, state enterprises can become a powerful instrument of industrial policy. This is demonstrated by a case study of Hydro-Québec (HQ), one of Quebec's two largest producers of electrical energy. HQ has exerted a strong influence on the electrical equipment industry in Quebec, besides playing a decisive role in the expansion of research & development. Recent production agreements with about 40 suppliers will accentuate the role of HQ in the expansion of firms that produce strategic equipment. 6 Tables, 17 References. HA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T3883

Pavlov, V., Vazhnaya sostavnaya chast' perestroyki (An Important Component of Restructuring). Kommunist, 1987, 13, Sept, 14-26. (RUS)

¶ Reform of price-setting mechanisms is a vital component of economic restructuring programs in the USSR & should help overcome problems of supply & demand, deficit spending procedures, & a variety of troublesome trade problems. The old system of prices was determined during a historical period when centralization of economic decision making was foremost in the eyes of state planners, leading to subjective & voluntaristic policies at times. Currently, prices on fuels are too low, leading to the Understanding the Location and Role of Producer Services (Birmingham Instit of British Geographers, 1986), is reviewed, with focus on (1) the continuing uncertainty about who benefits & who loses from the expansion of service sector employment, & (2) whether services can sustain economic stability & absorb labor shed by more traditional industries. Restructuring has encouraged certain countries to capitalize on their comparative advantage in the market for services, which is part of the process of internationalization. Technology & technological change continue to attract substantial research attention respective to the market, the skills expected from the L.F., & the issue of dispersal vs centralization of service production. The impact of advanced information & telecommunications technology on the organization & location of large accountancy firms is outlined. Assessments of the role of producer services on Ur regional development have been a prominent feature of European research with a continuing & significant dependence on small-scale empirical studies because of the absence of suitable secondary data. An encouraging degree of complementarity between the findings of recent studies is noted, especially with respect to the importance of the quality & range of human resources in a region or a city for the development of a strong producer service sector. Office location studies continue to have a low profile although there have been some interesting efforts at a more systematic approach to theory. 112 References. Modified AA

88T3867

Deb, P. C. & Arora, D. R. (Dept Economics & Sociology Punjab Agricultural U, Ludhiana 141004 India), Impact of Advanced Agricultural Technology on Socio-Economic Structure: A Study in Rural Punjab, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 26-34

¶ An examination of the adoption of new technology by large farmers, based on data obtained via structured interviews conducted individually with 304 farmers in 33 villages located in 2 districts of Punjab, India, who owned 7+ hectares of well-irrigated cultivated land & also owned tractors. Adoption of threshers & of oil engines or electric motors is examined, & it is determined that increased income is largely spent on investment in productive assets. 8 Tables. W. H. Stoddard

88T3868

Dilgenakiy, German Germanovich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V 71), Perestroyka i dukhovno-psikhologicheskie protsessy v obshchestve (Restructuring and the Spiritual and Psychological Processes in Society), Voprosy filosofii, 1987, 41, 9, Sept, 3-19 (RUS)

¶ Until now the social sciences did not seriously study the psychology of Soviet society. Most such studies were characterized by a normative approach focusing on ideal images instead of the behavior & consciousness of real people. Ideas were spread denying or belittling the independence of social-psychological processes leading to an excess of ideology at the expense of science. Under Stalin, a combination of collectivist socialist values & an atmosphere of suspicion & humiliation led to negative effects on people's well-being. In recent years, social psychology suffered from excessive formalism mirroring bureaucratic government structures. As such, a gap appeared between people's real feelings & the trends measured by social psychologists. The key to current restructuring efforts is getting citizens to think & act independently, providing sufficient opportunities for meaningful work & creative activities. Modified HA

88T3869

Gerami, Shahin (Southwest Missouri State U, Springfield 65804), OPEC in the World-Economy: A Test of the Dependency and Neoclassic Economics Models, ♦ Western Sociological Review, 1986, 15, 1, 79-98

Less-developed countries attempt to maximize the benefits of resource specialization while avoiding the pitfalls of foreign economic dependence. One of the techniques utilized by these countries is the development of coordinated export policies to control market fluctuations, improve their capital gain, & control foreign dependence. These policies underlie the organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), which has generally been excluded from quantitative cross-cultural studies of specialization & growth. Here, the regulatory effect of OPEC on the economic transformation of its members is examined. While OPEC membership has improved the general level of accumulated domestic capital & contributed to members' economic growth, it has failed to shield members from external dependency, especially export dependency. 4 Tables, 42 references. HA

88T3870

Hill, Stephen (Dept Sociology U Wollongong, New South Wales 2500 Australia), Basic Design Principles for National Research in Developing Countries, IM Technology in Society, 1987, 9, 1, 63-73

¶ Basic design principles for national research in developing countries are established by questioning the applicability of Western practice in the design of research organizations in Third World nations, where the SE & technological environments are totally different. Principally, in developing countries, the environment into which research is applied is characterized by "knowledge poverty" & by a driving force of technological change in the economy that emanates from outside national boundaries, rather than from indigenous research efforts. This drive is unlikely to address national planning priorities except by accident. In this environment, it is argued, national research can never play anything but a marginal role in development, but, at the same time, the role it plays is central to "directing" development strategies, particularly in filling gaps that international technological interests are unlikely to notice. The most basic principles are (1) research must be targeted strategically to utilize scarce resources well, & (2) knowledge bridges must be constructed from research into the economy in a way that might be inappropriate in advanced nations. The consequences for organization design that follow the application of these principles are explored. HA

88T3871

Hsiao, Hsin-Huang Michael, Development Strategies and Class Transformation in Taiwan and South Korea: Origins and Consequences, ♦ Chung Yang Yen Chiu Yuan Min Tsu Hsueh Yen Chiu So Chi K'an/Bulletin of the Institute of Ethnology Academia Sinica, 1986, 61, spring, 183-217

¶ An exploration of the dialectic relationship between state development strategies & class transformations in the East Asian nations of Taiwan & South Korea. After WWII, two major periods of national development strategy occurred: an initial period of land reform followed by a later period of industrialization, which in turn had two phases of import-substitution & export-production. The earlier period created a class of small landowners & diminished the old landlord class; the later period created industrial capitalists, the Wc, & the Mc, & dislocated the small landowner class. Implications for the state-class relationship & likely future directions of development are considered. 4 Tables, 36 References. Modified HA

88T3872

Johnson, Bjorn (Aalborg U Center, 9100 Denmark), Institutional Economics: What's That?, ♦ Acta Sociologica, 1987, 30, 3-4, 393-397

¶ A definition of institutional economics is offered, followed by an overview of several articles in the field, published in a special journal issue on institution economics (Tidskrift for Politisk Økonomi, 9, 3). Rather than fixating on competitive markets, institutional economics encompasses the fields of sociology, organization theory, & political science. Two types of institutional economics are described: classical, emphasizing the relationship between institutional & technological factors, & new, stressing institutional evolution, design, & comparison. While different approaches exist in each group, both have three propositions in common: (1) institutions matter, (2) institutions change, & (3) institutions & their changes can be studied via social science methodology. 8 References. D. Graves

88T3873

Joralemon, Victoria (Dept Anthropology Southern Methodist U, Dallas TX 75275), Development and Inequity: The Case of Tubuai, a Welfare Economy in Rural French Polynesia, IM Human Organization, 1986, 45, 4, winter, 283-295

¶ Welfare & equity-oriented strategies have been advocated to counter the growth of wealth differences & structured social inequality in developing peasant communities. The value of such strategies are assessed based on their practice on Tubuai, a French Polynesian island society dominated by a welfare economy. The structure of household SE differentiation that has emerged in response to new economic opportunities is described. The impact of a new potato cash-cropping project is examined, documenting the structure of differential participation & isolating household level factors strongly associated with variable levels of development participation. It is argued that although development strategies are welfare & equity-oriented, development does not have a broad base of participation among Tubuai families & that a small segment of the population is expanding cultivation & rapidly concentrating capital. This

† A recent pattern in the internationalization of production involves transferring the labor-intensive phases of manufacturing from more- to less-industrialized nations possessing abundant low-waged labor. Proponents of such offshore manufacturing claim that it provides the Third World worker with employment, a steady income, & useful skills. Critics object, however, that export processing does not alleviate unemployment, for its LF is predominantly F, & unemployment in the Third World is essentially a M problem. This view is challenged using aggregate data from national & occupational censuses on M & F employment patterns in northern Mexico. Analysis indicates that unemployment persists despite considerable investment in export-processing industrialization in this border region. There is little evidence, however, that the chief cause of this continuing unemployment is the preferential hiring of women. 4 Tables, 56 References. Modified HA

88T3893

Varga, Károly. Az emberi erőforrás sorsa az erőforrás-korlátos gazdaságban (The Fate of Human Resources in an Economy of Limited Resources), Szociológia, 1983, 3, 237-252. (HUN)

† In an analysis of the reasons for the limitation of human resources within an economy of limited resources, it is proposed that resource limitations create conflicts between human beings that prevent their being motivated to mobilize their hidden human resources. Empirical studies show that managers in Hungary are less likely than managers in other countries to consider their subordinates' concerns when making decisions. An emergence from this social trap is possible by the adoption of such methods as organizational development & human resource development, & by conscious recognition of the economic laws of the shortage syndrome. 1 Figure, 19 References. Modified HA

88T3894

Weede, Erich (Forschungsinstitut Soziologie U Köln, D-5000 41 Federal Republic Germany), Vertikaler Handel und Wirtschaftsleistung in Entwicklungslandern (Vertical Trade and Economic Performance in Less Developed Countries), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 4, Dec, 718-733. (GER)

† According to Johan Galtung's structural theory of imperialism ("Eine strukturelle Theorie des Imperialismus" [A Structural Theory of Imperialism] in Senghaas, Dieter (Ed), Imperialismus und strukturelle Gewalt [Imperialism and Structural Power], Frankfurt am Main, 1972), vertical trade & feudal interaction structures contribute to the retardation of economic growth & reinforce patterns of inequality. Vertical trade implies that rich Western industrial countries specialize in exporting manufactured products, while less developed countries specialize in exporting raw materials & agrarian products. Here, a quantitative, cross-national analysis, using data from World Bank reports & various published studies, tests & generally refutes Galtung's propositions. The affinity between Galtung's theory & economic policy recommendations that actually reduce growth is discussed. 5 Tables, 24 References. Modified HA

88T3895

Wesolowski, Włodzimierz (Polish Academy Sciences, PO Box 24 PL-00-901 Warsaw), Le condizioni strutturali del mutamento politico in Polonia (Parte prima) (Structural Conditions of Political Change in Poland (Part 1)), La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec, 5-19. (ITA)

Translated by Nicola Porro.

† A discussion of general themes concerning the political organization of a society, taking as example the transformations of the political structure & processes in Poland in 1980/81. A hypothetical analysis examines the conditions under which a coalition system (as distinct from a system of dominance or hegemony) could make possible a political alliance among the diverse forces involved: the official Communist Party, the Peasants' Party, the Democratic Party, the Catholic Church, & Solidarnosc. 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T3896

Wesolowski, Włodzimierz (Polish Academy Sciences, PO Box 24 PL-00-901 Warsaw), Struttura e mutamento in Polonia (Parte seconda) (Structure and Change in Poland (Part 2)), La Critica Sociologica, 1986-87, 80, Jan-Mar, 64-76. (ITA)

Translated by Nicola Porro.

† Continuation of a discussion of the political changes in Poland in 1980/81, focusing on the economic crisis & resulting political problems (see abstract of Part 1 in this section). The possibility of a transition to a system of political coalition is evaluated, & the various interests involved are analyzed. Such a transition would require the participation of all the major social groups, as well as official recognition of their rights. It is uncertain whether this can be achieved. C. Waters

88T3897

Williams, Karel, Cutler, Tony, Williams, John & Haslam, Colin (Dept Economics University Coll Wales, Aberystwyth), The End of Mass Production?, Economy and Society, 1987, 16, 3, Aug, 405-439.

† A review essay on a book by Michael Piore & Charles Sabel, The Second Industrial Divide: Possibilities for Prosperity (New York: Basic Books, 1984 (see listing in IRPS No 42)). Piore & Sabel argue that the current economic crisis is the result of continued reliance on an outmoded system of mass production. They consider flexible specialization as a more appropriate approach for the presently available technologies. However, they fail to provide criteria for distinguishing between the two types of production, nor do they demonstrate the existence of any unified system of mass production. Further, their account of the current market rests on conceptual confusions rather than empirical evidence. Finally, flexible specialization promises less for the future than Piore & Sabel suppose. 2 Tables, 24 References. W. H. Stoddard

49 market structures & consumer behavior

88T3898

Connell, Kathleen Marie (U California, Los Angeles 90024), Municipal Bond Timing and Treasury Yields: Interest Rate Sensitivity of Issuers, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 490-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711698.

88T3899

Gaughan, Joseph P. & Ferman, Louis A., Toward an Understanding of the Informal Economy, The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 493, Sept, 15-25

† After surveying some of the typical content of the informal economy, it is argued that the most substantial amount of activity in this sector is based on family & community, & may not involve an immediate expectation of financial return. It would include local barter, mutual aid, & self-help networks, as well as other activities such as light construction & repair work. Reliance on such networks, common in preindustrial economies, continues to serve specific needs in industrial & postindustrial societies, filling in where the conventional economy falls short or fails. By its very definition, informal activity is difficult to investigate & monitor, & raises questions about the legitimate concerns of government. HA

88T3900

Gershuny, Jonathan (Sociology & Social Policy Group U Bath, BA2 7AY England), Technology, Social Innovation, and the Informal Economy, The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 493, Sept, 47-63.

† Unpaid work in the home is an important contributor to national wealth: almost half of all work in a modern economy takes place outside the formal economy. A major effect of new technology is to increase the extent of informal production through the development of new productive equipment for installation in private households. Domestic production becomes more efficient, & the pattern of demand for commodities from the formal economy is changed: we buy goods rather than services. Previously published data from surveys conducted in Canada, the Netherlands, Norway, GB, & the US regarding historical changes in the patterns of use of time are used to investigate the effect of technical change on the relationship between the formal & informal economies. 2 Tables, 4 Figures. HA

88T3901

Henry, Stuart (Eastern Michigan U, Ypsilanti 48197), The Political Economy of Informal Economies, The Annals of the American

false impression that these resources are inexhaustible. The dichotomy between cheap raw materials & expensive manufactured items has retarded technological development. Suggestions are offered for the decentralization of price determination, leading to greater flexibility & input for both producers & consumers. G. Proslakov

88T3884

Perrotte, Judith A. (Northeastern U, Boston MA 02115), Building a Better Goat: The Prospects for an Indonesian Development Project, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 3-4, July-Oct, 241-264

¶ The mixed results of the green revolution serve as a warning to Western experts that the SE contexts & consequences of development programs in Third World (TW) countries must be taken into account when searching for technical solutions to agricultural problems. In Indonesia, a Collaborative Support Program on Small Ruminants, funded by the Title XII component of the US International Development & Food Assistance Act of 1975, has the goal of "amelioration of world food, nutrition, & poverty problems" by providing for "long-term collaborative U research on food production, distribution, storage, marketing, & consumption." Although this program is reminiscent of the green revolution programs, its insistence on the participation of TW scientists & agricultural policymakers & its specific focus on the Ru poor are an implicit recognition of earlier failures. Collaboration of TW social scientists & their US colleagues can be viewed as a positive step toward appropriate agricultural technology, but it remains to be seen whether this approach will effectively overcome the Western scientific establishment's bias toward large-scale, high-technology agricultural improvement projects, which increase productivity at the cost of exacerbating Ru inequalities, as this project threatens to do. Modified AA

88T3885

Persaud, Naraine (Florida State U, Tallahassee 32306), A Study of Cooperativism and Change in Guyanese Society, An International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 51-67

¶ An examination of the successes & failures of the Guyanese government's program of economic revitalization, based on cooperative socialist reform begun in 1970, with focus on its impact on the major ethnic segments of the population. Structured interview data collected from 105 village cooperative members in 3 coastal villages in 1977/78 reveal that, despite socialist declarations, the Guyanese continue to identify strongly with their ethnic village segments, & many of the major population groups (East Indians & Africans) express varying degrees of mistrust for the government & its socialist policies. In addition, Guyana's cooperative architects have been unable to objectify the changes they advocated, resulting in the perseverance of a disrupted social order instead of a Guyanese unity. 6 Tables, 28 References. Modified HA

88T3886

Pozdnyakova, Margarita Efimovna (Instit Sociological Research Soviet Academy Sciences, Novocheremushkinskaya ul 46 Moscow 117418), Obespechenost' naseleniya predmetami kul'turno-bytovogo naznacheniya (Providing the Public with Consumer Goods for Cultural and Everyday Purposes), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 59-61 (RUS)

¶ To investigate patterns of domestic consumption in the USSR, questionnaire data were collected from adults in the Moscow area in 1981 & 1986 (N = 800). The data were contrasted with patterns in other areas of the nation, especially Azerbaidzhan (see Levykin, Ivan Tikhonovich, SA 33 1/8505668). In general Ur households have more & better quality material goods, however, Ur residents spend more money on fashionable items such as clothing & stereo equipment. Central Asian & Transcaucasian households spend a large part of their income on traditional crafts to beautify the home. It is predicted that consumers will no longer be satisfied with the mere acquisition of luxury items; access to quality & a large variety will become important issues. 2 Tables, 1 Reference. J. Proslakov

8T3887

Reachard, Danny Joe (American U, Washington DC 20016), Social and Economic Integration among Countries of the Arab East, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 759-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712618.

88T3888

Sabel, Charles & Zeitlin, Jonathan (Massachusetts Instit Technology, Cambridge 02139), Historical Alternatives to Mass Production: Politics, Markets and Technology in Nineteenth-Century Industrialization, Past and Present, 1985, 108, Aug, 133-176.

¶ Mass production has traditionally been viewed as the paradigm of industrial efficiency, but this view is now being questioned. The classical view, enunciated by writers from Adam Ferguson & Adam Smith to Karl Marx, is disconfirmed by industrial dualism—the coexistence of small with large firms—by historical objections. An alternative model of industrialization has been enunciated by such writers as Pierre-Joseph Proudhon (Système des contradictions économiques ou philosophie de la misère [System of Economic Contradictions or the Philosophy of Misery], Picard, R (Ed), 2 vols, Paris, 1923). Flexible specialization based on craft organization. Recognition of this alternative opens the way to a history of industrial possibility & to an analysis of the collision of alternative technologies. Such an alternative also opens possibilities for the future. W. H. Stoddard

88T3889

Searle, C. E., Custom, Class Conflict and Agrarian Capitalism: The Cumbrian Customary Economy in the Eighteenth Century, Past and Present, 1986, 110, Feb, 106-133

¶ Historical data from eighteenth-century Cumbria, England, are used to assess the validity of Robert Brenner's thesis (see SA 26 1/78J0806) that SC struggles between lords & peasants determined the subsequent patterns of economic development in European countries. Feudal relations were deeply entrenched in the social order of the time & place; surplus extraction was mediated by customary land tenure, fines being the primary means of extracting revenue from the peasantry. Legal conflicts between the two classes, centering on the issue of tenurial obligations originating in border defense, constantly recurred & were regularly resolved in courts with some degree of protection of peasant rights. Peasants, in fact, displayed a level of solidarity that calls into question Brenner's interpretation & Marxian analyses that give inadequate accounts of SC struggle. 4 Tables. W. H. Stoddard

88T3890

Shapiro, D. M. & Stelcner, M. (Dept Economics Concordia U, Montreal Quebec H3G 1M8), Earnings Disparities among Linguistic Groups in Quebec, 1970-1980, Canadian Public Policy/Analyse de Politiques, 1987, 13, 1, Mar, 97-104

¶ Canadian census data from 1981 are employed to estimate the degree of earnings disparities among linguistic groups in Quebec in 1980. The estimates are comparable to those previously published using 1971 census data, & indicate that earnings differentials between anglophones & francophones were substantially reduced, if not eliminated, over the decade. The results suggest that important changes occurred in Quebec labor markets, which can be ascribed to a combination of factors, including legislative interventions. The evidence also suggests that the major gains accrued to francophone Ms. 1 Table, 1 Appendix, 17 References. HA

88T3891

Smith, Michael R. (Dept Sociology McGill U, Montreal Quebec H3A 2T7), The Political Bases of Inflation in Postwar Canada, Canadian Journal of Sociology/Cahiers canadiens de sociologie, 1987, 12, 4, winter, 363-392.

¶ Clarence L. Barber & John P. MacCallum (Controlling Inflation: Learning from Experience in Canada, Europe and Japan, Toronto Lorimer, 1982) attempt to explain the relative macroeconomic performance of rich nations in terms of the presence or absence of a set of institutions that produce social consensus. Reexamination of national economic statistics for their sample of countries does not support their account. The critical factor in the macroeconomic performance of several small nations, including Canada, is close economic ties with a larger trading partner. These ties provide political & economic incentives for the government of the smaller nation to attempt to maintain a fairly stable currency exchange rate with the larger trading partner, producing similar inflation rates in both nations. 5 Tables, 95 References. Modified HA

88T3892

Tiano, Susan (U New Mexico, Albuquerque 87131), Export Processing, Women's Work, and the Employment Problem in Developing Countries: The Case of the Maquiladora Program in Northern Mexico, Western Sociological Review, 1986, 15, 1, 53-78.

88T3908

Barbosa, Luiz C. & Hall, Thomas D. (c/o Hall-Dept Sociology U Oklahoma, Norman 7301), Brazilian Slavery and the World-Economy: An Examination of Linkages within the World-System, ♦ Western Sociological Review, 1986, 15, 1, 99-119

¶ Changes in the rates of manumission (emancipation) of slaves in Brazil are linked to changes in the Brazilian economy, which are, in turn, linked to changes in the world economy associated with rivalry among core states & transmitted to Brazil through Portugal. It is shown that the course of slavery in Brazil from the seventeenth to nineteenth centuries was strongly influenced both by changes in the world system & the country's close connection with a declining European state. Some suggestions on how these political-economic factors might be combined with the extensive literature on the cultural roots of Brazilian slavery to provide a fuller analysis of the slavery situation are offered. 4 Tables, 3 Figures, 56 References. Modified HA

88T3909

Burns, Tom R., de Ville, Philippe & Flam, Helena (Instit Sociology Uppsala U, S-75120 Sweden), Inflation and Distributional Struggles in Capitalist Economies: A Theoretical Framework with Applications, ♦ International Social Science Journal, 1987, 39, 3(113), Aug, 301-321

¶ A SE model of inflation is presented, based on two concepts. (1) Economic activity is affected by conflicts over the distribution of income (2) Such conflicts are related to monetary demands of societal actors & the lack of resources to satisfy those demands. A comparative examination of the "games" (eg, economic strategies) of large & small Western economies reveals that they responded similarly to the capitalist crisis of the 1970s: they shifted from expansionary to restrictive policies, a game transition characterized by inertia, resulting in a variety of consequences concerning monetary redistribution. It is argued that economic crisis, such as inflation, cannot be isolated for analysis, but must be viewed as a complex interaction between economic processes & the multiple strategies & interplay among societal actors at all levels of labor, business, & politics. 1 Table, 3 Figures, 27 References. D. Graves

88T3910

Coram, Bruce T. (Chiselm Instit Technology, POB 197 Caulfield East Victoria 3145 Australia), The Tough Test and the Thin Theory: The Minimal Conditions Required for Capitalism to Exist, ♦ The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 4, Dec, 464-481

¶ N. Abercrombie, S. Hill, & B. Turner (The Dominant Ideology Thesis, London: George Allen & Unwin, 1984) have called into question on empirical grounds the widely held belief that the survival of a capitalist society requires a common set of values held by its members. Their arguments are supplemented by a formal argument based on a reading of Talcott Parsons's The Structure of Social Action (see SA 16:2/68D4525). Analysis of the minimal conditions required for the existence of capitalism in its pure form suggests that simple rationality, as opposed to adherence to specific norms, is sufficient for the survival of a capitalist society. Some implications of this argument for the theory of SCs are noted. Modified HA

88T3911

Dangler, Jamie Faricellia (Dept Sociology State U New York, Binghamton 13901), Industrial Homework in the Modern World-Economy, Contemporary Crises, 1986, 10, 3, 257-279.

¶ A discussion of how industrial home work has been used as a viable production option alongside centralized factory production in the twentieth-century world economy. A distinction is drawn between modern industrial home work & previous forms of domestic industry, particularly the putting-out system. Domestic production from the late eighteenth to mid-nineteenth centuries, characterized by independent artisans & custom producers with access to their markets, was transformed into industrial home work by fully proletarianized workers, thus challenging the view that modern home work operations are antiquated & no longer viable. On the contrary, ongoing decentralization of production, involving changes in both technology & the organization of production, has facilitated the use of industrial home work in certain industries & locations. The potential of home work to spread under current global political & economic conditions is explored. Modified HA

88T3912

Henriksen, Jan Peter (U Copenhagen, 1168 K Denmark), Some Perspectives on Scandinavian Welfare Research, ♦ Acta Sociologica, 1987, 30, 3-4, 379-392.

¶ Scandinavian welfare research is criticized, & an attempt is made to devise a better methodology for assessing living conditions. The history of welfare research is outlined to illustrate its deficiencies with regard to social explanations. Scandinavian welfare research in particular is critiqued for its pragmatic concept of welfare, its basis in quantitative data, & its lack of a time dimension. Rather than focus on individual attributes, social structure & social agency must be dealt with. It is recommended that research on living conditions investigate the process of resource productions, the particular society's distribution systems, resource mobilization & management, & the individual's personal command over resources. 36 References. Modified HA

88T3913

Johnson, Marshall, Parish, William L. & Lin, Elizabeth (U Chicago, IL 60637), Chinese Women, Rural Society, and External Markets, ♦ Economic Development and Cultural Change, 1987, 35, 2, Jan, 257-277

¶ An examination of how developing countries' increasing market exposure via foreign contacts affects the economy in general & the position of women in particular. Focus is on the situation in China during the first half of the twentieth century, using a reanalysis of data obtained through interviews with farm households in 126 villages between 1929 & 1933 (see Buck, John Lossing, Land Utilization in China: Statistics, Nanking U Nanking, 1937). It is demonstrated how market expansion promoted favorable Ru development & raised Ru wages while avoiding monocropping & subsistence crises. Social inequality, however, remained essentially unchanged, particularly in the case of Fs, who experienced no gains in domestic or political power after entering the agricultural LF. The effects of market expansion on marriage finance are explored as well, & consequences for women's SE position are discussed. 8 Tables, 3 Figures. K. Hyatt

88T3914

Jørgensen, Henning & Lind, Jens, Decentralized Welfare Capitalism: The Case of Employment and Industrial Policies, ♦ Acta Sociologica, 1987, 30, 3-4, 313-337

¶ Explored are the implications of decentralized & municipal policy responsibility for Nordic welfare states in the areas of employment & industrial policy. While state policy objectives, such as legal rights, social security, public health, education, & industrial growth, are valuable, conflicts arise between state & local government in the areas of policy, implementation, & distribution of services. Universalistic objectives do not consider the varying needs & structures of local & regional areas. Coordination of all levels of government is required with regard to financial strategy, planning, creating standards, & negotiating, for employment & industrial policy to work effectively. Decentralization, therefore, does not lessen the role of the state, but adds to its administrative & resource functions the role of coordinator. 1 Figure, 47 References. Modified HA

88T3915

Khan, Rahat Nabi (c/o Editor -Impact Science Society, UNESCO 7 place de Fontenoy F-75700 Paris France), Multinational Companies and the World Economy: Economic and Technological Impact, ♦ Impact of Science on Society, 1986, 36, 1(141), 15-25.

¶ An exploration of the problem of defining multinational enterprise. A contrast is drawn between global firms, which sell a single product to all world markets, & multinational firms, which own subsidiaries identified with the markets of the countries where they operate. Firms that operate internationally typically have a mix of global & multinational characteristics. The factors of high technology & size favor extensive multinational operations. Multinational firms are compelled to engage in extensive research & development & play a major role in technology transfer. This research emphasis is best suited to export-led development strategies, while licensing arrangements better suit import-substitution strategies. Multinationals play a vital role in integrating countries into the world market, such integration is the most important indicator of development. 6 Tables, 4 Figures. W. H. Stoddard

88T3916

Kobli, József (Instit Economics Hungarian Academy Sciences, Budaorsi út 43/45 1052 Budapest), The Status-Oriented Economy: Market Socialism in Hungary, ♦ International Social Science Journal, 1987, 39, 3(113), Aug, 365-376.

¶ The characteristics of market socialism in Hungary are analyzed with Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 493, Sept., 137-153

¶ An examination of the mutual interrelationship between informal economies & the wider political economy of capitalism. Four dimensions are discussed: (1) the generation of informal economies as a paradoxical outcome of distinguishing them from capitalism, (2) the support given by capitalism & reciprocated by informal economies that enables each to gain strength from their similarities, (3) the opposition to informal economies that is reflected back on the wider economy, & (4) the destruction capitalism inflicts as it attempts to colonize & co-opt informal economies & the simultaneous transformation of capitalism that occurs with their absorption into the wider structure. It is argued that, as a result of these complex interrelations, the development of, & intervention in, informal economies is neither simple nor linear. Failure to take these relations into account in policy development & implementation can produce many unforeseen outcomes. HA

88T3902

Hoyman, Michele (Dept Political Science U Missouri, Saint Louis 63121), Female Participation in the Informal Economy: A Neglected Issue, ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 493, Sept., 64-82

¶ An examination of F participation in the informal economy, focusing on how much & why Fs participate, & the policy implications of their participation. A behavioral theory of F participation is developed, involving exit, voice, loyalty, & dual loyalty, following Albert O. Hirschman's work (Exit, Voice, and Loyalty: Responses to Decline in Firms, Organizations and States, Cambridge, Mass: Harvard U Press, 1970). Using three measures: number of individuals, amount of time, & amount of money applied to US government data on social security nonpayment & to previously published survey data, it is found that women participate in the informal economy as much as, & probably more than, men do. A variety of different explanations are discussed & then rejected because they are too value laden &/or they make too many assumptions. The policy implications of more & more women having dual loyalty, eg, the need for government-regulated, safe day care, are discussed, & the need for reviving the definition of F participation to reflect some of the informal activity of women is emphasized. 3 Tables. Modified HA

88T3903

Miller, S. M. (Boston U, MA 02215), The Pursuit of Informal Economies, ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 493, Sept., 26-35

¶ Considerable differences exist between informal economies. Consequently, a wide range of interests & frames of analysis influence the way they are thought about. Four main approaches are discussed: economic, social, fiscal & regulatory, & living conditions. In turn, four policy choices dealing with informal economies compete: drive them out, make them pay up, improve them, & expand them. The future of informal economies is uncertain, but the concern with them is likely to continue & will challenge the hegemonic role of neoclassical economic theory & the concern with the large corporation. HA

88T3904

Norstrom, Thor (Instit Social Research Stockholm U, S-106 91 Sweden), The Abolition of the Swedish Alcohol Rationing System: Effects on Consumption Distribution and Cirrhosis Mortality, British Journal of Addiction, 1987, 82, 6, June, 633-641

1 Between 1950 & 1980, Sweden experienced a much sharper rise in M liver mortality than would have been expected from the increase in per capita alcohol consumption. No evidence is found for hypotheses that attribute this discrepancy to an increased f of autopsies or to changes in stress factors (eg, higher unemployment & divorce rates). An attempt is made to explain this anomaly using data from 2 previous studies (1946 & 1967) of the distribution of spirits purchases among M adults (ΣN = approximately 11,109), & from 2 previous surveys (1955 & 1967) of the alcohol consumption patterns of M adults (ΣN = approximately 5,060). Results indicate that the abolition of the Bratt alcohol rationing system in 1955 had a redistributive effect: the larger the consumption during the rationing, the larger the relative increase after its abolition. Considering the convex relationship between consumption & the risk of dying from cirrhosis, an effect of this redistribution on aggregate mortality is expected. A micro-to-macro simulation is used to demonstrate that a substantial part—& possibly all—of the exceptional mortality is attributable to the redistribution of consumption. Implications for alcohol policy are discussed. 5 Figures, 16 References. Modified HA

88T3905

Schoenbauer, Ulrich (Instit Gesellschaftspolitik, Plosslgasse 2 A-1040 Vienna Austria), Verbraucherverhalten bei Verbraucherproblemen. Dargestellt anhand der Gewährleistungsproblematik (Consumer Reactions to Consumer Problems: A Study of Warranty Claims in Austria), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 4, Dec, 734-763 (GER)

¶ In an investigation of consumer problems, a 1986 survey of a representative, nationwide population sample in Austria (N = 1,999) revealed that 31% of Rs had had a problem concerning a product warranty during the preceding year. Of these cases, 50% had been settled without difficulty. Persons from lower SE groups were less likely to have had their complaints settled to their satisfaction. In-depth interviews were also conducted with 100 consumers. The findings were transformed into quantitative data & analyzed using cluster analysis. Four types of cases were identified: cases without problems, & cases involving helpless consumers, demanding consumers, & consumers who demonstrated assertive behavior. Path analysis showed that a complaint is more likely to be satisfied if the complainer is a F, the consumer's SES is high, the product is supplied by a large company, there are close relationships between vendor & consumer, & institutions exist that can intervene for the protection of consumers' rights. Surprisingly, legal knowledge & resolute behavior had no effect on the outcome of a claim. 7 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 28 References. Modified HA

88T3906

Smith, James D. (Survey Research Center U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), Measuring the Informal Economy, ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 493, Sept., 83-99

¶ A report on a study of the informal economy based on 1981 interviews with a national probability sample of approximately 2,100 US families, asking about purchases they made from vendors who were selling goods & services on the side. Questions were asked to verify that vendors were indeed functioning as informal suppliers. Although not all characteristics had to be present for any single supplier, informal suppliers were characterized as individuals who had casual record-keeping systems, lacked a fixed place of business, & relied on word of mouth & other casual means of advertising, eg, automobile mechanics operating in a home garage, produce sellers with roadside stands, & craftsmen operating from a pick-up truck or in a home workshop. It was found that about $42 billion in informal economic activity took place in 1981, & that 80% of US families purchased something from an informal vendor, especially home repairs & food. 11 Tables. HA

70 capitalism/socialism—world systems

88T3907

Banta, H. David (Health Council Netherlands, Prinses Margrietplantsoen 20 P.O. Box 95379 The Hague), Medical Technology and Developing Countries: The Case of Brazil, International Journal of Health Services, 1986, 16, 3, 363-373

Developing countries, faced with severe resource limitations, are attempting to develop modern health care services that deliver sensible medical technologies. Because of their lack of development, these countries import much technology, while often lacking the expertise to make wise choices. Brazil has shared many of the problems of other developing countries, including inadequate health services, maldistribution & excessive use of technology, a relatively weak national industry for production of drugs & medical devices, a weak policy structure for dealing with medical technology, & little tradition of using research or policy analysis as a guide to action. Since the election in 1985 that returned Brazil to democratic rule, the government has taken active steps to address many of these problems. It is suggested that North American & European aid programs could play a much more constructive role in helping less developed countries develop their health care services. International organizations, such as the World Health Organization, must also be active in assisting such countries to improve their decisions concerning medical technology. 35 References. Modified HA Processes in a Planned Economy, U International Social Science Journal, 1987, 39, 3(113), Aug, 377-385.

- ¶ The role of economic & noneconomic factors in societal development is evaluated to assess an interdisciplinary approach to economic activities. The primary problem is described as that of revealing consumer preferences to create a system capable of responding to the changing needs of various populations. The suggested methodology is representative PO polls for different populations. The exogenous requirements for economic development are seen as: (1) the ecological regulation of air-emission & industrial wastes; (2) equal access to health, educational, & cultural opportunities; & (3) the availability of jobs for all those of working age. It is emphasized that economics is a subsystem of, but created by, society, while society is heavily dependent on economic performance. 2 Illustrations. D. Graves

88T3924

Růžička, Richard (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Czechoslovak Academy Sciences, Jilská 1 CS-110 00 Prague 1), Společenské vlastnictví a problém rozporu (Social Ownership and the Problem of Contradiction), Sociologický časopis, 1987, 23, 5, 501-515 (CZE)

- ¶ As part of the development of socialism, the relations of social ownership inevitably go through changes based on contradictions inherent in the socialist SE formation. Emphasis is given here to the problem of personification or subjectivity of ownership relations & its manifestation in way of life in Czechoslovakia. It is also necessary to consider the constitution of the aggregate socialist ownership subject & the relation between functional inequality & ownership equality. Even in socialist societies, the principal product of the valorization of production relations is the ownership subject himself, whose reproduction thus becomes central to the analysis of ownership relations. Some research problems for further investigation are outlined. 18 References. Modified HA

88T3925

Sampson, Steven L., The Second Economy of the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, U The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 493, Sept, 120-136.

- ¶ The second economies of the USSR & other East European countries derive from structural inadequacies in the socialist planning system, & from the cultural & historical evolution of each East European society. Here, structural & cultural approaches to the second economy are combined, & evidence from previous studies is used to study four of its most prevalent forms: peasant household production, the shadow economy within socialist enterprises, the underground factories of Soviet Georgia, & the hidden economy within the retail & service sectors. In all cases, social linkages & cultural values provide frameworks for economic activities. The second economy helps to alleviate consumer shortages & bureaucratic bottlenecks in all these societies. It also acts as a social mollifier, channeling dangerous political frustrations into consumerism, swindling, or petty corruption. Yet the overall effect of the second economy is a corrosive one: as a surrogate reform, a second economy tolerated by the authorities only reproduces the fundamental flaws of the formal economy. Moreover, it exacerbates the gap between society & the state. HA

88T3926

Šik, Ota (U Saint Gallen, Switzerland), The Economic Crisis in Yu- goslavia, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 3, Aug, 361-369.

- ¶ The Yugoslav economic system suffers under at least three avoidable systemic & political deficiencies. (1) Industrial plants' authority of income distribution leads to an inflationary development of incomes. (2) The lack of differentiation between wages & profits leads to unreasonable & demotivating differences in remuneration for the same work. A system of profit participation different from basic wages is necessary. (3) The institutional basis for a reasonable macroeconomic policy is too weak, or rather, the influence of regional & national authorities, as well as of monopolistic plants, is much too strong. 15 References. HA

88T3927

Therborn, Goran (Instit Political Science Catholic U Nijmegen, Netherlands), Welfare State and Capitalist Markets, Acta Sociologica, 1987, 30, 3-4, 237-254.

- ¶ The relationship between welfare states & the market economy is explored. Review of past research reveals an underdevelopment of theory, as well as other deficiencies. Welfare states are conceptualized as social systems of human reproduction, in the sense of maintaining as well as creating human life. Market failures & conflicts account for the development of welfare states, trying to meet the needs of those who are excluded from the LF &/or property rights. The demand for public & private goods provided by the state is weighed against theoretical schedules of state supply. It is concluded that meeting the demands of workers is a function of class strength & unity, & of the receptiveness of the state. 84 References. Modified HA

88T3928

Tylecote, Andrew (U Sheffield, S10 2TN England), On Inequality and the Rate of Profit in the Long Wave, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 1, Feb, 29-44.

- ¶ A discussion of theories of long-wave fluctuations in the world economy as argued by Marxist economist Ernest Mandel ("Explaining Long Waves of Capitalist Development," in Freeman, C (Ed), The Long Wave, London: Butterworths, 1983). It is argued here that changes in the profit rate are consequences, not causes, of long-wave fluctuations, & that the latter follow changes in underlying inequality in the opposite direction to those alleged by Mandel. Upswings require neither of Mandel's alternatives, but are caused by moves toward reduced inequality. 2 Tables, 24 References. Modified HA

88T3929

---, Pis'ma v redaktsiyu (Letters to the Editor), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 120-123 (RUS)

- ¶ In "Sotsialisticheskoe sorevnovanie-na pochvu real'nykh ekonomicheskikh usloviy" (Socialist Competition—On the Basis of Real Economic Conditions), V. T. Zhurakhovskiy discusses economic successes in the Northern Basin All-Union Fish-Processing Enterprise. The editorial staff responds positively, exploring the idea of developing an integral index to evaluate achievement in worker competition situations. In "O novom tipe izdaniya" (A New Type of Publication), I. B. Chubays proposes a system for publishing manuscripts based on a collegial review by specialists in the given field, rather than by a publishing house. In this way, problems of supply, demand, & remuneration can be resolved successfully. This is not really a new approach, since it was used successfully in the 1920s. 4 References. G. Prostavkov regard to SS-seeking behavior. A brief historical account (1741-1982) shows a rise in the public's drive to acquire SS since the 1968 advent of economic regulation under market socialism. The tendency is for large & small Hungarian firms to comply with the state's demands & wishes, in the hope of receiving preferential treatment (in the form of contracts & sales). In addition, a manager's SS, reputation, & personal qualities are factors related to his ability to find employment in a firm producing preferred goods. The avoidance of competition & the regulation of income only allow supply to grow marginally. Small ventures seeking to take advantage of such marginal growth soon learn the benefits of guiding business by political expedients. However, they do provide low wage-earners with the opportunity for illegal moonlighting. 3 Illustrations, 9 References. D. Graves

88T3917

Koonen, Pekka (U Helsinki, 00100 Finland). From Collectivity to Individualism in the Welfare State?, ♦ Acta Sociologica, 1987, 30, 3-4, 281-293

¶ Public sentiment toward the welfare state is studied with regard to a shift in emphasis from the collective to the individual. Examples are presented from the Nordic countries that reflect a shift from public to private: criticism of social technology & control over individuals, the debate on welfare scroungers, antitax movements, & the black economy (hidden labor & services). Historically, collectivity & individualism may be emphasized on a cyclical or alternating basis. Five causes are identified to explain the current rise of individualism: (1) the excessiveness, inefficiency, & intrusive nature of the welfare state, (2) the drop in economic growth rates, which adversely affects the L.I., while the welfare state expands; (3) the rise of a new Me concerned with personal gain, (4) changes in moral & cultural values that stress private lives, & (5) the hegemonic struggle to demarcate the public & the private. While individualism can lead to egotism, it can also enrich the society at large. 2 Figures, 43 References. Modified HA

88T3918

Mah Hui Lim & Porpora, Douglas V. (c/o Porpora, 6901 Old York Rd #D 201, Philadelphia PA 19126). Stock Ownership and Interlocking Directorates among Malaysia's Top Corporations, ♦ The Insurgent Sociologist, 1987, 14, 2, summer, 77-101

¶ The theory of interlocking directorates is used to explore patterns of stock ownership in Malaysian corporations. Data on 265 companies were extracted from the 1975 & 1979 handbooks of the Kuala Lumpur stock exchange. Twelve major groups of companies are identified, & a correspondence is demonstrated between stock ownership connections & interlocking directorates. Interest groups appear to be based on equity. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 31 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3919

Mallon, Florencia E. (Dept History U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). Patriarchy in the Transition to Capitalism: Central Peru, 1830-1950, ♦ WM Feminist Studies, 1987, 13, 2, summer, 379-407

¶ A feminist perspective on the role of the peasantry in the transition to capitalism in Latin America. It is argued that, because peasant household production is organized by gender relations rather than SC, debates about the SC position or survival of peasantries in the Third World will continue to be unproductive as long as the household is seen solely as a SC unit; an understanding of patriarchy—defined as a set of material relationships & ideologies that subordinates women to men & has its material base in men's control of women's sexuality, labor power, & reproductive potential within the household—becomes crucial to a sophisticated class analysis. Using data collected in regional notarial & political archives, as well as via oral interviews in the central highlands of Peru, it is suggested that patriarchy is historically differentiated by SC & race, so that the principal center of men's control over women might vary from sexuality, to labor power, to reproductive potential, depending on the historical period as well as on the SC position or racial/ethnic identity of women. This double bind of gender & SC hierarchies makes any form of social change painful in Latin America, particularly for peasant & other low women. The development of a broader-based perspective & theory is urged. Modified AA

88T3920

Merritt, Giles (IRM, 45-47 rue de Lausanne CH-1201 Geneva Switzerland). Multinationals: Innovators in High Technology?, ♦ WM Impact of Science on Society, 1986, 36, 1(141), 77-84

An account is offered of an international conference on the impact of multinationals as technological innovators on Europe's economy, which was held in Munich, West Germany, early in 1985 under joint sponsorship of the Financial Times & the Instit for Research & Information on Multinationals. Major themes discussed include the need for European unity, the need for innovation, the criticism of European myths, the roles of large & small firms, the significance of information technology, the problem of fragmentation, the viewpoint of trade union leaders, & the contributions of military procurement. The participants concluded that if Europe lags behind the US & Japan, it will not be due to lack of research but to market fragmentation & inadequate links between US & industry. W. H. Stoddard

88T3921

Olsson, Sven E. (Swedish Instit Social Research, Stockholm). Welfare State Research Inc.—The Growth of a Crisis Industry, ♦ Acta Sociologica, 1987, 30, 3-4, 371-378

¶ A comparative review essay on eight books on the growth of the welfare state (see listings in IRPS No. 42). Working Time Reduction and the Crisis of the Welfare State (Kleinknecht, A., & Van Veen, T. [Eds], Maastricht: Presses Interuniversitaires Européennes (PIE), 1986) concentrates on the issue of work sharing. L'Etat Providence—The Welfare State (Van Weers, G. [Ed], Maastricht: PIE, 1986) concerns itself with philosophical issues of justice, equality, & rights. The Future of the Welfare State (Albeda, W. [Ed], Maastricht: PIE, 1986) describes the welfare state as lasting into the twenty-first century. The Institutions of a Changing Welfare State (Ten Hove, M. [Ed], Maastricht: PIE, 1986) offers an overview of research during the first half of the 1980s, & a comparison between Belgium & the Netherlands concerning the future of tripartism. These first four books reflect a European perspective & the association of the welfare state with a national labor movement. This body of research, however, lacks systematic & coherent concepts & indicators. Time to Care in Tomorrow's Welfare System: The Nordic Experience and the Italian Case (Balbo, L., & Nowotny, H. [Eds], Vienna: European Centre for Social Welfare Training & Research, 1986) is the first English text to clearly describe the concept of the "particularistic-clientelistic" model, replacing the "industrial achievement-performance" model. The Welfare State and Its Aftermath (Eisenstadt, S.N., & Ahmeir, O. [Eds], London: Croom Helm, 1985) covers a wide range of European welfare state research, some comprehensive & some shallow. Comparing Welfare States and Their Futures (Oyen, E. [Ed], Aldershot: Gower, 1986) discusses trends & problems, but is not seen as contributing to comparative research. The Welfare State—East and West (Rose, R., & Shiratori, R. [Eds], Oxford: Oxford U Press, 1986) contains information about Japanese welfare & offers an applied approach to comparative research. Most of the works have an alarmist tone & focus on state financial problems. 29 References. D. Graves

88T3922

Peritore, N. Patrick (U Missouri, Columbia 65211). Feudalism—Critique of a Model of Society and Political Economy, ♦ Alternatives, 1987, 12, 1, Jan, 61-81.

¶ Utilizing economic & historical data, it is argued that feudalism was neither a distinct stage of development, nor a mode of production, but rather was a complex, fragmented, regionally diverse, & imperfectly monetarized agrarian economy, whose internal dynamic led to dissolution through technological, ecological, demographic, & economic limits on production. The existence of a "feudal monarchy" resting on a hierarchy of dependent tenures is also refuted. Rather, monarchs utilized clientelistic policy measures to enlarge & centralize their domain & to subordinate the nobility to royal control, thus making the royal household the locus of bureaucratic functions, which would evolve into the modern state, thus, medieval monarchy became the core of the Western nation-state only to the extent that it successfully utilized clientelistic methods to defeat the feudal dispersion of power & transform the nobility into a dependent aristocracy. The notion of feudalism not only gives an inaccurate account of Western history, but becomes a blatant Eurocentric projection when applied to other cultures, which forestalls consequential understanding of agrarian societies & transformational action. Concrete situational dialectical analyses are suggested as a means of renewing theoretical inquiry from the standpoint of concrete liberating projects of action within the semiperiphery & periphery of the capitalist world system. Modified AA

88T3923

Petrakov, Nikolai (Central Instit Mathematical Economics Soviet Academy Sciences, Krasikova St 32 Moscow 117418). Management

0800 mass phenomena

26 social movements

88T3930

Amerio, Piero & Ghiglione, Rodolphe (Dept Psychology U Turin, I-10124 Italy), Cambiamento sociale, sistemi di rappresentazione e d'identità di Attori vs. Agenti Sociali (Social Change, Representations and Identity of Social Actors vs Social Agents), Giornale Italiano di Psicologia, 1986, 13, 4, Dec, 615-636 (ITA)

¶ An analysis of the articulation of cognition, action, & identity in the context of social change. It is hypothesized that the recognition that "society must be changed" is an important social cognitive factor that (1) supposes a specific representational system of society, (2) moves & structures social identity of the actor, & (3) supports the ability to make & achieve plans & actions. Discourse analysis is used to examine a social-change-based group—young men of the Italian Communist Party—vs a no-change-based group—Punks. Results indicate that different & typical patterns of argumentation models occur in the two populations. The young communists view society as a global system continuously structured by change, & identify themselves as social actors, as particular actors different from others. On the contrary, Punks lack any representation of society as a global system, being changed & structured by actors. Further, actors' actions are disconnected from social events, & Punks do not identify themselves as specific actors. 3 Tables, 5 Appendixes, 15 References. Modified AA

88T3931

Barabas, Alicia M. (National Instit Anthropology & History, Córdoba 45 Mexico 7 DF), Movimientos étnicos religiosos y seculares en América Latina: una aproximación a la construcción de la utopía india (Secular and Religious Ethnic Movements in Latin America: An Approach toward Creation of an Indian Utopia), ♦ América Indígena, 1986, 46, 3, July-Sept, 495-529 (SPA)

¶ An analysis of the nature of various socioreligious movements undertaken by Indian groups in Latin America since the beginning of the colonial period. Existing hypotheses concerning millenary Messianic movements are applied to specific examples & reformulated, emphasizing the political dimension of these socioreligious movements, their predominantly autonomous anticolonial orientation, & their revaluation of ethnic identity. It is suggested that the utopian ideology on which they are based legitimizes & integrates the ethnic group. The essentially subversive nature of the movements is pointed out: they represent authentic expressions of a refusal to be dominated politically, economically, or culturally. In this context, continuities are perceived between the socioreligious movements & contemporary secular movements among Indian peoples. 32 References. Modified HA

88T3932

Basu, Amrita (Amherst Coll, MA 01002), Grass Roots Movements and the State: Reflections on Radical Change in India, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 5, Sept, 647-674

¶ It is suggested that the structural context for the emergence of grass-roots political movements in India has been capitalist development, which has entailed brutal dislocation. India's durable democratic tradition has created the political space in which social movements have flourished. Dilemmas characteristic of such movements in India are considered: (1) Grass-roots movements express the militancy of marginal, pre-capitalist groups that, compared to peasants, are less stratified & less tied to private property; however, fragmentation among groups whose interests are divergent divide grass-roots movements from one another. The marginality of tribals, fisherfolk, & hill dwellers has also isolated grass-roots movements from leftist political parties & trade unions. (2) Grass-roots movements have rejected the hierarchical leadership & centralized organizations that have obstructed social movements elsewhere. However, the price paid for democratic purity—to the extent it has been attained—is ineffectiveness in the formal political arena, moreover, grass-roots movements have tended to become increasingly undemocratic & bureaucratized over time. (3) Alliances with leftist organization have lessened grass-roots movements' marginality but also their autonomy. (4) Grass-roots movements have sought to use the state while delegitimizing it; movements may be coopted or discredited as a radical alternative if they rely heavily on state concessions. Grass-roots organizations

& the state appear linked by a dialectic in which the state creates the conditions that generate & yet undermine leftist opposition. However, this dialectic may be coming to an end: the rise of communalism threatens both progressive political movements & the very integrity of Indian liberal democracy; also, given their inability to gain state power or to arrest capitalist development, grass-roots movements have helped articulate the anger, courage, & vision of India's marginalized poor. Modified AA

88T3933

Benencia, Roberto, Procesos políticos y movimientos campesinos. Dos experiencias de organización en contextos históricos diferentes (Political Processes and Peasant Movements. Two Experiences of Organization in Different Historical Contexts), ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 39-53. (SPA)

¶ A specific phenomenon of the peasant movement in Argentina is examined: the social conflicts generated by the agrarian transformation of the Chaco region of Santiago del Estero. Between the 1940s & 1960s, a great deal of then unused land in the area was settled by former wage-earners who—generally because of unemployment—had returned to peasant agriculture. The possibilities of modern technology have made this land more valuable, so that in many cases the legal owners are now attempting to evict the squatters, who in turn are struggling for the right to remain on the land they have occupied. Two specific cases—the communities of Suncho Pozo & Los Jurjes—are examined in detail, focusing on the settlers' organization, state intervention, & the legal process. In the first case, the settlers won, after a long struggle; the second case remains unresolved after two years of litigation. 5 Tables, 10 References. C. Waters

88T3934

Čaldarović, Ognjen (Faculty Philosophy U Zagreb, YU-41000 Yugoslavia), Urbani socijalni pokreti (Urban Social Movements), Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 3-4, July-Dec, 155-165. (SCR)

¶ Social movements of urbanized areas in various countries are analyzed through a literature review. Following a discussion of the basic characteristics & goals of these movements, the possibilities for their future is outlined. Special attention is given to different theoretical analyses of Ur movements including Manuel Castells's The City and the Grassroots. A Cross-Cultural Theory of Urban Social Movements (see IRPS No. 24/84c00380 & 84c00381). The newer Ur social movements are situational, unpredictable, & territorially framed, participants lack the necessary high level of motivation to bring about needed overall changes. Modified HA

88T3935

Cole, Juan R. I. & Momen, Moojan, Mafia, Mob and Shiism in Iraq: The Rebellion of Ottoman Karbala 1824-1843, Past and Present, 1986, 112, Aug, 112-143.

¶ In 1843, the city of Karbala in Iraq rebelled against the central government of the Ottoman Empire, leading to an invasion by Baghdad-based Turkish troops. The rebellion was led by a "mafia" of Ur gangs, in alliance with Shiite nomads, landed notables, & small artisans & shopkeepers of Iranian & Shiite origin, & religious scholars. The waning of state power enabled Ur gangs to take over the entire town, especially in a situation where local residents saw the state as no more legitimate than gang rule. However, the coalition of gangs was itself unstable, though it challenges the conventional assumption that Ur gangs, unlike Ru bandits, cannot be "social" in character. W. H. Stoddard

88T3936

DePaoli, Luigi, Tratti psicodinamici di una cooperativa (Texrose) (Psychodynamic Traits of a Cooperative (Texrose)), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 78, June-Sept, 102-117. (ITA)

¶ Reflections are presented concerning expressive material gathered during a 2-day visit to Texrose, a manufacturing cooperative in Italy, which had formerly been managed under the traditional boss-employee system. Interviews were conducted with 2 groups of 10 workers each, representing a proportionate sample of different job categories. Participants were

--Dr. Richard L. Rubenstein, Director
The Washington Institute for Values In Public Policy

"...sorely needed..."

--Dr. Stephen A. Garrett
Monterey Institute of International Studies

"...extremely impressive."

--Dr. Harald Niemeyer
Educator, Author, Editor, West Germany

The International Journal on World Peace offers you the insights of some of the world's most respected thinkers and in-depth analyses of the world's crucial problems

The International Journal on World Peace is not your usual news magazine. It's a forum where scholars can contribute new and innovative ideas to the public debate on the world's pressing social problems.

Herbert London on academic freedom

As is well known, the social sciences have become so politicized, so ideologized that it seems impossible for many scholars in these disciplines to deal with today's issues dispassionately. Herbert London, of New York University and editor of Academic Questions has written recently:

"The consensus which once supported academic freedom for all has been gradually supplanted by an orthodoxy which discourages, or even intimidates those with views differing from current ideological fashion."

The International Journal on World Peace is devoted to challenging the ideological cant of the left or right that is obstructing the pursuit of truth in today's social sciences.

Serious analysis in a dangerous world

In the International Journal on World Peace you won't find glib and superficial commentary by cynical social critics. What you will find is serious scholarship dealing with serious issues. Recent articles include:

- The Political Significance of Latin American Liberation Theology
by Richard L. Rubenstein
- The Role of Philosophy and Values in the Right Model of Peace
by Henryk Skolimowski

- The Contribution of Religion to the Conflict in Northern Ireland by Paul Badham
- South Africa: Constitutional Change or Violent Revolution?
by Lewis C. A. Rayapen

In the best tradition of academic freedom, articles are accompanied by vigorous debate, comment, and rejoinders, thus creating an environment of intellectual enthusiasm and excitement.

Read what scholars have to say about the journal

"The International Journal on World Peace is an indispensable source of informed discussion on the moral, social, and political problems besetting contemporary society...lively, intelligent, and challenging, and always interesting."

Dr. Richard L. Rubenstein
Robert Lawton Distinguished Professor of Religion
Florida State University

"The International Journal on World Peace provides welcome insight on a host of urgent international problems. Its contents are well researched, timely, and ably written. The journal shows every sign of becoming a leading outlet for analysis that is on the cutting edge of our days' most important issues."

Dr. John K. Roth
Russel K. Pitzer Professor of Philosophy
Claremont McKenna College
Claremont, California

"The International Journal on World Peace is the most professionally balanced academic magazine published in the field of peace studies."

Dr. Alexander Shtromas
Professor of Politics and Contemporary History
University of Salford England

Intellectual rejuvenation

The International Journal on World Peace offers to take you behind the scenes, to the realities that are all too often neglected by the regular media.

If you have the enthusiasm to undertake this intellectual pursuit, you will be rewarded with insight, understanding, and compassion.

Free Trial Offer

Why not discover for yourself the incomparable pleasure of examining today's most critical issues with today's most articulate and influential scholars? Especially now, when you can do so without risk

To obtain a FREE copy of the International Journal on World Peace, mail in the coupon below.

Send no money. We will send your free issue along with an invoice for a one year subscription at $15.00. (4 issues) Even if you decide not to order the subscription, the sample copy is yours to keep.

Order toll free

To get your free issue right away, call this toll free number:

1 (800) 634-7661

The International Journal on World Peace
G.P.O. Box 1311 Dept. 120
New York, N.Y., 10116

YES please send me the current issue of the International Journal on World Peace and enter my name as a trial subscriber

Name _____
Address _____
City/State/Zip _____
SA-2/88

Durkheim's concept of the "cult of humanity" & E. Troeltsch's "secret religion of the educated classes" are explored in a New Zealand context. Three components of the "cultic milieu" (see Campbell, C., "The Cult, the Cultic Milieu and Secularization" in Hill, M. (Ed), A Sociological Yearbook of Religion in Britain 5, London: SCM Press, 1972, 119-136) in this country are examined & found to have affinities with the predicted shape of contemporary religion. Complementary medical therapies have been the subject of an official government report. Transcendental Meditation has shown significant growth, & an indigenous therapeutic community shows a number of features of contemporary religious movements. It is suggested that the ethic of consumerism provides some explanation for the New Zealand situation. 1 Figure, 36 References. Modified AA

88T3945

Kaminaga, Yuriko (U California San Diego, La Jolla 92093), Social Change through Legal Means: A Case Study of the Japanese American Legal Movement, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 486-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712288.

88T3946

Koopmans, Ruud, Waardenveranderingen en het potentieel van nieuwe sociale bewegingen (Value Change and the Potential of New Social Movements), Acta Politica, 1987, 22, 3, July, 311-326. (DUT)

¶ It is often argued that new social movements, in contrast to earlier ones such as the Wc movement, should be analyzed primarily in terms of value change rather than of structural characteristics of movement participants. The influence of three major value types associated with new social movements—postmaterialism, individualism & hedonism, & antimodernism—on the Dutch peace movement is examined through research findings. Individualism & hedonism are unrelated or negatively related, & antimodernism is only weakly related, to the individual potential for new social movements; only postmaterialism is strongly related to it. Postmaterialism is itself primarily related to structural variables such as SC position & integration into institutions such as the Church & the private sector of the economy that reproduce existing social conditions. These findings call the current emphasis on values change into question. 4 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA

88T3947

Kowalewski, David (Division Social & Policy Sciences U Texas, San Antonio 78285), Protest Militancy in the USSR: When Does It Work?, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 2, Apr, 169-179.

¶ Recent studies of political protest suggest that militant tactics tend to produce greater concessions for aggrieved groups in hegemonies than in polyarchies. In hegemonic systems (such as the USSR), political protest seems to be a two-player, regime-dissident power struggle in which the dissidents' best hope for success lies in overcoming regime force with their own force—disruption & damage. Protest militancy in hegemonies may work even better when militant tactics are combined with other protester power resources, & when regime power resources are avoided. A study of 382 demonstrations conducted in the USSR by 24 groups between 1965 & 1978 confirms these propositions. Militancy does prove positively correlated with regime concessions under a wide variety of geographic, protest-group, & target characteristics. Yet protest militancy is even more effective under conditions of relative regime weakness & protester strength. Some implications for the stability of hegemonic regimes are discussed. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix. HA

88T3948

Kriesi, Hanspeter & Van Praag, Philip Jr. (U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands), Old and New Politics: The Dutch Peace Movement and the Traditional Political Organizations, European Journal of Political Research, 1987, 15, 3, 319-346.

¶ Questionnaire data gathered in 1985 from peace activists (N = 480) & residents (N = 700) in 6 Ur areas are used to examine the relationship between traditional Dutch organizations of political intermediation, such as parties, unions, & churches, with a new local level movement, the peace movement. After arguing for the relevance of the institutional context, the general structure of new social movements, & the particular structure of the peace movement with regard to this relationship, evidence confirming the existence of a new social movement is presented. It is shown that the relationship in question is quite elaborate, confirming the hypothesis that political activity within traditional organizations & new social movements is cumulative. The results imply that the development of the peace movement & other new social movements in the Netherlands does not indicate a diminishing legitimacy of Dutch political parties. 6 Tables, 2 Figures, 45 References. Modified HA

88T3949

Luhmann, Niklas (Fakultät Soziologie U Bielefeld, D-4800 Federal Republic Germany), Sprache und Kommunikationsmedien—Ein schleifender Vergleich (Language and Media of Communication: A False Comparison), Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 6, Dec, 467-468. (GER)

¶ A comment on Jana Kunzler's article (see SA 36:1/87T1293) concerning basic problems of the theory of symbolically generalized media of communication. Kunzler offers valuable & precise insights on the subject, but one point is disputed: Kunzler seems to expect that language can be treated in the context of this theory. From the viewpoint of sociological systems theory, however, it is still unclear if or how language can be treated as a system at all. The problems of reference & of semantics are noted, together with other questions raised by recent research in the cognitive sciences. Kunzler's idea that logic is an essential characteristic of language is also rejected: logic is one of many possibilities for observing language. A concept of the medium is proposed that would encompass a distinction between medium & form, drawing on Fritz Heider's analysis of the media of perception (no reference provided). C. Waters

88T3950

Oklobdžija, Mirjana, Novi socijalni pokreti (New Social Movements), Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 3-4, July-Dec, 141-145. (SCR)

¶ New social movements appear as a response to different crises & conflicts in society, & can represent an important social force. By refusing to follow the lead of traditional policies & institutional organization, they open the path to new ways of social change. The relationship between social movements & political parties is explored through a literature survey. Revolutionary change in modern societies is discussed relative to definitions, typologies, basic characteristics, & method of action of new social movements. Modified HA

88T3951

Openshaw, Roger (Education Dept Massey U, Palmerston North New Zealand), "Saving the Windows": Reactions to the Queen Street Riot, 1984, New Zealand Sociology, 1987, 2, 2, Nov, 128-139.

¶ An examination of the reaction of media, PO, & politicians in New Zealand to the Queen Street riot in Auckland, Dec 1984, based on analysis of press & TV coverage, together with the reaction of various conservative & liberal groups & individuals. The influence of these perspectives on subsequent political & legislative initiatives is also assessed. It is concluded that while the conservative view of the riot as a challenge to law & order generally prevailed, both conservative & liberal perspectives were largely self-fulfilling prophecies. Reaction to the riot was both exaggerated & inappropriate, thus fitting S. Cohen's description of a media-led moral panic (Folk Devils and Moral Panics. The Creation of the Mods and Rockers, Oxford: Martin Robertson, 1980). Also, while the S. Hall et al thesis of mounting societal crisis (Policing the Crisis. Mugging, the State, and Law and Order, London: MacMillan, 1978) is of considerable utility in providing a framework for such studies as this, it is not conclusive. 26 References. Modified AA

88T3952

Pickering, Paul A., Class without Words: Symbolic Communication in the Chartist Movement, Past and Present, 1986, 112, Aug, 144-162.

¶ Historical research on the Chartist movement of nineteenth-century GB has focused primarily on printed matter & reported public speeches, yielding an image of the movement distorted by excessive focus on a few leaders. Less formal oratory at mass meetings was an important element in the movement's internal communications. Chartist speakers frequently complained that the press distorted their speeches, but given the lack of an efficient shorthand & the freedom of reporters & editors to modify text for aesthetic purposes, this was inevitable. Beyond speeches, visual communication & ritual structure were vitally important to the Chartist movement; eg, specific choices of clothing made important symbolic points, as in Fergus O'Connor's suit of fustian, which served as a Wc emblem & reflected the growing domination of the movement by that SC. This tendency stands against the general belief that Chartism was never a Wc movement. W. H. Stoddard invited to speak about their feelings concerning the cooperative & the psychological differences they experienced between the current & the earlier work situation, & to present a verbal picture of Texrose. Detailed quotations from their responses are presented. In general, their comments are favorable to the cooperative as regards satisfaction, autonomy, responsibility, spontaneity, & security. However, there is some evidence of nostalgia for the earlier "culture of dependence," when personal responsibility was less, because one could always blame the bosses & depend on the union for support. C. Waters

88T3937

Draper, Alan (Saint Lawrence U, Canton NY 13617), A Rope of Sand: The AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 1, Feb, 45-60

¶ An analysis of the political capacity of the US labor movement as evidenced by its ability to mobilize organizational resources in support of endorsed candidates. Based on a review of the work of the Committee on Political Education (COPE) of the American Federation of Labor & Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL-CIO) at state & local levels, evidence collected from convention proceedings, interviews with COPE personnel (N not provided), & private communications indicates that COPE lacks the organizational means to transform its endorsements into voter support at the polls. This failure is attributed to the US labor movement's market strategy of emphasizing collective bargaining rather than legislation. 14 References. Modified HA

88T3938

Fennis, James G. (Tufts U, Medford MA 02155), Fields of Action: Structure in Movements' Tactical Repertoires, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 3, summer, 520-533

¶ The structure of choice among available tactics is a key to understanding the roles of individuals & organizations within a social movement. Here, a method for operationalizing the notion of repertoires of collective action is proposed, utilizing data from a case study of a recent disarmament campaign. The tactical field faced by activists is modeled, & the dimensions of this field & the clusters of tactics within it are analyzed. Described is how individuals organized their options & how they understood the distinctive features of an innovative course of action. Such field models can illuminate ideological & organizational differentiation, as well as cooperation & competition within movements. 2 Figures, 29 References. Modified HA

88T3939

Fennis, James G. & Schreuer, Richard (Sociology Dept Tufts U, Medford MA 02155), Mobilizing Weak Support for Social Movements: The Role of Grievance, Efficacy, and Cost, UM Social Forces, 1987, 66, 2, Dec, 390-409

¶ A social-psychological analysis of the impact of voters' social definitions, along with background factors, on support for a social movement: a nuclear free-zone campaign in Cambridge, Mass. Interview data (N = 362 Rs) reveal that levels of grievance, cost, & efficacy, along with demographic & political variables, predict support. Ballot initiatives are described as one of a class of tactics that translate latent support for social movements into concrete influence. Because they are low cost mobilizations for individual supporters, such initiatives can minimize free riding, & indicate characteristics of weak support. 2 Tables, 4 Figures, 39 References. Modified HA

88T3940

Falk, Richard (Center International Studies Princeton U, NJ 08544), The Global Promise of Social Movements: Explorations at the Edge of Time, Alternatives, 1987, 12, 2, Apr, 173-196

¶ An exploration of how new social movements represent the best hope for challenging & restructuring oppressive political, economic, & cultural systems through enlarging the sense of the political & bringing a global perspective to everyday life practices. Though primarily linked to new politics (democracy, human rights, ecology, peace movements, & feminism) in the West, such movements are developing along similar lines in the East & South, particularly in India & Latin America. Constraints on social movements are examined, along with political, religious, & SE factors that facilitate their development. Some current leading movements are investigated, with focus on five dimensions of their interrelated public sector agenda: denuclearization, demilitarization, depolarization, development, & democratization. Some strategies being used by these movements in their transitional period of growth are discussed, including resistance, delegitimation, accountability, religious politics, & empowerment of transnational arenas. The power of these new social movements lies in their rejection of violence as a means & state power as the principal end. It is concluded that their success in meeting their goals concerning security, development, environmental quality, humane governance, & ethos is dependent on: (1) reinforcement from a revived labor movement, (2) resurgent religious activism, & (3) funds. K. Hyatt

88T3941

Fogel, Ramón B., Movimientos campesinos y transición democrática en el Paraguay (Peasant Movements and Democratic Transition in Paraguay), UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 175-196. (SPA)

¶ The collective actions of the peasants preceding the crisis of 1984 in Paraguay are examined focusing on the massive occupations of land. Several case studies of such collective action are described, & these experiences are analyzed from the perspective of the eventual transition to democracy in Paraguayan society. In particular, the activities of two new peasant organizations are discussed: the Asamblea Permanente de Campesinos sin Tierras (Permanent Assembly of Peasants without Land) & the Coordinación de Mujeres Campesinas (Coordination of Peasant Women). Three main questions are examined: (1) how far the peasant movements formulated demands for change in the existing political system, (2) the implications of these demands, & (3) what factors prevented a greater development of the political potential of the movements analyzed. C. Waters

88T3942

Gros, Dominique (Rue Peillonex 32, CH-1225 Chêne-Bourg Switzerland), Des mouvements alternatifs: contributions à l'étude des nouveaux conflits sociaux (Alternative Movements. A Contribution to the Study of New Social Conflicts), Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Soziologie/Revue Suisse de sociologie, 1987, 13, 2, Oct, 193-216. (FRE)

¶ A framework is proposed for a global approach to alternative movements (eg, feminist or ecological), which are usually generated by the Left, the New Left, & countercultures in response to new social conflicts. A review of previous social movement studies, focusing on issues, values, strategies, organizational structures, & social actors, reveals the following common factors of such movements: a period of historical transformation, concern with issues affecting daily life, a reaction to social alienation, development of nonviolent & constructive action, the simultaneous preservation of individuality & collective identity, & participation by social actors with only marginal power & distanced from the dominant SC. It is argued that a global view of such characteristics allows a better understanding of the mechanisms of change in today's Western societies. 1 Table, 61 References. Modified HA

88T3943

Hegedus, Zsuzsa (Centre analyse & intervention sociologiques Ecole hautes études sciences sociales, 54 blvd Raspail F-75000 Paris France), The Challenge of the Peace Movement: Civilian Security and Civilian Emancipation, Alternatives, 1987, 12, 2, Apr, 197-216.

¶ An examination of the sociological nature of the current peace movement, focusing on its innovative-transformative character. Among the significant points are the new centrality of the security question & the emergence of a new transnational public sphere, & the socialization of the security issue & the conflictualization of its treatment under the effect of this multidimensional problem-centered movement, characterized by a new ethical-emancipatory orientation. The analysis is based on a 4-year study conducted simultaneously in the US & the Federal Republic of Germany. Through analysis of the peace movement, a more general issue is addressed, concerning the new character of social movements & new mechanisms of social change. To meet this theoretical challenge, a new conceptual framework is developed, & the term "self-creative society" is introduced, ie, contemporary society is defined by its self-creative character, its new capacity to invent & realize its own future in an autonomous manner. Modified AA

88T3944

Hill, Michael (Dept Sociology & Social Work Victoria U Wellington, New Zealand), The Cult of Humanity and the Secret Religion of the Educated Classes, New Zealand Sociology, 1987, 2, 2, Nov, 112-127.

¶ Based on a review of the literature, it is suggested that there is some evidence that the pluralistic religious situation in New Zealand provided market opportunities for minority religious groups. Here, Emil justifiable. In Autonomy and the Value of Animal Life, R. G. Frey (U of Liverpool, England) points out the central importance of autonomy to virtually all Anglo-American theories of morality, & explores the concept of autonomy & its relevance to Regan's work. In The Moral Case for Experimentation on Animals, H. J. McCloskey (LaTrobe U, Bundoora, Victoria, Australia) argues that the prima facie duty to maximize the balance of good over evil not only permits but requires experimentation on animals within the limits of proper regulation. In Moral Autonomy, Self-Determination, and Animal Rights, Robert Elliot (Brisbane Coll of Advanced Education, Australia) seeks to defend the Kantian approach to animal rights on which Regan relies against two major criticisms, which claim that self-determination or moral autonomy are necessary conditions for possession of rights. In Darwin, Species, and Morality, James Rachels (U of Alabama, Birmingham) notes the general disregard of Charles Darwin's ideas by philosophers & attempts to show that Darwinism undermines some aspects of traditional morality, specifically by removing the basis for unqualified speciesism. In Animals, Ecosystems and the Liberal Ethic, Stephen R. L. Clark (U of Liverpool, England) explores the relationship between the libertarian individualist ethic & the concept of animal rights, attempting to show that the arguments of both zoophiles & libertarians can be situated within a deep environmentalism. Historical rather than natural rights are what animals genuinely need, in this view. 44 References. W. H. Stoddard

27 public opinion

88T3962

AGORAMETRIE (14 rue de Miromesnil, F-75008 Paris France), Les Structures de l'opinion en 1985-enquêtes et méthodologie (The Structure of Public Opinion in 1985 Surveys and Methodology), ♦ BMS. Bulletin de Méthodologie Sociologique, 1987, 14, Apr., 4-39 (FRE)

¶ The first two chapters of a book published by the French research group AGORAMETRIE (Les Structures de l'opinion en 1985 [The Structure of Public Opinion in 1985], Paris, 1986) are presented. Focus is on methodology in PO surveys, specifically, in 8 interview surveys conducted at regular intervals between 1977 & 1985 with a representative sample of the French adult population (N varied, 500-2,000). The data were subjected to principal component analysis. By the use of a systematic selection process for questionnaire construction & a rigorous methodology controlling for the known sources of survey variability & bias, these successive surveys furnish a detailed representation of how French PO is stably structured around a specific field of conflicts. 7 Figures. Modified HA

88T3963

Jonas, Arthur B. J. & Whitfield, Elizabeth A. (Wellington Police District, New Zealand), Postal Survey of Public Satisfaction with Police Officers in New Zealand, in Police Studies, 1986, 9, 4, winter, 211-221

¶ Knowledge of the degree to which members of the public are satisfied with the police service is important to police planners if they are concerned with improving public perception of the service. Data from a postal survey of residents of Wellington, New Zealand, who had called the police in Jan 1986 to report a (possible) offense are examined (N = 100 valid Rs) to determine the degree to which members of the public are satisfied with the police when they telephone to request service, & a unit is dispatched to attend. Three areas in which the public may evaluate the police service are considered: the way the telephone call is received, the punctuality with which the police attend, & the manner in which the problem is handled at the scene. The results of this survey indicate that a good response, producing information to enable areas of concern to be identified, can be obtained. 2 Tables, 10 Figures, 1 Appendix, 9 References. Modified HA

88T3964

McAdams, John (Dept Political Science Marquette U, Milwaukee WI 53233), Status Polarization of Social Welfare Attitudes, Political Behavior, 1986, 8, 4, 313-334

¶ A test of two competing theories of status polarization of social welfare attitudes. (1) a social-psychological approach that sees status polarization as a function of identification with social groups, & (2) an economic theory that sees policy preferences as a function of the individual's expected utility from various policies. Center for Political Studies (U of Michigan, Ann Arbor) data from the years 1956-1984 reveal that the utility maximizing hypothesis has much more explanatory power for the middle & late 1970s. SC identification, on the other hand, rivals utility maximization as an expression of policy preferences during the years 1956-1964 & shows a slight resurgence in 1982 & 1984. These results suggest little prospect for a revival of the New Deal party coalitions, barring strong political leadership that defines issues in class terms & polarizes the electorate. 5 Tables, 43 References. Modified HA

88T3965

Peters, Hans Peter, Albrecht, Gabriele, Hennen, Leo & Stegelmann,

Hans Ulrich (Programmgruppe Technik & Gesellschaft Kernforschungsanlage Jülich, Postfach 19 13 D-5170 Federal Republic Germany), Die Reaktionen der Bevölkerung auf die Ereignisse in Tschernobyl. Ergebnisse einer Befragung (Reactions to Chernobyl. Results of a Survey among the West German Population), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 4, Dec., 764-782 (GER)

¶ An interview survey of a representative sample of 1,965 West Germans was conducted in Nov-Dec 1986, 7 months after the Chernobyl nuclear accident in the USSR, to analyze the impact of that event on the behavior, opinions, & attitudes of the West German public. A major response to the event was found to be uncertainty about its possible health consequences, about 50% of Rs reported changes in nutritional habits for themselves & their children. Over 71% were opposed to the building of any more nuclear power plants, & 40% favored the shutdown of existing plants. Trust in established institutions, eg, the government, nuclear research centers, & the nuclear industry, was lower than that in "antiestablishment" institutions, eg, Oko-Institut (an "alternative" research establishment), citizens' interest groups, & journalists. 6 Tables, 9 References. Modified HA

88T3966

Smith, Susan J. (Center Housing Research U Glasgow, G12 8QQ Scotland), Fear of Crime: Beyond a Geography of Deviance, Progress in Human Geography, 1987, 11, 1, Mar., 1-23

¶ A review of the incidence of fear of crime, with particular attention to the findings of recent British & US surveys. The importance of social factors, especially those relating to gender & age, is outlined, however, comprehensive explanations of fear must recognize its neighborhood context, eg, environmental conditions, social structures, & political organization, as well as the incidence of deviance itself. Consequently, the management of fear may require strategies outside the conventional spheres of caution & law enforcement. 125 References. AA

88T3967

Thome, Helmut (Institut Soziologie Technische U Berlin, D-1000 10 Federal Republic Germany), Meinungsführerschaft in deutschen Zeitungsmedien? Replik zu einem Artikel von Kepplinger et al. "Medientenor und Bevölkerungsmeinung" (Opinion Leadership in German News Media? Reply to an Article by Kepplinger et al), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 4, Dec., 783-789. (GER)
Reply, 790-795

¶ Objections are raised concerning the methodology & statistical analysis used by Hans Mathias Kepplinger, Wolfgang Donsbach, Hans-Bernd Brosius, & Joachim Friedrich Staab in "Medientenor und Bevölkerungsmeinung" ([Media Trends and Public Opinion] see SA 35 1/87R1900). Opinion leadership within 7 daily & weekly news publications in Germany was studied through changes in opinions expressed over time about West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl. The cross-correlations obtained & causal relationships indicated are considered invalid. The analysis of time series data is a method that cannot be used to test causal hypotheses. In Erwiderung auf die Kritik von Helmut Thome (Reply to the Critique by Helmut Thome), Kepplinger et al state that they did not intend to interpret the cross-relations causally or test a causal hypothesis. Only the connections between the media were causally interpreted, in order to suggest explanations. Thome criticized the aggregation of data & calculation of moving averages, this procedure was justified &, contrary to Thome's statement, did not change the struc-

88T3953

Poplawski, Witold T. (Ontario Ministry Correctional Services, PO Box 300 Millbrook L0A 1G0). Prosocial Activity of an Independent Self-Help Organization in Poland: Some Applications of Behavioral Science during the 1981-1984 Socioeconomic Crisis. The Journal of Applied Behavioral Science, 1987, 23, 2, May, 169-183

¶ A discussion of the formation of an independent self-help organization to provide aid to the scientific community of Cracow, Poland, during the 1981-1984 SE crisis, based on personal experience. Nine academic help committees administered aid to as many as 4,500 families. In attempting to apply behavioral science knowledge to the distribution & sharing of material aid, principles & criteria were devised for developing an organizational structure for satisfying the recipients' psychological & social needs while protecting their self-concepts. Research on group helping behavior & the gradual creation of an interdisciplinary body of applied behavioral science knowledge on organized help are encouraged. 37 References. Modified HA

88T3954

Puhovski, Žarko (Faculty Philosophy U Zagreb, YU-41000 Yugoslavia). Društveni pokret ili pokretanje društva (preliminarna skica) (Social Movement or the Moving of Society [A Preliminary Draft]). Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 3-4, July-Dec, 147-153 (SCR)

¶ Contemporary theories on social movements might best refer to social motion. Action theory is the most suitable conceptual apparatus for the evaluation of new social movements whose major inherent characteristic is the continuous questioning of goals & contexts. Largely interventionist by nature, the new social movements must necessarily operate within the limits of civil society. Modified HA

88T3955

Reynolds, Paul (Government Dept U Queensland, Brisbane 4067 Australia). Queensland Politics: The Rise and Rise of Populism. ♦ Social Alternatives, 1986, 5, 3, Sept, 50-53

¶ The definition of politics as "who gets what, when, & how" applies with particular force to Queensland (Australia) politics. This assessment rests, in turn, on several features associated with the nature of Australian federalism & with the state's own political culture & economy. As to the former, the framers of the Constitution envisaged a weak federal government undertaking national tasks beyond the capacities of individual states (from coinage to foreign & defense policies), while having some minimal coordination of state activities. Federal governmental concerns therefore became focused on national issues of administration & balancing regional & national interests. It was the politics of brokering, arbitrating between competing interests, & retaining a global view of national politics. 1 Table, 2 References. HA

88T3956

Saltalamachia, Homero R. (U Autónoma Metropolitana, Del Itzapatlan 09000 Mexico DF). Historia de vida y movimientos sociales: el problema de "la representatividad". (Apuntes para la reflexión) (Life History and Social Movements: The Problem of "Representativity" [Notes for Reflection]). ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 255-277 (SPA)

¶ A discussion of the use of different types of life history obtained from oral narratives or in-depth interviews, or from autobiographies, letters, diaries, etc. as a means of gathering social data. The work of various authors is reviewed. It is suggested that the major value of life histories lies in their power to focus on detail & to capture the temporal dimension. Life history studies can be divided into two major categories: horizontal (collecting data on many cases in a single time frame) & vertical (the in-depth study of a few cases). The main problem of the method, especially in the latter category (which, for this reason, is less often used), is the difficulty of determining how representative are the cases selected. However, it is argued that many of the assumed limitations of the use of life histories are not intrinsic to the method, but derive from an epistemological framework influenced by positivism. 28 References. C. Waters

88T3957

Stevenson, Blaine W., Roscoe, Bruce, Brooks, Richard H., II & Kelsey, Tammy (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Central Michigan U, Mount Pleasant 48859). Profiles of Mod Revivalists: A Case Study of a Reemerging Adolescent Group. ♦ Adolescence, 1987, 22, 86, summer, 393-404

¶ The characteristics & interpersonal relations of a relatively small group of adolescents who identified themselves as members of a revived "mod movement" in the midwestern US are examined. In-depth interviews were conducted with 13 members (45%) of this peer group to: (1) identify the main features of the members, (2) determine their similarity to earlier "mods" in GB, & (3) assess gains from group affiliation. Results suggest that adolescents who joined this unique & somewhat extreme group were more similar than dissimilar to their contemporaries in their efforts to establish an identity & be accepted as individuals. Implications for interacting with members of such adolescent groups & suggestions for future research are presented. 26 References. HA

88T3958

Torreani Cuevas, Eduardo & Simón G., José Luis. Nacionalismo, populismo y reforma o revolución en América Latina: un coloquio con el doctor Hans-Jürgen Puhle, de la Universidad de Bielefeld, R.F.A. (Nationalism, Populism and Reform or Revolution in Latin America: A Conversation with Dr. Hans-Jürgen Puhle of the University of Bielefeld, Federal Republic of Germany). ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 65, Jan-Apr, 99-116 (SPA)

¶ A transcript of an interview that took place during a series of lectures given in Aug 1985 in Asunción, Paraguay. Topics discussed include comparative methodology & the concept of "functional equivalents", the meaning of the term "populism" in Latin America, the structure & function of political parties in Latin America, the future of political institutions & the weakness of "social energy" in Latin America, the priority of judicial power in democracy, the concept of "the democratic minimum", factors determining the use of reform or revolution in a transition to democracy, & the concept of "nationalism" & its applicability to Latin America. J. Anderson

88T3959

van der Veer, Peter (Faculty Social Sciences, State U Utrecht, NL-3508 TC Netherlands). 'God Must Be Liberated': A Hindu Liberation Movement in Ayodhya. Modern Asian Studies, 1987, 21, 2, Apr, 283-301

¶ Based on anthropological fieldwork in Ayodhya, one of the most important pilgrimage centers of northern India, described is a 1984 attempt to remove a Muslim mosque, which had been built in the sixteenth century, from the birthplace of the Hindu god Ram. A short historical account of the changing relations between Hindus & Muslims in Ayodhya shows that it is misleading to take the antagonism between them as an unchanging factor that is culturally given. The sentiments aroused by the movement are fragmented & related to developments in the political arena. It is of particular interest that the movement's main actors are monks who have always dominated the religious scene of Hindu India, & that the movement focuses on Hindu beliefs that are central to northern Indian Hinduism. 25 References. Modified AA

88T3960

Višnar, Fran (Faculty Philosophy U Zagreb, YU-41000 Yugoslavia). Mirovni pokreti na Zapadu (Peace Movements in the West). Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 3-4, July-Dec, 207-216 (SCR)

¶ An analysis of Western European peace movements reveals that they are becoming a massive public protest of armament policy in general. Important characteristics of these peace movements include their dissociation from classical political movements & opposition to traditional ideological approaches. The importance of these peace movements as a key political topic in East-West relationships is stressed. Modified HA

88T3961

---, Animal Rights. The Monist, 1987, 70, 1, Jan, 3-133.

¶ In Animal Liberation or Animal Rights, Peter Singer (Monash U, Clayton, Victoria, Australia) admits that "animal rights" is a useful shorthand phrase but emphasizes the difference between those who do & those who do not ground defenses of animals on ideas about rights. A criticism is advanced of the conception of rights as such, & the need for a non-rights-based argument is asserted. In Inherent Value and Moral Rights, Paul W. Taylor (Brooklyn Coll, NY) questions the details of Tom Regan's (The Case for Animal Rights, Berkeley: U of California Press, 1983) grounding of rights in the inherent value of every subject-of-a-life, while finding appropriate Regan's deontological ethics & rejection of consequentialism. In On a Case for Animal Rights, Jan Narveson (U of Waterloo, Ontario) critically examines Regan's arguments & outlines an alternative approach to morality that does not reject the generally held moral intuition that such uses of animals as eating their flesh are

The Revolution in Rural Telephone, 1900-1920. ♦ Journal of Social History, 1987, 21, 1, fall, 5-26.

¶ In 1900 fewer than 5% of US farm households had telephones, by 1920 almost 40% did, an adoption rate greater than that of more affluent city-dwellers. This growth occurred in the face of frequent indifference by major telephone companies & was achieved largely by farmers organizing themselves into cooperative telephone systems. The reasons why farmers persisted in developing telephony, despite its costs & difficulties are explored. The case study illustrates: the extent to which technological diffusion is conditioned by business perceptions & decisions; the patterns by which technological development may not take an obvious modernizing path; & the role of consumer agency in technological modernization AA

88T3977

Frey, James H. & Rose, I. Nelson (Dept Sociology U Nevada, Las Vegas 89154). The Role of Sports Information Services in the World of Sports Betting. ARENA Review, 1987, 11, 1, May, 44-51

¶ It is estimated that 700 sports services exist in the US for the purpose of dispensing information on sporting events. This information is often, if not exclusively, used for the purpose of gambling on the outcome of a sports event. Sport information services represent a cottage industry that operates in a virtually unregulated environment. These services are protected under laws that treat them as news services rather than gambling operations. Since these services do not take bets, & there is no real proof that their clients use the information to gamble, federal & state regulations on the distribution of information for gambling purposes do not apply. These & other legal issues are analyzed AA

88T3978

Gelinas, Marc & Theberge, Nancy (U Waterloo, Ontario N2L 3G1). A Content Analysis of the Coverage of Physical Activity in Two Canadian Newspapers. International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 141-151

¶ An analysis of articles published in 2 Ontario newspapers: Toronto's Star (N = 142) & Montreal's La Presse (N = 108)—on topics related to sports is undertaken as a means of examining the content of Canadian print coverage of recreational physical activity. In contrast to the extensive coverage of elite sport, there is limited coverage of recreational activity. Some attention is given to providing information & instruction on physical activity, but little information is provided on groups with low participation rates. The two papers are largely similar, but the French-language paper gives more informational & instructional material. 8 Tables, 11 References. Modified HA

88T3979

Gerlach, Peter (Sektion Publizistik & Kommunikation Ruhr-U Bochum, D-4630 1 Federal Republic Germany). Research about Magazines Appearing in Journalism Quarterly. Journalism Quarterly, 1987, 64, 1, spring, 178-182

¶ Three methods are used to examine US magazine research: (1) a content analysis of such research appearing in Journalism Quarterly from 1964 through 1983; (2) a field analysis; & (3) analysis of the questionnaire responses of 40 members of the Assoc for Education in Journalism & Mass Communication who had published articles about magazine research in Journalism Quarterly. A comparison of the findings reveals some weak points in research about magazines. Modified AA

88T3980

Greisman, Harvey Clark (West Chester State U, PA 19383). Freedom from the Press: Repressive Tolerance and Its Origins. ♦ Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 3, Aug, 287-301.

¶ An exploration of the origins & history of the concept of repressive tolerance in relation to the press. The traditional conception of freedom of the press was originally defended as part of the radical democratic tradition; however, in practice, it led to a growth of mass culture whose effects were largely negative. The Left's critique of these effects centers on the press's role in preventing individual critical thought. Free exchange of ideas is meaningless in a world of massive news organizations. What is needed, rather, is freedom from the press & similarly, freedom from religion & freedom from the economy. 11 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3981

Heeling, Willem (Dept Communicatiewetenschap, Katholieke U Leuven, Eduard van Evenstr 2A B-3000 Belgium). The Pictorial Representation of Sports on Television. International Review for the Soci- ology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 173-193.

¶ A textual analysis of TV sports broadcasts, focusing on semiotic codes. The sports broadcast is considered to be an autonomous, textual reality that differs from the sports event in structure & function. An investigation of three popular TV sports (football, tennis, & cycle racing) examines the textual codes being articulated. It is concluded that sports on TV serve three fundamental, textual functions: providing a fascinating illusion of reality, supplying surplus information, & dynamizing the original sports event into an entertainment spectacle. By deploying these textual strategies, sports broadcasts on TV have become gradually detached from the original sports event. 46 References. Modified HA

88T3982

Lonner, Walter J. (Western Washington U, Bellingham 98225). Some Methodological Problems in Cross-Cultural Media Research. Australian Journal of Psychology, 1986, 38, 3, Dec, 393-402.

¶ The differential availability & use of TV around the world serves to highlight some persistent methodological problems frequently encountered in cross-cultural psychological research. Focal antecedent variables that exist prior to a study & focal consequent variables that occur later in time should be discussed in terms of focal theory. A major problem in cross-cultural research is to determine the extent to which ambient factors can provide plausible alternative explanations for any observed differences between cultures caused by some focal variable. Various ways in which TV can be used as either an independent variable, a mediating variable, or a dependent variable are summarized. A brief discussion of problems involved in studying the effect of TV on the cognitive abilities of Native Alaskan children illustrates some of the methodological problems in cross-cultural media research. 17 References. HA

88T3983

McGucken, Emilia Nadel (U Akron, OH 44325). Crime News Reporting in The New York Times, 1900 to 1950: A Content Analysis. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 752-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713636.

88T3984

Ogan, Christine (Indiana U, Bloomington 47405). Coverage of Development News in Developed and Developing Countries. Journalism Quarterly, 1987, 64, 1, spring, 80-87

¶ An examination of 221 stories from 23 publications in developing & developed countries, focusing on differences in the coverage of development issues presented at the UN International Conference on Population held 14-16 Aug 1984 in Mexico City. Although more stories related to population issues appeared in the developing country publications, little depth or analysis was found. The Western media concentrated more on the political & less on the population issues resulting from the conference. 2 Tables. F. Rasmussen

88T3985

Peterson, Richard A., Bates, Diane & Ryan, John R. (Dept Sociology Vanderbilt U, Nashville TN 37235). Selective versus Passive Television Viewing. Communications, 1986, 12, 3, 81-95

¶ Critics of TV assert that most adults who are heavy watchers (4+ hours daily) simply view what is on rather than select what & when to watch. The issue of passive vs selective TV viewing was investigated using data from telephone interviews conducted in 1982 with 917 US adults. Results indicate that there are several distinct patterns of TV viewing among heavy users; only 20% report passive watching. Selective heavy viewers tend to choose 1 of 6 specific types of programs. Though passive heavy viewers have sociodemographic characteristics that match those of the stereotypical "boob tube habitue," selective heavy viewers are quite different both from this stereotype & from each other. It is suggested that the onslaught of new video technologies is likely to increase passive viewing. 3 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA

88T3986

Portales Cifuentes, Diego. Políticas nacionales de comunicación: la lucha por la utopía en el mercado (National Communications Policies: The Struggle for Utopia in the Market). ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 66, May-Aug, 113-119. (SPA)

¶ The difficulties involved in developing & implementing national telecommunications policies in Latin America are discussed, in an attempt to derive a democratic TV policy. Generally unsuccessful efforts at initiating government communications policies in several countries are re-ture of logarithm. On the question of whether PO follows the opinions expressed in the media or vice versa, Thome should understand that in opinion changes such as those analyzed, the influence is mutual 8 Tables, 9 References. M. Maxfield

88T3968

Tims, Albert R. & Miller, M. Mark (Dept Telecommunications Indiana U, Bloomington 47405), Determinants of Attitudes toward Foreign Countries, International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 1986, 10, 4, 471-484.

† A test of the hypothesis offered by M. Nincic & B. Russett (see SA 28:1/80K4240) that perceived similarity & perceived commonalities in national interests are strong predictors of overall PO ratings of foreign countries. Conceptual & operational limitations of the original model are outlined & an elaborated formulation of the factors affecting overall PO ratings is introduced. Data were gathered during interviews conducted in 1977/78 with a stratified, multistage random sample of 821 Belgians aged 17+ who had completed secondary school. Consistent with expectations based on recent findings from studies of intergroup relations & interpersonal attraction, perceived trust, similarity, & shared national interests were found to be significant determinants of PO. In addition, it was shown that perceptions of recent foreign policy actions in areas apparently high in personal salience play a significant role in PO ratings. The role of the mass media in the formation of PO about foreign countries is also discussed. 2 Tables, 23 References. Modified HA

88T3969

Vlek, C. A. J. (Subfaculteit Psychologie Rijks U Groningen, NL, 9700 AB Netherlands), Peiling van publieksoverkeuren over energiebeleid. Een keuze-enquête met vooraanstaande informatiebeoordeling (Assessment of Public Preferences about Energy Policy: A Choice Questionnaire with Prior Information Evaluation), IM Mens en Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 4, Nov, 401-418. (DUT)

† In the Netherlands, a proposal to build additional nuclear power plants in the 1970s met with much public protest. In response, a "Societal Discussion on Future (Nuclear) Energy Policy" was organized in 1981 that attempted to systematically inform the public & assess their preferences regarding various possible energy sources. One assessment procedure, the Choice Questionnaire, is critically examined from a decision-theoretic perspective. Although it represents a respectable attempt to improve traditional PO polling procedures, it fails to meet essential decision-theoretic requirements. Results obtained on 1,300 Rs appear to correspond roughly to preference statistics obtained with less demanding assessment procedures 4 Tables, 10 References. Modified HA

28 communication

88T3970

Andersen, Peter A., Lantig, Myron W. & Andersen, Janis F. (San Diego State U, CA 92182), Regional Patterns of Communication in the United States: A Theoretical Perspective, ♦ IM Communication Monographs, 1987, 54, 2, June, 128-144

† The development of regional patterns of communication in the US is described through an account of regional history & an examination of forces that cause the decay, maintenance, & reestablishment of distinct regions. A program of regional research on US communication is proposed that corrects deficiencies in prior research. Rudimentary research efforts are considered, & future directions suggested 5 Figures, 92 References. Modified HA

88T3971

Burgoon, Michael, Burgoon, Judee K. & Shatzer, Milton J. (Dept Communications U Arizona, Tucson 85721), Ethnic Differences in the Evaluation of Newspaper Image, International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 1987, 11, 1, 49-64.

† Two very different interpretations of why specific minority groups may not be loyal newspaper readers are examined. The first, operating on many pejorative stereotypes, portrays blacks & Hispanics as critical, disaffected people who see newspapers as racist, biased, & unfair. An alternative view suggests that factors such as product availability, demographics, & economic considerations, not negative evaluations of sources of information, are better explanations for nonreadership by different ethnic groups. Data from 3 nationwide questionnaire surveys (N = 14,378) were used to analyze differences in newspaper image among different racial/ethnic groups in the US. Across all analyses, race is not a very meaningful predictor of newspaper evaluation. This casts doubt on assumptions about alienated, uninvolved minorities. When race did add unique variance to the predictor models, it was because minorities were more positive about local media, an alternative not previously suggested. Results are discussed in terms of their importance to academic researchers, media managers, policymakers, & those interested in intercultural/interracial training & education. 2 Tables, 10 References. Modified HA

88T3972

Clays, Els (Belgische Radio en Televisie, August Reyerslaan 52 B-1040 Brussels), Sport at Belgian Radio and Television (BRT), International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 195-210.

† Questionnaire data (N = 639 Rs) reveal that 88+% of all TV owners in Flanders are linked to cable; on average, these households receive 14+ stations. The battle for audience ratings is fought partly by means of sports programs. Since BRT began transmission on a second channel in 1977, the output of sports broadcasts has more than tripled; the amount of viewing time for these programs grows at an even faster rate. About 80% of Rs are interested in sports on TV, comprising 90% of all men, & 70% of all women; live coverage is most appreciated. More than 80% of Rs with an interest in sport also tune in to another channel for more sports programs. 10 References. Modified HA

88T3973

Corsini, Gianfranco, Umanesimo e mass media: un contributo di ricerca (Humanism and the Mass Media: A Research Contribution), ♦ IM La Critica Sociologica, 1986-87, 80, Jan-Mar, 83-92. (ITA)

† A review of recent literature on the mass media, especially TV. The tone of many studies is gloomy, even apocalyptic, but the findings of a 1978 seminar organized by the US Office of Education concerning the effects of TV on school children (Television, the Book and the Classroom, Washington, DC: Library of Congress, 1978) do not generally support the anti-TV hypotheses. The cultural hegemony of the US over TV worldwide is noted 21 References. C. Waters

88T3974

Cust, Richard (U Birmingham, B15 2TT England), News and Politics in Early Seventeenth-Century England, Past and Present, 1986, 112, Aug, 60-90.

† An exploration of the development of social impact of news media in England during the seventeenth century. Historically, news was conveyed in letters to personal acquaintances or business associates; gradually there evolved from these the newsletter, devoted solely to conveying news. Word of mouth & popular ballads also were important news channels. Such news increased the visibility of national figures at the local level, fostering a sense of national identity, but also helping to create a sense of political opposition between court & country. News media thus contributed to a sense of political polarization, revealing an image of conflict at odds with the contemporary rhetoric of unity, though one whose precise impact is often indeterminable or minor. W. H. Stoddard

88T3975

Emig, Jurgen (Saarlandischer Rundfunk, Postfach 1050 D-6600 Sarrbrücken Federal Republic of Germany), Barriers of Investigative Sports Journalism: An Empirical Inquiry into the Conditions of Information Transmission, International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 113-130.

† A discussion of sports journalism, focusing on social, political, & economic aspects. An input-output analysis compares 87 news items supplied to news agencies with (1) their processing by newspaper editors, & (2) the form in which they are actually published. Guideline-oriented interview data from gatekeepers (N not provided) at different levels of publication identify pertinent technical, organizational, & thematic criteria that determine journalists' attitudes in making their selection. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 19 References. Modified HA

88T3976

Fischer, Claude S. (Dept Sociology U California, Berkeley 94720).

with spending leisure at work becoming increasingly necessary. 3 Tables, 2 Figures. Modified HA

88T3995

Cohen, Erik (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Hebrew U Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel), The Tourist as Victim and Protégé of Law Enforcing Agencies, Leisure Studies, 1987, 6, 2, May, 181-198

¶ Tourists can sometimes find themselves involved with the law agencies of a country they visit; a host-country citizen may commit a crime against the tourist, or the tourist may commit a crime. In either case, focus here is on the attitude & actions of a host country's legal institutions toward tourists. These issues are explored through illustrative case material collected during several visits to Thailand between 1977 & 1985. It is argued that ambivalence in the tourist's role makes him or her vulnerable to criminals, to a country's law & legal process, & to different attitudes of law enforcing agencies. The more a tourist moves about independently, & away from the protective shelter of an "environmental bubble," the more he or she will be at risk. 34 References. Modified HA

88T3996

Colić, Snježana (Institut društvena istraživanja, Zagreb Yugoslavia), Slobodno vrijeme društvenih grupa (Leisure Time of Social Groups), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 121-129 (SCR)

¶ Analysis of questionnaire data on leisure activities among adult Yugoslavs ($N = 3,606$) shows a wide disparity in both amount & quality of leisure time according to SC. Peasants, eg, virtually have no spare time at all. Among the Mcs & Ucs, reading, sports, & attendance at theater & cinema are popular diversions. The level of participation in culture, largely affected by the amount of spare time available for such pursuits, leads to increased social differentiation &, at least to some extent, to cultural determination. 4 Tables. Modified HA

88T3997

Cousin Davallon, Françoise & Davallon, Jean (U Lyon I, F-69365 Cedex 2 France), Du musée au parc: exposer le vivant (From Museum to Zoological Park. Exhibiting Living Creatures), ♦ Loisir et Société/Society and Leisure, 1987, 10, 1, spring, 23-43. (FRE)

¶ A discussion of the modern zoo focuses on similarities & differences between zoo & museum, & what it means to "present" animals today. Theoretically speaking, the zoo is at the intersection of two elements: exhibition techniques & their evolution, & a series of symbolic values given to animals by our society. Thus the zoo is examined here both as a museological problem & as a very specific entity defined by what animals represent in the collective imagination. Two interacting factors are investigated: the practical problems raised by the presentation of animals, & the theoretical questions related both to the changing symbolic value of animals today & to the zoological park as an exhibition place. Modified HA

88T3998

Curtis, James E. & McPherson, Barry D. (Dept Kinesiology U Waterloo, Ontario N2L 3G1), Regional Differences in the Leisure Physical Activity of Canadians: Testing Some Alternative Interpretations, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 4, Dec, 363-375

¶ The results of a multivariate analysis of the relationship between region & the extent of participation in sport & physical activities are presented, employing data from a 1981 survey of a national sample of Canadian adults ($N = 20,000+$). The region-activity relationship has also been suggested by some US studies, ie, the farther west the R's place of residence, the more likely he or she is to report high rates of physical activity. For the US results, a convenient & common interpretation has been that the more favorable climate for outdoor activities in the westerly states leads to higher activity. This interpretation is not adequate for the Canadian findings, however, because of the harsher winter climate in the western provinces. Therefore, some alternative interpretations are explored (ie, the effects of sociodemographic composition, SE profiles, & opportunity structures), but such factors are shown to have only small effects on the region-activity relationship. Some proposals for other avenues of analysis & interpretation of the regional differences are included. 24 References. Modified HA

88T3999

Dixey, Rachael (Trinity & All Saint's Coll, Horsforth Leeds LS18 5HD England), It's a Great Feeling When You Win: Women and Bin- go, Leisure Studies, 1987, 6, 2, May, 199-214

¶ Data from 1981/82 field research in Armley, Leeds, England, investigating constraints on women's leisure, & from a national questionnaire survey covering 80 sessions in bingo clubs, are used to examine the role of bingo in the leisure lives of Wc women. The image of bingo players as irresponsible & obsessive, & usually F & Wc, is explored. Superficially, it is easy to see why women are attracted to bingo, it is a local, cheap form of entertainment that is acceptable to husbands. Bingo provides a largely F environment in which traditional community values can be re-asserted, in the face of physical restructuring of the Wc neighborhood, & in the absence of alternative activities for women. Quotations from players discussing their reasons for playing & attitudes toward winning are included. Some thoughts are offered about the future of bingo in a time of increased poverty, particularly in the north of England. 14 References. Modified AA

88T4000

Herbert, David T. (Dept Geography University Coll Swansea, Singleton Park SA2 8PP Wales), Exploring the Work-Leisure Relationship: An Empirical Study in South Wales, Leisure Studies, 1987, 6, 2, May, 147-165

¶ The idea that some kind of link exists between work & leisure remains challenging despite the fact that available research evidence is equivocal. Three extant theories—extension or spillover, opposition or compensation, & neutral or no relationship—are examined, using data from a questionnaire survey of contrasting groups of workers ($\Sigma N = 493$) from coal-mining, steel-working, factory industry, & offices in South Wales with regard to their attitudes toward work & leisure, as well as their actual patterns of leisure behavior. Gender differences are apparent in most attitudes. High levels of support are found for the idea of positive compensation, with minority support for the spillover hypotheses. Coal miners have the most distinctive features in their leisure activities, which demonstrate the need to compensate for their underground work conditions with outdoor activities, & to extend their social gregariousness at work into nonwork settings. In terms of constraints that work places on leisure activities, office workers appear less adversely affected than the other groups. 5 Tables, 16 References. Modified AA

88T4001

Jansen-Verbeke, Myrland (Geographical & Planning Instit Catholic U Nijmegen, Netherlands), Women, Shopping and Leisure, Leisure Studies, 1987, 6, 1, Jan, 71-86.

¶ The leisure function of central U shopping areas is investigated using data from questionnaires administered to 674 visitors to a major shopping district in Hertogenbosch, the Netherlands; results are compared to those obtained in similar surveys ($\Sigma N = 1,137$ Rs) conducted in the central shopping areas of other Dutch towns (Deventer, Kampen, & Zwolle). Attitudes of shoppers, particularly Fs, toward environmental conditions of the shopping facilities are explored along with their shopping behaviors & perceptions of the shopping experience. Differences are examined in terms of personal demographic characteristics, & attitudes are found to be influenced primarily by SE variables. It is concluded that research on the shopping experience cannot be based solely on environmental approaches, but must incorporate the concept of shopping as a leisure activity. 4 Tables, 16 References. K. Hyatt

88T4002

Jary, David (North Staffordshire Polytechnic, Stoke on Trent England), Sport and Leisure in the 'Civilizing Process', ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 563-570.

¶ A review essay on a book by Norbert Elias & Eric Dunning, Quest for Excitement: Sport and Leisure in the Civilizing Process (Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 1986 (see listing in IRPS No. 42)). Elias & Dunning see the growth of sport in modern society as an ideal exemplification of the civilizing process. This work is actually based primarily on previously published articles, with less than 33% being new material. The book represents a substantial advance in the sociology of sport, though its coverage of other forms of leisure is less satisfactory. However, Elias & Dunning do not adequately demonstrate their figurational approach to be different from or better than other approaches to sport. 3 References. W. H. Stoddard viewed. The effects of monopoly & the hindrances to innovation are noted, with emphasis on the experiences of Argentina, Mexico, & Chile. A mixture of public & private financing is considered to be the best option for cultural innovation. The implications of new technologies for decentralization & innovation are examined. Proposals are made for the redirection of public funding into independent program production & for the creation of local channels. J. Anderson

88T4003

Maguire, J. A., Against the Odds: The Survival of English Working Class Gambling since 1800, ARENA Review, 1987, 11, 1, May, 37-43.

88T3987

Remson, Roland & Carrel, Chris (Instit Physical Education Catholic U Leuven, B-3030 Belgium), Sportive Consumption: An Analysis of Social Status Symbolism in Sport Ads, International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 153-171

¶ A content analysis of advertisements that appeared in 26 Belgian magazines over a 1-year period identified 1,368 advertisements using sports themes to promote consumer products. The interrelationships among SC characteristics of magazine audiences, sports shown, & products advertised are explored. Support is found for established theories of social stratification in sports. However, theories that posit the use of subliminal techniques in advertising are not supported; the tendency rather is to direct attempts to promote conspicuous consumption using sport persuaders. 9 Tables, 2 Figures, 30 References. Modified HA

88T3988

Sato, Takeshi, Title appears in Japanese (Japanese Mass Communication Studies), Shakaigaku Hyoron/Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 2, Sept, 86-101 (JPN)

¶ The growth of mass communication studies in Japan following WWII is chronicled, with emphasis on the influence of US communications research & the pioneering work of I. Shimizu (eg, see Social Psychology, 1951). Critics of Shimizu's theory regarding the huge impact of mass communication on modern society argued that the active cognitive aspects of audience & personal communication networks could serve as the people's source of power against mass communication. From this critique emerged the Japanese native perspective of the mass communication process, which emphasized that the total social communication process involved a multilayered structure of conflicts & contradictions. Studies of audience effects were stagnated in the 1960s, largely due to the impact of the US limited-effects model; however, research on media content, production, & journalistic freedom flourished. Since the 1970s, media sociology has been revived, influenced by US empirical & British critical studies. 85 References. Modified HA

88T3989

Valgeirsson, Gunnar & Snyder, Eldon E. (Dept Sociology Bowling Green State U, OH 43403), A Cross-Cultural Comparison of Newspaper Sports Sections, International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 131-140.

¶ A content analysis of sports articles in 3 major newspapers: Morgunblaðid (N = 504), the London Times (N = 806), & the New York Times (N = 612), published in Reykjavik (Iceland), England, & New York, respectively. Articles are compared with regard to: quantification in sport; coverage of F sports; coverage of amateur, semiprofessional, & professional sports; & problematic sports. Findings confirm the ideological & commercial interrelationship between sport & the media. 3 Tables, 12 References. Modified HA

88T3990

Wilcox, Clyde (Union Coll, Schenectady NY 12308), Popular Backing for the Old Christian Right: Explaining Support for the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade, Journal of Social History, 1987, 21, 1, fall, 117-132

¶ An investigation of a number of alternative explanations for support for one of the precursors to the New Christian Right, the Christian Anti-Communism Crusade in 1964, which are broadly categorized into two sets: those that view support as the rational result of certain values & beliefs, & those that view such support as the irrational result of certain social & psychological strains. The first set of explanations argue that those individuals who are conservatives, Republicans, or fundamentalist Christians, or who live in the South or West, are likely to hold values & beliefs that would predispose them to support the Crusade. The second set suggests that those who are authoritarian, strongminded, abnormally concerned with SS, or alienated from society are likely to be converts to right-wing causes. Using survey data from the 1964 American National Election Study conducted by the Center for Political Studies at the U of Michigan, each of these hypotheses is investigated in turn. After a series of bivariate tests, multivariate logit regression is used to sort out the most important determinants of support for the Crusade. It is concluded that rational explanations do the best job of predicting support, with fundamentalism, Republican partisanship, attitudes toward federal government power, & attitudes toward communism the most important predictors. 4 Tables. AA

88T3991

Winkel, F. W. (Dept Social Psychology Free U, NL-1012 WX Amsterdam Netherlands), Response Generalisation in Crime Prevention Campaigns: An Experiment, British Journal of Criminology, 1987, 27, 2, spring, 155-173

¶ Mass media campaigns are increasingly being used as a crime control strategy. Some of these are campaigns designed to encourage potential victims to take simple precautions to reduce opportunities. Response generalization theory, developed here, suggests that such communications might also result in unintended & unwanted effects, eg, by stimulating the extent of public agreement with undesirable reactions to crime. Experimental results obtained from a sample of 324 residents of a Dutch city confirm this hypothesis: those exposed to burglary prevention messages show high communicative & emotional involvement with crime, or a high risk-assessment. The implications of response generalization for crime prevention campaigns are discussed & strategies for avoiding these side-effects proposed. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 2 Diagrams, 31 References. Modified HA

29 collective behavior

88T3992

Puljk, Roel (Instit pressforskning U Oslo, Blindern N-0316 3 Norway), Massemediers innvirkning på beslutningsprosesser (The Effect of the Mass Media on the Process of Decision Making), Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 4, 351-368 (NOR)

¶ An examination of the impact of mass media & publicity on the process of legal decision making. Mass media can influence both the access of various actors to arenas for decision making & the acceptance of certain interpretations. However, media coverage is not necessarily the decisive influence for legal decisions. 16 References. Modified HA

42 sociology of leisure/tourism

88T3993

Abendstern, M. (U Essex, Wivenhoe Park Colchester CO4 3SQ England), Expression and Control, a Study of Working Class Leisure and Gender, 1918-1938: A Case Study of Rochdale Using Oral History Methods, * Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 479

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T3994

Bruszt, László & Lilli, Róbert, Az áruba bocsátott szabaddó (Commodification of Free Time), Társadalomkutatás, 1986, 3-4, 82-99 (HUN)

¶ An examination of changes in the relationship between work & leisure in Hungary, based on empirical survey data from 1972, 1978, & 1982. Work has become a dominant activity determining the structure of leisure, while activities devoted to social reproduction & to cultural, recreational, & community activities have diminished in importance. The expansion of the market has led to the commodification of leisure time.

50 mass culture

88T4012

Brawley, Edward A. (Sociology Dept Pennsylvania State U, University Park 16802). Promoting Human Well-Being through the Mass Media, Arête, 1987, 12, 1, summer, 11-20

† Social workers engaged in the provision of health care & mental health services can make fuller & more effective use of local newspapers, magazines, radio, & TV to communicate important preventive & self-help messages to individuals, families, & communities. Furthermore, by taking greater advantage of the valuable communication resources that the local media represent, health, mental health, & social service agencies & their staff can be more successful in interpreting their goals & activities & in generating greater public understanding for their work & for vital social policies & programs. HA

88T4013

Chernyak, Yu. B., Leonov, A. I. & Lerner, A. Ya. (Profsoyuznaya St 85 Apt 93, 117279 Moscow USSR). The Constructive Theory of Mass Behaviour, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 3, 233-253

† A central problem of the theory of developed communities is to show how mass behavior is shaped by the individual efforts of community members. On the basis of pure economic theory, a general analysis is proposed for such behavior, & its theoretical implications are explored. An analogy is drawn to the behavior of a thermodynamic system. 1 Figure, 35 References. Modified HA

88T4014

Gershuny, Jonathan, The Leisure Principle, WM New Society, 1987, 79, 1259, 13 Feb, 10-13.

† John Maynard Keynes's 1928 prediction that technology would radically alter full-time employment & the meaning of work, creating new problems of how to occupy leisure time (see "The Economic Possibilities for Our Grandchildren," Essays in Persuasion, Royal Economic Society, 1972), is criticized from the vantage point of the present. In GB, increased manufacturing productivity was accompanied by a growth in consumption & new markets; diffusion of new goods & services brought about a decrease in domestic work time & an increase in free time for service consumption, which subsequently increased the amount of service-related jobs. Evidence from time-use data in Norway, the Netherlands, Canada, the US, & UK between 1961 & 1981 supports this pattern, but reveals that it began to break down in the 1980s. Explanations are offered in terms of long-term cycles of development & the role of infrastructure in diffusing product innovations. Ways to improve the distribution of new technologies are discussed, & illustrated via the example of home-based teleshopping. Implications for jobs in traditional retail & new information technology sectors are discussed, & some suggestions offered for appropriate policy changes regarding technological growth & free time. 2 Figures, 2 Photographs, 5 References. K. Hyatt

88T4015

Snow, Robert P. (Dept Sociology Arizona State U, Tempe 85287). Interaction with Mass Media: The Importance of Rhythm and Tempo, WM Communication Quarterly, 1987, 35, 3, summer, 225-237.

† It is argued that Georg Simmel's concept of social forms (as a sociology of culture) facilitates an understanding of the meanings constructed through the interaction between media & audiences & within internal media operations. Specifically, as a major social form in contemporary society, media interpretation & presentation of various phenomena occur through grammatical formats containing particular syntax, inflection, & vocabulary characteristics. Here, focus is on the rhythm & tempo facets of grammatical inflection. It is suggested that media follow the rhythm

& tempo of everyday life routines found in society at large, & individual audience members use media inflection characteristics to establish & legitimize the temporal character of their own social affairs. It is emphasized that rhythmicity & tempo underlie & fuel the momentum of everyday social action, making the study of inflection in media formats all the more important as a SofK problem. 37 References. AA

88T4016

Tolleneer, Jan (Instit Physical Education Katholieke U Leuven, Ter-vuursevest 101 B-3030 Belgium). The Sports Scene and the Pop Scene: A Comparative Structural-Functional Analysis, International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 229-238.

† An examination of parallels, particularly with respect to sociocultural functions, between spectator sports & popular music. It is argued that the appeal of the sports scene & the pop scene for Western society is related to the fact that both manifestations have specific mythological, ideological, ritual, play, & escape functions, as well as aesthetical functions. Both the sports scene & the pop scene are important elements of the socialization process of young people. A structural analysis of these social subsystems reveals that both products of popular culture are consumed on a large scale & that they play a functional role in leisure behavior, especially of youth. 2 Figures, 20 References. Modified HA

88T4017

Wilkinson, Doris Y. (Dept Sociology U Kentucky, Lexington 40506-0027). The Doll Exhibit: A Psycho-Cultural Analysis of Black Female Role Stereotypes, Journal of Popular Culture, 1987, 21, 2, fall, 19-29.

† It is suggested that play objects expose social & political values & beliefs & offer historical translations of collective sentiments; thus, the form & design of toys, games, & dolls reveal fundamental societal customs, folkways, & values. Here, it is shown how play objects have been used to sustain a dimension of the US's racial & social history, based on a content analysis of early images of women of African ancestry in dolls manufactured & marketed in Europe & the US between the post-Reconstruction & the Depression years. Findings indicate that consistent stereotypic images of Afro-American women were used to depict dolls. These labels, functioning as significant cultural symbols, included the staple "Mammy" portrayal, which was manufactured in the 1890s. In addition, selective descriptive adjectives were used that enhanced the potency of images conveyed. The analysis of racial labels & their standardized meanings via dolls in US popular culture reflects significant information about the country's racial as well as sex- & gender-role psychology. It is argued that, via such play artifacts, symbols became translated into the actual objects or realistic portrayals. Modified AA

88T4018

Young, Kevin (Dept Sociology U Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4). "The Killing Field": Themes in Mass Media Responses to the Heysel Stadium Riot, International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 253-266.

† The process of social reaction as structured in & through the mass media is discussed, focusing on mass media responses to the May 1985 Heysel stadium riot in Brussels, Belgium. Shown is how the mass media's construction of imagery & definition & labeling of deviant behavior can assist in establishing the reality & context of the problem of spectator violence. Common themes & techniques characterizing the violent spectator report are categorized in a model of reporting styles. These processes are explained with reference to the sociological concepts of "deviancy amplification" & "moral panic." 22 References. Modified HA

† A brief history of English gambling since 1800 shows that authoritarian attempts to suppress or control betting met with resistance from the Wc. Gambling became identified with this SC & has since been accommodated by, & incorporated into, English society. 17 References. D. Graves

88T4004

May-Landgrebe, Silke (Kirschstr 3, D-4419 Laer Federal Republic Germany), Touristische Entwicklungsstrategien-Wege aus der Armut? (Tourism as a Development Strategy-A Way Out of Poverty?). ♦ Peripherie, 1986, 7, 25-26, summer-fall, 165-180 (GER)

† The role of tourism in the development of Third World economies is investigated. A review of available empirical evidence indicates that tourism fails to contribute to genuine development, even worse, it tends to block initiatives toward development. To rely on income from tourism is very risky, since this economic sector is highly sensitive to changes in demand, which are influenced by many SE & cultural factors. Tourism tends to reinforce previously established patterns of dependence & inequality, & it dislocates systems of scarce resources: this is felt especially in traditional, key sectors, eg, agriculture, fisheries, & crafts. Tourism accelerates processes of societal alienation & even deformation, resulting in the destruction of cultural values & social relations. This process is increasingly provoking resistance among the affected group. Modified HA

88T4005

Schiele, Bernard & Boucher, Louise (U Quebec, Montreal H3C 3P8), Notes pour une analyse de la compétence communicationnelle de l'exposition scientifique (Toward an Analysis of the Communicational Competence of the Scientific Exhibition). ♦ Loisir and Société/Society and Leisure, 1987, 10, 1, spring, 45-68. (FRE)

† An investigation of the evaluation procedure for measuring the correspondence between the manner in which information is presented in an exhibition & its effects on exhibition visitors. It is shown how positivist ideology, the traditional approach to the practice of evaluation, obscures reality by reducing the established interactions, the exhibition, & the visitors to a functional relation or set of relations. The elements necessary for analyzing the communicational competence of the exhibition are then described, & a method is proposed in which the exhibition is analyzed as a process of communication, diffusion of information, & socialization. It is argued that if the communicational competence of the medium is to be determined, the notion of effect (which is inoperative in the area of evaluation) must be replaced by the notion of a questioning process, which examines the characteristics of the medium in relation to those of the visitors. 2 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T4006

Travis, A. S. (U Birmingham, B15 2TT England), Museums, Theme-Parks and Developments in Tourism. ♦ Loisir and Société/Society and Leisure, 1987, 10, 1, spring, 13-21

† The changing forms of leisure, tourism, & educational facilities are investigated. It is suggested that the roles of providers in these three fields are increasingly tending to overlap & converge, at least partly as a result of new design & management concepts. A review of developments in museums & theme parks from the nineteenth century to the present shows the convergence of many conceptual streams, this is linked with mainstream developments in modern tourism. 1 Appendix. Modified HA

88T4007

Truett, Dale B. & Truett, Lila J. (Division Economics & Finance U Texas, San Antonio 78285), The Response of Tourism to International Economic Conditions: Greece, Mexico, and Spain, Journal of Developing Areas, 1987, 21, 2, Jun, 177-189.

† An examination of the growth of the international tourism sectors of the economies of Greece, Mexico, & Spain, utilizing international economic statistics covering the period 1945-1982. Analysis reveals that tourism receipts became increasingly important to Greece & Spain, while diversification of the Mexican economy caused other sectors to grow more rapidly than did international tourism. A loglinear regression equation demonstrates that the quantity demanded of tourism was positively related to the real incomes of potential travelers, & negatively related to the country's price level relative to international prices, & to the international value of the country's currency. In addition, the data suggest that the demand for international tourism responds significantly to changes in relative prices. It is concluded that appropriate pricing policies for international tourism services can improve the competitive position of a nation's tourism sector. Countries may wish to carefully consider policies to reduce the real costs of tourism associated with such variables as local taxes, internal air fares, nuisance regulations, & personal safety. The study also revealed high income elasticities that suggest targeting of promotional activities toward specific potential groups of tourists. 5 Tables. Modified AA

88T4008

Urry, John (Dept Sociology Lancaster U, Bailrigg LA1 4YW England), On the Waterfront, U New Society, 1987, 81, 1285, 14 Aug, 12-14

† After tracing the history of the seaside resort in GB, some reasons for their recent decline in popularity as tourist attractions are examined. Though the number of people from overseas taking vacations in GB has risen, these resorts are falling into decay. Influential SE & cultural factors include the decline of industrialization, a more diverse tourist industry catering to the needs of a larger group than the Uc family, the domination of the automobile, competition from other countries, & tourists' preferences for historical sites over coastal areas when visiting GB. 4 Photographs. K Hyatt

88T4009

Werner, Anita (Instit pressforskning U Oslo, Blindern N-0316 3 Norway), Fjernsyn og aldersdifferensiering: et innlegg i debatten om "den tapte barndommen" (Television and Age-Related Differences: A Contribution to the Debate about the "Disappearance of Childhood"). Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 4, 331-350. (NOR)

† Data collected in 1967, 1969, & 1978 are used to compare leisure-time activities of children & adolescents before & after the introduction of TV to their households in 1967. Results do not support the hypothesis that TV has any general effect of reducing age-related differences in such activities, in fact, such differences increase after the introduction of TV. This finding is tentatively explained as due to the increased number of available alternative free-time activities for young people, which makes it easier to choose activities according to one's own interests. Reactions even to the same televised content vary according to the viewer's position in the life cycle. 1 Table, 3 Figures, 25 References. Modified HA

88T4010

Wilkinson, P. F. (Faculty Environmental Studies York U, 4700 Keele St North York Ontario), Tourism in Small Island Nations: A Fragile Dependence, Leisure Studies, 1987, 6, 2, May, 127-146

† R. W. Butler ("The Concept of a Tourist Area Cycle of Evolution: Implications for Management of Resources," Canadian Geographer, 1980, 24, 5-12) has suggested that visits to particular tourist areas follow an asymptotic curve, marked by slow initial growth, then rapid growth, stability, & decline or rejuvenation. D. E. Lundberg (The Tourist Business Boston, Mass. Cahners Books, 1980) has provided a similar model of tourism development, which has six phases: rapid growth, short-run success, awareness of problems, tourism recession, serious difficulties, & reflection. Whether Butler's concept of a tourist area cycle of evolution & Lundberg's model of tourism development fit the pattern of international tourist arrivals for four Caribbean regions—Antigua, Aruba, St. Lucia, & the US Virgin Islands—is explored using data from the Caribbean Tourism Research & Development Center for 1970-1984 & from a previous study (Seward, S. B., & Spinrad, B. K. (Eds), Tourism in the Caribbean: The Economic Impact, Ottawa, Ontario: International Development Research Centre, 1972). Implications of this pattern for tourism in general & Caribbean tourism in particular are examined. 5 Tables, 1 Figure. 43 References. Modified HA

88T4011

Zolberg, Vera (New School Social Research, New York NY 10011), Elias and Dunning's Theory of Sport and Excitement. ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 571-575

† A review essay on a book by Norbert Elias & Eric Dunning, Quest for Excitement. Sport and Leisure in the Civilizing Process (Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). Elias's work overall represents a valuable challenge both to Talcott Parsons's static interpretation of Max Weber & the psychologistic reformulation of Emile Durkheim, & to Karl Marx's economic reductionism. This book applies his theories to the new domain of sport. However, despite the interest of its conclusions, it has several lacunae, notably its neglect of the relationship of economics to modern sport. 5 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4028

Jones, Terry (Dept Sociology California State U, Hayward 94542), Racial Practices in Baseball Management, ♦ UM The Black Scholar, 1987, 18, 3, May-June, 16-24.

◀ A discussion of racial inequality in major league baseball, focusing on the lack of black & other minority representation in management & decision-making positions in sport. A uniquely US institution, baseball, with all of its myths, legends, superstitions, & stereotypes, provides fertile ground for examining the interaction between blacks & whites. Euro-American stereotypes of black Americans as physically proficient & mentally deficient have guided the baseball hierarchy to establish operating patterns that have worked to the detriment of blacks & other minorities. Today, blacks make up 30% of the players in the major leagues, yet out of the 879 top administrative posts, only 17 (1.9%) are held by blacks. Modified AA

88T4029

Leonard, Wilbet M., II (Dept Sociology Illinois State U, Normal 61761), Stacking in College Basketball: A Neglected Analysis, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 4, Dec, 403-409

‡ Stacking—the disproportional relegation of athletes to specific player positions on the basis of ethnicity or race—among Coll basketball players was investigated using survey data from 644 student-athletes at 47 National Collegiate Athletic Assoc (NCAA) affiliates. Seven different operationalizations of position, the dependent variable, produced bivariate associations that were negligible & not statistically significant. The introduction of five control variables (NCAA division, playing & scholarship status, sex, & year in school) failed to alter the bivariate outcomes. The present data indicate that stacking in Coll basketball has declined, particularly at the center position, but continues to exist at forward & guard slots. 1 Table, 21 References. Modified HA

88T4030

Lesieur, Henry R. (Dept Sociology Saint John's U, Jamaica NY 11439), Deviance in Sport: The Case of Pathological Gambling, ARENA Review, 1987, 11, 1, May, 5-14

‡ The functions & dysfunctions of pathological gambling are discussed, based on a review of the literature. Pathological gamblers account for a large % of the profits of the gambling industry: social workers, psychologists, & others who treat pathological gamblers benefit, as do auditors, collection agencies, sheriffs, lawyers, & others in the criminal justice system. Pathological gamblers pay an inordinate share of gambling taxes. Dysfunctions include harm to family, health, & work, & criminal activity. In addition, treatment & other costs are being incurred by the state. These functions & dysfunctions are seen as separate from the functions & dysfunctions of gambling itself. While pathological gambling may or may not be dysfunctional for sports per se, the dysfunctions clearly outweigh the functions in terms of their consequences for society. 2 Tables, 23 References. Modified AA

88T4031

Petrović, Krešimir & Žvan, Milan (Fakulteta za telesno kulturo U Edvarda Kardelja, Gortanova 22 YU-61000 Ljubljana Yugoslavia), Trust in Crisis, International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 103-111

‡ Sports media & sports events often link countries, societies, & political systems. Thus, the mass media in sports must provide accurate information. Sportswriters should focus on the athlete as a creative individual, considering all his endeavors & human attributes. The ethics of journalism & other media information sources are discussed. 9 References. Modified HA

88T4032

Riordan, Jim (Modern Languages Center U Bradford, West Yorkshire BD7 1DP England), Soviet Muscular Socialism: A Durkheimian Analysis, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 4, Dec, 376-393

‡ As in the West, a sports ideology has developed in the USSR that cultivates irrational loyalties & ascribes similar prominence to the winning of victories, the setting of records, & the collection of trophies, & surrounds these created events with an aura characterized by what can only be termed bally-hoo. One compelling reason for this deliberate fetishism of sport would seem to be that sport has undoubtedly been seen as an eminently appropriate device to achieve certain key aims associated with the establishment & maintenance of a new social order. By its inherent qualities, sport has come closest to religious ritual in serving to provide what Emile Durkheim saw as the major functions of religion: cohesion, soliarity, integration, discipline, & emotional euphoria. 36 References. HA

88T4033

Rosecrance, John (Dept Criminal Justice U Nevada, Reno 89557), The Social World of Sports Betting, ARENA Review, 1987, 11, 1, May, 15-24.

‡ Fieldwork evidence is used to describe & analyze the social world of those who regularly wager on the outcome of sporting events. The Ss were self-acknowledged regulars who frequented Lake Tahoe, Nev, casinos 4-7 times a week. Their social world is described, providing insights into the popularity of sports betting & the persistence of its participants. 18 References. Modified AA

88T4034

Salminen, Simo (Dept Social Psychology U Helsinki, SF-00100 Finland), Relationships between Cohesion and Success in Ice Hockey Teams, Scandinavian Journal of Sport Sciences, 1987, 9, 1, Apr, 25-32

‡ The relationship between team cohesion & success is examined, based on the responses of 94 M ice hockey players, aged 16-20, on 5 teams in Helsinki, Finland, to 2 measures designed to assess cohesion: the Sport Cohesiveness Questionnaire, & an index of group cohesion based on mutual friendship choices. These two indicators of cohesion provide conflicting results, indicating that cohesion is not a one-dimensional construct. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 45 References. Modified HA

88T4035

Smith Garry J. (Dept Physical Education & Sports Studies U Alberta, Edmonton T6G 2F1), Gambling and Sport: The Canadian Experience, ARENA Review, 1987, 11, 1, May, 25-36.

‡ The relationship between gambling, sports, & public policy in Canada is discussed. It is argued that the problems associated with the Canadian government's Sport Select Baseball pool & Alberta's gaming policy, which subsidizes amateur sports, could be eliminated through legalized sports betting. Such an operation is described & its advantages & disadvantages are outlined. 12 References. D Graves

88T4036

Snyder, Eldon E. & Purdy, Dean A. (Dept Sociology Bowling Green State U, OH 43403), Social Control in Sport: An Analysis of Basketball Officiating, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 4, Dec, 394-402

‡ An analysis of data on referees regarding how they enforce rules & norms within the fluid context of basketball games. Quantitative data were collected from a survey of 689 high school basketball officials; additionally, qualitative data were gathered from the open-ended portions of the survey instrument & from participant observation & discussions with other officials. Three major themes emerged: the need to maintain control of the game, supplement the rules, & communicate decisions. The findings are related to other areas of social control in which the rule violator must be closely supervised by the rule enforcer. 21 References. Modified HA

88T4037

Teeter, Ruskin (North Texas State U, Denton 76203), Scientific Origins of Adolescent Sport, ♦ Adolescence, 1987, 22, 86, summer, 253-257

‡ The prominence of sport in the US secondary school curriculum owes much to nineteenth-century child development theories, the most prominent of which was formulated by Karl Ernst Von Baer, a Russian-born naturalist & early embryologist. Von Baer's Law held that youth passed through the same developmental gradations ontogenetically that the human race passed through phylogenetically, ie, they approximated the development from barbarity to civilization of the human race thousands of years earlier. Adolescents were thus considered to be at a primitive developmental level, & Von Baer's Law became a scientific rationale for sport in schools, particularly football, which was believed to mitigate against antisocial aggressiveness. 3 References. Modified HA

88T4038

Wagner, Eric A. (Ohio U, Athens 45701), Cuban Sports Magazines, ♦ UM Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 25-29.

‡ Two magazines popularize sports in Cuba & play an active role in government sport propaganda, encouraging the Cuban people to engage in physical exercise to improve their health, & attempting to get as many

69 sociology of sports

Atchewicz, Richard K. & McPhail, Thomas L. (Graduate Programme Communication Studies U Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4), Olympic Television Rights, International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 211-228.

¶ Since 1960, the escalation in the price of exclusive US TV rights for the Olympic Games reflects a geometric progression. The US rights for the 1988 Games alone total $609 million. Here, the scope & impact of US TV revenue on the Olympics is examined, with focus on: (1) the history of Olympic TV rights; (2) major factors implicated in the geometric expansion of US rights; (3) reaction of Olympic organizations in response to US TV revenue; & (4) evaluation of future Olympic TV rights on the basis of past & current trends. It is concluded that the fiscal picture surrounding the Games is in a state of major transition. 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T4020

Aversa, Alfred, Jr. (Fairleigh Dickinson U, Teaneck NJ 07666), Notes on Entry Routes into a Sport/Recreational Role: The Case of Sailing, Journal of Sport and Social Issues, 1986, 10, 2, summer-fall, 49-59.

¶ Interest & participation in sailing, a sport/recreational activity historically associated with the Ue, is on the rise, especially among newcomers from Mc backgrounds. An explanation for this rise is offered, & sociological questions are raised concerning the problems of attracting & socializing these newcomers to the world of sailing. Ideal-type descriptions of entry routes into sailing are presented, along with the implications for newcomers & for sailing itself. 28 References. AA

88T4021

Best, Clayton (10417 Brookmoor Dr, Silver Spring MD 20901), Experience and Career Length in Professional Football: The Effect of Positional Segregation, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 4, Dec, 410-420.

¶ Positional segregation is examined in light of recent data documenting the increased participation by black players in professional football, & the relationships between positional segregation & experience & positional segregation & career length are described. Official team press guides were used to gather information on 1,508 professional football players from the 1982 season, & the Official National Football League Encyclopedia of Pro Football (New York: New American Library, 1982) was used to gather data on a secondary sample of 1,371 former professional football players to study career length. The results indicate that positional segregation is still prevalent in professional football. The recent increase in participation by black players has occurred in positions that have been primarily black in the past & at linebacker. Whites are likely to have more experience in professional football than blacks, which is explained in part by the positions in which blacks & whites are most likely to play. 3 Tables, 24 References. HA

88T4022

Claeys, Urbain & Van Pelt, Herman (Dept Sociologie Katholieke U Leuven, B-3000 Belgium), Sport and the Mass Media: Like Bacon and Eggs, International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3, 95-101.

¶ Sport in various forms has become a major element of contemporary life, & a major focus of mass media attention. Sports & the mass media have become interdependent, forming a symbiotic relationship that has gained increasing attention from social science. Some questions for research are proposed in an introduction to this first theme issue of International Review for the Sociology of Sport (see abstracts of other articles in SA 36.2). W. H. Stoddard

88T4023

Coulter, B. Jerry (Queen's U, Kingston Ontario K7L 3N6), The Canadian Press and the Problem of Responsible Journalism: An Olympic Case Study, Journal of Sport and Social Issues, 1986, 10, 2, summer-fall, 27-47.

¶ An examination of Canadian newspaper coverage of the Olympic Games boycotts of 1976, 1980, & 1984, contrasting the coverage of a corporate-owned, business-dominated paper, & an independently owned & directed paper. Results indicate that the independent paper was more objective in its treatment of related stories, while the corporate-owned paper sought to adhere to the interests of the Canadian corporate elite. F. Rasmussen

88T4024

Cullen, Ross (Dept Economics U Otago, Box 56 Dunedin New Zealand), Expeditions, Efficiency, Ethics and the Environment, Leisure Studies, 1987, 6, 1, Jan, 41-53.

¶ The size & style of mountaineering expeditions can have considerable influence on the magnitude of the environmental degradation such expeditions impose. Mountaineering ethics, economic forces, & external pressures jointly determine expedition size & style. Data from 91 Mt. Everest expeditions conducted between 1921 & 1984 suggest their size peaked in the 1970s & has now shrunk to half their previous magnitude. A change in mountaineering ethics may have modified expedition size & style & reduced the environmental threat posed by increased numbers of expeditions. 2 Tables, 13 References. Modified HA

88T4025

D'Angelo, Raymond (Dept Social Sciences Saint Joseph's Coll, Brooklyn NY 11205), Sports Gambling and the Media, ARENA Review, 1987, 11, 1, May, 1-4.

¶ The mutually supportive relationship between sports gambling & the mass media in the US is discussed. The media provide information on sports events, including sports statistics, point spreads, & game odds. Newspapers are bought & TV is viewed by those desirous of this information. Sports gambling information services buy advertising in the media. While society labels gambling as deviant behavior & many forms of it are illegal, sports gambling is clearly culturally accepted & condoned, as evidenced by media support. 7 References. D. Graves

88T4026

Gallmeier, Charles P. (Dept Sociology California State U, Long Beach 90840), Putting on the Game Face: The Staging of Emotions in Professional Hockey, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 4, Dec, 347-362.

¶ Dramaturgical analysis was used in a participant observation study of the emotional performances of midwestern US professional hockey players before, during, & after games. The structure for the staging of these emotional displays is briefly described, but focus is on understanding the social processes involved in the mental or emotional preparation the players undergo in getting psyched up & "putting on the game face." The staging of emotions is seen to evolve from expectation for emotional experience, to diffuse emotional readiness, & finally to quite specific emotional displays. The staging of emotions is directed by socialization agents (ie, coach, trainer, teammates) who evoke rapidly shifting emotional expressions for each game day situation. 42 References. HA

88T4027

Howell, Frank M. & McKenzie, James A. (Social Science Research Center Mississippi State U, Mississippi State 39762), High School Athletics and Adult Sport-Leisure Activity: Gender Variations across the Life Cycle, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 4, Dec, 329-346.

¶ Using a structural equations model, the effect of high school sports participation on sport & leisure activity later in adulthood is examined. Also investigated is the process by which these effects are played out over the transition from adolescence to adulthood, as well as gender differences in the pattern of effects. Using data from the Explorations of Equality of Opportunity panel, conducted by the Educational Testing Service, of 1,955 1955 high school sophomores reinterviewed in 1970, it is found that varsity & nonvarsity sports participation in high school increases adult sports involvement. However, whereas high school sports participation does not retard reading or high-status leisure pursuits in adulthood, curriculum track placement during high school does enhance these activities later in life. Track effects are also largely independent of completed school level. Finally, gender variations in the model are present, but not uniformly so, & largely appear to make sport participation & tracking effects significant only among men. 8 Tables, 1 Figure, 18 References. Modified HA

0900 political interactions

11 interaction between societies, nations, & states

88T4040

Bell, Daniel (King's Coll U Cambridge, CB2 1ST England), The World and the United States in 2013, U Daedalus, 1987, 116, 3, summer, 1-31

† A social analysis of the world as it may be in the year 2013, with focus on the US. A structural perspective is used to outline four positive potential changes in the world society & international economy. (1) a shift to the Pacific Basin as a center of economic power; (2) a new international DoFL; (3) a third technological revolution, in which computers & telecommunications around the world will be joined; & (4) the new frontiers of space & biotechnology. Two negative "time bombs"—national political fragmentation & demographic age-cohort imbalances in different parts of the world—are also described. It is argued that the resource problems of food, water, & energy are more economic & political management issues than matters of increasing resource scarcity. The US is in an extremely vulnerable position, tentative projections for changes in its economy, political administrative-management structure, demographics, & family & SC structure are detailed. Suggestions for achieving synchronicity in economic, social, & political institutions on the domestic & international levels are offered. K. Hyatt

88T4041

Bruce, Robert H., Homophily and Heterophily in Counterpart Evaluation of Foreign Advisors: A Case Study of the Relative Importance of Occupation and Culture, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 3-4, July-Oct, 199-211

† The extent to which homophily & heterophily—the degree to which pairs of interacting individuals are similar or different, respectively, in certain attributes, eg, values, attitudes, education, status—are influential in shaping the quality of the relationships between foreign advisors & their counterparts in the country to which they are assigned. A case study of the US police assistance program in Indonesia that operated between 1954 & 1964 is presented to illustrate how foreign advisors erred in assuming that occupational similarities (homophily) would be able to overcome cultural differences (heterophily). Interviews with US officials & program advisors & their Indonesian counterparts (N not provided) revealed that, contrary to the US police advisors' assessment of their relationships, the Indonesian police had largely negative opinions of them & of the entire experience. K. Hyatt

88T4042

Chebat, Jean-Charles & Zuccaro, Cataldo (U Quebec, Montreal H3C 3P8), Proposition méthodologique pour mesurer les perceptions internationales (Proposed Methodology for Measuring International Perceptions), Recherches Sociologiques, 1987, 18, 3, 209-229 (FRE)

† A detailed description of the development & validation of semantic differential scales suitable for measuring individuals' perceptions of foreign countries. A technique for generating & defining meaningful such scales is also presented, as is a procedure for estimating the validity & reliability of the tool of measurement. Ss (N = 100) were English-speaking Canadians, the stimuli were 10 countries selected for their political, economic, & social heterogeneity: the US, Japan, India, Cuba, GB, the USSR, Haiti, Switzerland, Italy, & Canada. Ss were asked to write a word or phrase associated with each country, & a brief descriptive paragraph of each. Linguistic contrasts were determined based on J. Deese's procedure (The Structure of Associations in Language and Thought, Baltimore, Md: John Hopkins, 1965). To check reliability, a second test was administered 2 weeks later. The methods of testing validity are described, as are the factorial & multidimensional analyses. This procedure can be useful for developing reliable scales for measuring intercultural perception. 2 Appendixes, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4043

Elder, Glen H., Jr. (U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), War Mobilization and the Life Course: A Cohort of World War II Veterans, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 3, summer, 449-472.

† Analysis of archival data on a cohort of WWII veterans (N = 83) confirms the proposition that entry into the armed forces at a relatively early age maximized discontinuity & facilitated a redirection of the life course through psychological development, a delayed entry into family roles, & greater advancement opportunity. Results also show that, by comparison, later entry into the service favored greater risk of family & career disruption within a pattern of life continuity from adolescence to the middle years. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 29 References. Modified HA

88T4044

Helkama, Klaus, Salminen, Simo & Uutela, Antti (Dept Social Psychology U Helsinki, SF-00100 Finland), A World at Peace as a Personal Value in Finland: Its Relationship to Demographic Characteristics, Political Identification and Type of Moral Reasoning, Current Research on Peace and Violence, 1987, 10, 2-3, 113-123

† A report on 3 Finnish studies that used the Rokeach Value Survey to assess the relative importance of the value, "a world at peace, free of war & conflict" (The Nature of Human Values, New York: Free Press, 1973). (1) a national survey (N = 1,011); (2) a community study of 2 samples (N = 82 & 182) representative of Ru southern Finland, & (3) a U student sample (N = 260) from Helsinki. The relationship between world peace & type of moral reasoning was examined. A tentative conclusion is that, at present, world peace is perceived as an important political value by the Finnish population; in addition, in line with findings from other research, Ss perceive world peace as a major moral issue as well. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 31 References. Modified AA

88T4045

Hoogvelt, Ankie (Dept Sociological Studies U Sheffield, S10 2TN England), IMF Crime in Conditionality: An Open Letter to the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund, Monthly Review, 1987, 39, 1, May, 23-32.

† A critical account of the SE devastation wrought by the recent intervention of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) in Sierra Leone. As a result of two decades of mismanagement & theft perpetrated by the regime of President Siaka Stevens & a small group of wealthy diamond dealers & merchants, the national debt of Sierra Leone had by July 1986 reached crisis proportions. In order to qualify for a modest standby loan & Structural Adjustment Facility, plus the IMF imprimatur that would release further commercial lending, the new government of President Momoh has had to agree to a set of liberalization policies including an effective devaluation of the currency by 80% in six months & withdrawal of subsidies on rice & petrol that have caused immediate starvation & economic chaos. Besides making the masses pay for the debts incurred by the rich, the IMF textbook economic policies are demonstrated to be wholly unsuitable in small developing countries. Two alternative policies are briefly indicated. 2 Tables. AA

88T4046

Kriesberg, Louis (Syracuse U, NY 13210), Carrots, Sticks, De-escalation: U.S.-Soviet and Arab-Israeli Relations, U Armed Forces and Society, 1987, 13, 3, spring, 403-423

† Various efforts to initiate & negotiate de-escalating agreements in the US-Soviet & Arab-Israeli conflicts are examined. Theoretical approaches regarding the role of noncoercive & coercive inducements are compared & applied to the cases. Six generalizations are inferred from the analysis: (1) noncoercive inducements are particularly useful in initiating de-escalation; (2) positive sanctions are more likely to be effective if preceded by communications about them; (3) major de-escalating gestures are difficult to make at the initiation of de-escalation because of constituency concerns; (4) both consistency & persistence are important in the effectiveness of de-escalation efforts; (5) positive sanctions are more easily made in the negotiation rather than initiating stage & are relatively frequent then, & (6) sequencing of coercive & noncoercive inducements is important for effective de-escalation. 1 Table. HA

88T4047

Swedberg, Richard (Dept Sociology Stockholm U, S-106 93 Sweden), The Impact of an Exogenous Event: The Oil Shocks, the Private Banks and the Origin of the Debt Crisis, U International Social people involved in sport activities as possible. A content analysis of articles from one of these, Semanario Deportivo LPV, & data from interviews with 105 Cubans in 1981 illustrate the Cuban effort to push both youths & adults toward physical education & sports, as well as to gain international recognition & prestige via sports. 1 Table, 4 References Modified HA

88T4039

Wels, Kurt (Institut Sozialwissenschaften Technische U Munchen, Lothstr 17 D-8000 2 Federal Republic of Germany), How the Print Media Affect Sports and Violence: The Problems of Sport Journalism, International Review for the Sociology of Sport, 1986, 21, 2-3 239-252.

1 The low prestige & the great influence of sport journalists are discussed, based on a review of the literature on sports & sport violence in the print media. It is argued that the search for profit-increasing captions & texts leads to overemphasis of the unusual & scandalous. Unfairness & aggressiveness on the part of successful athletes, as well as spectator violence, are accentuated & appear normal. Thus, reporting reflects a development to which it itself contributed. 27 References. Modified HA

Journal of LAW AND SOCIETY

Edited by P. A. Thomas

The Journal of Law and Society is now established as the leading British periodical devoted to the study of the interaction of law with other social forces in the UK and Europe. In providing a platform for the discussion of law on an interdisciplinary basis within the social sciences, the Journal has attracted a wide and diverse readership.

14:1 is a special issue on 'Critical Legal Studies' and contains the following articles:

Feminism and critical legal theory

ANNE BOTTOMLEY, SUSIE GIBSON and BELINDA METEYARD

The critical resources of established jurisprudence

PAUL HIRST

What is critical about legal theory?

ALAN HUNT

Privacy, solidarity and individualism

HUGH COLLINS

Law and Racism

PETER FITZPATRICK

Women in confinement: can Labour law deliver the goods?

JOANNE CONAGHAN and LOUISE CHUDLEIGH

Journal of Law and Society is published in March, June, September, December

Subscription Rates Volume 14, 1987

Individuals: £18 (UK) £22.50 (overseas) US$36 (N. America + Japan)

Institutions: £53 (UK) £66 (overseas) US$99 (N. America + Japan)

☐ Please enter my subscription to Journal of Law and Society/send me a sample copy

☐ I enclose cheque/money order made payable to Basil Blackwell

☐ Please charge my Access/American Express/Barclaycard/Diners Club/Mastercharge/Visa account number:

..... Signature

Card expiry date

☐ For payments via the National Giro Bank, the Basil Blackwell account number is 236 6053

Address

If address registered with card company differs from above, please give details.
Please return this form together with your payment if applicable to:

Basil Blackwell • Journals Subscription Dept.,
108 Cowley Road, Oxford OX4 1JF, UK, or, Journals Dept., Box 1320, Murray Hill Station, NY 10156, USA.

in the province of Brabant (Netherlands), & Norbert Elias's ideas on civilization & state formation, as expressed in The Civilizing Process (See IRPS No 15/83c00199 & 83c00200), a model for studying the mutual conditioning of processes of power & meaning is developed. Religious regimes & states have much in common, but also remarkable differences. Systematic comparison of them may improve insight into the interrelationship of fields of inquiry that have drifted apart. 28 References. Modified HA

88T4057

Beltrán, Virgilio R. (Instit Torcuato Tella, Buenos Aires Argentina), Political Transition in Argentina: 1982 to 1985, UM Armed Forces and Society, 1987, 13, 2, winter, 215-233

¶ An examination of the 1983 transition in Argentina from military to civilian government & of the possibilities for competing party politics that resulted. The change was distinctive in several ways: the swift collapse of the military regime, the military's political bankruptcy when the regime fell, & the unresolved dilemma of the fight against terrorism. The general tendency now visible appears to be toward a more modernized society. Modified HA

88T4058

Berberoglu, Berch (U Nevada, Reno 89557), The Class Nature of the State in Peru, 1968-75, UM International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 407-413

¶ An examination of the class nature of the state in Peru from the military coup of 1968 to its overthrow in 1975. It is argued that the primary objective of the coup was to prevent a mass-based popular revolution & the establishment of socialism in Peru at a time of heightened radicalism among the masses. Despite the mildly "nationalistic" policies of the regime, promulgated largely for rallying public support in its favor, the Junta, by remaining within the capitalist mold, came to play a legitimizing role, setting the stage for a further move to the imperial orbit in the period following its overthrow in 1975. These developments have further worsened the condition of the Wc & the peasantry, who have come to bear the brunt of the new regime's neocolonial, pro-imperialist "modernization" policies. AA

88T4059

Bergeron, Gérard (Ecole nationale administration publique, 945 rue Wolfe Sainte-Foy Quebec Quebec G1V 3J9), Le Point de vue de l'auteur: sur deux récentes critiques (The Author's Point of View Concerning Two Recent Critiques), ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 1, 89-111 (FRE)

Reply, 113-115

¶ A response to two critiques of Gérard Bergeron's Pratique de l'Etat au Québec ((The Practice of the State in Quebec), Montreal Quebec/Amérique, 1984). (1) Guy Laforest, "Penser l'état: Gérard Bergeron, un Aufklärer québécois" ((To Conceive the State: Gerard Bergeron, a Quebec "Enlightener"), Politique, 1986, 9, winter, 147-166), & (2) Gilles Gagné, "Gérard Bergeron et la théorie de l'état" ((Gérard Bergeron and the Theory of the State), see SA 34 2/86Q4792). Laforest accuses Bergeron of prejudice in favor of political modernization & representative democracy, however, Bergeron writes as an analyst of change, not as a reformer, his main concern being to avoid the accepted, simplistic dichotomy: citizen/power. Gagné attempts to trace the development of Bergeron's political theory, but his work is full of misunderstandings & erroneous judgments. In Le Point de vue du critique sur la réplique de son auteur (The Point of View of the Critic Concerning His Author's Reply), Gilles Gagné (U of Laval, Quebec) is not disturbed to have been somewhat ridiculed by Bergeron, but notes that Bergeron did not address the main issue. Gagné's contention that the state is the modern form of political relations, ie, relations of domination, & that the theory of the state is therefore not political theory but the analysis of the historical form. C. Waters

88T4060

Blackbourn, David (Birkbeck Coll U London, WC1E 7HX England), The Politics of Demagoguery in Imperial Germany, Past and Present, 1986, 113, Nov, 152-184.

¶ One of the characteristics of demagoguery is its need largely to reflect existing popular concerns & interests. A review of nineteenth- & early twentieth-century German history reveals this pattern. The tendencies that emerged out of the newly created mass politics of Imperial Germany were reflected subsequently in the Weimar Republic, by the Nazis & others. W. H. Stoddard

88T4061

Blais, André & Crête, Jean (Dept science politique U Montreal, Quebec H3C 3J7), Les Ménages et le vote (Households and the Vote), ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 393-405 (FRE)

¶ The impact of the family or spouse on an individual's voting decision was studied using the case of the Dec 1985 election in Quebec. A random sample of francophones (N = 1,843) was interviewed by telephone about their vote, residential location, age, birthplace, marital status, bilingualism, religious practices, education, sex, income, occupation, union experience, & unemployment. It was found that the spouse's characteristics bore nearly as much weight as the R's in voting behavior, the couple tended to vote similarly. This effect was magnified in single-income families. 6 Tables, 15 References. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T4062

Boussard, Isabel (Fondation nationale sciences politiques Centre étude vie politique française, 187 bdv Saint-Germain F-75007 Paris), Le Poids politique des agriculteurs dans la société française: discours politique et opinion publique (The Political Weight of Farmers in French Society: Political Discourse and Public Opinion), ♦ UM Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 4, 495-516 (FRE)

¶ The political importance of French farmers is illustrated through political speeches & newspaper articles showing the favorable attention they receive from politicians. Farmers are becoming better represented in local politics & the National Assembly & succeed in attracting attention when necessary. PO is sympathetic & receptive to the needs of farmers, as should be the case in a profession so essential to a nation. 2 Tables. Modified HA

88T4063

Brooks, Joel E. (Illinois State U, Normal 61761), The Opinion-Policy Nexus in France: Do Institutions and Ideology Make a Difference?, UM Journal of Politics, 1987, 49, 2, May, 465-480.

¶ A previously unutilized perspective—the opinion-policy relationship—is used to analyze empirically two issues at the heart of postwar French politics: the significance of institutional differences between the Fourth & Fifth Republics, & the importance of ideological changes from non-Socialist Party (SP) to recent SP rule. The relationships between mass public policy (as evidenced in historical records) in 256 cases in France from 1946 to 1984 are quantified. Consistency levels between majority preferences & government policy are compared & analyzed in five areas: (1) Fourth vs Fifth Republic periods, (2) SP vs non-SP rule; (3) landslide vs slim majority cases, (4) redistributive vs nonredistributive issues, & (5) domestic vs foreign policy issues. 13 Tables, 38 References. Modified HA

88T4064

Brunk, Gregory G., Caldeira, Gregory A. & Lewis-Beck, Michael S. (U Oklahoma, Norman 73069), Capitalism, Socialism, and Democracy: An Empirical Inquiry, European Journal of Political Research, 1987, 15, 4, 459-470

¶ Some prominent economists have argued that the structure of a nation's economic life—capitalist or socialist—helps to shape its political institutions, yet this notion has not been integrated into the literature of empirical democratic theory. Drawing on previous work & the theoretical literature, four propositions are formulated about the relationship between economic structure & political democracy: the classical liberal, Marxist, apolitical, & mixed economy models. The last model receives the most support, for it is concluded that economic structure does mold political forms, though not in a simple, linear fashion. In addition, this relationship survives & flourishes in the face of extensive challenges. The implication is that democratic political practice reaches a maximum under moderate amounts of public direction of economic affairs, but suffers at the extremes of both unfettered capitalism & socialism. 32 References. Modified HA

88T4065

Calderón G., Fernando & dos Santos, Mario R., Lo político y lo social: bifurcación o síntesis en la crisis (The Political and the Social: Dichotomy or Synthesis in the Crisis), ♦ UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 163-174. (SPA)

¶ Problems of articulation between social democracy & political democracy have been traditional in Latin America, both in the sociohistorical process & in theoretical & ideological analysis. This has had the unfortunate consequence of undermining democracy as a societal project. The Science Journal, 1987, 39, 3(113), Aug, 323-335.

¶ Focus is on the way oil shocks affected the lending behavior of private banks between 1974 & 1982. During this period the preconditions for the debt crisis were created, mainly through the emergence of the modern financial market. The impact that the oil shocks came to have on this modern financial market is analyzed with the help of the theories of Hyman P. Minsky (Can 'It' Happen Again?, New York, 1982). According to this economist, an outside or exogenous factor may, under certain circumstances, work as a kind of detonator, setting off a process of speculation. The need for more regulation of international banking is underlined if the modern financial market is not regulated, speculative & destabilizing behavior is likely to occur again soon. 2 Tables, 3 Photographs, 28 References. AA

88T4048

Tan, Alexis S., Tan, Gerdean K. & Tan, Alma S. (Dept Communication Washington State U, Pullman 99164), American TV in the Philippines: A Test of Cultural Impact, UM Journalism Quarterly, 1987, 64, 1, spring, 65-72, 144

¶ Questionnaire data from Philippine high school seniors (N = 225) are analyzed to assess the cultural impact of US TV program viewing. Typical Rs considered salvation, wisdom, & forgiving to be important values, however, frequent viewers of US TV programs that do not emphasize these values considered them to be less important than infrequent viewers. Results indicate that frequent TV viewing is associated with some erosion of traditional Filipino values in this sample. 7 Tables. F. Rasmussen

88T4049

Tan, Ngho Tiong (School Social Work U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), A Conceptual Model for Peace through Constructive Conflict Resolution, Social Development Issues, 1986, 10, 3, winter, 46-53

¶ Conflict is not only pervasive & universal, it is also energizing & an impetus for social change. Peace is thus not the absence of conflict, but the management of conflict toward constructive ends. A generic model of the conflict resolution process is outlined in seven stages. The principles of conflict resolution in each of these stages are examined. Constructive resolution involves redistributing resources, restructuring power, & meeting needs. This contributes to social justice & equity, conditions necessary for peace. 30 References. HA

88T4050

Villa Aguilera, Manuel (Colegio México, 10740 Mexico DF), La Forma intervencionista del Estado en América Latina: análisis de la categoría y del proceso (The Interventionist Form of the State in Latin America: Analysis of the Category and the Process), UM Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 2, Apr-June, 145-163 (SPA)

¶ An alternative approach is proposed for analyzing the phenomenon of the state, avoiding excessive generalization & abstraction. The category of "form of state" is used to identify historical periods with corresponding economic stages: liberal, interventionist, & neoliberal. The historical relationship between economics & politics is disentangled in order to analyze what is specifically political: the institutional regime. The category of form of state makes it possible to distinguish economic, contextual factors (the phase of capitalism), general political factors (the phase of the nation state), & specific historical factors (the institutional regime of participation & control). A review of theoretical works on the state & political regimes compares Argentina, Brazil, Peru, & Mexico from 1929—the beginning of the interventionist phase—to 1975—the approximate date of the crisis that began the transition to neoliberalism. The similarities & differences of state intervention in each country are examined, & a theoretical & historical framework is proposed for the phenomenon of the state in Latin America, at least for the more developed countries. AA. Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T4051

Walker, Robert B. J. (Dept Political Science U Victoria, British Columbia V8W 2Y2), Culture, Discourse, Insecurity, Current Research on Peace and Violence, 1987, 10, 1, 50-65

¶ An examination of a variety of approaches to the relationship between culture & contemporary military processes. The importance of three main areas of research are emphasized, i.e. militarization & (1) cultural production, (2) the contradictions of modernity, & (3) the cultural practices of everyday life. Each of these is examined in terms of research on militarization & language/discourse. Implications of research on culture, discourse, & insecurity for recent thinking about political practice, political community, & human identity are outlined. 96 References. AA

25 political sociology

88T4052

Aase, Asbjørn (Geografisk instit U Trondheim, N-7000 Norway), Velferd i forandring (Welfare in a State of Change), Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 3, 281-289 (NOR)

¶ A review essay on R. Erickson's & R. Åberg's Valfard i forandring. Levnadsvillkor i Sverige 1968-1981, ([Welfare in a State of Change: Living Conditions in Sweden, 1968-1981], Stockholm: Bokforlaget Prisma i samarbeide med Instit for social forskning, 1984), & Erik Jørgen Hansen's Danskernes levkår 1986 sammenholdt med 1976, ([The Danes' Living Conditions 1986 Compared with 1976], København: Hans Reitzels forlag, 1986 [see listings in IRPS No. 42]). These works describe changes in welfare in Sweden between 1968 & 1981 & in Denmark between 1976 & 1986, respectively. Both provide clear evidence of improvements in many fields of well-being, & some trends toward a general decrease in social inequality are suggested. Ways that the Norwegian tradition of welfare research can contribute to a dynamic welfare analysis are discussed along with some recommendations as to how this research might be strengthened to become more relevant to planning. 9 References. Modified HA

88T4053

Alestalo, Marja (Dept Sociology U Helsinki, SF-00100 Finland), Uses of Science and the Structures of Political Decision-Making, Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 123-139

¶ A revised version of SA 34:3/86SI7578/ISA/1986/4159.

88T4054

Angelusz, Róbert, A közgazdászok és a reform (Economists and Reform), Társadalomkutatás, 1987, 2, 5-27 (HUN)

¶ A survey of Hungarian economists (N not provided) working in industrial firms, research institutes, & governmental agencies reveals heterogeneous attitudes toward reform processes. Occupational group explains much of the diversity in attitudes, with economists doing theoretical work being the strongest supporters of reform, young economists are more favorable to reform than older economists, & workplace status, party membership, & participation in the second economy are also relevant. A distinction is made between global reform, radical reform, gradual reform, & nonreform, & characteristics typical of each type are described. 5 Tables. Modified HA

88T4055

Barnett, Larry D. (School Law Widener U, Wilmington DE 19803-0474), The Constitution and Governmental Response to Declining Population in the United States: A Macro-Sociological Perspective, Whittier Law Review, 1987, 8, 993-1007

¶ A discussion of constitutional issues likely to arise if Congress enacts measures to counter the declining population trend in the US. Three possible federal policies are examined: to increase fertility by requiring employers to provide paid maternity (but not paternity) leave; to promote births within marriage & deter illegitimacy; & to encourage migration to areas having insufficient inhabitants for the cost-efficient operation of public services. It is emphasized that legal thought stems from social structure & values, a thesis that has been neglected in social science & legal research. A/P

88T4056

Bax, Mart (Free U, NL-1007 MC Amsterdam Netherlands), Religious Regimes and State Formation: Towards a Research Perspective, Anthropological Quarterly, 1987, 60, 1, Jan, 1-11.

¶ Many sociological & anthropological studies present systems of meaning sui generis, with no mention of the power processes that generate & change them. Using data from a case study of Roman Catholic expansion

International Yearbook of Organizational Democracy, Vol. II: International Perspectives on Organizational Democracy (Chichester: John Wiley, 1984 (see listing in IRPS No. 42)). This volume contributes to the assessment of prominent models & transnational developments in the field of organizational democracy. It contains useful evaluations of experiments & achievements to date, & provides insights into the important facilitating mechanisms that have come about through international agencies & organizations. Deficiencies in the work are identified as future challenges for the field. 23 References. F. Rasmussen

88T4075

DiTella, Torcuato S. (Instit Sociologia U Buenos Aires, Argentina), Las huelgas en la minería mexicana, 1826-1828 (The Strikes in the Mexican Mining Industry, 1826-1828), Desarrollo Económico, 1987, 26, 104, Jan-Mar, 579-608. (SPA)

¶ An investigation of a period of tension in Mexican society: the 1820s, after the expulsion of the Spanish colonialists. A sudden influx of capital from GB reactivated the mining industry & greatly increased the demand for labor; at the same time, the lives of the workers changed, as large numbers of them shifted from place to place in search of work. This volatile situation gave rise to several major strikes in 1826-1828, which were marked by violence & repression as well as negotiation. The accompanying political conflict ended with the installation of the government of Vicente Guerrero, a popular hero of the revolution. A detailed description of the strikes highlights their connections with the national political context, contributing to the understanding of the political system of the time, not only in Mexico but also in other Latin American countries. Modified HA

88T4076

Downs, Anthony (Brookings Instit, 1775 Massachusetts Ave NW Washington DC 20036), The Evolution of Democracy: How Its Axioms and Institutional Forms Have Been Adapted to Changing Social Forces, WM Daedalus, 1987, 116, 3, summer, 119-148

¶ It is argued that most major democracies in existence for 100+ years, though differing in the historical processes through which they were established & in their underlying societal traits, share a similar evolution in their interpretations of democracy's three primary axioms—individual liberty, equality, & citizen participation in government. Ambiguities in the meanings of each axiom, ongoing interactions between axioms, & changes in social conditions are argued to be responsible for this evolution. Two prototypes of democracy are identified—the majoritarian & consensual models—and it is shown how their differing political institutional structures are related to underlying social & cultural conditions that, in turn, shape how these axioms are interpreted. Arendt Lijphart's classification of 21 stable democracies (Democracies: Patterns of Majoritarian and Consensus Government in Twenty-One Countries, New Haven: Yale U Press, 1984) is reanalyzed in terms of these ideal prototypes, most are found to mix traits of each. It is concluded that democracy has survived due to its flexibility regarding these primary axioms & capability of designing specific institutional forms that are adaptive to a particular society's social & geographic conditions. 1 Table. K. Hyatt

88T4077

Elvin, Mark (Saint Anthony's Coll U Oxford, OX2 6JF England), A Working Definition of "Modernity"?, Past and Present, 1986, 113, Nov, 209-213.

¶ The problem of defining modernity—puzzling to historians of Europe—is explored from the perspective of a historian of East Asia. What is most distinctive about Europe from this perspective is its capacity to create power: power over other human beings, practical power over nature through economic production, & intellectual power over nature through prediction. Modern societies can thus be defined as those where this power complex is unusually dominant. It can also then be recognized that Western Europe & the US are not entirely modern. W. H. Stoddard

88T4078

Etzioni, Amital (George Washington U, Washington DC 20052), Does Regulation Reduce Electricity Rates? A Research Note, Policy Sciences, 1986, 19, 4, Dec, 349-357.

¶ A reassessment of George J. Stigler's & Claire Friedland's original data from their influential study of the effects of regulation on US electricity rates in the early 1900s ("What Can Regulators Regulate? The Case of Electricity," Journal of Law & Economics, 1962, 5, Oct, 1-16). Whereas Stigler & Friedland contended that the economic effects of regulation serve those regulated regardless of the statutory characteristics of the regulations, a critical look at their data suggests the regulations studied did have their intended effect & served the public interest. 4 Tables, 8 References. Modified HA

88T4079

Finkel, Steven E. (U Virginia, Charlottesville 22903), The Effects of Participation on Political Efficacy and Political Support: Evidence from a West German Panel, WM Journal of Politics, 1987, 49, 2, May, 441-464.

¶ An exploration of the effects of four modes of political participation—voting, campaigning, peaceful protest, & aggressive behavior—on two fundamental attitudes—political efficacy & regime support. Theories of democratic participation argue that positive effects should be seen for at least the first three modes, while little is known about the effects of political violence. A reanalysis of longitudinal interview data collected during a panel study in the mid-1970s in West Germany from 1,261 Rs (see Muller, Edward N., Aggressive Political Participation, Princeton, NJ: Princeton U Press, 1979) reveals that these modes of participation have vastly different effects on these political orientations. Voting is found to influence regime support in a positive fashion, while campaign activities influence feelings of political efficacy. Peaceful protest has little effect on either attitude, & aggressive behavior has strong negative effects on regime support. The results are discussed in light of theories of democracy that predict developmental effects of political activity, & in light of previous research investigating these effects in other countries & other contexts. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 38 References. Modified HA

88T4080

Freeman, Olivier (Instit Science Politique U Lausanne, CH-1003 Switzerland), Democratie et humanitarisme dans la politique d'asile suisse: essai d'analyse de l'opération "Automne noir" (Democratism and Humanitarianism in Policies concerning Asylum in Switzerland: An Analysis of the Operation "Black Autumn"), Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Soziologie/Revue Suisse de sociologie, 1987, 13, 2, Oct, 217-238. (FRE)

¶ Switzerland's restrictive policy toward those asking for asylum is examined by analyzing the Nov 1985 expulsion of 59 African nationals (operation "Black Autumn") & the official speeches accompanying this incident. The Swiss state is characterized by two interacting concepts: democratism, which considers the authorities as direct representatives of the people; & humanitarianism, which considers the state as guarantor of humanitarian principles such as arose from the French Revolution, & stated in the Universal Declaration of the Rights of Man. It is argued that the Black Autumn incident was an arbitrary decision to dissuade future asylum requests, an action contradictory to the rhetoric of democratic & humanitarian values allegedly held by the Swiss state. 19 References. Modified HA

88T4081

Freymer, Robert H. (Dept Sociology Presbyterian Coll, Clinton SC 29325), The Social and Demographic Characteristics of Southern Politicians, Sociological Spectrum, 1987, 7, 4, 347-366.

¶ The once solidly Democratic South no longer exists. In recent years the Republican Party has made substantial gains in the South, particularly in elections for national offices. Data collected from US Congressional directories are used to examine the differences in the social & demographic characteristics of Republican & Democratic senators & representatives elected from southern states between 1960 & 1980. Republican members of Congress are more likely to come from border states, those with some Republican tradition, & states receiving larger numbers of immigrants. Further, elected Republicans are more likely to have been born & educated outside the South & tend to have higher SS than the southern Democrats elected to Congress. 5 Tables, 25 References. HA

88T4082

Fukurai, Hiroshi, Butler, Edgar W. & Huebner-Dimitrius, Jo-Ellan (U California, Berkeley 94720), Spatial and Racial Imbalances in Voter Registration and Jury Selection, WM Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 33-38.

¶ Maps are presented showing spatial & racial imbalances in voter registration in Los Angeles, Calif, an important factor in jury selection for the Los Angeles County Superior Court districts. Contour mapping with statistical analysis indicates that particular neighborhoods need special attention in order to rectify nonrepresentative jury selection procedures as well as imbalances in voter registrations. 1 Table, 4 Maps. HA sociopolitical & economic factors contributing to the current state of crisis are discussed, with particular reference to Argentina & Bolivia. The authoritarian role of the state & the fragmentation of collective social action are discussed. The necessity of visualizing a new foundation for political practice & analysis, so that democracy can be recreated, is explored. C. Waters

88T4066

Caraley, Demetrios & Schluskel, Yvette R. (Barnard Coll, New York NY 10027), Congress and Reagan's New Federalism, UM Publius, 1986, 16, 1, winter, 49-79

¶ The Congressional response to the Reagan administration's New Federalism proposals is analyzed in terms of party, region, & constituency during President Reagan's first term. While the Ninety-Seventh Congress approved various spending cuts in grants to local & state governments & in means-tested benefit programs to the poor, it is shown that even in 1981, when New Federalism initiatives enjoyed the most success, Congress terminated only one program. Comprehensive Employment & Training Act public service jobs. A stalemate developed in 1982 with the Ninety-Eighth Congress: the Reagan administration & Congressional Republicans could not impose further major spending cuts or program terminations, & Congressional Democrats could not restore the 1981 cuts or add new aid programs. Although the stalemate continued on New Federalism's dismantling of aid programs as a grand scheme even after President Reagan's 1984 reelection, Congress continued to approve incremental cuts in overall spending. The $200 billion budget deficit remains as a lever to force even greater cuts & program terminations in the years ahead. 5 Figures. HA

88T4067

Carbó, Teresa, ¿Cómo habla el poder legislativo en México? (How Does Legislative Power Speak in Mexico?), UM Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 2, Apr-June, 165-180 (SPA)

¶ A revised version of a contribution to a colloquium on "Orwell & the Question of Language" organized by the journal Langage et Société in Paris, France, Nov 1984. The special characteristics of the discourse of parliamentary debate in Mexico are analyzed. It is argued that there are severe limitations on this type of discourse, corresponding to the restrictions that oppress minority groups, & that these are almost impossible to overcome unless the norms that regulate the production of such discourse are violated. These conclusions are based on experience in working with parliamentary materials, & a detailed analysis of the Reglamento de Sesiones, the official rules of procedure of the Mexican congress. 1 Appendix, 4 References. C. Waters

88T4068

Carvajal, Manuel J. & Jorge, Antonio (Dept Economics Florida International U, Miami 33199), Dependency, Revolution, and Sociopolitical Change in Latin America: An Attempt at Non-Marxian Dialectics, UM International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 19-50

¶ The recent proliferation of Latin American dependency paradigm proponents responds to the inadequacy of neoclassical gradualist or incrementalist theories to cope with increasing anomalies in the fields of economic, social, & political development. The theoretical foundations of neoclassicism, the rise & nature of dependency arguments, & speculation regarding the essence of the emerging whole in which both opposites are reconciled are analyzed. Comparative advantage, unequal exchange, & the role of the UN's Economic Commission for Latin America within the Latin American context of the last quarter century are examined along with the initial impact of the new international economic order as a vehicle of St: & political change. 113 References. HA

88T4069

Clark, Roger D. (Dept Sociology Rhode Island Coll, Providence 02908), World-System Position, Economic Development, and Urban Primacy: A Cross-National Study, UM International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 1-17

Theoretical & empirical support for the hypothesis that a nation's position in the world system affects its level of Ur primacy are examined via review of the literature. Dependency theory yields an expectation that position of dependency in the world economy is likely to inhibit normal processes of Ur decentralization & to be reflected in the disproportionate size of a single primate city. Cross-sectional & longitudinal analyses of UN statistics on 101 countries demonstrate the positive influence of peripheral & semiperipheral positions on Ur primacy, even with economic development controlled; with world position controlled, there is a negative association between economic development & Ur primacy. 3 Tables, 39 References. HA

88T4070

Colley, Linda (Yale U, New Haven CT 06520), Whose Nation? Class and National Consciousness in Britain 1750-1830, Past and Present, 1986, 113, Nov, 97-117

¶ Recent historians of GB have emphasized SC & ethnic & other divisions, often to such an extent as to fail to give sufficient weight to the early attainment of national unity. In fact, historical events of the period 1750-1830 produced a substantial national consciousness, supported by war, improved communication, & population growth & the consequent age structure changes. At the same time, there were no official cults of heroes & few institutional measures to promote national consciousness; the Church of England was the primary institutional support of nationalism. Nationalism was viewed with suspicion by the elites, while radicals frequently used the language of patriotism—often finding themselves constrained by it as a result. W. H. Stoddard

88T4071

Colwill, Jeremy, Politics, Social Policy and the State: The Reform of Workers' Compensation in the U.K., International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 3, Aug, 281-308

¶ The period immediately after WWII in the UK saw a massive expansion of the welfare state. One part of this expansion was the creation of a reformed system of workmen's compensation. The details of the process by which this reform was formulated are explored historically from a political economy perspective that emphasizes the question of the extent to which the state forms an arena for SC conflict. 10 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4072

Coulomb, Pierre & Delorme, Hélène (INRA-Economic & sociologie rurales, 6 passage Tenaille F-75014 Paris France), Crise agricole, crise de politique (Agricultural Crisis, Political Crisis), UM Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 4, 385-413 (FRE)

¶ French farm policy since the 1960s is analyzed, including its linkage to European Economic Community (EEC) agricultural policy for cereals & livestock, & the crisis & policies provoking strife among French farmer associations & unions are examined. Partly due to monetary problems, French farmers benefit less than northern Europeans from EEC agricultural policy, having been led by means of subsidies since 1980 to support revenues rather than investments. The result is a destabilization of foreign trade. Issues are raised concerning the distribution of decreasing funds for economic support, restrictions placed on production, & the feasibility of continuing to farm. The variety of positions adopted by farmers' unions on these yet unsettled issues shows both social heterogeneity of farmers & regional variations. Modified HA

88T4073

Curtice, John (Dept Political Theory & Institutions U Liverpool, L69 3BX England), Must Labour Lose?, UM New Society, 1987, 80, 1277, 19 June, 17-19

¶ The British Labour party suffered its third serious election defeat in a row in the 1987 general election. While it gained ground in Scotland & northern England, it made little progress in the booming South. It is discussed whether the election results mean that social change has made it impossible for Labour to win another election. Postelection PO poll data are examined, with particular attention to geographical variation in the election results. It is argued that it is virtually inconceivable that Labour could win an overall majority at a future election, but that the Conservatives could well lose theirs, on the basis that although the Wc is contracting, social attitudes have moved to the Left since 1983. Although the Conservative success was founded on the prosperity of certain sections of society, this was not brought about by a process of embourgeoisement but, rather, represents a short-term endorsement of the government's successful handling of the economy. AA

88T4074

Deutsch, Steven, Van Houten, Donald, Goldman, Paul, Acker, Joan & Goldrich, Daniel (Center Study Work Economy & Community U Oregon, Eugene 97403), Review Article: International Yearbook of Organizational Democracy, Vol. 11, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 1, Feb, 109-117

¶ A review article on a book edited by Bernhard Wilpert & Arndt Sorge.

both in Ru' areas & in cities & towns. The Ru poor experienced a sense of exclusion from Finnish society as a product of the erosion of their political & economic status, which encouraged them to support the Social Democrats, building a movement whose power survives even now. 3 Tables. W. H. Stoddard

88T4092

Kriesl, Hanspeter & Castenmiller, Peter (Instituut Wetenschap Politiek U Amsterdam, NL-1012 GA Netherlands), De ontwikkeling van politiek protest in Nederland sinds de jaren zeventig (The Development of Political Protest in the Netherlands), Acta Politica, 1987, 22, 1, Jan, 61-84. (DUT)

- * A discussion of the development of political protest in the Netherlands based on: (1) a study conducted by S. H. Barnes, M. Kaase, et al in 1974 (Political Action. Mass Participation in Five Western Democracies, Beverly Hills: Sage, 1979), (2) a 1979 replication conducted by J. J. A. Thomassen et al (De verstomde revolutie. Politieke opvattingen en gedragingen van Nederlandse burgers na de jaren zestig [The Speechless Revolution. Political Opinions and Behavior of Dutch Citizens after the Sixties], Samson, Alphen a.d. Rijn, 1983), & (3) a 1985 replication survey conducted by the department of political science of the U of Amsterdam. Analysis indicates that the protest potential in the Netherlands has diminished, but that participation has increased, while youth in the 1960s had relatively high protest potential & protest participation, youth of the 1980s appear to be even more active. The questionnaire also examined willingness to demonstrate for (or against) issues classified as socialist, new (immaterialist), or traditional. Although a distinction was expected, the willingness to demonstrate for the socialist & new issues was relatively high, & there were no clear boundaries between the supporters of these groups. It is concluded that much remains to be learned about the manner in which a potential for certain actions develops & is mobilized. 11 Tables, 1 Appendix, 31 References. Modified AA

88T4093

Ladd, Anthony E. (Loyola U, New Orleans LA 70118), The Era of Living Dangerously: Illusions of Salvation in the Republic of Technology, ♦ Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 3, Aug, 302-314

- ¶ The recent tragedies of the Chernobyl (USSR) nuclear disaster, the Challenger (US) space shuttle accident, & the Bhopal (India) chemical spill—in the midst of a "Star Wars" defense policy—should raise questions about our increasing faith in the technological fix. Having imbued our technologies with almost Godlike qualities, we have become so dependent on our fragile, accident-prone web of expensive machinery that we seem willing to accept almost everything from nuclear holocaust to ecocide as the price to pay for "progress" & "security." In a humanist critique of our increasing adherence to technological panaceas in the face of what are essentially problems of our social & political order, it is argued that our most pressing dislocations stem not so much from our level of technological prowess, but from the larger obstacles of political resolve & human understanding. 31 References. Modified AA

88T4094

Lawler, Edward J. & Bacharach, Samuel B. (Sociology Dept U Iowa, Iowa City 52242), Comparison of Dependence and Punitive Forms of Power, ♦ US Social Forces, 1987, 66, 2, Dec, 446-462.

- ¶ An examination of the impact of the power relationship on tactical action (ie, damage & concession tactics) in conflict. A theory of bilateral deterrence is tested, with focus on whether two theoretical principles designed for punitive power extend to power dependence. (1) unequal power will produce more use of power (ie, damage tactics) than equal power, & (2) the total amount of power across actors in a relationship will be negatively related to power use. The hypotheses are tested in a laboratory setting that separates dependence from punitive power, enables actors to make offers & counteroffers across a series of rounds (ie, engage in explicit negotiation), & contains the option to engage in damaging & threatening action. The results support the theory of bilateral deterrence with regard to punitive power, offer partial support to extension of the theory to power dependence, & demonstrate that the distinction between punitive & dependence forms of power is important. 3 Tables, 27 References. HA

88T4095

Lorentzen, Håkon, 'Privatisering': begreps innhold og implikasjoner ('Privatization'). The Meaning of the Notion and Its Implications), Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 3, 259-280 (NOR)

- ¶ Privatization has become a central political concept, though debate continues about what reform strategies are actually involved & what their effects are in terms of distribution, productivity, payment, & access to goods & services. Six main categories of privatization are specified: (1) responsibility, (2) costs, (3) administration, (4) services, (5) markets, & (6) contracting out. Each is discussed in terms of its application in Norwegian society, where it is not unusual to mix private & public resources. It is shown that within the health, social security, education, & transport sectors, resources have been mixed unsystematically. Research on the effects of the different categories of privatization is scant, & reforms are often based on ideological conviction rather than empirical knowledge. However, data from the US indicates that publicly distributed services produced on a contracting-out basis in the private sector are often less expensive than similar publicly produced services. 31 References. Modified HA

88T4096

Mann, Michael (Dept Sociology London School Economics, Houghton St WC2A 2AE England), Ruling Class Strategies and Citizenship, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 3, Aug, 339-354

- ¶ T. H. Marshall ("Citizenship and Social Class" in Sociology at the Crossroads, London: Heinemann, 1963) proposes that the attainment of citizenship goes through three stages: civil, political, & social. This model is criticized for being anglocentric & unilinearist. Comparative historical analysis of industrial societies reveals at least five strategies for the institutionalization of SC conflicts: liberal, reformist, authoritarian monarchist, fascist, & authoritarian socialist. In explaining their origin & development, emphasis should be placed on the strategies & cohesion of ruling classes & ancient régimes rather than on those of the bourgeoisie & proletariat, & on geopolitical events rather than internal efficiency. If Marshall's third stage of citizenship is a reasonably accurate descriptor of contemporary Europe, this is due primarily to the military victory of the English-speaking powers. 43 References. Modified HA

88T4097

Marin, Louis, The Narrative Trap: The Conquest of Power, Economy and Society, 1987, 16, 2, May, 229-251. Translated by R. Sanderson.

- ¶ A reading of the story "Puss-in-Boots" by Charles Perrault, in which the devices through which the cat gives his master power are explicated. A comparison is made to a story told by Blaise Pascal in the prelude to the First Discourse on the Condition of Men in High Places. W. H. Stoddard

88T4098

Massicotte, Louis (Service recherche Bibliothèque Parlement, Ottawa Ontario), Les Elections partielles de la 32e législature, 1981-1985 (By-Elections of the Thirty-Second Legislature, 1981-1985), ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 1, 59-70 (FRE)

- ¶ Following a review of the literature, the frequency, causes, & results of by-elections in Quebec are analyzed, focusing on electoral participation. A rough r is identified between trends recorded at by-elections & the province-wide trends revealed by contemporary PO polls. The by-elections examined confirm a general hypothesis made in a previous article examining by-elections in Quebec between 1867 & 1981 (see SA 30-5/82M6068) prior to 1974, by-elections were almost automatically won by the party in power; since then, voters feel free to speak their own mind & by-elections have thus become a more reliable indicator on the state of PO at the time they are held. It also follows that these elections are basically unreliable as indicators of the next general election. 2 Tables. Modified AA

88T4099

Meaglia, Piero, Democracia e intereses en Kelsen (Democracy and Interests in Kelsen), ♦ US Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 2, Apr-June, 3-20 (SPA). Translated by José F. Fernandez.

- ¶ The basic premise is that there is no existing theory of democracy that accurately describes the modern regimes that are referred to by that term. This lack of a theory of contemporary democracy has frequently been noted by Italian philosopher Salvatore Veca (no reference given). In response, a return to the "lesson of the classics" is suggested here. In this context, the theory of democracy in the works of Hans Kelsen is re-examined. The following works are selected for analysis: Vom Wesen und Wert der Demokratie (The Essence and Value of Democracy, 2nd edition, 1929); Das Problem des Parlamentarismus (The Problem of Parliamentarism, 1924); Demokratie (Democracy, 1927); General Theory of Law and State (1945); & Foundations of Democracy (1955/56) C. Waters

Goldammer, Heinz, The Caesarism of Napoleon III as Seen by Public Opinion in Germany, Economy and Society, 1987, 16, 3, Aug. 357-404.

Introduced by Peter Bachr, 341-356; translated by Gordon C. Wells.

¶ A major question of current historical research is the origin of dictatorship & of the total state in modern history. One of the most important historical cases, the Bonapartist Caesarism of nineteenth-century France, has been little recognized by historians. A systematic comparison is drawn between modern totalitarianism & the Bonapartism of Napoleon III. The responses of nineteenth-century German commentators to his reign are reviewed. It is shown in particular that the concept of Bonapartism can be applied typologically to European regimes outside of France's boundaries. W. H. Stoddard de Graaf, Nan Dirk & Ultee, Wout (State U Utrecht, NL-3508 TC Netherlands), Intergenerationele mobiliteit en politieke verhoudingen (Intergenerational Mobility and Political Preference), Acta Politica, 1987, 22, 1, Jan, 3-37 (DUT)

88T4084

¶ An empirical test of hypotheses that explain Left/Right political preferences on the basis of economic self-interest or of status. The diagonal mobility models developed by Michael F. Sobel (see SA 30 3/82M2954) are applied to survey data from the Netherlands for 1970/71 & 1977. The hypothesis that yields the best fitting model is that based on the assumption that individuals behave according to economic self-interest, but with a time-lag before taking on the political preferences of a newly entered status category. Macro-effects on society can thus be expected to reflect net structural mobility rather than total mobility, as would be suggested by status hypotheses. 10 Tables, 30 References. Modified HA

88T4085

Gubán, Pál & Cservek, Emil, Egy hatékonyság-centrikus nemzetgazdasági struktúra korvonnai (The Outlines of an Efficiency-Centered Structure of National Economy), Társadalomkutatás, 1987, 2, 28-42 (HUN)

¶ The Hungarian economy in the 1980s still follows the pattern of the 1950s, failing to meet the challenges with which the world economic situation confronts it. Maintenance of this condition demands enormous sacrifices from the society. In these circumstances, major economic reforms are needed to attain greater efficiency. The organic incorporation of the second economy into an evolving new structure is necessary. The extension of the market & the creation of new types of possible associations are the proper basis for reform. Modified HA

88T4086

Heisey, D. Ray & Trebing, J. David (School Speech Communication Kent State U, OH 44242), Authority and Legitimacy: A Rhetorical Case Study of the Iranian Revolution, ♦ Communication Monographs, 1986, 53, 4, Dec, 295-310

¶ The legitimacy crisis in Iran in 1978/79 arose from the contrasting views of authority espoused by the Shah & the Ayatollah over a quarter century. These views are expressed in their rhetoric as the two impulses of the progressive & the traditionalist orientations of authority. The Pahlavi dynasty is an example of state-authority, or the progressive impulse, while the Islamic revolution is an example of the opposite impulse, traditionalism, which brought in a people-authority with its narrative rationality. Each regime becomes an integral dimension of Iran's search for images of national strength. The critical perspective employed here may be useful in the analysis of various rhetorical processes, both Western & non-Western. 38 References. HA

88T4087

Higham, John (Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218), La movilización de los inmigrantes (The Mobilization of Immigrants), ♦ Estudios Migratorios Latinoamericanos, 1986, 2, 4, Dec, 461-473 (SPA)

Translated by Alicia Bernasconi.

¶ An examination of recent historical studies of immigration to the Americas, especially the US, that take an unusual perspective, that of the impact of the immigrant groups on the host society, rather than their adjustment to it. Two major sources are identified. (1) The so-called "ethno-cultural school" of political history has produced a mass of data on the voting behavior of different groups since the end of the eighteenth century. (2) Historians of radicalism & of the workers' movement have investigated the ethnic roots of Wc activism. Drawing on these sources, an attempt is made here, from a general historical viewpoint, to examine how immigrant minorities have tried to change the course of events through organization, militancy, & new demands, ie, mobilization. Comparisons are made among the differing situations in the US, Canada, & Argentina. C. Waters

88T4088

Hirst, Paul (Dept Politics & Sociology Birkbeck Coll U London, WC1E 7HX-1 England), Peace and Political Theory, Economy and Society, 1987, 16, 2, May, 204-219

¶ Modern intellectuals are heirs to the Enlightenment view of war as futile & wasteful of resources, a view that explains the studied neglect of war in liberal social & political theory. War is an abnormal political condition, destined to be historically transient with the march of intellectual, moral, & economic progress. Immanuel Kant is part of this tradition. The very first sentence of Perpetual Peace (1795) shows he regarded war as an abomination; but he is an exception to the liberal contempt for war, in that he sought to theorize peace as a political condition, which relies on the force of states. Kant's work is unmatched today. The antinuclear movement has produced no real political theory, with one interesting exception, Jonathan Schell's The Abolition (London: Picador, 1984), which is virtually a rediscovery of Perpetual Peace by an author apparently ignorant of Kant or political theory. Schell seeks a stable nonnuclear world of states, rather than some absurd & tyrannical world government. While Schell recognizes the logic of deterrence & accepts that that logic continues into a postnuclear world, he writes with the parochial blindness of an affluent North American who imagines the Great Powers can construct a stable postnuclear world without an iron imperial grip on their respective & agreed spheres of influence. The two most rigorous works of political thinking about peace presuppose a conservative world of states, satisfied with & dominant within their own boundaries. 16 References. Modified AA

88T4089

Jacobs, David (Dept Political Science U Oregon, Eugene 97403), Corporate Economic Power and the State: A Longitudinal Assessment of Two Explanations, American Journal of Sociology, 1988, 93, 4, Jan, 852-881

¶ An examination of the relationship between the economic resources of corporations & their ability to control politics in advanced capitalist democracies, focusing on the connection between the aggregate concentration of assets among the leading manufacturing firms as well as the rate of business investment & taxes on business. Time-series regressions computed on US national-level data for 1947-1978 show that theories of the state that emphasize the independent activities of private investors are not supported. Instead, the aggregate concentration of assets, as measured by the share of assets held by the leading 100 firms, has a strong negative influence on effective corporate tax rates. These results are consistent with the theory that heightened aggregate concentration helps corporations organize to attain their political demands. 3 Tables, 1 Appendix, 62 References. Modified HA

88T4090

Katunarić, Vjeran (Faculty Philosophy U Zagreb, YU-41000 Yugoslavia), Sistem moći, socijalna struktura i nacionalno pitanje (System of Power, Social Structure and National Question), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 75-89 (SCR)

¶ An analysis of ethnic stratification in Yugoslavia, using questionnaire data (N not given) obtained from adults throughout the country. Analysis shows no deep roots of nationalism among the Wc. Also many Rs expressed a willingness to call themselves Yugoslavs instead of Serbs, Croats, etc. The distinction between ethnicity & nationality is discussed. It is concluded that multiple nationalism in Yugoslavia resulted from a merger of polycentric political systems & subdued nationalism among social elites. 9 Tables, 22 References. Modified HA

88T4091

Kirby, David (School Slavonic & East European Studies U London, WC1E 7HU England), "The Workers' Cause": Rank-and-File Attitudes and Opinions in the Finnish Social Democratic Party 1905-1918, Past and Present, 1986, 111, May, 130-164.

¶ Between 1905 & 1917, the Social Democratic Party in Finland gained an absolute majority in the Finnish parliament, despite the predominantly Ru & agrarian character of Finnish society. The Party was dominated by older artisans & younger intellectuals allied with the Ru masses. Workers' associations proliferated during this period, gaining support basic expectations of the totalitarian model. However, the AMP cannot be raised at will in Leninist Party-states as a tool of political criticism. Only when a remunerative-coercive mainstream coalition (one that stresses material rewards in addition to coercion as a prime method of social control) starts to replace or resist a normative-coercive coalition (one that relies on a mix of ideological mobilization & coercion), does an AMP debate in a Leninist Party-state take on political overtones. In China after 1978, in periods when remunerative elements in Deng Xiaoping's mainstream coalition, had their greatest influence, the AMP reached its zenith as a tool for criticizing the growth of despotism in Leninist Party-states. Likewise, in periods when coercive elements managed to end talk of political reform, the AMP debate was silenced. Before real political reform & democratization once more become acceptable topics within the Communist Party, a renewed AMP debate may be the first indication of a shift toward the reformers. AA

88T4109

Sabato, Hilda & Cibotti, Ema, Inmigrantes y política: un problema pendiente (Immigrants and Politics. A Pending Problem). ♦ Estudios Migratorios Latinoamericanos, 1986, 2, 4, Dec, 475-482 (SPA)

¶ An examination of the development of Argentina's political system during 1850-1930, which was a period of profound social & political changes. Focus here is on the relationship of immigrants to politics, & their participation in local political affairs. Many immigrants did not become citizens: reasons for this phenomenon are discussed, together with its consequences for the political system. As an example, the Italian community in Buenos Aires is investigated, drawing on evidence from census data & various historical studies. C. Waters

88T4110

Saleemohammed, George (Dept European Studies U Loughborough, LE11 3TU England), Marin: A Pascalian Diversion, Economy and Society, 1987, 16, 2, May, 220-228

¶ An introduction to Louis Marin's article (see abstract in this section) within the framework of the postmodernist critique of language & the theory of representation. Marin's works are heavily dependent on Blaise Pascal, whose relevant thoughts on the question of sense, reference, discourse, & logic are sketched out. The primary focus here, however, is how, according to Marin, discourse & its claim to truth are related to power, not least the power to represent. The mechanisms of representation, what he calls "the narrative trap," are looked at briefly in relation to his own analysis of the Puss-in-Boots story. 7 References. AA

88T4111

Santana, Roberto (Centre national recherche scientifique, F-75700 Paris France), La cuestión étnica y la democracia en Ecuador (The Ethnic Question and Democracy in Ecuador). ♦ UM Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 2, Apr-June, 127-144. (SPA)

¶ The possibility of democratic participation for the indigenous Indian populations in Latin America is discussed. Preconditions are considered to be: a pluralistic form of democracy; the political autonomy of different social groups; the relative autonomy of the political sector itself, & recognition of the facts that politics is not a science & that democracy is based on will & passion. The evolution of the indigenous question in Ecuador since 1979 is reviewed. In that year, for the first time, the government included Indian representatives in its policy consultations. At present, the only option the Indians have is to support one of the existing political parties, all of which represent other interests. If there is to be progress toward truly representative democracy for the indigenous peoples, some basic changes will have to be made in the political process. There is also an urgent need for legislation concerning the territories of ethnic groups. C. Waters

88T4112

Sidanius, Jim, Brewer, Rose M., Banks, Elliot & Ekehammar, Bo (U Texas, Austin 78712), Ideological Constraint, Political Interest and Gender: A Swedish-American Comparison, European Journal of Political Research, 1987, 15, 4, 471-492.

¶ A comparison of the political sophistication of US & Swedish young adults, using data from an attitude questionnaire administered to students at the U of Wisconsin & Texas ($\Sigma N = 492$) & at 5 gymnasia in metropolitan Stockholm, Sweden ($\Sigma N = 783$). Four basic ideological subdimensions were investigated: political-economic conservatism, racism, religion, & punitiveness, along with political party preference & political self-concept. The Swedes showed significantly greater levels of ideological coherence, political interest, ideological variance, & strength of interface between political party preference/self-concept & sociopolitical attitudes/values than did their US counterparts. Differences are discussed in terms of differences between the nations' political party environments; the effects of gender are also noted. 8 Tables, 65 References. Modified HA

88T4113

Smith, William C. (Dept Politics U Miami, Coral Gables FL 33124), El parto de la democracia brasileña (The Birth of Democracy in Brazil). ♦ UM Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 2, Apr-June, 89-126. (SPA)

Translated by Marta Donis.

¶ A revised version of a paper presented at the Thirteenth International Congress of the Latin American Studies Assoc, Boston, Mass, Sept 1986. In 1985, a civil government headed by José Sarney took over in Brazil after twenty-one years of authoritarian regimes. The policies & accomplishments of the first two years of this "new republic" are analyzed. This stage of transition is complex & problematical, & can hardly be referred to yet as genuine democracy; it has been accompanied by a worsening economic crisis & increasing social, political, & institutional conflicts. The efforts of the new republic to dismantle the authoritarian structure are examined. The state's relations with the Ur Wc, the peasants, & the SE elite are analyzed, as are its attempts at agrarian reform. The roles of the political parties & of the armed forces are discussed. The "Cruzado Plan" a program aimed at reconciling democracy & economic stability is examined. 1 Table, 81 References. C. Waters de Souza, Amaury, Brasil de Lima, Olavo, Jr. & Figueiredo, Marcus (c/o Brasil de Lima Instit Universitário Pesquisas Rio de Janeiro, Rua da Matriz 82 Botafogo ZC 02 Brazil), Brizola y las elecciones de 1982 en Rio de Janeiro (Brizola and the 1982 Elections in Rio de Janeiro). ♦ UM Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 2, Apr-June, 233-281. (SPA)

88T4114

Translated by Rosa Cusminsky de Cendrero.

¶ The circumstances contributing to the unexpected victory of underdog candidate Leonel Brizola in the 1982 election in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, are analyzed. Brizola's personal magnetism & political career are discussed, as well as the effect of intraparty conflict on the fragmentation of the opposition front, leading to an overall political realignment & the formation of a new party headed by Brizola. Three data sources are used. (1) parliamentary registers & official election results from 1974 to 1982, (2) the findings of 7 PO surveys conducted by the Gallup Instit during 1982, & (3) an interview survey of a probability sample of 623 adult residents of Rio de Janeiro, carried out by IUPERJ (a Rio de Janeiro research institute) during the month preceding the election in order to determine the social & ideological bases of the change in voting behavior. 11 Tables, 3 Figures. C. Waters

88T4115

Stark, Frank M. (Queen's U, Kingston Ontario K7L 3N6), Theories of Contemporary State Formation in Africa: A Reassessment, UM Journal of Modern African Studies, 1986, 24, 2, June, 335-347.

¶ As state formation in Africa is constrained by various temporal & spatial factors, so too is scholarship on this process. Various theories of state formation from outside the African literature leadership theories, nation-building, structural-functionalist approaches, & Marxist analyses are compared & reevaluated. They are shown to share a focus on the creation of meaning & an emphasis on communication. While such approaches respect individual action to a certain degree, they are also bound by the functionalist position that the role of ideology is to impose norms. It is argued that a new, holistic approach is needed that includes an analysis of: the role of individuals, the work of building institutions & structures, SC conflicts, & constraints on development imposed by internal economic & political systems. A communicative-interactive approach is advocated, based largely on the work of George Herbert Mead (Mind, Self and Society, Chicago, Ill, 1934) K. Hyatt

88T4116

Thompson, Grahame (Faculty Social Sciences Open U, Milton Keynes MK7 6AA England), The "New Institutionalism" and Political Analysis, Economy and Society, 1987, 16, 2, May, 252-273

¶ A review essay on books by Joel Krieger, Reagan, Thatcher and the Politics of Decline (Polity Press, 1986); & Peter Hall, Governing the Economy: The Politics of State Intervention in Britain and France, (Pol-

Majum, Jan H. (U Hawaii, Hilo 96720), Capitalist Stages, State Formation, and Ethnicity in Hawaii, National Journal of Sociology, 1987, 1, 2, fall, 172-207.

¶ Hawaii's unique modern history is the result of a dialectical interaction between specific institutional patterns of capitalist accumulation, state organization, & ethnic identity formation & mobilization, in which economic relations have generally, but not always, been the independent cause of political & ethnic structures. Hawaii's development from the eighteenth-century arrival of Captain Cook to the present is distinguished into three basic capitalist stages, & local economic, political, & ethnic consequences of world system action during each of the stages are detailed. 5 Figures, 40 References. Modified HA

88T4101

Melossi, Dario (U California, Santa Barbara 93106), The Prince's Pedestal: Concepts of State and Social Control in the Quest for Democracy, Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 760-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711482.

88T4102

Mollnar, Juan & Valdez, Leonardo (Instit Investigaciones Sociales U Nacional Autónoma México, 04510 México DF), Las elecciones de 1985 en el Distrito Federal (The 1985 Elections in the Federal District (Mexico City)), Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 2, Apr-June, 183-215 (SPA)

¶ An analysis of the results of the 1985 metropolitan election in Mexico City, Mexico's federal district. Major tendencies are identified & a quantitative approximation is presented. The results are compared with those of the three previous elections, & with voting behavior nationwide. It is found that the trends of the past few years in Mexico City are continuing, without significant change of direction. The behavior of metropolitan voters differs from that of the nation in general in two respects: greater political participation, & more pluralism of preference among the political parties. 27 Tables. C. Waters

88T4103

Nelson, Robert L., Heinz, John P., Laumann, Edward O. & Salisbury, Robert H. (Northwestern U, Evanston IL 60201), Private Representation in Washington: Surveying the Structure of Influence, American Bar Foundation Research Journal, 1987, 1, winter, 141-193

¶ Based on interviews with 776 individuals engaged in the representation of private interests concerning national policies on agriculture, energy, health, & labor, some findings are reported concerning the social & political characteristics of representatives, the nature of their work, & their relationships with client organizations. Three models of the social organization of interest representation are developed & examined: one based on substantive expertise, an institutional targets model, & a client-based model. The interview data support the third. Although lawyers constitute a significant & distinctive group among representatives, they are neither as numerous nor as active in policy making as is commonly assumed. The analysis suggests that representatives are not likely to exercise influence in the policy-making process that is autonomous from client organizations. 9 Tables. Modified HA

88T4104

Nonnekes, Paul (Dept Sociology York U, North York Ontario M3J 1P3), The Nihilism of Resistance and Freedom, Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de théorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 3, fall, 130-139

¶ A review essay on a book by Ernesto Laclau & Chantal Mouffe, Hegemony and Socialist Strategy: Towards a Radical Democratic Politics (Moore, Winston, & Cammack, Paul [Trs], Thetford, Norfolk Thetford Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). Centered within an overall context of a discussion of the Gramscian-inspired concept of hegemony, an analysis is presented of the notions of freedom & resistance in the face of a general problematic of modernity in which humanity is increasingly threatened by commodification, bureaucratization, & mass media homogenization of social relations. The essentialism of traditional Marxist class analysis is rejected in favor of both a historical-teleological approach & a notion of social life derived from post-Saussurian linguistics. It is argued that this analysis erroneously posits the sources of inspiration for social movements in the egalitarian imaginary born of the European Enlightenment & French Revolution, ignoring the internal dynamics of society. Careful examination of the ideas on freedom & resistance offered by Mikhail Bakhtin & Craig Calhoun reveals that the view of individual freedom supported by these events was essentially nihilistic & destructive, denying an expressive humanity tied to the body, earth, community, & tradition. The notion that such sentiments were the foundation of early egalitarian social movements & struggles against industrialism is rejected. K. Hyatt

88T4105

Nam, José (Dept Political Science U Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A1), Elementos para una teoría de la democracia: Gramsci y el sentido común (Elements for a Theory of Democracy: Gramsci and Common Sense), Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 2, Apr-June, 21-54 (SPA)

¶ The type of reductionism often found in Marxist analyses, which interpret all social practices by reference to a single rationality, is criticized. By contrast, the importance of Antonio Gramsci's originality in his efforts to understand "common sense" or shared meaning is emphasized. An attempt is made to reconstruct the main reasons for Gramsci's heterodoxy by investigating the historical circumstances & intellectual currents surrounding his work. His analysis of common sense is outlined, referring to the oneness of philosophy, history, & politics, the hypothesis of "good sense", & the question of language. In conclusion, it is noted that, in politics, any discussion of common sense is a discussion of democracy. A rethinking of the relations among social theory, political ideology, & popular common sense is a necessary precondition of the search for alternative institutions. 72 References. Modified AA

88T4106

Pinker, Stephen (Dept Social & Political Thought York U, North York Ontario M3J 1P3), Fading Postmodern Subjects, Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de théorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 3, fall, 140-148

¶ A review essay on a book by Ernesto Laclau & Chantal Mouffe, Hegemony and Socialist Strategy: Towards a Radical Democratic Politics (Moore, Winston, & Cammack, Paul [Trs], Thetford, Norfolk Thetford Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). A proposal for a post-Marxist politics that aims at liberating cultural identity from orthodox or essentialist Marxism, with focus on a redefinition of postmodern subject position by identity. Three weaknesses of the text are discussed: (1) the use of overdetermination as a key ingredient in the construction of identity, (2) an unwarranted differentiation between the city & the wilderness, & (3) a rejection of essentialist identity constructions in favor of the notion of a "partial" identity. It is argued that this position on the destruction of identity recalls Friedrich Nietzsche's views on cultural health & illness. K. Hyatt

88T4107

Puhle, Hans-Jürgen, Nacionalismo en América Latina (Nationalism in Latin America), Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 119-131 (SPA)

¶ While Latin America has long been considered a continent of nationalism, this nationalism is multifaceted: there is no ideological unity, nor uniformity of political, social, or economic conditions & implications. However, certain shared characteristics are identified that represent constant elements of Latin American political culture. After an analysis of terminology, the discussion considers: traditional nationalism; the functions of nationalism in the Third World, & the new, anti-imperialist nationalism of twentieth-century Latin America. It is noted that nationalism operates both as a driving force & as a restraint. C. Waters

88T4108

Rapp, John A. (Dept Government & International Relations Beloit Coll, WI 53511), The Fate of Marxist Democrats in Leninist Party States: China's Debate on the Asiatic Mode of Production, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 5, Sept, 709-740

¶ The Asiatic mode of production (AMP) is a concept used by Karl Marx to describe a strong, centralized despotic state ruling in its own interests over a society with little or no dominant private economic class. Thus, as an anomaly in Marx's primary economic paradigm of the state, the AMP presents a challenge to the legitimacy of ruling elites in Leninist Party-states & an opportunity for minority intellectuals within those states who want to point out the need for political reform & even democratization. In examining the recent AMP debates in the People's Republic of China, divisions within the Communist Party elite & differences among Leninist Party-states become apparent that run contrary to the Michoacán, Mexico, based on an analysis of the 1985 election results & the preceding political campaigns. Supplementary information was gathered from interviews with local political party leaders (N not given) & from a review of local & national press coverage for Mar-Sept 1985. Certain elements of change & new impulses in regional political forces are identified, including declining support for the Partido Revolucionario Institucional among Ur voters, although it still maintains its grip on most of the Ru population. The high rate of abstention from voting is attributed, at least in part, to dissatisfaction with the rigid, vertical party structure. 2 Tables, 1 Figure. C Waters

88T4126

Zermeno, Sergio (Instit. Investigaciones Sociales U Nacional Autónoma México, 04510 Mexico DF), Hacia una democracia como identidad restringida; sociedad y política en México (Toward Democracy as Restricted Identity Society and Politics in Mexico), ♦UM Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 2, Apr-June, 57-87 (SPA)

¶ An investigation of various social movements & political struggles that took place in different parts of Mexico in the 1980s. What they have in common is that they express a new type of democracy, called here "emerging democracy." An analysis of the phenomenon distinguishes two types of grass-roots social movement: those that aim at forming nationwide alliances & influencing national policies, & those that restrict their operations to a single community or interest group, rejecting all vertical structure as being part of the existing system of domination. Reasons are sought for the long continuance of the populist syndrome in Mexico, as well as for certain abrupt changes that took place within it in 1982. It is felt that there has been a shift in focus, from mass movements to more restricted, separate social groups. C Waters

88T4127

Zich, František (Vysoká škola politická ÚV KSČ, Prague Czechoslovakia), Počátek historických změn naší doby (The Beginning of Historical Changes of Our Time), Sociologický časopis, 1987, 23, 5, 417-424. (CZE)

¶ The present historical age is one of transition from capitalism to communism, initiated by the Russian Revolution. The Twenty-Seventh Congress of the Soviet Communist Party opened a new epoch in the development of socialism, which requires new achievements in the theory & methods of Marxist sociology. In particular, the social structure of socialist society must be newly & adequately defined. Thus, the Russian Revolution's significance for the world includes its having stimulated new developments in the social sciences. 7 References. Modified HA

88T4128

----, La lucha por la tierra en defensa de la vida. El pueblo Maskoy frente a Carlos Casado S.A. (relatorio del caso) (Struggle for the Land in Defense of Life. The Maskoy People Confront Carlos Casado S.A. [A Case Study]), ♦UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 197-233 (SPA)

¶ A case study of the struggle for landownership between an indigenous people of Paraguay, the Maskoy, & a commercial enterprise, Carlos Casado S.A. The dispute is traced from its historical background—the sale of public land, which included the traditional home of the Maskoy, in the nineteenth century—to the present day. Aspects highlighted include the subhuman living conditions of the Indians employed by the company. A detailed chronology of events from 1979 through 1985 is presented. C Waters

WINAK: BOLETIN INTERCULTURAL

(ISSN 0257-6449)

WINAK: BOLETIN INTERCULTURAL is published quarterly by the Mariano Gálvez University of Guatemala. Winak is also the official journal of the School of Linguistics at the University, servicing the two degrees on Mayan Linguistics and Sociolinguistics, including one to B.A. level.

Winak is the first journal of its kind in Guatemala to deal with a wide range of topics (in Spanish) relating to the sociolinguistic, cultural and educational situation of the country and its 23 Mayan languages. Winak publishes articles on the following areas of research:

- DESCRIPTIVE LINGUISTICS OF MAYAN LANGUAGES: Phonology, Morphology, Syntax, Morphosyntax, Semantics.
- SOCIOLINGUISTICS: Bilingualism and Multilingualism, Language Planning, Language Maintenance, Language Death.
- APPLIED LINGUISTICS: Second Language Acquisition, Dialectology.
- ANTHROPOLOGY: Cosmovision, Cognitive Studies, Oral Tradition, Bilingual native texts.
- EDUCATION: Literacy, Bilingual-Bicultural Education, Orthography.

Subscription Rates: $US 15.00, institutional/library $US 6.00, individual (per annum, for 4 issues)
Subscription includes airmail postage.
Journal and advertisement exchanges are welcome.

All subscriptions, requests for exchange of journals and articles for inclusion in Winak should be sent to:

Dr. Neville Stiles, Editor
WINAK: BOLETIN INTERCULTURAL
School of Linguistics
Universidad "Mariano Gálvez"
Apdo. Postal 1811
Guatemala, GUATEMALA
Central America

ity Press, 1986 (see listings in IRPS No. 42)). These two books both apply a comparative perspective to recent European political developments, working within the new institutionalist approach to political science. Both present comprehensive & effective discussions of their topics, offering a valuable opportunity for reassessment of the role of institutions in political analysis. 25 References. W H Stoddard

88T4117

Torgovnik, Efraim & Mendilow, Jonathan (Tel-Aviv U, Ramat-Aviv 69978 Israel), Federal Factions and Federated Host Parties in Israel: Some Ideological and Structural Dimensions, U Publius 1986, 16, 2, spring, 113-132.

¶ A new type of party has emerged in Israel the federated host party which consists of political groups & former parties that have the status of factions. Formal agreements set the rules of politics, hence, heavy constraints are placed on the host party in appointments & policy. The emergence of federated host parties & federal factions, factors of stability & unrest in the relations of host party & factions, & the withering away of factions are discussed. Factors that account for the emergence of federal factions include persistence, differences in size of competing parties, chain reaction syndrome, countering electoral decline, crossing the lines, & secession brinkmanship. HA

88T4118

Valencia Garcia, Guadalupe & Flores Davila, Julia Isabel (Facultad Ciencias Políticas y Sociales U Nacional Autónoma México, 04510 México DF), El análisis político regional, consideraciones en torno a la construcción de un objeto de estudio (Regional Political Analysis: Considerations Concerning the Construction of an Object of Study), U Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 145-166. (SPA)

¶ A discussion of methodological considerations concerning the problem of constructing an object of study. The constitution of political forces in certain regions of Mexico is examined as a concrete example, focusing on the way in which relations between society & state are re-elaborated in the regional perspective. The point of departure is the relationship between subject & reality, as posed in the epistemological perspective of the construction of the object. It is proposed that object of study & method should be treated jointly in the process of investigation, in order to construct a relation of knowledge that, without ignoring theory, will be closer to the complexity & multidimensionality of reality. The exigencies & frame of reference of this approach are discussed. The working hypothesis of the study of political phenomena in Mexico is that the structural elements economic, political, social, & cultural of each region & their specific form of integration determine the region's political behavior & organization & its relations with the center. The analysis focuses on the time of Mexico's political reform (1976/77). The exercise of power, power relations, & processes of political mediation within regions & between regions & the state are examined, revealing the close links between the cultural structure & its function for the political system. 1 Figure, 10 References. AA Tr & Modified by C Waters

88T4119

Van Schuur, Wijnbrandt H. (State U Groningen, NL-9700 AB Netherlands), Constraint in European Party Activists' Sympathy Scores for Interest Groups, European Journal of Political Research, 1987, 15, 3, 347-362.

¶ A country-by-country analysis of questionnaire responses collected between 1978 & 1982 from European party activists from 58 political parties in 11 countries of Western Europe (N = 7,492) yields sympathy scores for 100+ different national interest groups. In all countries but one, the Left-Right dimension is the predominant criterion for interpreting the sympathy scores given; in Belgium, the exception, a regional (Flemish-Walloon) cleavage line is most important. 1 Table, 1 Appendix, 31 References. Modified HA

88T4120

Veljak, Lino (Faculty Philosophy U Zagreb, YU-41000 Yugoslavia), Neokonzervativizam i nova desnica (Neoconservatism and the New Right), Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 3-4, July-Dec, 195-205. (SCR)

¶ A literature review of Western European & US social, political, & economic thought of the 1980s shows the ideological & SC foundations of neoconservatism & their connections to real social movements & processes. The success of neoconservative proposals as an exit from the modern crisis of capitalism depends on the degree to which they can be integrated into the government. The US neoconservatives have successfully organized a mass social movement, while Western European, especially French, neoconservatives insist on establishing a specific cultural hegemony. Modified HA

88T4121

Weakliem, David L. (Dept Sociology U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Economic Conditions and Government Popularity in Great Britain, 1956-1983, Political Behavior, 1986, 8, 4, 335-355.

¶ In an investigation of the temporal structure of the effects of economic conditions on voting intentions, it is argued that different specifications will be appropriate depending on how voters receive information on economic conditions. In an examination of national survey data (N not given) on voting in British general elections from 1956 through 1984, the specification used in nearly all previous research—the geometric distributed lag—performs less well than alternatives, & the choice significantly affects model stability & the significance of particular independent variables. The results suggest several conclusions about voters' knowledge & rationality, which may be tested with individual-level data. 7 Tables, 27 References. Modified HA

88T4122

Wickham-Crowley, Timothy P. (Georgetown U, Washington DC 20057), The Rise (and Sometimes Fall) of Guerrilla Governments in Latin America, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 3, summer, 473-499.

¶ Guerrilla governments arise where landlord or central government authority has decayed. In such situations, the guerrillas often establish a new social contract with the peasantry, replacing the previous social contract, abrogated by traditional authorities. Guerrillas build up their authority by carrying out three contractual obligations of authority: (1) defense of the people from external enemies, (2) maintenance of internal peace & order, & (3) contributions to the material security of the populace, eg, by increasing peasant incomes & by providing health services, literacy training, & sometimes land to Ru cultivators. As a result of such activities, peasants often come to perceive guerrillas as the new legitimate authorities in the region. Such authority decays, however, if the guerrillas fail to fulfill the obligations of the social contract. The relevance of the study of guerrillas to social movement theory is discussed. 130 References. Modified HA

88T4123

Williams, Glyn, Policy as Containment within Democracy: The Welsh Language Act, U International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 66, 49-59.

¶ The background of the Welsh Language Act is considered. Although the act was viewed as an important step in the preservation & promulgation of the Welsh language, subsequent events have led to dissatisfaction among the Welsh population. The ideological discourse & power struggles inherent in the adoption & administration of the act are examined. 9 References. B Annesser Murray

88T4124

Williams, Leonard (Dept History & Political Science Manchester College, North Manchester IN 46962), Ideological Parallels between the New Left and the New Right, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 3, July, 317-327.

¶ Parallels of thought & action in New Left & New Right ideologies are described. Both attack the bureaucratization of society & an inequality of social & political power, both call for an end to pervasive alienation & for the re-creation of a genuine community; & they show striking similarities in their critiques of US society & in their preferred states of affairs. Possible explanations of this parallelism—that the two ideologies are variants of extremism or that both movements emerge from the same SC background—are examined & found wanting. The ideas of M. Seliger (Ideology and Politics, New York Free Press, 1970) suggest that this instance of ideological parallelism instead occurs because the New Left & New Right both confront the basic social & political problems of an advanced industrial society. 31 References. HA

88T4125

Zepeda Patterson, Jorge (Centro Investigaciones Interdisciplinarias U Nacional Autónoma México, 04510 México DF), Las elecciones federales de 1985 en Michoacán (The Federal Elections of 1985 in Michoacán), U Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 2, Apr-June, 217-231. (SPA)

¶ An examination of the political situation in the state of

1000 social differentiation

19 social stratification/mobility

88T4129

Bellamy, Paul (U Keele, Staffordshire ST5 5BG England). The Peculiarities of the English Revisited: The Historical Formation of State, Class and Culture in England. In The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 4, Nov, 829-839.

¶ A review essay on books by: Philip Corrigan & Derek Sayer, The Great Arch: English State Formation as Cultural Revolution (Oxford: Blackwell, 1985); Geoffrey Ingham, Capitalism Divided? The City and Industry in British Social Development (London: Macmillan, 1984); & Lawrence Stone & Jeanne C. Fawtier Stone, An Open Elite? England 1540-1880 (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1984 (see listings in IRPS No 42)). These books invite comparison with the debate about the peculiarities of the English that engaged Marxist historians in the early 1960s. At the heart of that debate was the issue of whether the bourgeois revolution was ever completed; some assume that an openness in the landed aristocracy had both encouraged early capitalists & in due course choked off further enterprise in an enduring aristocratic embrace. The Stones present evidence that the landed elite was never open: social mobility was rare & declined between the sixteenth & nineteenth centuries. This finding is consistent with Ingham's argument that British capitalism is not—as Marx supposed—united around productive capital, but uniquely divided between domestic industry & international commerce. The latter, centered on the city, is heir to the dominance of the landed aristocracy. Early capitalism was possible because, as Corrigan & Sayer suggest, after the Restoration of 1660, the exploitation of state office & the law was open to all forms of property, not just land. However, the long (though discontinuous) development of the state was coeval with extension of the strata who considered themselves English in language & culture, so creating a conservative communality that to this day helps conceal divisions between capital & labor, &—following Ingham—within capital itself. The dominance of the city, the Treasury, & the Bank of England, each in their respective spheres, has coincidentally ensured a policy of sound money by governments, which has worked to domestic industry's disadvantage & been challenged periodically, but never successfully. 17 References. Modified AA

88T4130

Ben-Porat, A. (Dept Behavioral Sciences Ben-Gurion U Negev, Beersheva 84105 Israel). Class Consciousness before Class: The Emergence of a Jewish Working Class in Palestine, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 5, Sept, 741-769.

¶ An exploration of the sociohistorical conditions & processes that enabled the establishment of the Jewish Wc-Yishuv in Palestine between 1880 & 1920, with emphasis on the role of class consciousness. It is argued that certain structural conditions made a SC-based organization, rather than other forms of collective identification, possible, & in turn, this organized class consciousness shaped political & ideological forms. It is shown that though structural-historical conditions affect an individual's experience in the SE system, their effects differ with the individual's consciousness & position in the process of production, organization is required to convert these experiences into effective class action. The creative power of class consciousness was responsible for changing the process of nation building to one of class formation. K Hyatt

88T4131

Bensman, Joseph (Graduate Center City U New York, NY 10021). Classi e burocrazia: una comparazione impossibile (Classes and Bureaucracy: An Impossible Comparison). In La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 78, June-Sept, 7-11. (ITA)

Translated by Nicola Porro.

¶ Basic Marxist tenets concerning SC relations are confronted with some of the contradictions of capitalism. Aspects of social & political structures worldwide—including in the US, USSR, Europe, & the Third World—are briefly reviewed. It is evident that, rather than SC consciousness, other forces such as nationalism, ethnic identity, or religion (eg, Islamic or Protestant fundamentalism) are more dynamic in contemporary society. With the "detrivialization" of modern man, new cults have arisen. The task of social scientists is to investigate how far irrationality has penetrated the structures, ideas, & ideologies considered to be rational

C. Waters

88T4132

Bogdanović, Marija (Faculty Philosophy U Belgrade, YU-11000 Yugoslavia). Društvene nejednakosti sa stanovišta primenjenog klasičnog okvira analize (Social Inequalities Perception from the Standpoint of Applied Classification Framework of Analysis). Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 147-161. (SCR)

¶ The usefulness of applied classification framework analysis is examined, utilizing Yugoslav data (N = 749 Rs) on educational level, occupation, standard of living, & social mobility. It is argued that a fundamental reexamination & standardization of the classification scheme & its social indicators are needed. Comparative studies of social inequalities & other social phenomena cannot progress without such standardization. 10 Tables. Modified HA

88T4133

Boivin, Michel & Bégin, Guy (U Laval, Quebec G1K 7P4). Temporal Reliability and Validity of Three Sociometric Status Assessments with Young Children. In Canadian Journal of Behavioural Science/Revue canadienne des sciences du comportement, 1986, 18, 2, Apr, 167-172

¶ Temporal reliability & validity of 3 sociometric methods—the single & multiple criteria nomination procedures & the rating scale—were investigated during individual interviews with 36 French-Canadian children attending kindergarten in Quebec. In addition, the concurrent validity of sociometric scores with teachers' assessments of children's popularity & social behavior (obtained via questionnaires) was examined. Test-retest (at 3 weeks) correlations indicated that the multiple criteria nomination method was as reliable as the rating scale, & both were more reliable than the single criterion method. Concurrent validity data supported all sociometric assessments. Thus, multiple criteria nomination scores & rating scales are recommended as outcome measures in terms of their temporal reliability & validity, at least at the kindergarten level. 1 Table, 22 References. Modified HA

88T4134

Bronfman, Joanie (Brandeis U, Waltham MA 02254). The Experience of Inherited Wealth: A Social-Psychological Perspective. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1033-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715730.

88T4135

Burris, Val (Dept Sociology U Oregon, Eugene 97403). Class Structure and Political Ideology. In The Insurgent Sociologist, 1987, 14, 2, summer, 5-46.

¶ A discussion of the nature of intermediate SCs in contemporary capitalist society, based on a critical overview of six alternative theories of SC structure: C Wright Mills's theory of white-collar workers, Nicos Poulantzas's theory of the new petite bourgeoisie, Erik Olin Wright's theory of contradictory SC locations, Wright's more recent theory of SC structure & exploitation, Guglielmo Carchedi's theory of the new Mc, & Barbara & John Ehrenreich's theory of the professional-managerial class. The relationship between SC position & political ideology is also examined. National survey data are used to compare the different models of SC structure in terms of their degree of correspondence with empirical cleavages in political opinion. A revised model of SC structure is outlined that best captures the existing patterns of SC relations in US society. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 32 References. AA

88T4136

Cha, Jongchun (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). Social Stratification and Group Formation in Contemporary Korea. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 489-A-490-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8708077.

Canadian Public POLICY
Analyse de
POLITIQUES

THE JOURNAL DEALING WITH PUBLIC POLICY IN CANADA

Since it was launched in 1975 Canadian Public Policy has become established as the leading journal of economic and social policy in Canada.

Widely read by academics, government officials and members of the business community, this quarterly journal provides a wealth of information and ideas on policy issues of concern in both Canada and the United States.

Forthcoming issues will carry articles on copyright revision, agricultural and forestry policy, television, racial discrimination, softwood lumber trade policy, and Canada-US free trade. In addition each regular issue contains a valuable section of book reviews.

From time to time special supplements are published on such topics as:-

- "Western Canadian Economic Development: Energy Policy and Alternative Strategies"
- "The Macdonald Report"
- "Canada-United States Trade and Policy Issues" and in 1988
- "The Meech Lake Accord".

These supplements are mailed to subscribers free of charge.

Subscription rates for institutions: $50 in Canada; $58 outside Canada. Sample copies are available on request. Special reduced rates are available for sets of back issues.

Please mail subscription orders or enquiries to:

Business Office, Canadian Public Policy
Room 039, MacKinnon Building
University of Guelph
Guelph, Ontario, Canada, N1G 2W1

88T4146

Johnston, William A. (Dept Sociology U Western Ontario, London N6A 3K7), Social Divisions and Ideological Fragmentation, ♦ Canadian Journal of Sociology/Cahiers canadiens de sociologie, 1987, 12, 4, winter, 315-329

¶ Descriptive accounts of Wc consciousness ultimately are warranted by the strength of the explanations that underlie them. One such explanation asserts that Wc consciousness is fragmented because of internal structural differentiation according to sex, ethnicity, religion, region, & skill. From a 1979 national survey of the Canadian population (N = 3,475), data on members of the Wc who were employed at least 20 hours/week (N = 923) are extracted for analysis. Political attitudes of Rs do not vary in ways that support this explanation, only regional differentiation has any substantial impact on political views. Students of collective action should move beyond purely internal examinations to consider the impact of class relations & political strategies. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 57 References. Modified HA

88T4147

Lambert, Ronald D., Curtis, James E., Brown, Steven D. & Kay, Barry J. (U Waterloo, Ontario N2L 3G1), Social Class, Left/Right Political Orientations, and Subjective Class Voting in Provincial and Federal Elections, ♦ La Revue Canadienne de Sociologie et d'Anthropologie/The Canadian Review of Sociology and Anthropology, 1987, 24, 4, Nov, 526-549

¶ Data from the 1984 Canadian National Election Study is used to test predictions about the comparative levels of subjective SC voting (SCV) in provincial & federal elections, interprovincial differences in SCV, & the contributions of SES & selected social-psychological intervening variables to the explanation of SCV. In general, more evidence is found of SCV in provincial elections than in federal elections. Also, provincial & federal SCV was generally highest in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, & Manitoba, & lowest in Quebec. Finally, the addition of two social-psychological variables (Rs' SC self-placements & self-descriptions on a Left/Right political orientation rating scale) to the standard objective SES indicators (occupation, income, & education) greatly increased the total variance explained in SCV. Some observations are made about the circumstances under which SC voting will be maximized vs minimized, & about the desirability of viewing the specialized problem of SC voting within the larger context of voting theory. 4 Tables, 31 References. HA

88T4148

Lay, Vladimir (Institut društvena istraživanja, Zagreb Yugoslavia), Kvalitet svakidašnjeg života društvenih grupa: Neki osnovni materijalni pokazatelji (Quality of Everyday Life of Social Groups), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 19-29. (SCR)

¶ An investigation of the quality of life (QoL) in Yugoslavia, using questionnaire data on household income, housing, appliances, transportation, & summer vacations obtained from political leaders, managers, intellectuals, clerks, skilled labor, craftsmen, farmers, & unskilled workers (Σ N = 3,619). The hypothesis was confirmed that there is a hierarchy in QoL corresponding to the hierarchy of SCs: political leaders & managers have the highest QoL, while industrial & agricultural workers have the lowest. The DoL is therefore responsible for several basic material aspects of everyday life. 4 Tables. Modified HA

88T4149

Lazić, Mladen (IDIS, Zagreb Yugoslavia), Mobilnost i homogenizacija vladajuće klase u SR Hrvatskoj (Mobility and Homogenization of the Ruling Class in Croatia), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 57-66. (SCR)

¶ Using results of a survey (N not provided) of vertical mobility in Yugoslavia (Lazić, Mladen, Reprodukcija društvenih grupa u SR Hrvatskoj [The Reproduction of Social Groups in Croatia], Zagreb: Institut Socijal Research, 1986), factors related to the homogeneity of the ruling SC are examined. During the first decades of Communist power in Yugoslavia, the ruling SC was an open group, however, over time the homogeneity of the group increased, indicating decreasing mobility. It is concluded that the earlier an individual enters the ruling class, the more closely he tends to personally identify with its interests; also, the stability of all SCs is increasing, especially in the managerial sector. 2 Tables. Modified HA

88T4150

Leiulforsrud, Hakon & Woodward, Allison (Dept Sociology U Essex, Wivenhoe Park Colchester CO4 3SQ England), Women at Class Crossroads: Repudiating Conventional Theories of Family Class, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 3, Aug, 393-412.

¶ In a recent article (see SA 32 2/84N8795), J. H. Goldthorpe proposes to classify two-partner families according to the SC position of the main (usually M) breadwinner. This approach discounts the importance of the other partner's work experience within the family. The special case of the cross-class couple, as illustrated by interviews with 30 cross-class couples residing in Stockholm, Sweden, indicates that diametrically opposed SC experiences have significant effects on dynamics within the family unit. Swedish national statistical data from 1980 also call several assumptions of the conventional approach into question. Women's work makes a significant difference in everyday family life—especially in-home DoL & cultural capital access—& should affect the classification of families in SC analysis. 6 Tables, 69 References. Modified HA

88T4151

Macnicol, John (Royal Holloway Coll U London, Egham Surrey TW20 OEX England), In Pursuit of the Underclass, ♦ U Journal of Social Policy, 1987, 16, 3, July, 293-318

¶ The 1970s saw a wide ranging debate in GB, initiated by Sir Keith Joseph, on the apparent existence of a cycle of deprivation. Most participants viewed this debate as having originated in the 1960s, but in fact versions of the general concept of an intergenerational underclass have figured prominently in social debates during the past 100 years. In particular, in the interwar period there were several investigations of a hereditary social problem group, investigations that were crucial to a wider conservative social reformist strategy. These investigations produced inconclusive results, however, because ultimately the underclass is a statistical artefact, the existence of which can only be argued by the use of several serious methodological contradictions. 68 References. HA

88T4152

McPherson, Andrew & Willms, J. Douglas (U Edinburgh, EH1 9LW Scotland), Equalisation and Improvement: Some Effects of Comprehensive Reorganisation in Scotland, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 4, Nov, 509-539

¶ The effect of Scotland's comprehensive school reorganization (beginning in the early 1970s) on SES achievement & associated gender inequalities was studied by analyzing examination scores in relation to SC & gender of students. The reform eliminated biased selection of pupils improved comprehensive education, & raised the school-leaving age to 16. Data from the 1977, 1981, & 1985 Scottish School Leavers Surveys (N = 16,307, 23,151, & 6,354, respectively) indicate a rise in pupils' educational achievement, especially among Fs & lower SE groups, resulting in decreased SC- & gender-based inequality of achievement. 1 Table, 7 Figures, 71 References. D. Graves

88T4153

Mercure, Daniel (U Quebec, Hull J8X 3X7), Position sociale et représentations de l'avenir (Social Status and the Future Time Perspective), Recherches Sociologiques, 1987, 18, 3, 255-282. (FRE)

¶ Based on a series of in-depth interviews, a typology of future time perspectives for individuals of different SCs is presented. Both husbands & wives in a sample of 51 Quebec couples were interviewed between 1979 & 1983. The sample was stratified among 3 different age groups (18-34, 35-49, & 50-65) & 6 different SE groups, as determined by the occupational category of the husband. It was found that social position determines not only wealth & material security but also, to a great extent, individuals' possibility of controlling their future & determining their own goals & objectives. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 42 References. Modified HA

88T4154

Metcalfe, Andrew (Dept Anthropology & Sociology Macquarie U, North Ryde New South Wales 2113 Australia), 'The Dull Compulsion of Economic Relations': A Critique of the Zero-Sum Conception of Oppression, ♦ U Mankind, 1986, 16, 3, Dec, 167-180.

¶ A critique of the zero-sum conception of oppression based on a case study of the South Maitland Coalfields region of New South Wales, Australia, in the early 1900s. The labor/capital relationship was much more intimate than suggested by the zero-sum model, trapping laborers into double binds based on their contradictory understandings of their political interests. The miners had a short-term interest in defending their strategic accommodations with employers; but they had a long-term interest in fundamental change. Double binds are rooted in a "tertiary neg de la Garza, Enrique, et al (U Autónoma Metropolitana Iztapalapa, 09000 Mexico DF), La investigación sobre la base obrera en México: un balance preliminar (Research on the Base of the Working Class in Mexico: A Preliminary Account), Nueva Antropología, 1986, 8, 29, Apr, 85-105. (SPA)

88T4137

¶ Studies of the Wc in Mexico are critically reviewed, focusing on new tendencies in such research since 1968. Three major areas of study are identified, & their problems are analyzed: (1) the various workers' movements & the struggle for democracy in the unions, (2) the LF, the labor market, & worker migration, & (3) the work process itself. 49 References. C. Waters

88T4138

Dekker, Paul & Ester, Peter (Dutch Social & Cultural Planning Office, Rijswijk Netherlands), Working-Class Authoritarianism: A Re-Examination of the Lipset Thesis, European Journal of Political Research, 1987, 15, 4, 395-415

¶ Seymour Martin Lipset's thesis that the Wc is more predisposed to authoritarian & antidemocratic attitudes than are other SCs (see SA 8 1/607105) is questioned based on the argument that his conceptualization & measurement of SC are inaccurate & inappropriate. Erik Olin Wright's empirical class model (Class, Crisis and the State, London Verso, 1979) is applied to an analysis of authoritarian attitudes among random samples of the Dutch population, using data from interview surveys conducted in 1975, 1979, 1980, 1983, & 1985. Results do not indicate that the Wc is more authoritarian; rather, education seems to be the most important factor. It is concluded that the measurement of SC is crucial to whether the theory of Wc authoritarianism is empirically supported or not; some theoretical consequences are briefly discussed. 6 Tables, 1 Figure, 37 References. Modified HA

88T4139

Donaldson, Mike (Sociology Dept U Wollongong, New South Wales 2500 Australia), Labouring Men: Love, Sex and Strife, ♦ The Australian and New Zealand Journal of Sociology, 1987, 23, 2, July, 165-184.

¶ The interrelations between SC situation & experience, paid work, the family-household, masculinity, & M heterosexuality, as they are borne & reproduced by laboring men, are explored. The Wc, of which laboring men are a small part, can be understood in its strategic power & weaknesses only through the study of the whole lives of its members as they stand in contradiction to capital & its forces & agencies. Insights from the sociologies of the labor process & the Wc, studies of masculinity, & Marxist feminism are drawn together in a historical materialist framework to analyze the personal accounts of about 40 laboring men in Australia. 97 References. Modified HA

88T4140

Duke, Vic & Edgell, Stephen (Dept Sociology & Anthropology U Salford, Lancashire M5 4WT England), The Operationalization of Class in British Sociology: Theoretical and Empirical Considerations, ♦ The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 4, Dec, 445-463

¶ British sociology in recent years has given considerable attention to debate over the operationalization of class. Three basic choices are identified, each with both conceptual & methodological aspects: (1) conceptual scheme: conventional occupational class or neo-Marxist SC, (2) unit of analysis: individual or household, & (3) degree of coverage: whether to include the economically inactive. Following the ideas of R. Erikson (see SA 33 2/8507493), it is suggested that choice of unit of analysis & of degree of coverage depends on whether the research focus is on production or consumption. This leaves the conceptual scheme to be chosen independently; a preference is expressed for SC rather than occupational class. Some ways of improving the quality of datasets for use in operationalizing class are also proposed. 1 Figure, 72 References. Modified HA

88T4141

Hesse-Biber, Sharlene (Dept Sociology Boston Coll, Chestnut Hill MA 02167), The Black Woman Worker: A Minority Group Perspective on Women at Work, SAGE, 1986, 3, 1, spring, 26-34.

¶ Myths & stereotypes concerning the black woman tend to neglect her dual oppression by presenting an unrealistic portrayal of her advantageous labor market vis-à-vis black men & white women. Here, these myths & stereotypes are examined via an analysis of previous studies & government statistics. It is concluded that the black woman faces double oppression, & that although her dual negative status (being a black & a woman) may create a unique third status, this unique status is equally negative. Black women have a higher LF participation rate than white women or white or black men; further, their compensation rate is less than that of white women, who in turn earn less than white or black men. Black women have higher unemployment rates, & more black families headed by women are below the poverty line. Black women do not have more favored jobs than black men, but are employed in the least desirable traditional F occupations—the service jobs & lower-level clerical & operative jobs. 1 Table. Modified AA

88T4142

Hodžić, Alija (Institut društvena istraživanja, Zagreb Yugoslavia), Vrijednosne orijentacije društvenih grupa (Value Orientations of Social Groups), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 67-73 (SCR)

¶ An examination of SE data in Yugoslavia shows that in spite of liberalism & statism at many levels of society & government, a collectivist ideology continues to dominate the country. Statist ideas are more evenly spread among the SCs than are liberal ideas, as such, statism facilitates the ideological homogenization of society. 1 Table. Modified HA

88T4143

Hojnik, Ida, Intrageneracijska in intergeneracijska mobilnost (Intragenerational and Intergenerational Mobility), ♦ Anthropos, Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1987, 1-2, 193-208 (SLO)

¶ An examination of the problem of intragenerational & intergenerational mobility is situated within the theory of aging as a social process. Empirical research on aging in Yugoslavia since WWII is surveyed. The impact of varied social factors on this process is assessed. Modified HA

88T4144

Irwin, G. A., van der Eijk, C., van Holsteynen, J. M. & Niemoller, B. (c/o van der Eijk-Vakgroep Methoden en Technieken Politicologisch Onderzoek U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands), Verzuiling, issues, kandidaten en ideologie in de verkiezingen van 1986 (Pillarization, Issues, Candidates, and Ideology in the 1986 Elections), Acta Politica, 1987, 22, 2, Apr, 129-179 (DUT)

¶ Results from the 1986 parliamentary elections in the Netherlands are examined to assess the impact on voting behavior of several major factors: pillarization, based on religion & SC; issues, candidate orientations, & ideology. The importance of religion & SC has declined since the 1950s, with religious voters supporting secular parties & secular voters also supporting religious parties, especially the Christian Democrats. Issues & economic ideology are strongly related to party choice; candidate orientations also have some influence. Each of these perspectives explains part of voter behavior; together they yield two discriminant functions, one correlated with Left-Right orientation, various political issues, & support for various candidates, the other with religiosity & abortion attitudes. Together, these discriminant functions correctly classify 52% of voters by party preferences. 20 Tables, 2 Figures. Modified HA

88T4145

Johnson, R. Burke (U Virginia, Charlottesville 22903), Income Inequality in the Third World: A Comparison of Three Theories, ♦ International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 69-81.

¶ Intercountry differences in income inequality have been explained in several ways in recent research. Three of the most often cited theories of inequality are delineated. Factor analysis shows a clustering of the variables used to measure each theory on separate factors, which can be identified as the economic development model, the political-democracy model, & the world-systems model. A cross-sectional polynomial regression analysis of income statistics on 61 nations (George Thomas Kurian's The Encyclopedia of the Third World, New York, NY: Facts on File, 1982) shows the economic development model to be the most important in explaining inequality in the Third World, though it only received modest support. The results suggest that there is considerable variation in the relationship between development & inequality in different parts of the Third World, & imply that mechanisms operating in the Third World may be different from those operating during the development of the West. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 32 References. Modified HA

88T4163

Slim, Birte (Institut Social Development & Planning Aalborg U Center, 9100 Denmark), The Scandinavian Welfare States—Towards Sexual Equality or a New Kind of Male Domination?, ♦ Acta Sociologica, 1987, 30, 3-4, 255-270.

¶ The feminist, liberal, & Marxist perspectives of the Scandinavian welfare states are examined & compared. Although these states are among the most progressive worldwide in relation to women, those taking a feminist viewpoint note the absence of the concept of gender in liberal & Marxist analyses of the welfare state. The fundamental concepts have been either the individual or the class, & the determining developmental forces of the welfare state have been in the political or economic spheres, or in the interrelation between the two. The need to integrate gender relations in the theoretical model for welfare state analysis is emphasized, since women's needs & interests are in danger of being subsumed by administrative & political centralization, which, in the interest of economic class organization, has only begun to recognize women's needs as separate & legitimate. 48 References. Modified HA

88T4164

Stewart, Charles T., Jr. (Dept Economics George Washington U, Washington DC 20052), Structural Change and Intergenerational Occupational Mobility, Journal of Developing Areas, 1987, 21, 2, Jan, 141-157

¶ Countries undergoing rapid structural change must increase rapidly the supply of professional & technical workers, because this increase is concentrated in younger age groups, who remain employed for decades, occupational opportunities for later generations may be more limited. Here, intergenerational occupational opportunity in Japan, Taiwan, & South Korea is examined, utilizing official statistics. In each nation, those aged 30+ comprised the age group with the highest proportion in professional/technical occupations in 1960; by 1980, those aged 20-24 held this position in Japan, & those aged 25-29 in Taiwan & Korea. A regression equation is used to estimate the growth rate required to provide the same occupational opportunities for workers aged 25-29 in the year 2000. Results indicate that Japan would have to grow 2.9% a year, Korea 4.4%, & Taiwan 5.7%, assuming no increase in educational attainment or LF participation after 1980; the difference is attributable to the timing of birth declines. If occupational opportunity is defined as the ratio of professional & technical jobs to workers with a post-secondary school diploma, rather than all workers aged 25-29, not even Japan has any prospect of achieving intergenerational equality of occupational attainment. It is concluded that occupational opportunity has already fallen dramatically in Taiwan, has fallen less in Japan because of decreased size of younger cohorts, but remains relatively high in South Korea. 8 Tables. AA

88T4165

Teasdale, T. W. & Owen, David R. (Dept Educational Psychology & Technology School Education U Southern California, Los Angeles 90089-0031), The Influence of Paternal Social Class on Intelligence and Educational Level in Male Adoptees and Non-Adoptees, ♦ The British Journal of Educational Psychology, 1986, 56, 1, Feb, 3-12.

¶ Based on data from draft board records, the IQ scores & educational levels of Danish M adoptees (N = 241) aged 18-26 are found to correlate with the SC of both their biological & adoptive fathers. The r between the biological father's SC & the adoptee's educational level may be largely mediated by the inheritance of characteristics more directly measured by the IQ test, & conversely, the r between the adoptive father's SC & the adoptee's IQ score may be largely mediated by familial environmental influences on educational level. However, the multiple correlations of both biological & adoptive fathers' SC with adoptees' IQ scores & educational levels do not differ significantly from the simple r of fathers' SC with sons' IQ test scores & educational level in a non-adoptive control sample of 4,020 father-son pairs (using data from "Criminality in XYY and XXY Men," by H. A. Witkin et al, Science, 1976, 193, 547-555). Results suggest that familial influences on IQ test scores & educational level may be adequately accounted for by an additive model including both genetic & familial environment components. 3 Tables, 33 References. Modified HA

88T4166

Tomc, Gregor & Pešec, Mojca (Inštit sociologijo, Ljubljana Yugoslavia), Družbena enakost in neenakost v Sloveniji (Social Equality and Inequality in Slovenia), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 163-178 (SLV)

¶ An examination of the relationship of SES & degree of active participation in politics & community affairs in Slovenia using questionnaire data (N not given). Negative features of Slovene SC structure include: crystallized SS & political affiliation, wider gap between Lc & Mc than between Mc & Uc; & wide dichotomies between the lifestyles of the politically active & inactive. These features may occur because: (1) SC relations under socialism are maintained primarily by convention, & (2) significant aspects of the functioning of society are politically determined. 8 Tables, 1 Reference. Modified HA

88T4167

Trommsdorff, Gisela, Suzuki, Tatsuzo & Sasaki, Masamichi (FB Psychologie Sozialwissenschaftliche Fakultät U Konstanz, D-7750 Federal Republic Germany), Soziale Ungleichheiten in Japan und der Bundesrepublik Deutschland (Social Inequalities in Japan and the Federal Republic of Germany), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 3, Sept, 496-515 (GER)

¶ Attitudes toward social differentiation & inequality in Japan & West Germany are compared. Data are drawn from representative population surveys conducted in 1982 in West Germany (N = 1,487) & in 1983 in Japan (N = 2,172). Aspects examined include attitudes toward gender roles, SC, material well-being, & work. Analysis shows a clear structure of values related to social inequality in West Germany, where SC & economic situation are relevant for structuring values & attitudes. The concept of SC is imbedded differently in the value system in Japan. It is concluded that theories on modernization & value change need to take into account culture-specific values related to social inequality. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 56 References. Modified HA

88T4168

Vidich, Arthur J. (New School Social Research, New York NY 10011), Klasa i religija u američkoj politici (Class and Religion in US Politics), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 181-195 (SCR)

Translated from English by Vesna Popovski.

¶ Roots of modern-day US cultural attitudes toward work & thrift can be traced back to the Protestant values established during the colonial era & maintained throughout the nineteenth century by the established Mc. The Great Depression of the 1930s damaged this value system, & the resulting vacuum was filled by Keynesian economics, which proposed that society could be made prosperous by assuring the abundance of both consumption & production instead of by capital formation through worker savings as was traditionally held. During the 1980s, the crisis of Keynesianism led to neoconservative movements stressing the importance of the nuclear family, free enterprise, hard work, honesty, integrity, & traditional morals. However, this romantic affirmation of the past is contradictory in a society whose major organizing principles are centralized state bureaucracy, mass communications, & information systems that penetrate the lives of all citizens. The enormous federal budget deficit, the central symbol of Keynesianism, was vastly expanded under the Reagan administration. Modified HA

88T4169

Young, M. Crawford (Dept Political Science U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Nationalism, Ethnicity, and Class in Africa: A Retrospective, Cahiers d'Etudes Africaines, 1986, 26, 3(103), 421-495

¶ A critical review of a quarter-century of Africanist scholarship concerned with the separate but interrelated themes of nationalism, SC, & ethnicity. Nationalism was chronologically the first to acquire analytical prominence, serving as dominant paradigm for the first generation of postindependence scholarship. However, except to the extent that it was absorbed in dependency theory & ideological discourse, it has dwindled as an analytical theme. Ethnicity emerged as a vital focus of inquiry subsequently, with a veritable conceptual revolution in its interpretation, which now enjoys a substantial consensus. SC at the present time is the unresolved problematic, generating intense debates & fragmented interpretations. Despite the demise of once-influential approaches—eg, the mode of production model—the importance & conceptual indeterminism of this sphere of inquiry is likely to produce the richest body of literature in the period immediately ahead. 321 References. AA ative injunction" that prohibits the victim from stepping out of the relationship where the double bind exists. Capitalists in the South Maitland Coalfield did not hesitate to squander its long-term use value in pursuit of profit, nor to harm the LF in the same pursuit. Miners opposed this wastage, but remained dependent on wages & employment in ways that vitiated any political struggle. 3 Tables, 84 References. Modified HA

88T4155

Molik, Witold & Makowski, Krzysztof (Instytut Historii U Adam Mickiewicza, Marchlewskiego 124-126 61-874 Poznań Poland), Breaking of Social Barriers as an Expression of the Emergence of a Modern Society in the Mid-19th Century—Based on the Example of Selected Polish Towns, Historical Social Research/Historische Sozialforschung, 1986, 39, July, 86-100.

¶ One of the most important symptoms of the emergence of modern societies was the phenomenon of the breaking of social barriers. Here, the nature of this phenomenon in nineteenth-century Poland is examined, focusing on the criterion of selection of a wife, using Protestant & Catholic parish registry documents from Warsaw & Poznań from the periods 1845-1848 & 1858-1861, comparative analysis illustrates the old social division & the emergence of new divisions typical of capitalism, both in Poznań, the main Ur center of an agricultural province, & in Warsaw, the capital of a dynamically developing industrial region. 2 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T4156

Morris, Lydia (Dept Sociology & Social Policy U Durham, DH1 3HP England), The No-Longer Working Class, New Society, 1987, 80, 1266, 3 Apr, 16-18.

¶ An examination of ways that recent economic changes in GB particularly the rise in M unemployment & married F's entering the LF has contributed to changes in traditional gender roles within marriage & affected the structure of the nuclear family. Data from the 1984 General Household Survey & interviews conducted in Hartlepool & South Wales (N not provided) cast doubt on the belief that unemployed Ms are assuming more domestic & childrearing duties as their wives go off to work. Rather, women retain primary responsibility for these tasks, particularly if they work only part-time, since their earnings are generally not sufficient to replace their husbands as "breadwinners." It appears that when a way of life is challenged, people tend to cling more strongly to the traditional principles on which it was based. 3 Drawings, 6 References. K Hyatt

88T4157

Mrkšić, Danilo (Faculty Philosophy U Belgrade, YU-11000 Yugoslavia), Podela rada i stratifikacija jugoslovenskog društva (Division of Labor and Stratification of Yugoslav Society), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 3-18 (SCR)

¶ The differentiation of Yugoslav SCs provides the basis of the DoFL, & is linked to the differentiation of positions in political, SS, & economic power relationships. The sources of social power are relatively autonomous, so that political, professional, & economic dimensions of social stratification do not correspond fully to each other. Four main SCs are identified relative to the DoFL: the political elite, the Me, industrial workers, & peasants. These classes are themselves vertically & horizontally differentiated. Sociologists have tended to concentrate on the dominant elements within each SC, rather than on all elements equally. Modified HA

88T4158

Onabadejo, Martins Adekunle (Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122), Class and Ethnicity in a Changing Nigeria, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1034-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711387.

88T4159

Pearson, David G. (Sociology Dept Victoria U, Wellington New Zealand), Questions of Mobility, New Zealand Sociology, 1987, 2, 2, Nov, 140-148

¶ A review essay on books by: Monica Boyd, et al, Ascription and Achievement: Studies in Mobility and Status Attainment in Canada (Ottawa, Carleton U Press, 1985); & Frank L Jones & Peter Davis, Models of Society (Sydney: Croom Helm, 1986 [see listings in IRPS No. 42]). A comprehensive outline of the findings of the Canadian Mobility study of Boyd et al & Jones's & Davis's mobility studies of Australia &

New Zealand is provided. Based on national surveys conducted in the early to mid-1970s, both studies examine rates of generational & inter-generational occupational mobility using retrospective cohort analysis. Relationships between occupational &/or SC background, educational attainment, family origins, & family size are explored, & the position of women is examined. The Canadian study also investigates geographical mobility rates & ethnic differentiation. The Australian studies provide additional information on class endogamy & exogamy through a study of marriage patterns & occupational mobility rates. Points of convergence & divergence between the three societies surveyed are discussed, & the merits, along with conceptual & historical shortcomings of occupational mobility studies, are considered. More productive debate between historians & sociologists in the study of social mobility is urged. Modified AA

88T4160

Rothschild-Whitt, Joyce & Whitt, J. Allen (Dept Sociology/Anthropology/Social Work U Toledo, OH 43606), Worker-Owners as an Emergent Class: Effects of Cooperative Work on Job Satisfaction, Alienation and Stress, Economic and Industrial Democracy, 1986, 7, 3, Aug, 297-317

¶ In light of the recent proliferation of several types of cooperatives in the US & Western Europe, it is argued that the worker-owners, or co-operators, in these organizations occupy an emergent SC position that is structurally different from that of conventional workers or of the petite bourgeoisie, their two nearest SC equivalents. It is argued that this new SC position has implications for the job satisfaction, expectations, alienation, & stress associated with work. Empirical findings from several studies are used to develop some original hypotheses & to provide suggestive evidence concerning the effects of worker-ownership & control on the individual worker-owners. It is argued that although workplace democracy may bring more meaning & sense of community to work, certain structural features of cooperatives also give rise to high levels of personal stress. 1 Table, 28 References. HA

88T4161

Rothstein, Bo (Dept Government Uppsala U, 751 05 Sweden), Corporatism and Reformism: The Social Democratic Institutionalization of Class Conflict, ♦ Acta Sociologica, 1987, 30, 3-4, 295-311

¶ The relationship between social democratic states & corporatist structures is explored by considering the degree of corporatism in Western states such as Austria, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, & West Germany. Corporatism is related to class conflict, the labor market, the state, & implementation of public policy in a comparison between these nations. The result is a firm relationship between states with both strong corporatist structures & a successful reformist labor movement. This finding contradicts the generally held concept of corporatism as a means of incorporating an unwilling We into the capitalist system. It is argued that an understanding of the relationship between corporatism & social democracy can be achieved by scrutinizing the logic of the bargaining system between capitalists & workers, which is brought forth by capitalist relations of production. 61 References. Modified HA

88T4162

Shu-Ling Tsai & Chung-I Wen, Title appears in Chinese (Gender and Social Mobility: An Empirical Study of Taiwan), ♦ Chung Yang Yen Chiu Yuan Min Tsu Hsueh Yen Chiu So Chi K'an/Bulletin of the Institute of Ethnology Academia Sinica, 1985, 60, autumn, 121-147 (CHI)

¶ An analysis of three-stratum intergenerational & intragenerational mobility classifications for working Ms & Fs in Taiwan based on the Wen & Chang survey of 1979. Log-multiplicative models are used to compare sex differences & similarities in mobility patterns. Substantial similarity between the sexes is found in intergenerational mobility from father's status to offspring's current status. The best-fitting model is the "perfect industry mobility model," which describes status inheritance as common for the agricultural & service sectors but not for the industrial sector. Significant sex differences are apparent in intergenerational mobility from father's status to offspring's first-job status, & in intragenerational mobility from offspring's first-job status to offspring's current status. The quasi-perfect mobility model best fits both cases for Ms; for Fs, the perfect industry mobility model best fits mobility from father's status to offspring's first-job status, but the uniform inheritance model best fits intragenerational mobility. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 2 Appendixes, 62 References. Modified HA

88T4179

Bojer, Hilde (Sosialøkonomisk institutt U Oslo, Blindern NL-0316 3 Norway). Personlig inntektsfordeling i Norge 1970-1984 (Personal Distribution of Income in Norway 1970-1984). Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 3, 247-257 (NOR)

* The Gini index of income inequality is estimated using Norwegian survey data collected between 1970 & 1984, calculated in various years for all income earners, Ms & Fs separately, households, & by SE/age group. Results show great stability in the distribution of personal income as measured by the Gini coefficient, however, there are characteristic differences between groups of income earners that are also stable over time. Fs show consistently greater inequality than Ms, lower average income, & less variation of income with age, this finding is attributed to women's overrepresentation in part-time work, though their overall level of LF participation has increased. Young people have the highest Gini coefficient of any group, confirming the importance of LF participation & working hours in explaining income inequality. Finally, though inequality among households is less than the inequality among individuals, it is not less than that among M income earners. 7 Tables, 14 References. Modified HA

88T4180

Bridges, Judith S. (U Connecticut, West Hartford 06117). College Females' Perceptions of Adult Roles and Occupational Fields for Women, Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 11-12, June, 591-604

¶ Coll Fs' perceptions of the maternal & career roles held by adult married Fs were investigated in a $2 \times 2 \times 3$ between-Ss experimental design in which maternal role, career role, & sex dominance of occupational/educational field were varied. Ss ($N = 322$) read descriptions of 1 of 24 hypothetical women who held roles of wife only, wife/mother, wife/career, or wife/mother/career, & (if they worked) were employed in M-dominated, F-dominated, or neutral occupations. Ss then answered questions about the woman's demographic & personality characteristics, marital, emotional, & role satisfaction, & overall rating of likeability & similarity to themselves. Factor analyses indicate that each role was perceived differently in terms of the amount of conflict it generated & its costs/benefits. The wife only role was judged least attractive overall, while the wife/mother/career role was judged most desirable, though the degree of conflict associated with this latter role was subject to inaccurate & unrealistic perceptions. Occupational/educational sex dominance did not affect perceptions of role consequences, though it did influence attributions of personality characteristics, usually in a sex-stereotyped direction. The influence of self-serving cognitive biases, socialization processes, & personality factors on Ss' impressions & role expectations are considered. 3 Tables, 43 References. K Hyatt

88T4181

Brown, D. G., On Professing to Be a Profession, Dialogue, 1986, 25, 4, winter, 753-756

¶ An exploration of the sources of a reaction of immediate revulsion produced by the article "A Code of Ethics for Canadian Philosophers: A Working Paper" (Dialogue, 1986, 25, 1, spring, 179-189). The applicability of the concept of profession to philosophy is questioned, at most, it is a branch of the academic profession, & even this is granted only on condition that academic philosophy be distinguished from philosophy. There is thus no need for a distinctive code of ethics for philosophers. Academic self-policing is best done by Us as a whole, though philosophers may have contributions to make to this process. W H Stoddard

88T4182

Brown, Julie V. (Dept Sociology U North Carolina, Greensboro 27412). The Deprofessionalization of Soviet Physicians: A Reconsideration, International Journal of Health Services, 1987, 17, 1, 65-76

¶ Traditional explanations for the relatively low status of the Soviet medical profession credit the Bolshevik government in the 1920s with deprofessionalization or "leveling" of a once autonomous & powerful occupational group. New data are presented that challenge this interpretation. The Russian medical profession was never autonomous & powerful. Many MDs cooperated with the Bolsheviks because of shared beliefs regarding the organization of medical care. By the late imperial period, many MDs advocated the inclusion of all medical workers in policy-making administrative organs. Focusing on Russian psychiatrists, the events that prompted the profession to adopt this position are analyzed. The finding of greater continuity between pre- & postrevolutionary MDs suggests that this presumably anomalous case has greater significance for theoretical models of professionalization & occupational prestige than previously supposed. HA

88T4183

Burgoon, Judee K., Burgoon, Michael, Buller, David B. & Atkin, Charles K. (Dept Communication U Arizona, Tucson 85721). Communication Practices of Journalists: Interaction with Public, Other Journalists, U Journalism Quarterly, 1987, 64, 1, spring, 125-132, 275

¶ Journalists' communication practices & attitudes are examined with respect to professional insularity. Questionnaire data from 2 samples—489 journalists from 10 US newspapers, & 1,118 journalists from 83 US newspapers—are analyzed & categorized as to the means & frequencies of communication practices. Although the overall picture of journalists' communication practices does not present cause for alarm, strong evidence exists that a substantial subset of journalists are insulated from the public. This is especially true for editors & young staffers. 4 Tables. F Rasmussen

88T4184

Burch, Brian E. (School Criminology Simon Fraser U, Burnaby British Columbia V5A 1S6). Community Midwifery and State Measures: The New Midwifery in British Columbia, Contemporary Crises, 1986, 10, 4, 399-420

¶ Community midwifery has been able to endure in British Columbia despite legal prohibition: midwives earn income, obtain supplies & equipment, & lobby for legal recognition. However, community midwifery is also marginalized & illegal; out-of-hospital births comprise less than 1% of all births, & community midwives lack financial support & hospital access & are more likely to be subjected to legal penalties. This case illustrates the structural limits placed on F birth attendants operating outside the norm of hospital-situated childbirth, which preserve the monopoly status of the medical & nursing professions. However, contradictions are also evident in state policy on this issue, based on monopolistic powers, civil liberties, & gender relations. 2 Tables. Modified HA

88T4185

Butter, Irene H., Carpenter, Eugenia S., Kay, Bonnie J. & Simmons, Ruth S. (Dept Public Health Policy/Administration School Public Health U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109). Gender Hierarchies in the Health Labor Force, International Journal of Health Services, 1987, 17, 1, 133-149

¶ Rapid growth & increasing diversity characterize trends of the US health LF in recent decades. While these trends have promoted change on many different fronts of the health system, hierarchical organization of the health LF remains intact. Workers continue to be stratified by SC & race. Superimposed on both strata is a structure that segregates jobs by gender, between & within health occupations. While F health workers outnumber Ms 3:1, they remain clustered in jobs & occupations lower in pay, less prestigious, & less autonomous than those of their M counterparts. Two analytical constructs are applied to national occupational statistics to take a closer look at occupational categories, selected structural characteristics, differential rewards, & their relationship to gender segregation. Taken together, they demonstrate how women always cluster at the bottom & men at the top, no matter which dimension is chosen. 3 Tables, 3 Figures, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4186

Calliste, Agnes (Dept Sociology Saint Francis Xavier U, Antigonish Nova Scotia B0H 1C0). Sleeping Car Porters in Canada: An Ethnically Submerged Split Labour Market, Canadian Ethnic Studies/Etudes Ethniques au Canada, 1987, 19, 1, 1-20

¶ Except for the Grand Trunk Railway (GTR), which employed black cooks & waiters in its dining cars, Canadian railway companies employed blacks almost exclusively as sleeping car porters from the late 1880s until the amalgamation of the dining car & porters' locals of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport & General Workers (CBRT) in 1964. Using data from oral histories, organizational records, government documents, & other secondary sources, the process of forming an ethnically submerged split labor market in the 1920s is explored, when the Canadian National Railways (CNR) took over the GTR & replaced black waiters in the dining cars on former GTR cars with white employees. Moreover, the CNR & the CBRT agreed to a group classification system that restricted blacks to being porters only. The Canadian Pacific Railways' policies of importing porters from the US & of stifling porters' efforts to organize were instrumental in creating a double split labor market. The Canada Fair Employment Practices Act in 1953, however, gave porters the leverage they needed to combat discrimination in railway employment. HA

20 sociology of occupations & professions

88T4170

Anderson, Myrdene (Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907), The Division of Production, Distribution and Consumption in Saami Society, Ethnos, 1987, 52, 1-2, 8-27

¶ The reindeer-herding Saami, living in the Lapland regions of Sweden, Norway, & Finland, are an occupational minority within an ethnic one. It is demonstrated that for the Kautokeino Saami of Norway, the exigencies of contemporary housing, transportation, & schooling preclude women from investing as much time in supervisory herding & in husbandry decisions as was the case a generation ago. However, their rights to individual ownership of reindeer & their influence in the management of the household's total resources continue. Despite governmental efforts to transform reindeer herding into a meat-producing industry integrated with the overarching cash economy, the inputs of women in some families permit it to remain a diversified subsistence economy. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 17 References. HA

88T4171

Andrukovitch, Larisa Fedorovna & Gordon, Leonid Abramovich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leningrad Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Sotsial'nye problemy stanovleniya vseobshchego professional'nogo obrazovaniya (The Total Professional Education in the Making: The Emerging Social Problems), Izvestiya Sibirskogo otdeleniya Akademii nauk SSSR, Seriya Ekonomika i prikladnaya sotsiologiya, 1987, 2(8), May, 20-29 (RUS)

¶ The development of total professional education is a key aspect of current Soviet economic reform. The existing system has changed little since the 1940s & is in need of review. Efforts will be made to integrate the acquisition of job skills with secondary education. The current drop-out rate of 5% from technical schools is partially attributable to poor general education for secondary school graduates. Exposure to work experiences as young teenagers provides an important socialization function. Additional research on how to integrate general & professional education is necessary. G. Prostakov

88T4172

Balazs, Janos & Lengyel, Gyorgy, Fiatal kozgazdászok a gazdasági szervezetben (Young Economists in the Economic Organization), Szociológia, 1983, 4, 375-387 (HUN)

¶ An examination of the career opportunities & problems of young Hungarian economists working in applied rather than theoretical fields. Two distinct types of employers exist: on the one hand, banks & economic management organizations, & on the other, enterprises. The former favor loyalty & formal efficiency as criteria for recruitment; informal contacts play a substantial role. Enterprises tend to prefer professionals already familiar with local conditions, who have graduated from evening or correspondence courses in economics. In addition, some economists become consultants or small entrepreneurs, both forms offer opportunities for creative efforts & may in time challenge the more formal economic organizations. 39 References. Modified HA

88T4173

Baraka-Love, J. (Western Michigan U, Kalamazoo 49008), Successful Women: A Racial Comparison of Variables Contributing to Socialization and Leadership Development, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1024-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714653.

88T4174

Beyazeva, Irada Fedorovna, Stimulirovanie truda inzhenerov: uroki belorusskogo eksperimenta (Stimulating the Work of Engineers: Lessons from an Experiment in Byelorussia), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 56-59 (RUS)

¶ An economic experiment was conducted by the Byelorussian Railroad that was successful in raising labor productivity 450% from 1981 to 1984. To determine worker attitudes toward these changes, questionnaire data were obtained in 1986 from 13% of technicians & midlevel employees of the Brest corridor railway (ΣN not given). About 50% reported an increase in physical fatigue & 66% reported increased nervousness following the implementation of the reforms, while 53.4% felt that their remuneration was fair, based on their labor input. It is concluded that most of the workers do not adequately understand the standards by which their labor should be evaluated. 2 Tables, 1 Reference. Modified HA

88T4175

Bird, Gloria W. & Bird, Gerald A. (Dept Family & Child Development Virginia Polytechnic Instit, Blacksburg 24061), In Pursuit of Academic Careers: Observations and Reflections of a Dual-Career Couple, Am Family Relations, 1987, 36, 1, Jan, 97-100

¶ A review of research & personal reflections on academic dual-career couples, focusing on three issues: career equity, competition & collaboration, & the tenure decision. Personal experiences are contrasted with research findings, & strategies for coping are offered. 28 References. Modified HA

88T4176

Blacksell, Mark, Economides, Kim & Watkins, Charles (Dept Geography & Law U Exeter, EX4 4QJ England), Country Solicitors: Their Professional Role in Rural Britain, Sociologia Ruralis, 1987, 27, 2-3, 181-196

¶ The changing role of lawyers in Ru areas of GB is examined by means of a survey of attorneys ($N = 83$), in the counties of Cornwall & Devon, with focus on the services provided, attorney characteristics, the nature of Ru firms, the types of legal work done, & access to clients. The results show that the lawyers see little difference between Ru & Ur firms with the following exceptions: Ru areas seem to have a greater range & complexity of problems, provide more face-to-face contact, are less accessible to clients, & offer limited service. Ur firms are seen as more efficient, having a wider range of specialized services, & being more lucrative. The indication is that lawyers are becoming more market conscious, tending to specialize in the more profitable areas & giving low priority to others. It is asserted that if this trend continues, Ru deprivation will be intensified & Ru social self-sufficiency will continue to erode. 1 Figure, 30 References. Modified HA

88T4177

Blisshen, Bernard R., Carroll, William K. & Moore, Catherine (York U, Downsview Ontario M3J 1P3), The 1981 Socioeconomic Index for Occupations in Canada, La Revue Canadienne de Sociologie et d'Anthropologie/The Canadian Review of Sociology and Anthropology, 1987, 24, 4, Nov, 465-488.

¶ A SE index for the total Canadian LF is presented, based on 1981 census data. The problems & criticisms of indexes of this kind are reviewed, & an attempt is made here to specify the meaning of SE scales & the uses to which they may be legitimately put. The present index is most applicable in situations where access to data is limited to occupational titles & where one desires a unidimensional contextual indicator that locates individuals in the Canadian occupational structure at a given point in time. Sociological analysis of structured inequality, however, may be advanced most effectively if, where feasible, a full range of methodological options is considered, including the assessment of conditions on the level of the individual, the use of other contextual levels such as the workplace, & the investigation of occupation, gender, & SC as interdependent historical products. 1 Table, 1 Appendix, 23 References. HA

88T4178

Blumstein, Alfred & Cohen, Jacqueline (School Ur Public Affairs Carnegie-Mellon U, Pittsburgh PA 15213), Characterizing Criminal Careers, Am Science, 1987, 237, 4818, 28 Aug, 985-991

¶ Most knowledge about crime & criminals derives from cross-sectional analyses that link crime rates in a community with a community's attributes. The criminal-career approach focuses on individual offenders & considers their crime-committing patterns as a longitudinal stochastic process. This approach, which invokes parameters characterizing participation rate, initiation rate, termination rate & the associated career length, & individual offending frequency, offers some important new insights. Here, it is applied to official US crime statistics & data from previous studies. Annual offending frequency appears to be reasonably constant with age for those offenders who stay criminally active; termination rates are relatively low for active offenders in their 30s, & offending frequencies seem to be relatively insensitive to demographic attributes for active offenders. All these observations are opposite to those that would be derived from cross-sectional analysis. 3 Tables, 6 Figures. Modified HA ferred of the assumptions & expectations underlying the eventual choice of the prospective incumbent, a deputy head. A model is provided of selection as an instance of career status passage. Implications are drawn for the making of panel judgments generally & for the conduct of administrative work. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 29 References. HA

88T4198

Grundy, Shirley (U New England, Armidale New South Wales 2351 Australia), Critical Pedagogy and the Control of Professional Knowledge, ♦ Discourse, 1987, 7, 2, Apr, 21-36

¶ An examination of the process of taking control of knowledge & action in the area of work. Professional knowledge comprises both content & conduct knowledge. An analysis of conduct knowledge reveals it to be tacit, traditional, & ideological. It is proposed that the control of knowledge increases as knowledge is made personal, as hermeneutic understanding is increased, & if Ideologiekritik (critique of ideology) is engaged, affording the possibility of emancipatory action for the practitioner, & requiring that practitioners become critical students of their own practice. This is a pedagogical process in which learning occurs as a consequence of a deliberate systematic & critical process of enquiry, critical pedagogy. 31 References. Modified AA

88T4199

Igbinovia, Patrick Edobor (Faculty Business & Social Sciences U Ilorin, Nigeria), African Women in Contemporary Law Enforcement, ♦ Police Studies, 1987, 10, 1, spring, 31-35.

¶ The role, status, & character of policewomen in Africa are examined. Historically, Fs have been discriminated against in their efforts to join African police forces, & those few who have managed to attain such employment have been relegated to perform as generalists working with children & women or assigned to traffic or clerical positions, rarely entrusted with actual police power & authority. Empirical evidence is reviewed that contradicts this categorical rejection of women's value in police work, & particular ways that women could be assets to African police departments are summarized. Modified HA

88T4200

Jagacinski, Carolyn M. (225 ENAD Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907), Engineering Careers: Women in a Male-Dominated Field, ♦ Psychology of Women Quarterly, 1987, 11, 1, Mar, 97-110

¶ A comparison of the background & career characteristics of M & F engineers in the US, using data from a mail survey completed by professional engineers employed full time who had received their BS degrees 0-5, 6-10, 11-15, & 16-20 years previously (between 1961 & 1981). The influence of various background & current demographic factors on issues such as career decisions, job status/values/satisfaction, & attitudes toward Fs in engineering is assessed. It is concluded that Fs entering engineering today are similar to their counterparts of twenty years ago as well as to other Fs in M-dominated fields. However, in relation to M engineers, Fs are not receiving the same career advancement opportunities. Further research is needed to evaluate the impact of sex discrimination, personality factors, & individual career decisions on this status discrepancy. 3 Tables, 28 References. Modified HA

88T4201

Jepson, Michael E., Thomas, J. Stephen & Robbins, Michael C. (U South Alabama, Mobile 36688), The "Skipper Effect" among Gulf Coast Shrimp Fishermen, ♦ Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 20-24

¶ Some social scientists argue that captains play a crucial role in the success of commercial fishing ventures, while others disagree. The research reported here used a subjective measure of success, based on interview data from 150 fishermen in Ala, & rankings by an informant of 106 of these, that lent support for the existence of a "skipper effect." Such personalistic variables as years of experience & being from a fishing family become significant predictors of success when measured in such a manner. 2 Tables, 6 References. Modified AA

88T4202

Kengyel, Miklós, A polgári igazságszolgáltatás mint empirikus vizsgálatok tárgya (The Administration of Civil Justice as a Subject of Empirical Studies), Társadalomkutatás, 1986, 3-4, 69-81. (HUN)

¶ Legal studies in the 1970s gave considerable emphasis to survey data on the enforcement of civil law & the efficiency of the administration of justice. The results of these surveys are summarized & assessed on an international comparative basis. The specific findings of Hungarian research are examined in more detail. Modified HA

88T4203

Kraut, Robert E. & Grambsch, Patricia (Bell Communications Research, Rm 2E-232 435 South St Morristown NJ 07960), Home-Based White Collar Employment: Lessons from the 1980 Census, ♦ Social Forces, 1987, 66, 2, Dec, 410-426

¶ Analysis of 1980 Census data reveals that only 1.6% of the US LF reported home as their primary place of employment in 1980, a % that has been declining since 1960. A decision to work at home seems based in part on an equilibrium between needs for employment flexibility & needs for earned income. As a result, people who work at home are generally those who would have the most trouble being employed outside the home, because of social or physical constraints: mothers, the elderly, the disabled, & people living in Ru areas. Homeworkers earn substantially less than conventional workers, indicating that those most likely to work at home are those who depend least on their own earned income: nonblack married women & people with household income over & above their own earnings. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 29 References. Modified HA

88T4204

Kressel, Kenneth & Hochberg, Allan M. (Dept Psychology Rutgers U, Newark NJ 07102), Divorce Attorneys: Assessment of a Typology and Attitudes towards Legal Reform, Journal of Divorce, 1987, 10, 3-4, spring-summer, 1-14

¶ An attempt is made to validate a previously identified classification of divorce attorneys as either psychologically minded, cooperatively oriented counselors or more technically oriented, competitively motivated advocates (see SA 32 1/84N6196). In addition, attorneys' attitudes toward divorce reform, particularly divorce mediation, are assessed using interview data from 81 members of the Family Law Section of the NJ State Bar Assoc & a subsample (N = 27) who completed the Lawyer Role Questionnaire (LRQ). The concordance rate between advocate/counselor classification in the interview & LRQ was not statistically different from chance, methodological & conceptual explanations for this inability to validate the typology are discussed. Nearly all Rs expressed considerable dissatisfaction with current legal procedures, & divorce mediation was unpopular with 50% of the sample, implications for legal reform & the acceptance of divorce mediation are discussed. Overall, findings are consistent with the notion that the lawyer's role in divorce cases is highly stressful. 1 Table, 19 References. Modified HA

88T4205

LaRosa, Michele (Dpt Sociologia U Bologna, I-40126 Italy), Il lavoro come prestazione: verso nuovi significati? (Work as Professional Performance: A New Meaning for the Future?), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 2, Apr-June, 139-152 (ITA)

¶ The sociological implications derived from considering work as professional performance are explored. In particular, four processes that have historically led to this trend are analyzed. (1) the separation between manual & intellectual work, (2) the process of increased fragmentation; (3) the evaluation of professional performance with reference to regularly defined standards, & (4) the progressive substitution of the machine for human work. It is argued that the first three processes are in an apparently irreversible crisis; the last one is therefore presented not so much as a necessity but as an opportunity that historically has not yet been seized. 2 Tables. Modified HA

88T4206

Maguire, Brendan & Wozniak, John F. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Western Illinois U, Macomb 61455), Racial and Ethnic Stereotypes in Professional Wrestling, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 3, July, 261-273

¶ Professional wrestling is distinct from typical sports in a variety of ways, including its presentation of ethnic & racial stereotypes. Over a twelve-month period, all weekly wrestling shows that featured events in the World Wrestling Federation in a regional TV market were recorded & content analyzed. Numerous ethnic stereotypes were identified. Some possible theoretical interpretations are suggested from the perspectives of cultural anthropology, phenomenological sociology, psychoanalysis, & Marxism. 57 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4207

Manuil'skiy, Maksim Anatol'evich, Stanovlenie professional'nogo samosoznaniya (The Development of Professional

88T4187

Carroll, William K. (U Victoria, British Columbia V8W 2Y2), Which Women Are More Proletarianized? Gender, Class and Occupation in Canada, in La Revue Canadienne de Sociologie et d'Anthropologie/The Canadian Review of Sociology and Anthropology, 1987, 24, 4, Nov, 571-585

¶ Using a special tabulation of 1981 Canadian Census data, an assessment is made of the extent to which gender differences in SC reflect the occupational segregation of women into proletarianized positions, & also, after controlling for the effects of occupational segregation, where in the occupational structure gender differences in SC are most evident. Findings lend clear support to the claim that women are more proletarianized than men. Much of this tendency reflects women's exclusion from occupations in which ownership of the means of production is still an option. Controlling for the sexual DoFL, there remains a weak direct relation between gender & SC, & dramatic gender differences in SC within certain occupations. These results are discussed in terms of the historical conditions that have shaped the SC positions of women & men in specific occupations. 5 Tables, 26 References. HA

88T4188

Carter, David L. (Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824), Hispanic Police Officers' Perception of Discrimination, in Police Studies, 1986, 9, 4, winter, 204-210

¶ Survey & interview data indicate that Hispanic police officers (N = 95 Ms & 6 Fs) in the Hispanic-American community of McAllen, Tex, perceive that they are discriminated against by the police organization & believe that minority citizens have experienced discrimination from law enforcement personnel. 12 References. Modified HA

88T4189

Chandani, Ambika (Dept Sociology U Jodhpur, 342003 Rajasthan India), Doctors: Their Participation and Outlook, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 131-140

¶ Interviews conducted with 152 registered MDs in the city of Jodhpur, India, reveal that Ss have little involvement in or support for political parties & little participation in other political activities, apart from voting. Membership in the professional medical association is more common among the 119 institutional practitioners (61.3%) than among the 33 private practitioners (48.5%). Participation in community health programs was common, & willingness to perform honorary services even more so, in addition, MDs very often advised patients on subjects outside of medical practice strictly defined. 5 Tables, 2 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4190

Chilvers, Michelle R. (School Pharmacy U Colorado, Boulder 80309-0297), Improving the Quality of Work Life in the Institutional Pharmacy Setting, in Journal of Social and Administrative Pharmacy, 1987, 4, 2, 70-76

¶ Frederick Herzberg's dual-factor theory of job satisfaction (Work and the Nature of Man, Cleveland, Ohio: World Publishing Co, 1960) is discussed in relation to job satisfaction among pharmacists in institutional settings. Numerous studies conducted on a variety of occupational levels & different cultural backgrounds have supported Herzberg's dual-factor theory. However, when pharmacists were surveyed, interesting differences occurred. Pharmacists classified work as a dissatisfier factor & salary as a satisfier factor, while Herzberg classified work as a satisfier & salary as a dissatisfier. The manner in which pharmacists might respond to Herzberg's positive "KITA (kick in the ass)" personnel practices as a means of instilling motivation is explored. By providing more challenging work & making better use of his drug expertise, the pharmacist's quality of work life can be improved, thus leading to greater job satisfaction & enhanced human functioning. 1 Table, 3 Figures, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4191

Clark, Shirley M. & Corcoran, Mary (Dept Education & Sociology U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), The Professoriate: A Demographic Profile, in National Forum, 1987, 67, 1, winter, 28-32

¶ The demographic characteristics of US Coll & U faculty members are described, with regard to distribution among educational institutions & disciplines, personal & social attributes, age, career status, gender & minority representation, & part- or full-time employment status. A brief history of faculty demographics is included. The overview of the US professoriate (N = nearly 700,000 full- & part-time faculty) reveals a diverse group characterized as "less a social species than a genus encompassing several distinct species." The expectation of a future decline in the number of faculty & the prospect of replacing the professoriate over the next twenty-five years lead to recommendations of improving the work environment & career development of faculty, as well as addressing the issue of equity for women & minorities in the field. D. Graves

88T4192

Crompton, Rosemary (School Economic & Social Studies U East Anglia, Norwich NR4 7TJ England), Gender, Status and Professionalism, in Sociology, 1987, 21, 3, Aug, 413-428.

¶ Approaches to the location of women in the occupational structure that derive from SC theories have not been particularly successful. It is suggested that Max Weber's concept of "status" may be more useful in understanding the employment position of women. Weber's original concept of status contains ambiguities that can be clarified by thinking of status as a multidimensional quality. These ideas are applied to the position of women in the professions, a case of some importance given the recent growth in this population. 1 Figure, 52 References. Modified HA

88T4193

Elstad, Jon Ivar, Legene og samfunnet (Physicians and Society), Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 3, 290-302 (NOR)

¶ The history of the Norwegian & US medical professions is compared based on the work of Paul Starr, The Social Transformation of American Medicine (New York: Basic Books, 1982) & Øivind Larsen, Ole Berg, & Fritz Hodne, Legene og samfunnet (Physicians and Society), U of Oslo/Den norske lægeforening, 1986). Similarities are revealed in the professions' consolidation, upward mobility, & struggle for professional autonomy & economic interests. The main difference is that Norwegian MDs have comparatively stronger connections with the state through public payments & publicly-owned hospitals. The strong value bias of the Norwegian book is commented on, as is the exclusion of several aspects of the profession's history, eg, the prevention of Fs from becoming MDs. 5 References. Modified HA

88T4194

Ettema, James S. & Glasser, Theodore L. (School Journalism & Mass Communication Studies Northwestern U, Evanston, IL 60201), Public Accountability or Public Relations? Newspaper Ombudsmen Define Their Role, in Journalism Quarterly, 1987, 64, 1, spring, 3-12.

¶ A survey of North American newspaper ombudsmen (N = 32) examined their role conceptions, orientations, & values. Analysis indicates that several activities associated with public relations practitioners' image management & feedback responsibilities are strongly & widely endorsed; by comparison, activities associated with press criticism are less strongly & consistently endorsed. Ombudsmen do not necessarily see ultimate loyalty to the reader as opposing loyalty to the newspaper, yet they do not wholeheartedly endorse the idea that they are the servant of two masters. AA

88T4195

Ezell, Christopher Clarence (Vanderbilt U, Nashville TN 37240), Typesetting: A Sociological Analysis of Changing Newspaper Technology, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 757-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714426.

88T4196

Greco, Alan (111 North Lakemont Ave Suite D, Winter Park FL 32792), Scope and Nature of Sexual Harassment in Nursing, in Journal of Sex Research, 1987, 23, 2, May, 261-266.

¶ Survey data from 469 nurses residing in Boone County, Mo, reveal that sexual harassment in the workplace had been experienced by 76% of Rs, was most often perpetrated by patients & MDs, & was often of moderate severity. 6 References. Modified AA

88T4197

Gronn, Peter C. (Faculty Education Monash U, Clayton Victoria 3168 Australia), Choosing a Deputy Head: The Rhetoric and Reality of Administrative Selection, The Australian Journal of Education, 1986, 30, 1, Apr, 1-22.

¶ A case study is provided of administrative selection in a GB Local Education Authority, drawing on fieldwork & illuminating the process of selection from candidates' & selectors' perspectives alike. An analysis is of-

88T4217

Pilling, Patricia Leslie (Wayne State U, Detroit MI 48202), A Case Study of Skilled Polish American Automobile Workers in Hamtramck, Michigan, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1025-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714560.

88T4218

Richardson, Alan J. (Queen's U, Kingston Ontario K7L 3N6), Professionalization and Intraprofessional Competition in the Canadian Accounting Profession, U Work and Occupations, 1987, 14, 4, Nov, 591-615

¶ The impact of competition among occupational segments on the professionalization of the occupation is examined with historical data on the evolution of accountancy in Canada. It is shown that intraprofessional competition is an important factor directing & pacing the professionalization of accountancy, defined in terms of educational standards, the symbolic attributes of professionalism, & achievement of occupational licensing. An analytic typology of professional segmentation is developed. 1 Figure, 71 References. Modified HA

88T4219

Riverin-Simard, Danielle (Dept counseling et orientation U Laval, Quebec G1K 7P4), Travailler à quarante ans: le remodelage de l'identité professionnelle (Working at Age Forty. The Remodeling of Vocational Identity), ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 1, 29-58 (FRE)

¶ A discussion of personal, SC, & professional aspects of the transition that generally occurs around the age of 40, within the framework of a spatiotemporal model of vocational development that postulates a continuing capacity for evolution throughout life. Analysis is based on interview data collected from a subsample of Quebec adults aged 38-42, including 58 Ms & Fs, of whom 44 work in the private sector, 34 in the public sector, & 36 in the parapublic sector, focus is on Rs' occupational experience & middle-term career prospects, utilizing a 5-year retrospective & prospect. Qualitative findings reveal that the period around age 40 is a time of trying out new guidelines. This remodeling of vocational identity is found to vary according to SC. In the Mc, a reorganization occurs without any major reversals, while in the Ucs, a radical selection of a line of conduct destined to avoid failure is prevalent. Practical implications are discussed. 1 Appendix, 33 References. Modified AA

88T4220

Robbins, Susan P., Corcoran, Kevin J., Hepler, Susanne E. & Magner, George W. (Graduate School Social Work U Houston, TX 77004), The Effect of Tenure on Scholarly Productivity, Arête, 1986, 11, 1, spring, 10-16

¶ A nationwide sample (N = 385) of social workers from randomly selected graduate & undergraduate programs was surveyed to determine the effects of tenure on scholarly productivity. The results show that productivity differs between full & associate professors once experience is controlled, & that tenure does not adversely effect productivity. Findings also suggest that the majority of scholarly production is conducted by a small % of academicians. 3 Tables HA

88T4221

Rodenhuis, W. K. F. (Technische U Twente, Enschede Netherlands), Jonge politicologen aan het woord over hun opleiding en werkkring (Young Political Scientists Speaking about Their Education and Their Work), Acta Politica, 1987, 22, 3, July, 327-346 (DUT)

¶ Findings are presented from a survey of political scientists (N = 221) who graduated from 6 Dutch Us in 1984-1986. It is shown that their unemployment rates are lower than for social scientists in general. The labor market is weakest in international relations, & strongest in public policy & in methodology. Growth in employment since 1974 occurred primarily in the private sector. Training is appropriately related to practical skills required for jobs for the 16.5% of graduates who were hired in jobs specifically meant for political scientists. Opinions of Rs about good & bad aspects of their U training are also noted. 10 Tables. Modified HA

88T4222

Rose, Elaine (Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122), The Social Reproduction of a Profession: Nonacademic Factors in the Selection of Medical Students, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Human- ities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1034-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8716391.

88T4223

Rosecrance, John (Criminal Justice Dept U Nevada, Reno 89557), A Typology of Presentence Probation Investigators, ♦ U International Journal of Offender Therapy and Comparative Criminology, 1987, 31, 2, Sept, 163-177

¶ There is a lack of knowledge concerning the most basic of probation services - the presentence investigation. To develop an understanding of this service, a typology of probation officers who conduct these investigations is presented. An analysis of data drawn from 15 years of probation experience & 1 year of qualitative interviewing of court personnel, (N = 60+) revealed that officers use presentence reports to advance personal careers & individual perspectives. The usefulness of presentence investigation is questioned, as well as the willingness of the probation bureaucracy to provide an environment conducive to objective reporting. 1 Figure, 44 References. Modified HA

88T4224

Sekulic, Duško (Faculty Philosophy U Zagreb, YU-41000 Yugoslavia), Socio-profesionalna mobilnost u Hrvatskoj (Socio-professional Mobility in Croatia), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 41-55 (SCR)

¶ To determine the level of intergenerational occupational mobility in Croatia, questionnaire data were obtained from adults (N = 3,512) concerning profession of both Rs & their parents. Analysis indicates that the SC level of industrial workers, farm workers, & intellectuals differs considerably. An index of association shows no movement of children of nonmanual laborers into manual labor groups, ie, channels of downward mobility are closed, however, there are some instances of children of manual laborers progressing to nonmanual positions, indicating a degree of upward mobility. Results also reveal broad dispersion for nonmanual professions & a narrow basis for recruitment into manual professions. 4 Tables. Modified HA

88T4225

Shaw, K. E. (School Education U Exeter, EX1 2LU England), Skills, Control, and the Mass Professions, U The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 4, Nov, 775-794

¶ An increasing number of professionals in modern society are employees, usually of large public-sector organizations. Insights derived from the work of Harry Braverman (Labor and Monopoly Capital: The Degradation of Work in the Twentieth Century, New York: Monthly Review Press, 1974) is applied to important questions about this new service class, the mass professions, ie, what is happening to their skills, control over their own work, & professionalism. Changes in public ideology have effects analogous to those of technological innovation in manufacturing, yet professionals, while attending to technological aspects of their work, typically ignore wider social issues. By doing so they make themselves vulnerable to deskilling & erosion of control over their work. 29 References. Modified HA

88T4226

Sixma, Herman & Ultee, Wout (Vakgroep Theoretische Sociologie en Methodenleer Faculteit Sociale Wetenschappen Rijks U Utrecht, NL-3508 TC Netherlands), Beroepsprestigeladders en landenkenmerken, een internationaal vergelijkend onderzoek (Occupational Prestige Ladders and Country Characteristics, an International Comparative Investigation), ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 5, Sept-Oct, 322-336 (DUT)

¶ An investigation of the extent to which a country's economic development & political regime influence its occupational prestige ladder, based on ladders for 20 industrial nations. Multivariate analysis shows that the relation between ladders for pairs of countries is higher when the countries have similar economic development & political regimes. After controlling for economic development, differences in prestige score for manual & nonmanual occupations are smallest in communist nations, intermediate in social-democratic nations, & largest in conservative nations. A similar conclusion is reached for prestige differences between skilled manual & routine nonmanual occupations. 6 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA

88T4227

Smith, Mark & White, Michael C. (U Southwest Louisiana, Lafayette 70504), Strategy, CEO Specialization, and Succession,

Self-Consciousness). Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 73-79. (RUS)

¶ Current efforts to restructure the Soviet economy necessitate a practical orientation on the part of all sociologists. Theoretical studies should ultimately lead to practical recommendations. The problem of translating sociological conclusions into management decision making remains acute. Ignoring the fundamental connection between theory & practice leads to a doctrinaire & scholastic sociology deprived of its humanistic goals. 1 Photograph, 7 References. G. Prostakov

88T4208

Miller, Nancy Lothrop (Arizona State U, Tempe 85287), A Comparative Analysis of Occupational Outcomes for Matched Males and Females in Five Technical Fields, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 757 A-758 A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713669.

88T4209

Morton, Herbert C. & Price, Anne Jamieson, The ACIS Survey of Scholars: Views on Publications, Computers, Libraries, ♦ EDUCOM Bulletin, 1986, 21, 3, fall-winter, 8-21

¶ An examination of the opinions of scholars in seven disciplines: classics, history, linguistics, literature, philosophy, political science, & sociology on issues related to the system of scholarly communication of information in the humanities & social sciences. Data are from a questionnaire survey sent by the Office of Scholarly Communication & Technology of the American Council of Learned Societies (ACIS) to a stratified random sample of ACIS members working in both academic & nonacademic settings (N = 3,835) in Nov 1985. Characteristics of the Rs & their patterns of publication, library use & professional reading, & nonacademic employment are summarized, along with their views on the rapid increase in computer use & its effects on their respective disciplines, the importance of informal communication between scholars, & bias in the peer review system & suggestions for its reform. 15 Tables, 2 Charts. K. Hyatt

88T4210

Murray, Georgina (Dept Sociology U Auckland, 1 New Zealand), Women Lawyers in New Zealand: Some Questions about the Politics of Equality, International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 4, Nov, 439-457

¶ An examination of the unequal access of women lawyers to the rewards of the legal profession in Auckland, New Zealand. The hypothesis that, with control for length of service (since women are relatively new entrants to the law), women lawyers would still earn less & reach positions of power later than men is tested with interview & postal questionnaire data (N = 70 & 30 Rs, respectively) from both M & F law clerks & lawyers. The findings support the hypothesis. When length of service is controlled, women lawyers are being discriminated against not on the basis of length of time to partnership, but in terms of income. 8 Tables, 26 References. Modified AA

88T4211

Musso, Giovanna, Diseguaglianze, identità, conflitto. Risultati di una ricerca empirica (Disparity, Identity, and Conflict. Results of an Empirical Inquiry), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug, 89-115. (ITA)

¶ An investigation of two socioprofessional groups having very different working conditions & technical-cultural job complexity. Interviews were conducted with 30 pilots of Alitalia (the Italian national airline), & 30 typographers working at a high-tech company in Rome. It is found that the two groups differ widely in their social & sociopsychological representations of work & of social reality. 2 Tables, 38 References. Modified HA

88T4212

Nan Lin & Wen Xie (Dept Sociology State U New York, Albany 12222), Occupational Prestige in Urban China, American Journal of Sociology, 1988, 93, 4, Jan, 793-832

¶ During interviews, a representative sample of Ur residents aged 20-64 (N = 1,632) in Beijing, People's Republic of China, ranked a selected group of 50 occupations. Their rankings are remarkably consistent with those found in other countries, however, specific differences are found, & these reflect not only the skills required & resources valued at a particular historical moment in development, but also the social effects of recent political events. These findings suggest that attention should be paid to the society's geopolitical characteristics & its recent historical experiences. A series of predictive equations are constructed to estimate prestige scores for all occupations in Ur China. 9 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 25 References. Modified HA

88T4213

O'Neill, Eugene Francis (Fordham U, Bronx NY 10458), Irish Tinkers: A Study in Assimilation, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1025-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8716210.

88T4214

Pepper, Stephen L. (Coll Law U Denver, CO 80208), The Lawyer's Amoral Ethical Role: A Defense, a Problem, and Some Possibilities, American Bar Foundation Research Journal, 1986, 4, fall, 613-635

Comments, 637-655, Rejoinder, 657-673

¶ Based on the values of individual autonomy, equality, & diversity, a moral justification is presented for the amoral stance of the lawyer as a professional. Responses are offered to two frequent criticisms of this stance, the first based on economic inequality, the second on the absence of the adversarial context for most legal work. However, the conjunction of the amoral role which assumes that the limit on a lawyer's conduct is the law with the dominant philosophy among US lawyers, legal realism which emphasizes the indeterminacy & manipulability of law leaves the lawyer in a difficult moral position. Several resolutions to this problem are considered, the most promising being the concept of moral dialogue between lawyer & client as an adjunct to the amoral role. In The Lysistratian Perspective: A Response to Stephen Pepper, David Luban (Center for Philosophy & Public Policy, U of Maryland, College Park) disagrees with Pepper's defense of the amoral role & his argument that economic inequality does not create problems for this, but agrees with his argument that the adversarial system is not needed to justify the amoral role, & with his identification of the problem of realism & his discussion of possible solutions. In A Commentary on Pepper's "The Lawyer's Amoral Ethical Role", Andrew L. Kaufman (Harvard U, Boston, Mass) finds Pepper's analysis valuable, but suggests that the lawyer's many opportunities to gain awareness of clients' situations creates moral dilemmas that Pepper does not fully resolve. In A Rejoinder to Professors Kaufman and Luban, Pepper examines five issues raised by comments: the need for a model, enforceable rules vs lawyer discretion, autonomy, diversity, & the line between formal & informal, the problem of equality, & the problem of legal realism. Modified HA

88T4215

Pharis, Mary E. (School Social Work U Texas, Austin 78712), The New Old Guard: Beliefs and Values of Members and Nonmembers of Societies for Clinical Social Work, U Clinical Social Work Journal, 1987, 15, 1, spring, 74-80

¶ Opinions on educational & practice issues relating to clinical social work were solicited from 3 groups of professionally active MSWs: (1) members of state societies for clinical social work (N = 43); (2) nonmember clinical social workers (N = 38), & (3) nonmember social workers who were not clinicians (N = 20). Questionnaire responses indicate that members of state societies for clinical social work firmly endorse traditional social work values, but differ systematically in their opinions from clinicians who are not members of state societies for clinical social work, & from nonclinicians. Implications for formal organizations in social work are discussed. 2 Tables, 3 References. HA

88T4216

Phenix, Katharine (Westminster Public Library, 3031 West 76th Ave CO 80030), The Status of Women Librarians, Frontiers, 1987, 9, 2, 36-40.

¶ Sex stratification & discrimination in the profession of librarianship are explored, based on a variety of North American & English studies & census statistics. This research, compared with a 1979 survey of American Library Assoc members (see Heim, Kathleen M., & Estabrook, Leigh S., Career Profiles and Sex Discrimination in the Library Profession, Chicago: American Library Assoc, 1983), revealed no area—eg, place, institution, level of service, type of librarian, or association—where Fs were at the top in greater or equal numbers to Ms, or earned salaries greater or equal to their M counterparts, despite a predominance of Fs (84.6% according to 1980 census data) in the field. Research & activism are recommended to reverse the trend of women remaining in the lower ranks of the profession. D. Graves

1100 rural sociology and agriculture

16 rural sociology (village, agriculture)

88T4234

Asare, Benjamin D. (Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122), Urbanization and Agricultural Development: The Cocoa Economy in Ghana, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1032-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711292.

88T4235

Baraona, Rafael (Colegio México, 10740 Mexico DF), Conocimiento campesino y sujeto social campesino (Peasant Knowledge and the Peasant as Social Subject), ♦ UM Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 167-190 (SPA)

† An investigation of the peasant as social subject discusses the peasant's relations with & use of knowledge. Examples are drawn from fieldwork in several peasant communities in Chile, & various studies of the conditions of peasant life in Latin America. The relationship between knowledge & action & the peasants' use of knowledge for survival are examined. Examples include adaptations to changing economic conditions, & the use made of information, products, & new technologies that have become available, eg, through agencies for agricultural development. The historical & cultural references that have shaped peasant life & perceptions in Chile are also discussed. 32 References. C. Waters du Boulay, Juliet & Williams, Rory (c/o Williams-MRC Medical Sociology Unit, 6 Lilybank Gardens Glasgow G12 8QQ Scotland), Amoral Familism and the Image of Limited Good: A Critique from a European Perspective, Anthropological Quarterly, 1987, 60, 1, Jan, 12-24.

88T4236

† G. M. Foster's analysis (see SA 14:1/66B8651) of the image of limited good (which also seeks to subsume the concept of amoral familism) is still frequently referred to in studies of the European peasantry, although it has also been criticized in various ways as a predictive model of behavior. Without entering the issue of prediction, an attempt is made to determine whether the image of limited good does in fact accurately reflect the thinking of a classic peasant village in Greece-Ambeli-using data collected between 1966 & 1976. It emerges that limited goods, which are necessarily viewed as commodities, are not easily discriminated in village thinking from other kinds of goods that are not so viewed. Whether in regard to land, the family, hospitality, or economic improvement, the meaning of village behavior depends less on images of limited good than on images of other goods that accord with, oppose, or complement them. While Foster's analysis has contributed interesting insights on the way values can be defined as commodities, it is concluded that European peasant societies be viewed within a more comprehensive framework that is sensitive to the other ways in which peasant values can be defined. 1 Figure, 36 References. Modified HA

88T4237

Bowler, I. R. (Dept Geography U Leicester, LE1 7RH England), Agricultural Geography, Progress in Human Geography, 1987, 11, 3, Sept, 425-432.

† A review of the literature relevant to the field of agricultural geography for the period 1985/86. Three main themes are explored: the dynamics of the production sector, agriculture in the Ru economy, & state-agriculture relationships. Marxist political economy, the increasing indebtedness of the farm economy, & the reappraisal of governmental agricultural policies are the main topics gaining prominence in the literature. 65 References. HA

88T4238

Chamruspanth, Viyouth (Iowa State U, Ames 50010), The Interorganizational Cooperation and Conflict among Agricultural Support Organizations in Khon Kaen Province, Thailand, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1030-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8716747.

88T4239

Doeksen, Gerald A. (Ohio State U, Columbus 43201), The Agricultural Crisis as It Affects Rural Communities, ♦ Journal of the Community Development Society, 1987, 18, 1, 78-88.

† A community simulation model (Woods, Mike D., & Doeksen, Gerald A., A Simulation Model for Rural Communities in Oklahoma, Oklahoma Agricultural Experiment Station Bulletin B-770) is applied to the town of Pawlusk, Okla., & employment statistics are used to show the projected effects of local farm failures on Ru businesses & governments through 1990. Private & public decisionmakers can use the results in planning for efficient delivery of services. 5 Tables, 3 Figures, 11 References. Modified HA

88T4240

Evans, Elizabeth S. (Dept Anthropology Stanford U, CA 94305), Protest and Representation among French Mountain-Zone Dairy Farmers, ♦ Sociologia Ruralis, 1987, 27, 2-3, 149-165.

† Agricultural union protest activities are examined in the mountain dairy community of Margeride, France, during the European Economic Community's 1984 milk pricing meetings, which resulted in the establishment of a dairy quota. Farmers, concerned for their livelihoods, resisted this action through protests made by France's largest agricultural union (FNSEA). The implication of the sudden upsurge in union activity implies that the farmers view union affiliation as issue oriented. While this resistance was shortlived, analysis of the protests suggests that the FNSEA had a central role in transforming the farmers' local resistance into a nonconfrontational political discourse at the national level, which allowed for nonagricultural remedies. The FNSEA's success in manipulating the milk quota protests is evidence of the union's ability to dominate & structure agricultural contest & discourse, while claiming to provide nonpartisan representation for all members, regardless of differences in production techniques or SC position. 11 References. Modified HA

88T4241

Feller, Irwin (Instit Policy Research & Evaluation Pennsylvania State U, University Park 16802), Technology Transfer, Public Policy, and the Cooperative Extension Service-OMB Imbroglia, ♦ Journal of Policy Analysis and Management, 1987, 6, 3, spring, 307-327.

† The Cooperative Extension Service (CES), although widely cited as an exemplary technology transfer system for its documented contributions to increased agricultural productivity, is confronting a number of challenges. Recent presidential budgets propose a narrowing of federal responsibilities for the CES to programs related to the transfer of agricultural technology. At the same time, the relevance of CES's traditional organizational structure to the technical needs of contemporary agriculture has been questioned. CES's ability simultaneously to correct what it perceives to be the Office of Management & Budget's (OMB) narrow view of its mission, as well as to improve its performance as a technology transfer system, is constrained by several things, including: its need to provide the diverse set of services demanded by the broad constituency that comprises its political base of support, & the gradual change in its own internal norms toward an educational/information dissemination orientation away from an emphasis on adaptive research & technical problem solving. 1 Figure. HA

88T4242

Fforde, Adam (Dept Economics Birkbeck Coll U London, WC1E 7HX England), Socio-Economic Differentiation in a Mature Collectivised Agriculture: North Vietnam, ♦ Sociologia Ruralis, 1987, 27, 2-3, 197-215.

† An analysis of agricultural collectives in Ru North Vietnam in the mid-1970s, with focus on SE differentiation. A distinction is made between primary & secondary differentiation in that the former is attributed to variation between cooperatives in the degree of implementation of official policy; the latter refers to interpersonal differences within a cooperative. Three types of collectives emerged as a result of various outcomes of the peasants' resistance to governmental attempts to impose the unpopular cooperative management system: (1) nominal, or the least conformance to official policy; (2) active; & (3) model, or the greatest conformance to official policy. 1 Table, 21 References. Modified HA Administrative Science Quarterly, 1987, 32, 2, June, 263-280.

¶ To investigate the relationship among chief executive officer (CEO) succession, CEO career specializations, & diversification strategy, a stratified sample of 173 companies from the Fortune 1000 list, in which there were 370 cases of CEO succession over a 25-year period, was examined using data from various business publications. Two issues were explored: (1) the relationship between the former CEO's career specialization & that of the successor, & (2) the relationship between the previous strategy & the successor's career specialization. Results generally indicate that CEOs tend to be succeeded by individuals with similar career specializations, & that career specializations are linked to strategies. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 69 References. Modified HA

88T4228

Thomas, Robert Lewis (Arizona State U, Tempe 85287), A Study of Stress Perception among Select Federal Probation Officers and Supervisors, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 753-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713683.

88T4229

Van Heeringen, A. & Dijkwel, P. A. (Advisory Council Science Policy Netherlands, PO Box 18524 Javastr 42 NL-2502 EM The Hague), The Relationships between Age, Mobility and Scientific Productivity, Part II, Scientometrics, 1987, 11, 5-6, May, 281-293.

¶ It is shown that it is theoretically impossible to draw empirically founded conclusions about the relation between age & productivity. Only the relation between age & productivity increase can be verified empirically. With this limitation in mind, a subsequent analysis of productivity data of Dutch physicists, chemists, & economists ($\Sigma N = 440$) indicates that the growth rate of productivity is higher before reaching age 35 than after. (Reference for Part I not provided) 1 Table, 9 Figures, 18 References. Modified HA

88T4230

Whisler, Sue C. & Eklund, Susan J. (Dept Psychology Mansfield U, PA 16933), Women's Ambitions: A Three-Generational Study, ♦ UM Psychology of Women Quarterly, 1986, 10, 4, Dec, 353-362.

¶ A generational study was conducted to: (1) describe the nature of women's ambitions across three generations within families, (2) assess the women's perceptions of factors influencing their ambitions, & (3) determine their estimates of success in attaining their ambitions. In addition, influence of the generations on each other & relative similarity of ambitions within families vs within generations were evaluated. Semi-structured interviews were conducted with F seniors at a large, midwestern state U, their mothers, & their maternal grandmothers. The most prevalent categories of ambitions across all generations were marriage/family, educational, & vocational. Change in women's roles & a trend toward greater economic affluence across generations had the greatest influence on ambition development & attainment. Influences of one generation on another were apparent for adjacent, but not for nonadjacent, generations. In general, women's ambitions were more similar within generations than within families. 1 Table, 11 References. HA

88T4231

White, William D. (Dept Economics U Illinois, Chicago 60680), The Introduction of Professional Regulation and Labor Market Conditions—Occupational Licensure of Registered Nurses, Policy Sciences, 1987, 20, 1, Apr, 27-51.

¶ There has been increasing concern by policymakers about the impact of occupational regulation & the process by which it is introduced. Drawing on economic models of regulation, the introduction of mandatory licensure laws to replace public certification of registered nurses at the state level is examined, with focus on potential implications for the DoFL, quality & availability of health care services, & consumer costs. Estimates of an empirical model of the diffusion of licensure across states for nurses between 1951 & 1971 suggests that this type of quality assurance regulation was introduced first in areas where the quality of services was already high. Historical analysis supports the hypothesis in economic models that small groups with concentrated interests will dominate the introduction of such laws. It is suggested that policies reducing the impact of licensure on geographic mobility may reduce pressure for new laws, & examining changes in labor market conditions may be useful in predicting future demands for legislation. Patterns in the introduction of laws also have implications for evaluating their impact. 5 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA

88T4232

Willmott, Hugh (Organization/Personnel & Employment Division Management Centre Aston U, Birmingham B4 7ET England), Studying Managerial Work: A Critique and a Proposal, Journal of Management Studies, 1987, 24, 3, May, 249-270.

¶ A critique is offered of three prominent & influential empirical studies of managerial work in capitalist enterprises. M. Dalton's Men Who Manage (New York: Wiley, 1959 (see SA 11 7/63A7431)), J. P. Kotter's The General Managers (New York: McGraw Hill, 1982), & H. Mintzberg's The Nature of Managerial Work (New York: Harper & Row, 1973). An alternative approach is proposed, based on Anthony Giddens's theory of structuration, in which the work of managers is seen as both a medium & outcome of the structural properties of a social system founded on the contradiction between socialized production & private appropriation. Thus, the strategic & institutional aspects of managerial work are connected in accord with Giddens's concept of structure as a duality. The value of such an approach is demonstrated using empirical data from T. Nichols's & H. Beynon's Living with Capitalism (London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1977) 69 References. K. Hyatt

88T4233

Wright, Cheryl A. & Wright, Scott D. (Family & Consumer Studies Dept U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112), The Role of Mentors in the Career Development of Young Professionals, UM Family Relations, 1987, 36, 2, Apr, 204-208.

¶ The special working relationship between a mentor & a protege has gained recent attention as more studies investigate the role of mentoring in the careers of young professionals. A review is presented of the literature on mentoring, including the topic of benefits & costs, issues related to women & minorities, & the role of mentoring in the academic community. A discussion of the implications emphasizes the need for peer-mentoring relationships for young professionals in addition to professor-graduate student relationships. 27 References. HA

88T4253

Murdock, Steve H., Leistritz, F. Larry, Hamm, Rita R., Albarecht, Don E. & Leholm, Arlen G. (Texas A&M U, College Station 77843). Impacts of the Farm Crisis on a Rural Community. ♦ Journal of the Community Development Society. 1987, 18, 1, 30-49.

† A case study of the impact of the farm crisis on a Ru community in northeastern ND in 1980, based on informal interviews with community leaders (N not given) as well as questionnaire surveys of current & former business operators (N = 135) & community residents (N = 68). The results provide support for the premise that communities are being impacted by the farm crisis. Rs showed high agreement on the causes for the crisis & on which aspects of the community were most severely affected. A substantial number of businesses had failed recently, & Rs believed businesses would continue to be affected negatively. Most Rs perceived the crisis as having at least some effect on their personal lives & on their community as a whole, but few perceived effects on Ru services. Implications for community development efforts are discussed. 9 Tables, 22 References. Modified HA

88T4254

Newby, Howard. Túlélési stratégiák a falusi társadalomban-folyamatosság és változás (Survival Strategies in Rural Society-Continuity and Change). Társadalomkutatás, 1986, 3-4, 5-14 (HUN)

† A critique of the belief that small farmers or peasants are approaching extinction in Europe. Individuals, families, & communities actively improve their living standards in ways that demonstrate their inventiveness. The era of agricultural expansion is ending, & a major goal of agricultural policy is now to prevent the social collapse of Ru communities. A dual economy has emerged: large-scale farms producing basic products in high volume, & small family farms, often with family members working part time in other economic sectors. More "bottom up" initiatives are needed to fully safeguard the continuity of the small farm. Modified HA

88T4255

Nicourt, Christian & Filippi, Geneviève (INRA-Economie & sociologie rurales, F-75014 Paris France). Contribution à la définition d'un métier: agricultrice (Contribution to the Definition of an Occupation: Women Farmers). ♦ UM Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 4, 477-494 (FRE)

† The differences between the prescribed & actual jobs of farmers' wives are analyzed by observation. While designated to handle the domestic tasks of cleaning, cooking, etc., farmers' wives are also expected to be available to serve as the center of communications, feed livestock, or clean the milking machine. Their work is constantly interrupted. An ergonomic analysis of the work of farm women reveals the use of skills, know-how, & knowledge that are not professionally or socially recognized or remunerated. Modified HA

88T4256

Obikeze, D. S. (U Nigeria, Nsukka Anambra State). Household Size and Food Production in an Agrarian Economy: Anambra State of Nigeria. International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 3-4, July-Oct, 307-332.

† An empirical examination of two contending viewpoints regarding the effect of household size on agricultural production in traditional societies. J. C. Caldwell (The Socio-Economic Explanation of High Fertility, Canberra: Australian National U, 1976) & others hold that large households are economically profitable, since they ensure large pools of farm labor & increased agricultural production, but A. C. Chayanov (The Theory of Peasant Economy, Homewood, Ill: American Economic Assoc, 1966) & others hold that traditional agriculture is characterized by surplus farm labor, so that as household size increases, the marginal productivity of labor decreases. Data from national statistics on a multistage random sample of 300 Ru farming households drawn from 13 agricultural zones of Anambra State, Nigeria, support the Chayanov proposition. This is explained by the fact that large households contain proportionately large numbers of economically unproductive children & elderly. Also, work norms prevailing in agrarian societies do not encourage efficient utilization of the LF. To improve agricultural productivity, prevailing work norms must be changed, & farmers convinced that there is no economic advantage in having large households. 8 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified AA

88T4257

Phillips, Joseph M. (Creighton U, Omaha NE 68178). A Comment on Farmer Education and Farm Efficiency: A Survey. UM Economic Development and Cultural Change, 1987, 35, 3, Apr, 637-641. Reply, 643-644.

† An analysis of the empirical foundations of a study by Marlaime E. Lockheed, Dean T. Jamison, & Lawrence J. Lau reported in "Farmer Education and Farm Efficiency: A Survey" (Economic Development and Cultural Change, 1980, 29, Oct, 37-76). Although the widely accepted view that education has a positive effect on farm productivity is confirmed, a need for some skepticism is suggested based on estimated coefficients for education variables, treatment of regional variations, & uneven & weak results. In Farmer Education and Farm Efficiency Reply, Lockheed, Jamison, & Lau address each area of concern by discussing specific analysis techniques employed & the rationale for their selection. F. Rasmussen

88T4258

Remy, Jacques (INRA-Economie & sociologie rurales, 6 passage Tenaillé F-75014 Paris France). La Crise de professionnalisation en agriculture: les enjeux de la lutte pour le contrôle du titre d'agriculteur (The Crisis of Professionalization in Farming: Issues in the Struggle to Control the Title of Farmer). ♦ UM Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 4, 415-441 (FRE)

† Farming in France is discussed, examining how struggles between groups of farmers produce norms & definitions that are imposed as legitimate. The farming elite, professional agriculturists who are producers/entrepreneurs, attempt to limit those who might become entitled to government aid. There is a crisis of professional & social identity in farming, a profession generally entered by falling heir to it. It is partially for this reason that the "professional" farmer cannot be defined by formal training. It remains to be seen, through parliamentary debate, what place this diversified group called farmers & the field of agriculture will be assigned in the productive system, in Ru space, & in French society. 3 References. Modified HA

88T4259

Rivera, Rigoberto & Crispi, Jaime. Bienes, salarios y agricultura capitalista en Chile (Goods, Wages and Capitalist Agriculture in Chile). ♦ UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 66, May-Aug, 63-85 (SPA)

† The relative situations of small farms & large commercial agricultural operations in one region of Chile are examined. The production, consumption, & concentration of consumer goods are described, & economic & political factors are shown to have led to a proportionate increase in this production by labor-intensive small farms. Economic activities of commercial firms, especially the increased emphasis on such commodities as livestock, & the distinctions among them regarding capital, production strategy, & use of labor are described in detail. The increased division of production between small farmers & large firms is linked to competition on the international market & the gradual impoverishment of small farms. 16 Tables. J. Anderson

88T4260

Rofman, Alejandro. Políticas alternativas de transformación en el medio rural minifundista. La acción de las ONG en el área del nordeste (Alternative Policies for Transformation of Small Farms in Rural Areas: The Action of NGOs in the Northeast). ♦ UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 66, May-Aug, 39-61. (SPA)

† The current situation of small farmers in northeastern Argentina is described, with focus on policies & tools that may relieve the poverty of the region. The agricultural operations of small farmers in the region are statistically examined relative to different products, showing the reasons why capital accumulation & the satisfaction of basic needs are sometimes impossible. Economic & social characteristics of small producers are described, emphasizing means of income generation, with a detailed examination of tobacco farms. The shortcomings of the current credit system, in which loans often go for immediate consumption, are countered with comprehensive proposals for agrarian reform through participatory politics carried out in nongovernmental organizations (ONG). 2 Tables. J. Anderson

88T4261

Sanchez Hernandez, Miguel (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). Local Organization in Rural Development Programs: The Case of the Pueblo Project. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 759-A-760-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712436.

88T4243

Grabowski, Richard & Sanchez, Onesimo (Southern Illinois U., Carbondale 62901), Technological Change in Mexican Agriculture: 1950-1979, ♦ U Social and Economic Studies, 1987, 36, 2, June, 187-205

¶ An analysis of the pattern of technical innovation in Mexican agriculture between 1950 & 1979. It is hypothesized that such innovation was of both a biochemical & a mechanical nature. Estimation of several weak disposability of inputs production functions based on national agricultural statistics for 1950-1979 confirms the hypothesis. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 13 References. Modified HA

88T4244

Hasumi, Otohiko, Title appears in Japanese (Structural Analysis Method in Postwar Japanese Rural Sociology), Shakaigaku Hyoron/ Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 2, Sept, 39-52 (JPN)

¶ In post-WWII Japanese Ru sociology, survey research was the predominant methodology & produced many important findings about village communities. In particular, the method of structural analysis was utilized to analyze mutual relations among SE & political structures in Ru society, based largely on a Marxist framework. However, as the solidarity of the Japanese village community began to break down under pressure of the forces of urbanization & changing agricultural policies, the limitations of structural analysis became apparent, & changes in the Ru community could no longer be attributed solely to internal forces. It is suggested that Ru sociology construct a new theoretical framework that incorporates a national perspective into community-level structural analysis. 12 References. Modified HA

88T4245

Jahan, Sarwar (U Illinois, Urbana 61801), An Inter-Regional Planning Model for Rural Development in Bangladesh, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 491-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711813.

88T4246

Jentoft, Svein (Instit fiskerifag U Tromsø, N-9001 Norway), "Algemningens tragedie"-statens ansvar? ("The Common Property Theory in Fisheries": An Appraisal), Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 4, 369-390 (NOR)

¶ The common property theory is critically reviewed as it has been applied to fisheries, focusing on public policy implications. It is argued that structural differences within the industry eg, between inshore & offshore fishers, have not been properly addressed, which has generated inadequate public policy. Also, important alternatives to strict & detailed public control, eg, cooperative regulation by fishermen, have not been given enough attention. 53 References. Modified HA

88T4247

Jeudy-Ballini, Monique (Rep 587, Paris France), Ceux qui peinent et ceux qui prennent. La Mythologie du travail dans une société d'horticulteurs (Nouvelle-Bretagne) (Those Who Toil and Those Who Take The Mythology of Work in a Horticulturist Society (New Britain)), Etudes rurales, 1986, 103-104, July-Dec, 159-187 (FRE)

¶ An analysis of the ideas of work conveyed through the oral literature of the Suka people of New Britain (Papua New Guinea), based on fieldwork conducted between 1980 & 1985. It is shown that traditionally the term cha (work) is applied only to the growing of crops, as distinct from either hunting, fishing, & gathering, or laboring for pay. This distinction is based on the referential value of fertility, & is related to the conception underlying daily social practices, according to which the fitness to work proceeds from the fitness to procreate: fertility supposedly expressing the agreement of the ancestral spirits. The notion of work cannot be grasped in merely economic terms, & its definition, for the Sulkas, implies a way of conceiving the cosmological relationship between the living & the dead. 8 References. Modified HA

88T4248

Kovács, Imre & Kuczi, Tibor, Kisáruftermelők gazdálkodástörténetének kohorszónkénti elemzése (Analysis of the Farming of Small-Scale Cultivators by Cohort), Szociológia, 1983, 3, 273-288 (HUN)

¶ Small-scale agricultural production plays a vital role in the Hungarian economy, producing roughly 33% of total agricultural output. Interviews with 145 cultivators in the town of Hajdúnánás who produce the largest agricultural output show them to occupy an anomalous position w high incomes but not so high occupational, education, standard of living or other status characteristics. Differences are evident between cohorts such that the older people are less likely than the younger to be able eliminate status inconsistency. 1 Table. Modified HA

88T4249

Lapointe, Robert, Du curé Labelle et de l'agriculture (The Reverend Labelle and the Late Agriculturalism), ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 1, 71-88 (FRE)

¶ A review essay on a book by Gabriel Dussault, Le Curé Labelle. Messianisme, utopie et colonisation au Québec, 1850-1900 (The Reverend Labelle. Messianism, Utopia, and Colonization in Quebec, 1850-1900) (Montreal: HMH, 1983). This excellent book, the author's doctoral thesis, is the first really systematic study of colonization in this area & period. It has a solid empirical basis as well as a fruitful theoretical framework & conceptual apparatus. The examination of the colonization work of the Reverend Antoine Labelle offers a clear analysis of one of the most characteristic phenomena of the nineteenth century, which contradicts many accepted ideas concerning the dynamics of French-Canadian society. The "colonizing frenzy" is revealed as a kind of protest against the cultural & political crisis of 1837, as well as a process of conquest & territorial occupation on the part of Roman Catholic French Canadians. C Waters

88T4250

Lisansky, Judith (Dept Human Ecology Cook Coll Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903), Farming in an Urbanizing Environment: Agricultural Land Use Conflicts and Right to Farm, U Humana Organization, 1986, 45, 4, winter, 363-371

¶ One of the less recognized constraints on US agriculture is land use conflict resulting from migration of Ur residents to Ru/Ur fringe areas. A case study of land use conflicts in NJ is presented, with emphasis on a specific dispute over sewage sludge which farmers wish to use as fertilizer & other citizens wish to have banned. Possible contributions of anthropology to the resolution of such policy disputes & crises are suggested. 54 References. W H Stoddard

88T4251

Micheletti, Michele (Dept Political Science Stockholm U, S-106 9 Sweden), Organization and Representation of Farmers' Interests in Sweden, ♦ Sociologia Ruralis, 1987, 27, 2-3, 166-180

¶ The establishment & development of the Federation of Swedish Farmers, which combines both the farmers' union & cooperative movement, are examined with particular attention to the Federation's role as an interest group. The organization is analyzed in terms of its size, scope, & political legitimacy. Three interrelated problems facing the union are discussed: (1) the increasing sense of heterogeneity among the membership, (2) the need for cooperatives to adopt certain values of private enterprise, & (3) the negative consequences of the unions' corporatist involvement in Swedish agricultural policy. The Federation's attempts to rectify these problems include: an emphasis on the collective & individual benefits of membership; improving communication within & between cooperatives, educational & recruitment campaigns, & promoting the romantic notion of the union as safeguarding the countryside. 1 Table. 29 References. Modified HA

88T4252

Muller, Pierre (CNRS-CERAT, BP 45 F-3840 Saint-Martin-d'Herès Cedex France), Un Métier né de la crise: exploitant rural (An Occupation Born from Crisis: The Rural Entrepreneur), ♦ U Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 4, 459-475 (FRE)

¶ The emergence of a new type of farmer, the Ru entrepreneur, is challenging the prevailing model of the specialized, "productivist" farmer in France. The Ru entrepreneur's principal function is commercial, based on a diversification of commodities & services that requires entrepreneurial strategies & skills to manage the various activities. While the concept of the family farm serves to preserve a natural heritage, the development of entrepreneurial farms stands to create viable employment for Ru residents. However, three conditions must be satisfied before this can occur: (1) Ru entrepreneurs must be made to conform to norms & standards in exercising their professional activities; (2) Ru exploitation must be regulated from fiscal, social, & public aid viewpoints; & (3) professional identity for farmers should be established. It is suggested that corporatization may be the price one pays for identity. Modified H/

88T4271

Zabawa, Robert (Tuskegee U, AL 36088), Macro-Micro Linkages and Structural Transformation: The Move from Full-Time to Part-Time Farming in a North Florida Agricultural Community, American Anthropologist, 1987, 89, 2, June, 366-382.

Recent research has focused on the effects of macrolevel structural forces on local cultures & agricultural systems of production. While indigenous systems can be dramatically altered by these forces, local institutions can also try to adopt strategies for survival. Data from several case studies are used to show how the shade tobacco farmers of Gadsden County, northern Fla, adapted to the market collapse of their major money crop. In order to remain in agriculture, farmers who were established in a full-time farming tradition had to consider strategies that included part-time farming & off-farm work. The part-time farmers are compared to those who have tried to remain full time to find how successful the adjustment process has been. 1 Table, 56 References. Modified HA

AMÉRICA INDÍGENA

América Indígena, revista publicada por el Instituto Indigenista Interamericano, en forma ininterrumpida desde 1941, constituye un valioso testimonio de la acción indigenista, del desarrollo de la antropología y las ciencias sociales en el Continente y del proceso social de los pueblos indígenas de las Américas. Difunde contribuciones de especialistas en diversas disciplinas (antropólogos, sociólogos, lingüistas, historiadores, arqueólogos, educadores, médicos, literatos, etc.) relacionadas con la realidad indígena de las Américas.

Todo artículo es seguido de un resumen en inglés. Ocasionalmente se publican artículos completos en este idioma y en portugués. La publicación incluye una sección de Reseñas de libros y otras de Publicaciones recibidas por la Biblioteca Manuel Gamio del Instituto Indigenista Interamericano.

Además de los 4 números anuales, la suscripción a la revista incluye un Índice anual de los artículos publicados, así como el Anuario Indigenista, publicación en la que se reproducen importantes documentos sobre el tema, generados en las diversas reuniones realizadas durante el año, informes de organizaciones indígenas, de organismos nacionales e internacionales, así como artículos de fondo de renombrados especialistas.

Ahora bien, el Índice General, compuesto de tres tomos, incluye sumarios, enlistados onomásticos y temáticos, cronologías y catálogos de las publicaciones del Instituto comprendidas en el periodo 1940 - 1980.

	SUSCRIPCION ANUAL*		NUMEROS*		INDICE GENERAL*
	Particulares	Instituciones	suelos	atrasados
México (en $ MN)	6,000.00	7,000.00	1,500.00	1,500.00	5,000.00
América Latina	US $ 20 00	US $ 25 00	US $ 5.00	US $ 6.00	US $ 30.00
Estados Unidos y Canadá	US $ 25.00	US $ 30.00	US $ 8.00	US $ 10.00	US $ 35.00
Europa, África, Asia y Oceanía	US $ 30.00	US $ 35.00	US $ 10 00	US $ 12.00	US $ 40.00

* Estos precios incluyen el porte vía superficie.

— Vía Aérea: 50% adicional

— Vía Certificada: 10% adicional — Estudiantes y Asociaciones Indígenas Latinoamericanas (acreditados): 20% de descuento. Favor de adjuntar cheque a nombre de: Instituto Indigenista Interamericano. Los envíos se hacen contra recibo de pago.

Pedidos a: INSTITUTO INDIGENISTA INTERAMERICANO

Insurgentes Sur 1690, Col. Florida
01030 México, D.F.

88T4262

Sautter, Gilles (Ecole hautes études sciences sociales, F-75006 Paris France), La Géographie rurale en crise? (Is There a Crisis in Rural Geography?), Etudes rurales, 1986, 103-104, July-Dec, 259-274. (FRE)

¶ An overview of the present state of Ru studies in French geography. Before WWII, Ru geography was a clearly delineated field of knowledge, in which a limited number of major problems were approached. Since then, the very subject matter of Ru geography has become difficult to define. This opening to wider perspectives offers greater scope & new vitality; but most Ru studies have become thematically oriented & deal with such diverse matters that the unity of the field is problematical. Distinctions between Ru geography &, eg, agronomy are blurred. Both in France & in developing countries, Ru geographers are doing pioneer work, but are not properly organizing that work. Modified HA

88T4263

Schilizzi, Steven G. M., Conesa, Alfred P. & Valmalle, Michèle (Laboratoire études comparées systèmes agraires INRA, Montpellier France), The Historical Dynamics of the Camargue Agrarian System, ♦ Sociologia Ruralis, 1987, 27, 2-3, 123-139

¶ The constant influence of exogenous factors on a local society, its land, & its resource use patterns is illustrated in the case of the Camargue (France's Rhone River delta) & the gradual control of its water system (before, during, & after the canal & dike building period). The interdependence & consequences of technical, organizational, social, economic, & ecological factors are evidenced in a variety of historical examples, eg, the "vine era" (1940-1950) when risks to crop & animal husbandry were systematically shared, giving rise to a new SC. The concept of "main dynamic factor," defined as that which creates new potentialities for the system, is used to show how disequilibria can grow out of equilibria, & how disequilibria can generate change, by contrast, some periods of prolonged stability can generate paralysis or fossilization. It is suggested that the response to change coming from the outside should be based on an understanding of the equilibrium & disequilibrium factors at work & on the global or specific strategies of the social actors. 2 Figures, 15 References. Modified HA

88T4264

Sharda, Bam Dev (U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112), The Effects of "Green Revolution" on the Occupational Attainment of Rural India: Evidence from North Indian Villages, 1962-1977, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1986, 23, 1-2, Jan-Apr, 1-20

¶ The effects of the green revolution land reform plans that have increased agricultural productivity through modern science & technology on the SE opportunities & occupational attainment process of Ms in Ru India are investigated, using data from the 1962/63 census & fieldwork conducted between 1976 & 1977, involving interviews with a total of 1,586 M heads of households in 11 villages of Punjab & Haryana. Regression analyses indicate that the green revolution has had a significant effect on the shape of the occupational stratification system, primarily through making it more permeable. Education has become increasingly important as a method of occupational attainment, while the effects of SE background, ie, fathers' occupational status, have markedly declined. Comparative data from other regions & countries are needed to further validate these findings. 2 Tables. K. Hyatt

88T4265

Sharda, Bam Dev (U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112), Integrated Rural Development and Changes in Socioeconomic Opportunity, U International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 367-387

¶ A comparison of the shifts in SE opportunity of Ru India (1962-1977) with that of the Ru US (1962-1973), with focus on the effects of Ru development. The findings show that the proportion of nonagricultural occupations increased in the Ru sectors of both countries in the 1970s. The dominant intergenerational occupational mobility in the US was structured or "forced," whereas in India it was the circulated or "pure." It is argued that this circulation mobility is due to the increased permeability of agricultural occupations in the 1970s, an indirect consequence of the integrated Ru development strategy of the Indian government. 4 Tables, 54 References. HA

88T4266

Silverman, Marilyn (York U, Downsview Ontario M3J 1P3), Agrarian Processes within 'Plantation Economies': Cases from Guyana and

Coastal Ecuador, U La Revue Canadienne de Sociologie et d'Anthropologie/The Canadian Review of Sociology and Anthropology, 1987, 24, 4, Nov, 550-570.

¶ "Plantation economy," as a dependency model for analyzing West Indian society, has theoretical & practical problems when applied to actual agrarian situations. These problems stem from a plantation-peasant dichotomy & from the assumption that these are homogeneous, empirical structures. In contrast, ethnographic studies have pointed out the complexity of contemporary agrarian forms. However, a continuing effort to refine these types has, in turn, obscured the variable processes of economic differentiation within local agrarian systems in which production has been, & is, for export. In order to contribute to a more general understanding of these processes, two case studies are presented of local agrarian change within plantation economies of 2 counties in coastal Ecuador (1880-1970s) & Rajgahar Village, Guyana (1902-1970s), & an attempt is made to isolate those factors that contributed to the observed variations in these agrarian histories. 31 References. HA

88T4267

Vivier, Dominique (Institut études politiques U Grenoble II, F-38040 Cedex France), Identités et stratégies des agriculteurs de montagne face à la CEE (Identity and Strategies of French Mountain Farmers up against EEC Policies), ♦ Sociologia Ruralis, 1987, 27, 2-3, 140-148. (FRE)

¶ The impact of agricultural constraints on the local society & interpersonal relations of French mountain farmers is discussed historically. Agricultural production is regulated no longer by the farmer, but by the agricultural profession, the state, & the European Economic Community (EEC). In addition, the advent of winter resorts, national parks, & hydroelectric production has not only disrupted mountain society, but has also brought the influence & power of politics & finance to the agricultural community. The new generation of mountain farmers, however, is establishing a new identity for itself by forming professional associations & employing more Ur strategies that expand the possibilities of local society & conform to European society. 22 References. D Graves

88T4268

Weir, Ivan Lee (U Louisville, KY 40292), Examining Organizational Goals of Educators in the Cooperative Extension Service, ♦ Journal of the Community Development Society, 1986, 17, 2, 92-114

¶ A revised version of SA 33 3/85S16935/RSS/1985/1783

88T4269

Whatmore, Sarah, Munton, Richard, Marsden, Terry & Little, Jo (Dept Geography University Coll London, WC1E 6TB England), Interpreting a Relational Typology of Farm Businesses in Southern England, ♦ Sociologia Ruralis, 1987, 27, 2-3, 103-122

¶ An economic concept of ideal farm types (ie, marginal closed, transitional dependent, integrated, & subsumed) is discussed methodologically & tested empirically to relate the assistance of industrial & finance capitals to the process of farm production. Farm businesses (N = 265) in 3 different agricultural areas of southern England were surveyed in 1984/85 as to size, dominant land tenure, & type of enterprise. Nonagricultural income was found to have three types of consequences for farm business change: (1) aiding the reproduction, survival, or activities of the family household unit, (2) contributing to the maintenance & progress of the farm business, & (3) providing investment opportunities for business expansion. Where alternative income opportunities are limited by geography, lower standards of living are accepted. The inverse relationship between alternative income & indirect subsumption suggests that farmers adopt the strategy of generating off-farm income to avoid dependence on external capitals & loss of control over the farm business. 4 Tables, 3 Figures, 20 References. Modified HA

88T4270

Yadav, Sohan R. (Kashi Vidyapith, Varanasi India), The Cultural Life of Poor Peasants in Nepal Tarai, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 162-172.

¶ Ethnographic data on the economic life of a village of the Parsa District in the Nepal Tarai economic enclave are presented. The population is made up of peasants, who have little communication with modern societies & live still within the traditional social order. The possessions, manners, & religious practices & festivals of this people are also described. The king & queen of Nepal are regarded as incarnations of God, & their images are pervasively present. Economic scarcity shapes the entire life of this cultural group. 5 References. W. H. Stoddard

1200 urban sociology

18 urban sociology

88T4272

Abbott, Carl (Dept Ur Studies & Planning Portland State U, OR 97207), The Suburban Sunbelt, Journal of Urban History, 1987, 13, 3, May, 275-301.

¶ Kenneth T. Jackson, Peter Muller, David Popenoe, & others have argued that US suburbanization follows a distinctive national pattern conditioned by social values. This thesis is tested for internal consistency by comparing suburban growth patterns in the sunbelt to national patterns. Analysis of US census & SMSA data on city-suburban migration, minority population, employment, & medical services finds that sunbelt cities have been converging on the patterns of spatial deconcentration found in the industrial core region. However, analysis of metropolitan government structures finds that sunbelt suburbs are more likely to be served by comprehensive political institutions created through annexation, consolidation, & growth of large suburban municipalities. These findings confirm Jackson's thesis (Crabgrass Frontier: The Suburbanization of the United States, New York: Oxford U Press, 1985; see also abstract of article by Jackson in this section), it is argued that sunbelt metropolitan areas are following general US patterns in both deconcentration & political responses. 3 Tables, 6 Figures. Modified AA

88T4273

Antonelli, Cristiano (Dept Electronics Polytechnic Milan, I-20133 Italy), The Determinants of the Distribution of Innovative Activity in a Metropolitan Area: The Case of Turin, UM Regional Studies, 1987, 21, 2, Apr, 85-93

¶ An econometric analysis of the determinants of spatial distribution of patent applications in Turin Province, Italy, one of the most active centers of Italian science & technology, based on official records from the 1980s. Results confirm that the province is a strong technological district & suggest that suburban areas located in an extended metropolitan area provide the best mix of factors conducive to the location & growth of innovative activities. 5 Tables, 2 Figures, 40 References. Modified HA

88T4274

Bennett, Larry, Squires, Gregory D., McCourt, Kathleen & Nyden, Philip (Dept Political Science DePaul U, Chicago IL 60614), Challenging Chicago's Growth Machine: A Preliminary Report on the Washington Administration, International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 3, Sept, 351-362

¶ The economic planning & development initiatives introduced by Harold Washington, elected mayor of Chicago, Ill, in 1983, are assessed & contrasted with the traditional growth ideology of Chicago's corporate & civic leaders. Irregular economic development has marked Chicago since WWII, perpetuating civic & social structures characterized by large pockets of wealth amid severe forms of poverty. Mayor Washington defied this trend through programs encouraging small town growth & small business development. These programs have been highly successful despite powerful opposition & a fiscal situation that would place constraints on any mayor. 28 References. Modified HA

88T4275

Bottoms, A. E., Mawby, R. I. & Walker, Monica A. (Instit Criminology U Cambridge, CB1 2JQ England), A Localised Crime Survey in Contrasting Areas of a City, British Journal of Criminology, 1987, 27, 2, spring, 125-154

¶ A crime survey was conducted in seven small residential areas in the city of Sheffield, England, varying in their housing type & official crime rates. Within each housing type, the survey found that official crime statistics were valid indicators of area crime-rate differences. However, the two high-rise housing areas appeared as more problematic in the crime survey than in official data, with a particularly high ratio of survey offenses to recorded offenses. Some adjacent small residential areas were found to be demographically very similar but to have very different crime rates (on official or survey measures); this emphasizes the importance of the microenvironmental dimension in criminological studies. 15 Tables, 1 Appendix, 29 References. HA

88T4276

Costello, Michael A. (Research Instit for Mindanao Culture Xavier U, Cagayan de Oro City Philippines), Slums and Squatter Areas as Entrepôts for Rural-Urban Migrants in a Less Developed Society, UM Social Forces, 1987, 66, 2, Dec, 427-445

¶ Cities in the less-developed world are frequently characterized by high rates of immigration, coupled with a widespread proliferation of slum & squatter areas. As such, it is believed that Ru-Ur migrants are disproportionately likely to settle in low-income neighborhoods immediately on their arrival in the city. Here, migration data collected during a 1975 survey of Cagayan de Oro City, the Philippines, are presented that do not support this generalization. Overall, migrants are neither heavily segregated in certain districts of the city nor particularly likely to settle in slum community; these findings persist even when restricting the sample to lower-SES, Ru-Ur migrants. These patterns are chiefly attributable to heavy rates of immigration among young unmarried persons (especially Fs), many of whom reside in nonslum neighborhoods as servants, lodgers, or extended relatives. 3 Tables, 44 References. HA

88T4277

Crozet, Yves, Les Minguettes ou l'analyse de la rationalité des choix en matière d'urbanisme (Les Minguettes, or the Analysis of the Rationality of Choices in Urbanism), UM Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 3, 267-288. (IRE)

¶ Les Minguettes, a suburban district of Lyons, France, has become known as a center of Ur tensions & difficulties between French-born & immigrant residents. A closer analysis of the district's problems, supported by statistical evidence, focuses on public housing. A paradoxical situation is investigated: applicants are being refused housing, while many apartments stand empty. Reasons for this include: the physical deterioration of existing buildings, restrictions on allocating housing to noncitizens, & the failure of the allocation system to keep up with demographic change. The collective rationality of the public administration is examined; its indeterminacy suggests that current solutions are only partial. A grid is proposed for evaluating the margin of maneuvers of public decisionmakers confronted with several models of rationality. 3 Tables. Modified HA

88T4278

Das, Veechibala (U British Columbia, Vancouver V6T 1W5), The Urban Informal Sector: An Alternative Analysis, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 490-A-491-A. Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T4279

DeDecker, Pascal (Planologisch en Demografisch Instit U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands), Stedelijke managers en stedelijke woonpatronen. Een overzicht van het ontstaan en de evolutie van de institutionele benaderingswijze in de stadsociologie en -geografie (Urban Managers and Urban Housing Patterns. An Overview of the Origin and Evolution of the Institutional Approach in Urban Sociology and Geography), Tijdschrift voor Sociale Wetenschappen 1987, 32, 3, July-Sept, 244-281. (DUT)

¶ An overview of the rise & development of the institutional approach in Ur sociology & geography, ie, the Ur managerial approach. Focus is on the Ur managers, who impose their values on others in the Ur housing system & direct those looking for homes to neighborhoods that, in their opinions, fit the potential buyer's characteristics. Thus, new housing patterns are created or existing ones consolidated. Ur managers can be individuals (eg, real estate agents) or institutions (eg, mortgage banks), or the public as well as the private sector. 1 Figure, 76 References. Modified HA

88T4280

Dowall, David E. (Instit Ur & Regional Development U California Berkeley 94720), Back Offices and San Francisco's Office Development Growth Cap, Cities, 1987, 4, 2, May, 119-127.

AFRICAN URBAN QUARTERLY

THE ONLY INDEPENDENT, INTERNATIONAL AND INTERDISCIPLINARY
JOURNAL OF COMPARATIVE URBANIZATION AND PLANNING IN AFRICA

AFRICAN URBAN QUARTERLY (AUQ) is a new, quarterly, high quality independent, international, and interdisciplinary, journal for comparative urbanization and planning in Africa. The AUQ presents both theoretical and applied papers in rapidly expanding fields of urbanization and planning. It also serves as a central clearing house for research dealing with analytical, descriptive, evaluative, and prescriptive problems concerned with urban and rural planning in Africa within the rest of the world, especially the Third and Fourth Worlds. Topics covered in the AUQ include agriculture, demography, transportation, medicine, politics, geography, history, sociology, economics, statistics, mathematics, urbanization, anthropology, archaeology, education, law and environmental studies as they affect the quality of human life in both rural as well as urban areas.

Volume 1 Number of February, 1986.

- "Urbanization and Spatial Development in Africa: Some Critical Issues" Salah El-Shakhs and Hooshang Amirahmadi
- "Urbanization and Urban Policy in Sub-Saharan Africa"
Elen M. Brennan and Harry W. Richardson
- "Scale and Question of Rural Development in Africa"
Fiona Mackenzie and D R F. Taylor
- "Urban Transportation Decision in Kano, Nigeria"
Alan Frishman

Volume 1 Number 2, May 1986

- "Exports and Urbanization: A comparative Study of the Provinces of Sub-Saharan Africa"
Frank Young
- "Internal Migration in Western Area of Sierra Leone: An Exercise of Policy Formulation" Eugene K. Campbell
- "Self-Reliance in African Building Materials Industry: A Cautionary Tale From Ghana" Kwabena Donkor and John Lea
- "Who Benefits From the Government Land Servicing Programmes for Urban Housing Development in Nigeria?"
Chukudi V. Izeogu
- "Harare, Zimbabwe: Origins, Development and Post-Colonial Change" D. Hywell Davies
- "Johannesburg's Informal Sector: Historical Continuity and Change"
C M. Rogerson

Volume 1 Number 3 and 4, August and November, 1986

- "Exports and Urban Centers in Sub-Saharan Africa: Subnational Comparisons for 1980 Data"
Frank W. Young and T. Nolan
- "Urban Concentration in Africa"
Lee de Cola
- "Urbanization in Francophone Africa"
Elliot P. Skinner
- "Environmental Factors in Third World Housing: The case of Calabar, Nigeria"
R A. Olu Sule
- "Rural Orientation, Return Migration and Future Movements of Urban Migrants: A Study of Kisumu Town - Kenya"
John O. Oducho
- "Industrial Decentralisation, Bantustan Policy and the Control of Labour in South Africa"
R. Tomlinson and J. Hylop

Volume 2 Number 1, February, 1987

- "Special issue on Urbanization and Planning in Zimbabwe in the 1980's"
D. Hywell Davies (Guest Editor)

Volume 2 Number 2, May 1987

- "Spatial Management Policies in Sub-Saharan African Countries: A Comparative Analysis"
Frank W. Young and Marwan Khawaj
- "Ethno-Spatial Dimension of the Abuja Settlement as the New Nigerian Capital City: The Dilemma of Urban Planning Policy"
R A. Olu Sule
- "Urban Development Planning and Environmental Pollution in Africa: The Case of Calabar Municipality, Nigeria"
J U. Obat

"A Regional Development Structure of Uganda Through Q-Factor Analysis"

Christopher J. Bakwesegha

"Urban Bias, Regional Differentiation and Rural-Urban Interaction in Kenya"

W T S. Gould

"Is Dodoma, the New Capital City of Tanzania, A New Socialist City?"

Joe I. P. Lugalla

"Spatial Organization of Urban Centers in Botswana: The Evolution of Development with Equality"

Thando D. Gwebu

Volume 2 Number 3, August 1987

- "A Special issue on Shelter and Homelessness in Africa" with Introductory Papers by Dr. Arcot Ramachandran and Mrs. Ingrid Munro (UNCHS)

Volume 2 Number 4, November 1987

- "Some Common Misconceptions About Self Help Housing Policies in Less Developed Countries"
Rod Burges
- "The Effect of Opportunities and Cultural Difference on Interregional Migrations in Sierra Leone" Augustine J. Kposowa
- "Resource Allocation, Territorial Justice Income and Distribution in Two Nigerian Cities"
A T. Salau and C V. Izeogu
- "A Multivariate Analysis of the Socio-Economic Characteristics of Urban Areas in Ethiopia" Mulatu Wubneh
- "Women's Income-Generating Initiatives in Kenya: A Self-Report Perceptions of Need for Value and Women's Groups"
Minna Barret
- "Old Naledi and the Idea of Town Strategies for Urban Upgrading from Botswana"
John Van Nostrand
- "Autochthony, Nationhood and Development"
J B. Ojwang

Annual Subscription Rates:

- INDIVIDUALS $40.00 (Kenya) Elsewhere $45.00
- INSTITUTIONS $70.00 (Kenya) Elsewhere $80.00
- Add $20.00 for AIRMAIL, outside Kenya
- Add $5.00 for subscription mailed outside Kenya
- Add $10.00 to clear international check

Please mail with payment in cheque, postal order, money order, or Unesco coupons. All payments must be made in United States of America dollars and mailed to the

AFRICAN URBAN QUARTERLY

P.O. Box 74165, Nairobi, Kenya

Telephone (2) 334244 EX 2086, Direct (02) 720031 and

Cable Address: VARSITY NAIROBI

Telex: 22095 VARSITY NAIRC

88T4291

Ko, Chyong-Fang (U Southern California, Los Angeles 90089), The Socioeconomic Status of Residential Neighborhoods: A Case Study of the San Francisco Bay Area of California, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1020-A

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T4292

Lazarte, Rolando (Escola Sociologia e Política São Paulo, Brazil), Los migrantes en los mercados de trabajo metropolitanos: líneas de abordaje del problema en América Latina (Migrants in the Metropolitan Labor Markets: Lines of Approach to the Problem in Latin America), ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 133-141 (SPA)

¶ A discussion of the massive internal migration to metropolitan areas in Latin America, especially in Brazil, & the related problems of poverty, unemployment, & underemployment in these areas. Based on a literature review, an attempt is made to present clearly & systematically the existing lines of interpretation, showing their possibilities & limitations for explaining the situation. Two main types of reasoning are distinguished: (1) those that explain the predominance of migrants in the lowest levels of jobs by their lack of qualifications & inexperience of Ur life, & the incapacity of the metropolitan economy to create employment at a rate as rapid as that of the immigration, & (2) those that view internal migration as a structural economic mechanism supplying an excess Ur LF, which functions as a reserve to be absorbed during periods of expansion. Neither interpretation can be conclusively supported without further investigation. C Waters

88T4293

Leitner, Helga (Dept Geography U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), Urban Geography: Undercurrents of Change, Progress in Human Geography, 1987, 11, 1, Mar, 134-146

¶ A survey of the 1985/86 Anglo-US literature reveals undercurrents of change within Ur geographic research. A renewed emphasis on economic growth involves attempts to treat economic production, instead of consumption issues, as the prime force shaping cities, also, increasing research is being done on Ur politics & its influence on attracting investment for Ur economic development. Theoretical accounts of cities are paying more attention to the geographical & historical diversity of cities & Ur systems. Some studies attempt to explain individual cities in the context of the world economic system, often giving excessive weight to empirical regularities. However, other studies incorporate metatheoretical considerations of structure & agency into Ur geographic research in order to provide a better understanding of the ability of individuals & Ur institutions to shape local responses to larger societal change. 73 References. Modified AA

88T4294

Lord, J. Dennis & Rent, George S. (Dept Geography & Earth Science U North Carolina, Charlotte 28223), Residential Satisfaction in Scattered-Site Public Housing Projects, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 3, July, 287-302

¶ The trend in public housing away from the large central projects of the 1950s & 1960s, & toward small projects dispersed throughout a city is discussed, focusing on the satisfaction of relocated residents. Interviews were conducted with 160 residents in 8 scattered-site public housing projects in Charlotte, NC. Despite relocation, the occupants clearly were satisfied. Their satisfaction was related to improvement over previous residence, quality of the dwelling unit, feeling at home in the neighborhood, shortness of time in residence, & overall satisfaction with life. Characteristics of the neighborhood in which residents expressed a high level of satisfaction were the size of the project, access to schools, & presence of "good" people. The neighborhood characteristics creating the greatest dissatisfaction & the greatest differences between the individual scattered-site projects were access to public transportation, shopping, & jobs. 6 Tables, 1 Figure, 36 References. Modified HA

88T4295

Moreno, Martin Jorge, La urbanización en la Provincia de Misiones (Urbanization in the Province of Misiones), ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 65, Jan-Apr, 77-98 (SPA)

¶ A preliminary demographic analysis of census data shows a substantial increase in urbanization between 1970 & 1980 in Misiones Province, Argentina. General tendencies of growth of the Ur population in Misiones

& in other regions of Argentina are discussed, focusing on the expansion in quantity & size of Ur areas, & the sex & age composition of the Ur population. Economic implications of changes in proportion of the dependent population are considered. 9 Tables, 5 Figures. J Anderson

88T4296

Muller, Peter O. (U Miami, Coral Gables FL 33124), Turning the American City Inside Out, Journal of Urban History, 1987, 13, 3, May, 348-353.

¶ A review essay on Kenneth T. Jackson's Crabgrass Frontier: The Suburbanization of the United States (New York: Oxford U Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). A brilliant synthesis of other scholars in several Ur disciplines is combined with an exposition of key developments in the suburbanization process of the past two centuries, resulting in a lively, readable narrative of value to both the newcomer & the initiated researcher. Several interrelated questions that concern changing attitudes toward the good life are addressed, including the accelerated deconcentration of metropolitan areas, technological & ideological forces shaping suburban settlement patterns, social & political expressions of intra-Ur spatial organization, dynamics of Ur land use, & manifold costs of increasing privatization of residential space. F. Rasmussen

88T4297

Okuda, Michihiro, Title appears in Japanese (Urban Sociology and Community Studies in Postwar Japan), Shakaigaku Hyoron/ Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 2, Sept, 53-71 (JPN)

¶ Key issues in the development of Japanese Ur sociology between 1945 & the 1980s are examined, & related to 3 major changes in society: (1) the transformation of the metropolitan economic & social structure; (2) the development of new industrial & Ur spaces; & (3) the decline & rebuilding process of existing Ur communities, particularly inner-city neighborhoods. The conceptual scheme that pioneers theoretical research on changing Ur communities is discussed, along with ways that this post-WWII paradigm has shifted over time. 1 Figure, 42 References. Modified HA

88T4298

Perlman, Janice E. (Ur Research Center New York U, NY 10003), Megacities and Innovative Technologies, Cities, 1987, 4, 2, May, 128-136

¶ The unprecedented challenges & opportunities posed by the world's largest cities in the year 2000 are explored. These cities, according to UN projections, will range in population from 10 to 26 million & are largely in Latin America & Asia. The question posed is the possible contribution of technology & applied science in addressing critical issues of Ur livability, including food, shelter, water, energy, transport, & communication. It addresses both successful in-place Ur innovations, & promising new technologies for Ur adaptation. These span the range from "low-tech" to "hi-tech," from "software" or "orgware" to "hardware," & from decentralized to centralized in application. 1 Table. HA

88T4299

Plotkin, Sidney (Dept Political Science Vassar Coll, Poughkeepsie NY 12601), Property, Policy and Politics: Towards a Theory of Urban Land-Use Conflict, International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 3, Sept, 382-404

¶ Various perspectives on Ur land-use conflicts are examined to arrive at an integrated theoretical interpretation, specifically considering the state's role in shaping the economic & political organization of land-use conflict. It is argued that capitalist states are governed by property expansion & exclusion rights, which lend the framework for land-use policy, as illustrated by a historical analysis of US land-use policy. The resulting property conflicts on private, community, & industrial levels are illustrated. Theorists need to consider the issue of exclusionary values if there is to be hope for social change. 62 References. Modified HA

88T4300

Roach, Mary Joan (U Akron, OH 44325), The Effects of Three Dimensions on Neighborhood Satisfaction, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1020-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715254.

88T4301

Sharma, A. K. (Dept Humanities & Social Sciences Indian Instit

¶ An examination of the changing structure of the job market in San Francisco, Calif. Clerical, data entry, professional, & technical jobs are replacing blue collar manufacturing. A new type of office market, the back office, has been created, comprising routine, computer dependent, information processing operations. These require large office spaces, which are expensive to rent in downtown locations. A cap on back-office growth would force these operations out of the city, & penalize their predominantly F & minority LF, by forcing office rents upward. Back-office projects should therefore be exempted from a growth cap. 8 Tables, 2 Figures. HA

88T4281

Fishman, Robert L. (Rutgers U, Camden NJ 08102), American Suburbs/English Suburbs: A Transatlantic Comparison, Journal of Urban History, 1987, 13, 3, May, 237-251

¶ It is argued that US suburbia is in fact derived from English models. The origins of the modern Mc residential suburb date back to late eighteenth-century London, when prosperous merchants & bankers left their townhouses in the city to live in "villas" in formerly agricultural villages a few miles out of town. These bourgeois pioneers of suburbia were heavily influenced by the doctrines of the Evangelical movement in religion, which taught both the sinfulness of Ur life & the holy mission of women to purify the household, a task that could best take place in the country environment. Tracing English & US suburbia through the nineteenth & twentieth centuries, it is concluded that the traditional suburb—a bedroom community functioning as a satellite of the city—no longer exists, most suburbs have become cities in their own right. Modified AA

88T4282

Fowler, E. P. (Glendon Coll York U, Toronto Ontario M4N3M6), Street Management and City Design, ♦ UM Social Forces, 1987, 66, 2, Dec, 365-389.

¶ Jane Jacobs's ideas (The Death and Life of Great American Cities, Doubleday, 1961) on how neighboring & crime are affected by physical diversity in cities are tested using questionnaire ($\Sigma N = 280$ Rs), census, & police data obtained on 19 sample areas of Toronto, Ontario. While neighboring & crime are found to be related to diversity as defined by Jacobs, neighboring is not related to crime, which is also predicted by her theory. The implications for Ur planning are considered. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 2 Appendixes, 86 References. Modified HA

88T4283

Galeano, Luis A., Entre la protesta y la lucha urbana: dos estudios de casos (Between Protest and Urban Struggle. Two Case Studies), ♦ UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 66, May-Aug, 155-178. (SPA)

¶ The historical conditions that give rise to social movements & the role the latter play in social conflicts & change are discussed in an attempt to understand why Ur social movements in Paraguay have not coalesced politically as they have in other Latin American countries. The general characteristics of social movements as distinguished from other forms of conflict are described. Two cases of Ur struggle are analyzed in the context of historical & structural factors & with regard to social actors: (1) the conflict around the establishment & defense of a squatter settlement on the outskirts of the capital of Asunción beginning in 1975, & (2) a rebellion against the high cost of a public sewer system in 1979 in a nearby city. Factors relating to national economy, group homogeneity, & the isolation of conflict from the productive sector are considered significant. J. Anderson

88T4284

Goodey, Brian & Gold, John R. (Joint Centre Ur Design Oxford Polytechnic, OX3 0BP England), Environmental Perception: The Relationship with Urban Design, Progress in Human Geography, 1987, 11, 1, Mar, 126-133.

¶ A progress report that presents a thematic review of the problematic relationship between environmental perception researchers & Ur designers. The goals of environmental perception research & its relationship with Ur design are reviewed, & the awkward relationship between the two areas is discussed. Three important gaps between the two disciplines are detailed: (1) the gap between perceptual & morphological approaches, (2) the absence of systematic understanding of built environment preferences, & (3) the lack of appropriate research in large-scale environments. 43 References. F. Rasmussen

88T4285

Harris, Richard (Division Social Sciences U Toronto, Ontario M1C 1A7), A Social Movement in Urban Politics: A Reinterpretation of Urban Reform in Canada, International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 3, Sept, 363-381.

¶ An alternative interpretation of reform in Canadian cities is offered to replace the concept of "Ur social movements," which deceptively implies that the mere fact of being Ur makes such movements unique. It is argued that no social issue is exclusively Ur, although Ur conditions may affect issues & heighten pressure for reform. However, those conditions are not confined to cities & should not be labeled Ur. Canada's Ur activities in the 1960s exemplify political reform in response to local conditions, but these were part of a larger movement of social change. In modern capitalist societies, it is preferable to speak of a social movement in Ur politics, rather than an Ur reform movement. 74 References. Modified HA

88T4286

Harrison, Mark (King's Coll U Cambridge, CB2 1ST England), The Ordering of the Urban Environment: Time, Work and the Occurrence of Crowds 1790-1835, Past and Present, 1986, 110, Feb, 134-168.

¶ Though many aspects of historical data on the occurrence of crowds are subject to observer bias, this is generally not the case for records of the times & places of their occurrence. Existing research on the Ur environment in the late eighteenth & early nineteenth centuries in England is reviewed, with emphasis on the relative instability of the working day before the Ten Hours Act of 1847. Newspaper accounts are used to determine the timing of 245 crowd occurrences between 1790 & 1835 in Bristol, this was consistent with a weekend structured around a working Saturday, a domestic Sunday, & an outdoor Monday—the day favored for crowd activities. In addition, crowds on other days characteristically occurred outside of working hours. This finding contrasts with common interpretations of time as relatively unordered during this period. 4 Tables, 3 Graphs. W. H. Stoddard

88T4287

Hutter, Mark (Dept Sociology Glassboro State College, NJ 08028-1762), The Downtown Department Store as a Social Force, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 3, July, 239-246.

¶ While the downtown department store was a commercial phenomenon, it was also a social force. Based on a review of the literature, it is described how the department store reintegrated women into the downtown, as consumers & members of the Ur LF. Women shoppers used these stores to develop public & secondary relationships characteristic of urbanism, ie, personal relationships with salespeople, & identification with the larger Ur community. 27 References. Modified HA

88T4288

Jackson, Kenneth T. (Columbia U, New York NY 10027), Suburbanization in England and North America: A Response to "A Transatlantic Comparison", Journal of Urban History, 1987, 13, 3, May, 302-306.

¶ A response to Robert L. Fishman's article (see abstract in this section), viewing his work as an elegant & persuasive defense of the proposition that England not only originated the notion of the romantic suburb, but in fact remains the primary example of the suburban nation. There is disagreement, however, based on the definition of suburb & the effects in England of the cost of land on suburban growth. These two areas of contention are discussed & alternative possibilities offered. F. Rasmussen

88T4289

Kallan, Jeffrey E. (U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), The Assimilation of Internal Migrants to Large Cities of the Third World: A Comparative Study, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 485-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711124.

88T4290

Kelen, András, A synoikismostól a városig (From the Synoikismos to the City), Szociológia, 1983, 1-2, 17-26. (HUN)

¶ The process of urbanization is examined through a historical case study of the development of Athens, Greece, from its origins as a synoikismos or joint settlement. The concepts of allactic & catallactic exchange are defined & distinguished. Related historical examples from Hungarian market towns of the plains are also considered. The urbanization of Athens is unusual in that industrialization was not involved in it, giving added relief to human-ecological aspects. The decisive significance of the emergence of public supply for urbanization is stressed. Modified HA

1300 sociology of language and the arts

30 sociology of language/sociolinguistics

88T4305

Chilton, Paul (Dept French Studies U Warwick, Coventry CV4 7AL England), Metaphor, Euphemism and the Militarization of Language, ♦ Current Research on Peace and Violence, 1987, 10, 1, 7-19

¶ An attempt to theorize the notion that language plays an important part in the field of security, specifically nuclearization. The analytical framework rests on ideas from cognitive science, linguistics, pragmatics, & the critical theory of Jurgen Habermas. Conceptual problems are implied by the phrase "militarization of language," & an important theoretical first step is to distinguish language from language use (or discourse). Metaphor & euphemism are two phenomena of discourse implicated in the ideological deployment of language. Both phenomena are reviewed from the point of view of cognitive aspects & social interactive aspects, with exemplification from nuclear discourse. It is proposed by way of conclusion that metaphor & euphemism can be seen as the two poles of ideological discourse, the former being involved in positive constructions of reality, & the latter being involved in negative occlusive evasions. 4 Diagrams, 1 Appendix, 38 References. AA

88T4306

Davies, Christie (U Reading, RG6 2AH England), Language, Identity and Ethnic Jokes about Stupidity, ♦ International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 65, 39-52

¶ An examination of ethnic jokes about stupidity reveals that, in general, the groups joked about are usually quite similar to the groups making the jokes. In general, the groups about whom jokes are told have an uncertain linguistic &/or national identity, characterized as a "transitional or wavering people" (TWP). Dominant groups perceive TWPs as a case of nonthreatening ambiguity. These jokes derive their comic force from placing a real quantity (the TWP) in an absurd situation. Ethnic jokes about general ineptitude are easily transferred from one lang to another, whereas jokes about "odd" lang use tend to be the property of a single dominant group-TWP pair. 1 Table, 45 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4307

Hymes, Dell (U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104), A Pattern of Verbal Irony in Chinookan, ♦ International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 65, 97-110

¶ A Chinookan pattern of humor is examined in an analysis of two narratives. The nature of irony as a form of humor is considered, based on D. Sperber's & D. Wilson's "Irony and the Use-Mention Distinction" (Radical Pragmatics, Cole, P. (Ed), New York: Academic Press, 1981). Two short Clackamas Chinookan texts are analyzed. The texts share a pattern in which two turns at talk follow one another, & each involves entertaining the idea of something contrary to expectation. Other elements include an alteration of perspective & use of echoic mention. The second turn generally "tops" the first, often in a scornful manner. 11 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4308

Lewis, E. Glyn, Attitude to the Planned Development of Welsh, ♦ International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 66, 11-26.

¶ The history of Welsh lang planning is traced with reference to orthography, lexicon, & oral standards. In addition to this formal aspect, planning must deal with ensuring that the lang retains a place in daily life. The status of Welsh in the media, publication, occupations, & cultural activities is examined. 31 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4309

Macaulay, Ronald K. S. (Pitzer Coll, Claremont CA 91711), The Social Significance of Scottish Dialect Humor, ♦ International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 65, 53-63

¶ Examined are examples of Scottish dialect humor, particularly with reference to the speech patterns of Glasgow. Several examples from recordings & from humorous poetry are analyzed. All the examples show an awareness of the social significance of dialect differences, & an expression of satisfaction with the lang variety used by the speaker. This type of humor as a whole is very different from so-called linguistic insecurity humor. 12 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4310

Margareta, F. (Lund U, S-221 00 Sweden), The Language of Playground Games, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 480
Text in Swedish. Unavailable from UMI; reference copy at Bokforlaget Signum, Box 1135, S-221 04 Lund.

88T4311

Martin-Jones, Marilyn (U Lancaster, Bailrigg LA1 4YT England) Review Article, ♦ Journal of Multilingual and Multicultural Development, 1986, 7, 4, 319-324
Response, 325-326, Reply, 327-328

¶ A review essay on a book by Tove Skutnabb-Kangas, Bilingualism or Not? The Education of Minorities (Clevedon, England: Multilingual Matters, Ltd, 1984 (see listing in IRPS No. 42)), which deals with planning & implementation of lang education programs. The volume focuses on the fundamental role of societal conditions in determining effective educational programs. A number of more basic issues including definition of bilingualism & communicative competence are also addressed. Some unevenness & contradiction is found in the presentation, & the volume is not recommended to those having little familiarity in the field of bilingual studies. Skutnabb-Kangas replies in Author's Response that her work has been misunderstood. She explicitly rejects deficiency theories of lang difficulty, & argues that concepts like "semilingualism" are political rather than linguistic concepts. In Reviewer's Reply, Martin-Jones defends her review. 10 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4312

Maurais, Jacques, La norma lingüística (The Linguistic Norm) ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 65, Jan-Apr 117-132 (SPA)

¶ A contribution to the reevaluation of the position of the linguistic norm in national langs. The history of the development of lang norms in their social & political contexts is reviewed, & the place of the norm in contemporary linguistic theory is discussed. The relationships among linguistic norms, social norms, & power are considered. The intervention of the state in the legal determination of linguistic norms is examined in the example of Quebec. The role of dictionaries in linguistic unification & factors determining the maintenance of dominant langs in formerly colonial countries are discussed. 26 References. J. Anderson

88T4313

Nilsen, Don & Nilsen, Alleen (Arizona State U, Tempe 85287), Humor, Language, and Sex Roles in American Culture, ♦ International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 65, 67-78

¶ Patterns of lang usage & humor are examined as indicators of how sex roles are perceived in the US. Eight major topics are considered: (1) men are perceived as more important than women, (2) generic referents are assumed to be M unless identified as F, (3) maleness is judged as a positive attribute, femaleness as negative, (4) men are perceived as being in control, women as being controlled, (5) men are pursuers & women resisters in sex, (6) women's bodies are perceived differently than men's, (7) men are judged on their accomplishments, women on their sex appeal; & (8) men are expected to be assertive & aggressive, women to be withdrawn. It is shown that as cultural attitudes change, these changes are reflected in both lang & humor. 23 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4314

Pepicello, W. J. (U Pacific, Stockton CA 95211), Pragmatics of Humorous Language, ♦ International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 65, 27-35.

¶ Examined is the effect of ambiguity on the content, context, & form of riddles & jokes in oral Anglo-American culture. It is shown that riddles have a special logic, often particular to one riddle, & that the goal

Technology, Kanpur 208016 Uttar Pradesh), Social Implications of Urbanization in India, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 35-46

¶ The term "urbanization" is used in sociology in two complementary senses: spatial concentration of population & development of urban culture. In India, urbanization has been increasing since 1921 & especially since 1951. Many researchers have described Indian society as overurbanized, but this belief fails to take into account the unique historical character of Indian society. In contrast to the West, where urbanization was a gradual process, India has experienced a more violent urbanization that has generated an urban malaise. It is urged that developmental programs recognize national & communitarian traditions. 3 Tables, 28 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4302

Suggs, Patricia K., Stephens, Virginia & Kivett, Vira R., Coming, Going, Remaining in Public Housing: How Do the Elderly Fare?, Journal of Housing for the Elderly, 1986, 4, 1, spring, 87-104

¶ An investigation of policies of retention & transfer among 40 housing authorities in NC that had projects with 50+% elderly. Questionnaire data show that approximately 90% of the housing authorities had written eligibility & continued residence policies, but few reported having services offered within their projects. Reconsideration of eligibility status was done by a combination of participants, but the ultimate decision to evict a tenant usually lay with upper-level management. Only 50% of the authorities reported having resident staff persons in their projects, & even fewer required special training of their managers in the services & needs of older clients. Recommendations are made for decisionmakers in public housing. 4 Tables, 4 References. Modified HA

88T4303

Wagner, Eric A. (Ohio U, Columbus 43210), Cali, Colombia: Residential Dimensions of Urban Structure, International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 323-352

¶ Residential aspects of the internal structure of Cali, Colombia, are investigated using data from the 1964 census & a field survey of 157 barrios. The structure is related to international findings using the basic variables of SES, family status, land use, & population density. Substantial functional specialization in land use is found, leading to the conclusion that Cali is more industrial than preindustrial. Some peripheral areas of the city have higher densities than central areas, suggesting that Cali is more non-Western than Western in this regard. Land use & density both show a city in the process of change in its ecological structure. Analysis of the spatial distribution of SES & family status shows that SES varies sectorially & family status varies concentrically, indicating a rather pronounced level of urban differentiation that is more characteristic of industrial than of preindustrial cities. Thus, while Cali does not totally conform to the characteristics of industrial & Western cities, it is clear that the city is much closer to these theoretical types than it is to non-Western & preindustrial cities. 1 Table, 8 Figures, 30 References. Modified HA

88T4304

Wandersman, Abraham, Florin, Paul, Friedmann, Robert & Meier, Ron (U South Carolina, Columbia 29208), Who Participates, Who Does Not, and Why? An Analysis of Voluntary Neighborhood Organizations in the United States and Israel, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 3, summer, 534-555

¶ Interview data are used to investigate the characteristics of participants & nonparticipants in neighborhood-type organizations in Nashville, Tenn (N = 201 & 217, respectively) & Israel (N = 112 & 117, respectively). Findings reveal some cross-cultural demographic similarities, eg, a surprising lack of race/ethnic & education differences between participants & nonparticipants, striking similarities were found relative to social-psychological variables. The data from the Israeli sample provide important information on the costs & benefits of participation. Discriminant analysis points to the predictive strength of social-psychological & cost/benefit variables in comparison to demographic variables. Implications of these results for explanatory & predictive purposes are discussed. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 55 References. Modified HA

Document Delivery Service

The costs of reproduction are: US $0.25 per reproduced page. Orders must be PREPAID (unprepaid orders cannot be acknowledged or returned) and sent to SOCIOLOGICAL ABSTRACTS, INC. (P.O. Box 22206, San Diego, CA 92122, USA) together with the SA accession number and the complete citation of the document to be reproduced. To calculate price per document, multiply the number of pages as indicated in the citation of the abstract by US $0.25 and add a US $1.50 search fee per document. POSTAGE is EXTRA. Below is a table for postage fees that vary by weight/size of paper.

No. of Pages	US & Canada Postage Fee	All Other Countries
		Postage Fee	Air Mail Surface
1- 5	$0.39	US $1.40	US $1.00
6-10	$0.73	$2.24	$1.90
11-15	$1.07	$2.78	$2.30
16-20	$1.41	$3.32	$2.75
21 +	Additional multiples as above

CONFERENCE papers are available ONLY when the following notation precedes the text of the abstract; ● "Complete paper available from SA Reproduction Service prepaid at $0.25 per page plus $1.50 search and postage. Length: pp." For copies of paper without this notation, write directly to the author, whose address is listed in the citation.

31 sociology of art (creative & performing)

88T4323

Benedict, Philip, Towards the Comparative Study of the Popular Market for Art: The Ownership of Paintings in Seventeenth-Century Metz, Past and Present, 1985, 109, Nov., 100-117.

¶ Most estimates of the influence of mass markets for art on the work of painters in past centuries have not been based on detailed statistical evidence. Analyzed here are 270 probate inventories recorded in Metz, France, during the years 1645-1657, & 1667-1672. It is clear that a substantial market existed for paintings of certain kinds; paintings hung in approximately 58% of the city's households, the mean number being 5.5 paintings. (This average is computed over all households, not only those with paintings.) Most paintings were assessed at relatively low prices & were of standardized subjects. Differences in painting ownership by SC & religion, & differences in subjects of paintings owned by various groups are explored. Quantitative & qualitative data on painting ownership reveal a great deal about the social & political history of the time. 4 Tables. W. H. Stoddard

88T4324

DeKoninck, Marie-Charlotte (Ministère affaires culturelles Québec, Québec), Les Musées privés: hier privés, aujourd'hui hybrides. Prévoyons l'avenir (Yesterday's Private Museums, Today's Hybrid Institutions: Planning for Tomorrow), ♦ Loisir et Société/Society and Leisure, 1987, 10, 1, spring, 83-101 (FRE)

¶ A profile of Quebec's accredited museums (N = 35) & exhibition centers (N = 17), based on data from questionnaires sent out in 1985/86 by the province's Dept of Cultural Affairs & completed by museum directors. The data reveal that these institutions are very dynamic; they play an important social & cultural role, & their activities are geared to diffusion of information, education, & accessibility. It is also shown that almost all these museums developed from personal initiatives taken by individuals who wished to make their local or regional heritage better known. Public funding led to the acquisition of museological equipment, & museums that were originally private gradually became either public or hybrid institutions. It is concluded that the future of these institutions still lies in the hands of the individuals who work in them. 5 Tables. Modified HA

88T4325

Emberley, Julia (Dept English York U, North York Ontario M3J 1P3), The Fashion Apparatus and the Deconstruction of Postmodern Subjectivity, ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de théorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 1-2, winter-spring, 39-50.

¶ An examination of the cultural significance of the social apparatus of fashion. The pervasiveness of alienation from one's own body is emphasized as a central motif of fashion, as is the dependence of fashion on economic exploitation. An article from the Mar 1985 issue of the British fashion magazine Harper's and Queen (Galliano, John, "Visions of Afghanistan: Layers of Suiting, Shirting and Dried-Blood Tones") is selected for interpretation. Emphasis is given to the incorporation of punk styles & their protest against the uniformity of fashion into fashion as an alternative style. 1 Illustration. W. H. Stoddard

88T4326

Faurschou, Gail (30 Albany Rd, Toronto Ontario M5R 3C3), Fashion and the Cultural Logic of Postmodernity, ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de théorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 1-2, winter-spring, 68-82.

¶ It is argued that if fashion today appears divorced from the history of dress as a ceremonial, religious, or otherwise socially distinctive investment of symbolic exchange, it is precisely for this reason that it constitutes an exemplary site for examining the most pervasive tendencies & contradictions of late capitalist society. Not only does fashion most completely embody the logic of planned obsolescence, but, drawing on Jean Baudrillard & Fredric Jameson, fashion is shown to most clearly document the final transition from a symbolic to a signifying system of exchange, & hence from a modern to a postmodern culture of consumption. Effects of this cultural logic are the reification & disappearance of the human body in fashion images & the heightened tendency toward abstraction in general. A reading is included of Calvin Klein's "Obsession" videos as the ultimate expression of the cynicism of desire & power in late capitalism. 3 Illustrations, 1 Appendix. AA

88T4327

Gillespie, Patti P. & Cameron, Kenneth M. (Dept Communication Arts & Theatre U Maryland, College Park 20742), The Teaching of Acting in American Colleges and Universities, 1920-1960, ♦ Communication Education, 1986, 35, 4, Oct., 362-371.

¶ Replicating an earlier study (Hamar, C. E., The Rise of Drama and Theatre in the American College Curriculum, 1900-1920, doctoral dissertation, Stanford U, Calif, 1951) for the years 1920-1960, & adding to it an analysis of national convention programs & published books, significant developments in the teaching of acting in US Colls & Us are identified. Acting became an accepted part of the academic curriculum during this period. Before WWII its instruction stressed acting as specific preparation for performance, or as a branch of expression (interpretation). After a brief transition, when some instruction favored training in technical, "stage business," the teaching of acting after the war increasingly adopted the theories of Konstantin Stanislavski. Because new ideas about acting appeared at different rates in school catalogs, books, & convention programs, questions are raised about the transmission of ideas within the academic theatre community. 3 Tables, 50 References. HA

88T4328

Grossberg, Lawrence (Dept Speech Communication U Illinois, Urbana 61809), The Politics of Music: American Images and British Attitudes, ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de théorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 1-2, winter-spring, 144-151.

¶ It is argued that it is inappropriate to attempt to understand the effect & politics of popular music in the US by using models developed in different social formations, particularly England. In fact, many of the basic organizing structures & concepts that have been used—margin/center style, incorporation, resistance—simply do not accurately deal with the specific context of pop music in the US, or with the particular form of hegemonic politics operating. Both subculture theory & postmodernism too easily ignore the complexity of the musical mainstream, & its relations to its fans. AA

88T4329

Hamblen, Karen A. (Louisiana State U, Baton Rouge 70803), Base of Study for the Sociology of Art, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1986, 23, 1-2, Jan-Apr., 41-67.

¶ Various societal factors that may influence art are explored & evaluated in terms of their usefulness for a sociological understanding of artistic creation. Some phenomenological bases for the sociological study of art are reviewed, & seven categories of investigation are examined: social institutions, temporal change, art object, artist, functions of art, media & technology, & the public. It is argued that the predominant analogical structuralist approach, which posits a more or less parallel relationship between a culture's symbolic system & the social order, has limited feasibility since it ignores the indigenous populations who are the creators & consumers of art. Rather, the sociology of art must focus on the interpretational & evaluative input of the general public & how their response to society itself shape artistic production & determine its social significance. K. Hyatt

88T4330

Ionin, Leonid Grigor'evich (Institut Sociological Research Soviet Academy Sciences, Novocheremushkinskaya ul 46 Moscow 117418), ... vozzovet proshedshee (razmyshleniya sotsiologa o novom fil'me T Abuladze) ... And the Past Will Appeal (A Sociologist's Thoughts on T Abuladze's New Film), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 62-72. (RUS)

¶ A review of Tengiz Abuladze's new film, Pokayanie (Contrition) which presents a positive assessment of the film's critical treatment of Stalinism. Although some critics consider the film artistically imperfect it remains well integrated in its thematic content. Special attention is given to: the antihero, Varlam Aravidze; the questions of guilt, sin, & redemption; & the central meaning of one scene focusing on a church at the end of a long street. Current Soviet political & economic policies seeking to rid the nation of Stalinist influences are echoed in the film showing the necessity to admit the mistakes of the past in order to overcome them. 1 Photograph, 2 References. G. Prostavov of the riddle is to bring the participants to an understanding of that logic. Riddles grammatically have a question-answer form, but do not function pragmatically as questions & answers. The same type of special logic can be found in short narrative jokes. It is claimed that the question-answer format of riddles corresponds to the Socratic method of argumentation, whereas the narrative format of jokes corresponds to classical expository argument. B. Annesser Murray

88T4315

Raskin, Victor (Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907), Linguistic Heuristics of Humor: A Script-Based Semantic Approach, ♦International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 65, 11-25.

¶ The relevance of a linguistic theory of verbal humor to humor heuristics is explored. Some general rules for applying linguistics to the study of humor are outlined, & a script-based semantic theory of humor is developed. This theory identifies necessary components in the text of a joke: (1) a switch from a bona fide mode of communication to the joke-telling mode, (2) the text of an intended joke, (3) two (partially) overlapping scripts compatible with the text, (4) an oppositeness relation between the two scripts, & (5) a trigger, obvious or implied, switching one script to the other. Some general strategies for joke making are introduced, based on providing the missing parameters of the joke. 25 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4316

Sherzer, Joel (Dept Anthropology U Texas, Austin 78712-1086), A Discourse-Centered Approach to Language and Culture, American Anthropologist, 1987, 89, 2, June, 295-309

¶ The Sapir-Whorf hypothesis, as usually formulated, searches for isomorphisms between grammar & culture & views lang as either providing the means for thought & perception, or, in its stronger form, conditioning thought, perception, & world view. Discourse is considered here to be the concrete expression of lang-culture relationships. It is discourse that creates, recreates, focuses, modifies, & transmits both culture & lang & their intersection, & it is especially in verbally artistic & playful discourse, eg, poetry, magic, verbal dueling, & political rhetoric that the resources provided by grammar, as well as cultural meanings & symbols, are activated to their fullest potential & the essence of lang-culture relationships becomes salient. 51 References. HA

88T4317

Smitherman-Donaldson, Geneva (Center Black Studies Wayne State U, Detroit MI 48202), Opinion toward a National Public Policy on Language, ♦College English, 1987, 49, 1, Jan, 29-36

¶ A national public policy on lang is advocated, with emphasis on: (1) the need for teaching the lang of wider communication, ie, standard American Eng, which is essential to literacy & to advancement & participation in modern US society; (2) the need to reaffirm the legitimacy of non-mainstream langs & dialects, & to promote co-equal native-lang instruction on the basis that those who are aware of their own lang as a legitimate system are more receptive to being taught the standard lang, & (3) the need to promote acquisition of foreign langs, preferably langs spoken in the Third World, eg, Spanish. 20 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4318

Thomas, Alan R. (University Coll North Wales, Bangor), A Spoken Standard for Welsh: Description and Pedagogy, ♦International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 66, 99-113

¶ Examined are the SS & structural integrity of current models for a standard form of spoken Welsh. Although the major spoken model derives from lang planning policies implemented in the 1960s & 1970s, an expansion of Welsh media has had some impact. Two major dialect continua, northern & southern, are recognized, each with internal east/west divisions. Historically, Welsh has had no single central standard version, a fact that some view as an obstacle to lang development & maintenance. Contributions to a pedagogical model are considered. It is concluded that a number of norms exist for both public & private usage. 4 Tables, 15 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4319

Washbaugh, William (U Wisconsin, Milwaukee 53201), The Acquisition of Communicative Skills by the Deaf of Providence Island, Semiotica, 1986, 62, 1-2, 179-190.

¶ Providence Island Sign Lang is used by about twenty cerebrally normal deaf persons residing on the Island & has been developing over a period of at least two generations. Nevertheless, it is characterized as "inchoate" suggesting that lang creation requires more than just an underlying bioprogram & the presence of other persons in need of a lang. Lang creation is argued to also require a centripetal social movement, a turning inward of a people to themselves. The deaf persons in this community do not have this inwardness or consciousness of themselves as a people, & therefore have not advanced their lang to its full potential. Some specific traits of Providence Island Sign Lang are described. It is argued that this type of situation, where the deaf population is not encouraged but stifled by the hearing population, may be more prevalent than suspected, wherever the education of the deaf within an otherwise homogeneous society is neglected. 2 Figures, 14 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4320

Williams, Brackette (Duke U, Durham NC 27706), Humor, Linguistic Ambiguity, and Disputing in a Guyanese Community, ♦International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 65, 79-94

¶ The use of humor in the resolution of disputes among a group of speakers of Guyanese Eng & the role of egalitarianism as an ideological foundation of the community are examined. The production of humor in disputes relies on both the ambiguity of indirectness & the indirectness of linguistic ambiguity, both of which are aspects of the egalitarian convention. The role of humor in airing disputes during ritual events such as a wedding or funeral is considered. Within this context, the indirectness & ambiguity of the approach allow expression of grievances with little risk of open hostility. Some sample exchanges are analyzed. 13 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4321

Williams, Colin H., Location and Context in Welsh Language Reproduction: A Geographic Interpretation, ♦International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 66, 61-83

¶ Some major approaches to lang distribution are examined, & major findings of the 1981 census of Wales are discussed. The role of geographers in studying lang distribution is examined, & it is proposed that they should place more emphasis on lang as a social variable. Recent studies have shown appreciation of the fact that lang is an indicator of social tensions between a minority community & the majority state. 4 Tables, 4 Figures, 29 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4322

Williams, Glyn, Bilingualism, Class Dialect, and Social Reproduction, ♦International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 66, 85-98

¶ The issue of class variation in reference to minority langs is explored for the case of Welsh. Statistical data show that a revitalization of the Welsh lang has occurred in some locations, with a corresponding decline in negative perceptions of the lang. This has occurred in areas where the prestige of the lang is based on its relevance to certain public-sector petit-bourgeois & bourgeois class places. The process is leading to the emergence of a class variety of Welsh derived not from a conscious process of standardization, but from a process of prestige extension. 5 Figures, 8 References. B. Annesser Murray

75 sociology of literature

88T4340

DiFazio, Margherita (Dept sociologia U Roma, I-00100 Italy), L'indice del romanzo: tra semiotica e sociologia della letteratura (The Index of the Novel Between Semiotics and the Sociology of Literature), Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug, 167-178. (ITA)

¶ A discussion of the function of the index of a novel examines whether the inclusion or omission of an index, & the type of index selected, express a viewpoint, &, if so, how this can be analyzed. The index is structurally analyzed as a paratextual feature through which a novel becomes a book. Based on two textual strategies "glance" & "observation" four typologies of index are examined, according to four different viewpoints or analytic dimensions: order & sequence, consistency, epistemic glance, & individualizing glance. Eight novels are used as examples, including Italian & foreign, classical & contemporary works. 20 References. Modified HA

88T4341

Ferrarotti, Franco (via Appenini 42, I-00198 Rome Italy), "Gerontion": tempo, storia e valori in T. S. Eliot ("Gerontion" Time, History and Values in T. S. Eliot), ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 78, June-Sept, 19-29. (ITA)

¶ An investigation of T. S. Eliot's concepts of history & time, as revealed in the character of Gerontion in Eliot's poem of the same name. For Eliot, history is not a diachronic, unilinear flux, intelligible on the basis of rational calculation, history is first of all a human enterprise, heavily conditioned by human passions. Eliot's pessimism stems from the persuasion that history is a cumulation of vicissitudes, lacking any grand design. Modified HA

88T4342

Kaye, Lawrence (Brandeis U, Waltham MA 02254), A Voice from the Border: The Fiction of Raymond Williams, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Science, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1034-A-1035-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715744.

88T4343

Ramsbey, Thomas W. & Clark, Roger D. (Dept Sociology Rhode Island Coll, Providence 02908), Social Interaction and Literary Creativity, ♦ International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 105-117.

¶ An investigation of the kinds of social interaction that seem to encourage & stimulate creative writers. Previously published biographical data on 62 Nobel Prize winners in literature & on 15 nonlaureate, but widely acknowledged, contributors to the literary canon, suggest that 5 social settings have recurrent salience for the expression of literary creativity: the family, the U, the occupational world, coteries of writers, & extended cross-cultural experience. Some of these settings are tentatively related to the generation of a marginal creativity among eminent writers. 2 References. HA

THE LEFT INDEX

a quarterly index to periodicals of the left

- ... is a subject index to the contents of professional and scholarly periodical literature written from a left perspective
- ... includes an index to book reviews, a journal index, and a guide to new periodicals
- ... meets a major indexing need in college, research, and special libraries

PLEASE ASK YOUR LIBRARY TO SUBSCRIBE NOW.

Subscription rate: $55/yr. Single issue $15/ea.

Subscribe to: THE LEFT INDEX

Individuals $30/yr.

511 Lincoln Street

Santa Cruz, CA 95060 U.S.A.

POSTAGE outside U.S.A. $5/yr. surface. $15/yr. airmail, $10/yr. airmail (Canada)

88T4331

Knite, Berkeley (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6), 'Obsession' and Desire: Fashion and the Post-modern Scene, ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de theorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 1-2, winter-spring, 84-89

† A reading of the content of Calvin Klein's "Obsession" advertisements illuminates the symbolic content of bodily adornment in contemporary culture. The interpretive approach of Jacques Lacan is applied to their content to reveal the patriarchal structuring of desire. 9 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4332

Kroker, Arthur & Kroker, Marilouise, Body Digest: Theses on the Disappearing Body in the Hyper-Modern Condition, ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de theorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 1-2, winter-spring, 1-xvi

† The body & its fate are a central concern for present postmodern society & its aesthetics. It is suggested that the already established disappearance of the natural body is a major reason for this. Accompanying it is the death of the discursive body & the disappearance of the body into a general economy of excess. The resulting scene is one of panic bodies & of simultaneous hyperexteriorization & hyperinteriorization. 6 Illustrations. W. H. Stoddard

88T4333

Levin, Charles (6550 Sherbrooke West #1817, Montreal Quebec H4B 1N6), Carnal Knowledge of Aesthetic States: The Infantile Body, the Sign, and the Postmortemist Condition, ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de theorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 1-2, winter-spring, 90-110

† A discussion of the convergence of poststructuralist & postmodernist social theory, focusing in particular on the status of the human body in the writings of Jacques Lacan, Michel Foucault, Gilles Deleuze, & Jean Baudrillard. These authors have overemphasized the social & linguistic construction of the body, & thus falsely inferred the disintegration of the body in pre-Oedipal psychic states, which they equate with the condition of postmodern culture. In opposition to the thesis that the body is a linguistically structured cultural artifact in historical eclipse, a Kleinian conception of the body as an unconscious elaboration of prelinguistic & pregenital interpersonal & affective experience is proposed. The central themes of postmodernism are closely linked to the traditional emphasis on the role of reconstruction in the psychoanalytic process, leading to a rather one-sided use of the psychoanalytic model in social theory, in which the well-known phenomena of repetition have taken precedence over the psychosomatic presence of the body in the transference. Modified AA

88T4334

Lipton, Jack P. (Dept Psychology U Arizona, Tucson 85721), Stereotypes concerning Musicians within Symphony Orchestras, The Journal of Psychology, 1987, 121, 1, Jan, 85-93

† The social psychology of musical groups, a new but emerging area of inquiry, is critically reviewed. Professional musicians (N = 227) from 16 major orchestras throughout the US & Canada completed a questionnaire dealing with stereotypes & personality traits of musicians from each of the 4 major orchestral sections (strings, woodwinds, brass, & percussion). The major finding was that the brass & strings were consistently on opposite poles of the continua. 1 Table, 54 References. HA

88T4335

Lotmar, Gerold (Anwandstr 48, CH-8004 Zurich Switzerland), Pan in Danger. Die Steeldrum-Musik der Schwarzen Trinidads und ihre missverstandene Rezeption in der Schweiz (Pan in Danger. The Steeldrum Music of the Black Trinidadians and its Misunderstood Reception in Switzerland), curare, 1987, 10, 2, 135-144 (GER)

† The origins & development of Caribbean steeldrum music are outlined. It began in the 1930s in the black slums of Trinidad, when the steeldrum, a musical instrument made from an oil barrel, was first developed. The history of this instrument which is still ostracized by the small, white Ue in Trinidad is characterized by oppression, accommodation, & resistance to the white man's domination. Steeldrum music, played by bands of up to 100+ musicians, represents black culture & identity. In Switzerland, the steeldrum was adopted by small groups of white, Mc musicians, who produced a banal & syrupy pop music, which has been re-exported to Caribbean tourist resorts. It is feared that this degenerate form of steeldrum music, together with the white Trinidadians' rejection of black steelbands, threaten the continuance of genuine black music. Modified HA

88T4336

Lowy, Michel, et al, Hermetic Bird Surrealists' Answer to Jurgen Habermas, ♦ Praxis International, 1987, 6, 4, Jan, 503-505

† Some comments on surrealism published by Jurgen Habermas (see SA 33 5/85Q1195 & SA 30.4/82M4714) reveal a misunderstanding of the subject. Surrealism is best understood not as an attempt to destroy the aura of art but as an attempt to reestablish it around all human activities. Surrealists envision art as one of the most powerful levers by which to transform the world. W. H. Stoddard

88T4337

Migueluez, Roberto (Dept Sociology U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5), Le Corps retrouve supplicie (The Discovery of a Tortured Body), ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de theorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 1-2, winter-spring, 161-185 (FRE)

† An investigation of the "disappearance" of people supposedly opposed to the government in Argentina in recent years, variously estimated at between 15,000 & 30,000 persons. As example, the case of Ana Maria Martinez is examined in detail. Martinez, a metallurgical worker & militant member of the Socialist Workers' Party—a radical left-wing organization opposed to the military government—was kidnapped from her home. Although neighbors observed the kidnapping & reported it to the police, the official security organizations denied knowledge of the case. A mutilated corpse believed to be that of Martinez was later discovered, but the autopsy requested by her family was not permitted. Analysis of this case leads to a discussion of basic problems in the social structure & SC relations in Argentina. Power strategies are examined, & it is argued that such occurrences represent manifestations of power per se, devoid of any legitimacy. 12 References. C. Waters

88T4338

Sawchuk, Kim (Dept Social & Political Thought York U, North York Ontario M3J 1P3), A Tale of Inscription/Fashion Statements, ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de theorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 1-2, winter-spring, 51-67

† Two allegories introduce the question of fashion & its significance in capitalist society. In fashion the social is inscribed at the level of the body. Standard feminist critiques of fashion are flawed by their false belief that a natural body beyond socialization has any reality, & also that it is possible to transcend the body & culture. The real problem with fashion is that it restricts desire into a restricted economy. In fact, it is necessary to transcend the modernist valorization of the real & of authenticity & to recognize the imaginative possibilities in the resurrection of defunct fictions. 1 Illustration. W. H. Stoddard

88T4339

Tomaselli, Keyan G. & Muller, Johan (Contemporary Cultural Studies Unit U Natal, Durban 4001 South Africa), Class, Race and Oppression: Metaphor and Metonymy in 'Black' South African Theatre, ♦ Critical Arts, 1987, 4, 3, 40-58

† A critical examination of contemporary discussion on the form & origin of black & Wc theater in South Africa identifies three main historical materialistic approaches: performance theory, which uses a dramatic semiotic model, atheoretical descriptions of white academics who have written on their collaborations with black trade union members in developing Wc theater, & the work of Ari Sitas (eg. see "Culture and Production: The Contradictions of Working Class Theatre in South Africa," Africa Perspective, 1986, New Series 1/2, 84-111), who states that "practice is primary & theory & critique is always a postmortem examination." Here, challenged are the idea that theory is postmortem & the metaphorically based argument that theater stands only as representation & is discontinuous from experience in the workplace. The role of white & black intellectuals in cultural production through performance is examined, & a theory of semiotic production in popular performance is suggested, which draws on Wc history arising out of popular social movements. The metaphoric vs metonymic nature of audience response to performance is discussed relative to class position. 46 References. Modified AA

1400 sociology of education

32 sociology of education

88T4344

Allen, Walter R. (Center Afro-American & African Studies U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), Black Colleges vs. White Colleges, ♦ Change, 1987, 19, 3, May-June, 28-34

¶ Since 1960 the number of black students attending Coll has doubled &, for the first time in US history, black students are more likely to matriculate at predominantly white rather than traditionally black institutions. Here, qualitative differences in the experiences & outcomes of blacks who attend white vs black Colls are examined, based on questionnaire data from a national study of 1,600 black students enrolled in 16 public Us-8 black & 8 white. Black students face a trade-off in higher education: on black campuses they purchase psychological well-being, cultural affinity, & nurturing academic relations at cost of limited physical facilities, fewer resources, & more restricted academic programs, on white campuses they purchase impressive physical plants, rich resources, & more diverse program options at the cost of social alienation, intense academic competition, racial stress, & loss of peace of mind. An 11 point plan for improving black higher education on both black & white campuses is advanced. 1 Table, 1 Photograph. Modified AA

88T4345

Angus, Lawrence B. (Deakin U, Victoria 3217 Australia), Developments in Ethnographic Research in Education: From Interpretive to Critical Ethnography, ♦ Journal of Research and Development in Education, 1986, 20, 1, fall, 59-67.

¶ It is argued that, although conventional ethnography within the interpretivist research tradition offers certain advances on positivist research, it is not without its own limitations. On the basis of a critique of the theoretical & ideological bases of these research traditions, the use of critical ethnography in the study of schools is advocated. Such ethnography is capable of bridging the gap between macro- & microanalysis because it addresses the dialectic between broad issues of social structure & issues of social interaction that involve human agents. Moreover, such critical ethnography is also appropriate for the cumulative work of interrogating theory with data & vice versa. In this way, it may contribute both to more sophisticated & better understanding of the situation being investigated & also to more complete & better theory. 46 References. AA

88T4346

Antonopoulou, Christina (New York U, NY 10003), Political Ideology and Educational Change in Greece: A Content Analysis of Secondary Text Books, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 749-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712735.

88T4347

Archer, Edith L. & Dresden, Judith H. (Dept Planning Research & Evaluation Houston Independent School District, 3830 Richmond Ave TX 77027), A New Kind of Dropout: The Effect of Minimum Competency Testing on High School Graduation in Texas, ♦ Education and Urban Society, 1987, 19, 3, May, 269-279

¶ A discussion of the Minimum Competency Test (MCT) & its effect in creating dropouts among high school students in Tex. Results of the first MCT administration in 1985 are analyzed, & the subsequent impact on the dropout rate is assessed. Prevention programs to intervene in this category of potential dropouts are outlined, & their effects considered. Remediation that begins early in the school year may prove to be as successful with this at-risk group as it has been in more traditional programs. 4 Tables, 11 References. F Rasmussen

88T4348

Batallán, Graciela & García, José Fernando, Trabajo docente, democratización y conocimiento (Educational Work, Democratization and Knowledge), ♦ Revista Paraguaya de Sociología 1986, 23, 65, Jan-Apr, 31-45. (SPA)

¶ The ideal role of the educational worker in the transformation to democracy is the focus of a Paraguayan field study of schoolteachers' workshops. The function of the teacher as conveyor of established ideology can conflict with the appropriation of knowledge in the pupils' interest. The work of teaching is characterized simultaneously by subordination within a hierarchy & relative autonomy in the classroom. The ideological significance of teaching is analyzed, with particular attention to the development of autonomy in the pupil & its importance for democracy. 11 References. J. Anderson

88T4349

Bernardes, Jon (School Economics & Social Studies Polytechnic Wolverhampton, WV1 1SB England), "Doing Things with Words" Sociology and "Family Policy" Debates, ♦ The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 4, Nov, 679-702

¶ In an examination of family policy, a review of the previous literature of family sociology provides evidence to demonstrate that traditional family sociology has been "doing things with words." In this area sociology, far from being innocuous, has had real social impact & may have been oppressive & reactionary. 107 References. Modified HA

88T4350

Bors, Douglas A. (Ontario Instit Studies Education, 252 Bloor S West Toronto M5S 1V6), Introducing Microcomputers into Schools: A Social-Political Issue, Education and Society, 1987, 5, 1-2, June-Dec, 55-63

¶ A discussion of sociopolitical issues related to the introduction of computers into the classroom. The issue is described as not merely a technical matter, but one involving values & implications that will affect various groups in society differently. To avoid increasing the educational, economic, & political inequalities that already exist in society, the empty promises offered by classroom computerization must be critically addressed. 23 References. Modified HA

88T4351

Burrage, Hilary, Sociology and the Proposed National Core Curriculum, Network, 1987, 39, Oct, 8-9

¶ The proposed national core curriculum in GB stresses the study of math, English, & science, & decreases the emphasis on all areas of social science. Consequences of these changes are evaluated, & negative results regarding social science education are discussed. F Rasmussen

88T4352

Cain, William E. (Wellesley Coll, MA 02181), Review: Education and Social Change, ♦ College English, 1987, 49, 1, Jan, 83-88.

¶ A review essay on books by Henry A. Giroux, Theory and Resistance: A Pedagogy for the Opposition (South Hadley, Mass: Bergin, 1983); & Stanley Aronowitz & Henry A. Giroux, Education under Siege: The Conservative, Liberal, and Radical Debate over Schooling (South Hadley, Mass: Bergin, 1985 (see listings in IRPS No. 42)). Though not without their flaws, these works are major achievements that deserve serious, sustained attention. Giroux & Aronowitz fail to specify in detail the kinds of pedagogical practices that follow from critical socialist democratic theory, but they pursue their case with power & passion. They have made an admirable effort to speak from a leftist position about education issues that neoconservatives have attempted to define in back-to-basics & business-oriented terms. F. Rasmussen

88T4353

Christopher, Elizabeth (19 Ryries Parade, Cremorne New South Wales 2090 Australia), Academia: A Cross-Cultural Problem, International Journal of Intercultural Relations, 1987, 11, 2, 191-206.

¶ A discussion of some strategies to help graduates in US survive their theses or dissertations. The assumption is that Us create their own unique cultural environments & all new students, irrespective of background, will experience some culture shock. Therefore, cross-cultural orientation programs should focus less on individuals' cultural origins & more on their strengths & weaknesses as learners. It is argued that a thesis or dissertation requires four different kinds of problem-solving behavior: experiential involvement in the research, reflective observation of the

NEW EDUCATION

An international journal in educational theory and practice.

New Education, first published in 1978, provides an international forum for original ideas and investigations on current and future trends in educational theory and practice.

The journal devotes its attention to educational reforms affecting elementary and secondary curricula, teaching methods, curriculum design, development and evaluation, school syllabuses, educational administration, vocational education, aesthetic and health education, moral education, lifelong education, innovations, participation in education, comparative studies in academic achievement, teacher training and in service education for elementary and secondary teachers.

The articles are chosen for their originality, readability and accessibility to a wide audience of teachers, principals, academics, educational administrators, consultants and community education officers.

In order to ensure that articles are of the highest quality all contributions are submitted to at least two independent referees before acceptance for publication.

Contributions are invited (normally no more than 6000 words, in two copies with stamped addressed envelope for return) and should be sent to the Editor, New Education, James Nicholas Publishers, P.O. Box 244, South Melbourne, Australia, 3206.

The journal is published twice a year, in February and July, making one volume (approx. 300 pages)
ISSN 0156-0905

Subscription rates (payable in advance): one year US$60.00
Individuals and elementary and secondary schools US$24.00
(for accelerated surface postage and packing add US$5.00 per issue). Orders and remittances should be addressed to James Nicholas Publishers, P.O. Box 244, Albert Park, Australia, 3206.

EDITOR: Res Zajda.

MANAGING EDITOR: Dr. Joseph Zajda.

CONSULTING EDITORS: Basil Bernstein, Martin Carnoy, John Eggleston

RECENT ARTICLES INCLUDE:

- ECO-PAEDAGOGICS AND THE COMMONS Ivan Illich, Cuernavaca, Mexico
- MORAL EDUCATION IN SECONDARY SCHOOLING Jerrold R. Coombs, University of British Columbia
- CURRICULUM THEORY AND THE POLITICS OF CURRICULUM PRODUCTION Lindsay Fitzclarence, Deakin University and Henry Groux, Miami University
- THE ART AND CRAFT OF TEACHING Elliot W. Eisner, Stanford University
- COLLAPSE OF HUMANIST EDUCATION Allan Barcan, University of Newcastle
- COMPARATIVE STUDY OF SCHOOL KNOWLEDGE Richard Heyman, University of Calgary
- ASSIMILATION, ETHNIC IDENTITY AND CHILDREN Arthur J. Cropley, University of Hamburg
- IN-SERVICE TEACHER TRAINING FOR MULTICULTURAL BRITAIN John Eggleston, et al, University of Keele
- REGIONALISATION IN VICTORIA Lawrence Angus, Deakin University
- MULTICULTURALLY BASED EXPERIENCES WITH MUSIC LEARNING: AUSTRALIAN RESEARCH F. J. Rees, University of Queensland
- 'DUNGLONS, DRAGONS' AND TEACHER DEVELOPMENT Ken Mercer, University of Tasmania
- DEVELOPING THE CREATIVE ABILITY OF TEACHERS Margaret Sutherland
- THE ART OF TEACHING ZEN Ignacio Gots
- MULTICULTURALISM AND EDUCATION Geoffrey Partington
- GLOBAL EDUCATION A. Al-Rubaily
- TEACHING DRAMA AS ART Launt Thompson
- WORK EXPERIENCE IN SCHOOLS Peter Watkins
- EDUCATION IN CHINA Stewart Fraser
- EDUCATIONAL REFORMS IN NIGERIA E. C. Osunla
- FINDING YOUR WAY THROUGH THE EDUCATION REPORTS F. Parker
- WHAT IS WRONG WITH EDUCATION? Fred Stoker
- COMPUTERS AND EDUCATION: Symposium
- EDUCATION IN THE MICROCOMPUTER REVOLUTION Gary G. Bitter
- INTELLIGENT COMPUTER-AIDED INSTRUCTION A. G. Shannon

ORDER FORM

Please enter our subscription to New Education

We enclose $

Name

Address

Signed

Date

88T4363

Freedman, Carl (Louisiana State U, Baton Rouge 70803), Marxist Theory, Radical Pedagogy, and the Reification of Thought, UM College English, 1987, 49, 1, Jan, 70-82

† A discussion of the academic literary Left in the US, & its split into two principal tendencies—the theorists & the pedagogues. These groups are defined & described, institutional expressions of each are identified, & their respective publications are analyzed. It is argued that the formation of these two tendencies is symptomatic of certain structural realities of the literary profession itself & of the private & public U systems. The split between the two groups within the literary Left registers the divided SC identity that US capitalism imposes on academic teachers. Strategies are proposed to overcome this condition. 7 References. F Rasmussen

88T4364

Gelb, Steven A. & Mizokawa, Donald T. (New Mexico State U, Las Cruces 88003), Special Education and Social Structure: The Commonality of "Exceptionality", American Educational Research Journal, 1986, 23, 4, winter, 543-557

† The appropriateness of the objective disability paradigm for mild learning problems was tested by correlating the prevalence of subjective & objective disability with 13 social demographic variables using special education classifications in the 50 states & Washington, DC, as cases. Multiple regression analyses using aggregates of social variables as predictors were conducted for classifications that were significantly related to social variables. None of the objective classifications could be related to social structure, but two subjective classifications, educable mental retardation & learning disabilities, were strongly & inversely associated with SE indicators. These classifications appear to be qualitatively distinct from objective disability classifications. Policy should be changed to direct attention away from presumed deficits of individuals & toward identification & treatment of the full range of factors that may cause mild learning problems. 4 Tables, 51 References. Modified HA

88T4365

Gigante, Elba, Lewin, Pedro & Varese, Stefano (Grupo Apoyo Desarrollo Etnico, Oaxaca Mexico), Condiciones etno-linguísticas y pedagógicas para una educación indígena culturalmente apropiada (Ethnolinguistic and Pedagogical Conditions for a Culturally Appropriate Native Education), UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 66, May-Aug, 121-153. (SPA)

† Experiences from educational programs designed for native Indians in Oaxaca, Mexico, form the basis for an investigation into the needs & possibilities for bicultural & bilingual education. The history of colonization & oppression & the current economic & cultural situations of indigenous populations relative to the national social & political context are discussed. The importance of native culture as a resource for production & the necessity of modifying obsolete conditions of cultural reproduction are emphasized. The political aspects of language use & linguistic development in relation to education are examined for several ethnic groups in Oaxaca. An argument is presented for a curriculum of intercultural education enabling the full autonomous development of the cultural potential of ethnic groups & the reclamation of their history, territory, & language. 1 Table, 17 References. J Anderson

88T4366

Giovannini, Graziella (Dept Sociologia U Bologna, I-40126 Italy), I molti tempi, luoghi, attori della formazione: un'analisi del policentrismo a partire dall'offerta (The Many Different Times, Places, and Actors in Education. An Analysis of Polycentrism in Current Education), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 1, Jan-Mar, 3-17. (ITA)

† An investigation of the current trend toward polycentrism or pluralism in education in Italy. Innovations in the educational system that bring into question the traditional hierarchical organization are discussed. Meaningful indicators for educational pluralism are identified, with reference to target groups, organizers, & socializing agencies. The multiple dimensions of polycentrism are examined, with particular attention to aspects of communication & the mass media. It is concluded that, although the new approaches involve ambivalence & risks & raise many theoretical & practical questions, they also provide a strong potential for positive change as regards the development of an integral human being. Modified HA

88T4367

Grossmann-né, Hortobágyi Katalin, Társadalmi szerkezet és az iskola-rendszer összefüggése a német szovetségi köznevelésben (The Relationship of the Social Structure and the School System in the Federal Republic of Germany), Szociológia, 1983, 1-2, 153-170. (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available

88T4368

Hansen, Donald A. (U California, Berkeley 94720), Family-School Articulations: The Effects of Interaction Rule Mismatch, American Educational Research Journal, 1986, 23, 4, winter, 643-659

† An exploration of the schooling effects of discontinuities in the rules of interaction the child experiences in family & classroom. Two fundamental forms of rules are identified: exchange rules of interaction (which define allowed & expected behavior based on relative position, age, sex &/or status differences), & communal rules of interaction (which define desired & appropriate behavior based on interpersonal affinities & attitudes). Data gathered on 196 children in 8 elementary school classrooms in suburban New Zealand suggest that families tend to cluster into 2 general types, similar to those identified by earlier researchers: cohesive (strong in both types of rules), coercive (strong in exchange but relatively weak in communal rules), & laissez-faire (relatively weak in both). When classrooms are similarly classified, analyses of variance yield significant interactive effects between family & classroom interaction rules on children's academic grades. These findings suggest that (1) the greater the discontinuity in interaction rules between home & school, the more the child's academic grades decline; & (2) children from any type of home can be relatively advantaged in some classrooms & relatively disadvantaged in others. Implications for further research & theory development are discussed. 4 Tables, 29 References. HA

88T4369

Hardiman, Wintonnette Joyce (Union Experimenting Colls & Us Yellow Springs OH 45387), The Ancient Egyptian Autobiographical Tradition and Its Pedagogical Value to the Urban Adult Learner, Dissertation Abstracts International. A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 750-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714238.

88T4370

Heath, Anthony (Nuffield Coll, Oxford OX1 1NF England), Class in the Classroom, UM New Society, 1987, 81, 1281, 17 July, 13-15

† It is demonstrated that educational reforms in GB—specifically, the acts that made secondary education free (1944), provided for comprehensive reorganization (1965), & raised the school-leaving age (1974) have had little effect on changing SC inequalities in the schools. Data from 1949, 1972, & 1983 surveys that investigated SC background, access to selective schools, & attainment of the O-level (school certificate) among schoolboys born in 8 cohorts between 1890 & 1965 reveal that SC inequalities have remained virtually unchanged throughout GB educational history. Overall educational attainment, however, has continued to rise, & it is argued that this might have unexpected consequences for SC inequalities, making educational attainment more, rather than less, associated with social background. The failure of school reforms is attributed primarily to: (1) their rhetoric being stronger than action, & (2) ambitious parents finding ways to maximize their children's chances & thus thwart the reforms' goals of equality. 2 Diagrams, 5 References. K Hyatt

88T4371

Kirby, John R. & Teasdale, Warwick R. (Dept Education U Newcastle, New South Wales 2308 Australia), Children's Monitoring of Another's Comprehension: Effects of Reading Ability and Context, The Australian Journal of Education, 1987, 31, 1, Apr, 73-85.

† Previous research has shown that children do not monitor their own comprehension very well when reading. Theories have been advanced that emphasize the roles of capabilities & strategies in inhibiting monitoring; at least one crucial factor is that children often do not perceive that errors are possible in text. The "inserted cloze task," in which children are required to judge the correctness of another child's comprehension, was developed & used to test comprehension among above & below average readers in Australian school levels 3 & 4 ($\Sigma N = 100$). Their performance indicates that use of prior context within the sentence poses little difficulty for either group of readers. However, use of within-sentence following context is most likely in simple texts, & is the only measure that differentiates the better readers from the less able. These results demonstrate that comprehension can be elicited from even less skilled readers, but that the amount of context that must be considered is an important factor. A possible hierarchy of comprehension skills is discussed.

results, theorizing to & from the data, & applying data analysis to solve the research problem. Students are likely to find some of these activities less comfortable than others. They can be given guidelines to structure their research to maximize their problem-solving strengths & minimize potential weaknesses. 2 Figures, 11 References. HA

88T4354

Chroust, Peter (An der Walkmühle 6B, D-6450 Hanau I Federal Republic of Germany), Social Situation and Political Orientation-Students and Professors at Giessen University 1918-1945, Historical Social Research/Historische Sozialforschung, 1986, 39, July, 36-85

¶ Supplementary to the empiric study on Giessen students 1918-1945 (see SA 35 1/87R2305), in this second contribution Giessen professors ($N = 390$) are researched, based on U, political party, & government records. A less complex database allowed the use of different methods from those used in the student study, & different research questions are addressed. Focus is on structural changes in professorate, social origin, political orientation, & the effects of National Socialist U policy. 59 Figures. Modified HA

88T4355

Collins, Roger L. (Dept Educational Foundations U Cincinnati, OH 45221), Parents' Views of Alternative Public School Programs: Implications for the Use of Alternative Programs to Reduce School Dropout Rates, U Education and Urban Society, 1987, 19, 3, May, 290-302

¶ Telephone survey data from 2,000 public school children's parents are utilized to assess attitudes toward the use of alternative education programs to reduce school dropout rates. Results indicate that parents consider noncurricular factors over curricular factors in selecting a school for their children, & are more attracted to programs that reflect an emphasis on basic skills & traditional subject matter. 5 Tables, 22 References. F Rasmussen

88T4356

Combs, Michael W. (Louisiana State U, Baton Rouge 70803), The Federal Judiciary and Northern School Desegregation: Law, Politics, and Judicial Management, U Publius, 1986, 16, 2, spring, 33-52

¶ An examination of how interplay of political & legal factors has influenced the development of school desegregation policy in Mich & Ohio. It is argued that the district courts, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, & the US Supreme Court are sensitive to the influences of politics & legalism, however, the responses of the three kinds of federal courts are different. Recognizing a constitutional imperative to eradicate segregation, district courts have emphasized the participation of elected officials & affected community groups in the remedial process. Because of isolation & low visibility, the Sixth Circuit has tended to pursue a more tenacious policy course than either the district court or the Supreme Court. Meanwhile, the US Supreme Court has generally championed the cause of local officials by attempting to balance the interest of eliminating segregation with that of protecting the integrity of state & local decisionmakers. HA

88T4357

Dawson, Donald J. (Dept Leisure Studies Faculty Social Sciences U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5), Credentialism and Commodity Knowledge in the Curriculum, Education and Society, 1987, 5, 1-2, June-Dec, 29-35

¶ A discussion of the increased requirement for formal credentials for admittance to a wide variety of occupations & the impact of this credential inflation on the public education curriculum. One immediate consequence is the unprecedented penetration of postgraduate programs into almost all occupational fields. As a result, the public education curriculum has become characterized by closed classification & strong framing that give rise to fixed, clearly defined, & separate content areas. Knowledge is treated like a commodity: the content of the curriculum is not valued for its direct utility but for its exchange value in the market. 11 References. Modified HA

88T4358

Entwistle, Doris R., Alexander, Karl L., Cadigan, Doris & Pallas, Aaron (Dept Sociology Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218), The Schooling Process in First Grade: Two Samples a Decade Apart, American Educational Research Journal, 1986, 23, 4, winter, 587-613

¶ Parallel estimates of structural equation models are presented to explain children's educational attainment over first grade. One set of estimates is based on a 3-school sample drawn during 1971-1977, & the other from a 20-school sample drawn in 1982/83 ($N = 1,146$ & 825 students respectively). The evidence suggests that, within reasonable limits, results are comparable. The models capture some of the social influences that shape children's academic marks & to a lesser degree, the influences that shape their conduct marks & self-expectations. The strategies of data collection & modeling used here, which were especially developed for use with young children, have thus stood up to two field trials & to the passage of time. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 28 References. Modified HA

88T4359

Ethington, Corinna A. & Woffle, Lee M. (Coll Education U Illinois, Chicago 60680), A Structural Model of Mathematics Achievement for Men and Women, American Educational Research Journal, 1986, 23, 1, spring, 65-75

¶ The development of gender differences in mathematical achievement is investigated through estimation of a latent-construct causal model (estimated separately for Ms & Fs) using data on M & F high school sophomores ($\Sigma N = 16,555$) who were part of the first follow-up of the NORC 1980 High School & Beyond longitudinal study. Comparisons between corresponding structural parameter estimates reveals significant differences in the process of mathematics achievement: mathematics ability & attitudes have stronger effects on achievement for Ms than for Fs. Interactions between gender & the different variables in the model indicate that the process of mathematics achievement is not merely additive, but may be more complicated than has been assumed in previous research. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4360

Etzioni-Halevy, Eva (Australian National U, Canberra ACT 2601), Inequalities in Australian Education: A Neo-Weberian Perspective, U The Australian and New Zealand Journal of Sociology, 1987, 23, 2, July, 199-216

¶ An important development in the sociology of education has been the increasing prominence of neo-Marxist theory, whereby inequalities in education are ultimately based on economic class differences. However, the persistent inequalities in education, especially in Australian education, can better be explained in the framework of a neo-Weberian model. According to this model such inequalities are based primarily on the independent effect of cultural & attitudinal differences between SS groups, & on power differences between them. Support for this model comes from (1) 1982 official Australian survey & census statistics, & (2) previously published research data—including those reported in Marxist studies of education. 5 Tables, 33 References. HA

88T4361

Fischer, Frederick J. (US Office Management & Budget, Washington DC 20503), Graduation-Contingent Student Aid: Fighting the High Costs of Dropping Out, U Change, 1987, 19, 6, Nov-Dec, 40-47

¶ An examination of the relationship between the design of federal student aid subsidies & student enrollment & persistence decisions. Questions are raised regarding greater incentives for students to obtain degrees & certificates, & methods for creating such incentives. Society has a clear interest in maximizing the numbers of students who finally graduate, yet current student aid subsidies provide virtually no incentives for degree attainment. Graduation-contingent aid is a policy that seems to warrant additional discussion & action within the higher education community. F Rasmussen

88T4362

Forrer, Stephen E. (U Maryland, College Park 20742), The Annenberg/CPB Project: An Interview with Robben Fleming, U National Forum, 1986, 66, 3, summer, 2-3

¶ An interview with Robben Fleming, president of the Corp for Public Broadcasting during the Annenberg Project, in which a $150 million grant was used to create telecourses to make higher education more widely accessible to the US public. The project is discussed in terms of its educational value, social consequences, & operational problems. However, the size & decentralization of the US make it unlikely that a "national U of the air" will ever be developed. Some projections for the use of video, particularly through public broadcasting, in US higher education are offered. 1 Photograph. K. Hyatt

88T4381

Marshall, Tony F., Mediation: A New Mode of Establishing Order in Schools, Howard Journal of Criminal Justice, 1987, 26, 1, Feb, 33-46.

† The growth of new measures of coping with crime & social disorder, especially in the US, employing mediation (as method) & reconciliation (as aim) is described. Applications of such techniques in educational establishments in the US are then outlined, including campus ombudsmen, training for conflict resolution, & school mediation projects. Early developments in GB, & potential future directions, are discussed, & reference is made to the possible suitability for starting new initiatives of the recently announced Educational Support Grants for Pilot Projects to Promote Social Responsibility among Young People. 19 References. HA

88T4382

McCarthy, Cameron (National Center on Effective Secondary School Education U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Teacher Training Contradictions, Education and Society, 1986, 4, 2, Dec, 3-15

† A report on field research data on 16 students enrolled in a junior year practicum class in the teacher education program of a large midwestern US U. Results indicate that a very significant gap exists between the ideals & rhetoric of self-reflection & critical pedagogy inscribed in the teacher education program & the professional perspectives, pedagogical strategies, & daily experiences of the student teachers. This mismatch is explained by: (1) the multiple set of determinations or discourses that inform the complex relations between the student teachers as gendered & classed subjects, & (2) the contradictory nature of the text inscribed in the teacher education program itself. 39 References. Modified HA

88T4383

Medora, Nilufer & Woodward, John (Montana State U, Bozeman 59717), Loneliness among Students at an Indian University, U International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 119-135

† Feelings of loneliness among 104 students aged 16-23 attending Maharaja Sayajirao U in Baroda, India, in 1982/83, were investigated via questionnaire, & related to various family background, SE, & religious factors. Results of 3 statistical analyses indicate no significant effect of SE or religious variables; however, significant differences in loneliness were revealed as a function of Rs' ordinal position in the family, family closeness, self-ratings of happiness in childhood & over the previous year, & self-perceptions of loneliness. Comparison of these students' loneliness scores with those of 15 other groups investigated in previous studies indicates that they rank eighth in degree of loneliness, though they are generally less lonely than their US counterparts. It is suggested that the issue of loneliness may have different meanings to Indian & Western adolescents. 1 Table, 29 References. Modified HA

88T4384

Meyer, John, Scott, W. Richard & Strang, David (Stanford U, CA 94305), Centralization, Fragmentation, and School District Complexity, Administrative Science Quarterly, 1987, 32, 2, June, 186-201

† An investigation of how the administrative complexity (in funding & personnel) of US public school districts varies, depending on the importance of local, state, & federal funding environments. Data drawn from 4 governmental surveys of 15,013 school districts conducted in 1976/77 indicate that dependence on federal funding—which takes the form of complex & fragmented programs—generates more administrative positions & expenditures than does dependence on other levels. State funding, reflecting the legitimated & integrated state control over public education, generates the least administrative intensity. High levels of local funding—reflecting dependence on an environment that is complex but not highly formally organized—generate intermediate levels of administrative staffing & funding. 3 Tables, 24 References. Modified HA

88T4385

Milbrath, Lester W. & Doyno, Victor (Environmental Studies Center State U New York, Buffalo 14261), A Study of the Quality of University Life: SUNY at Buffalo, Social Indicators Research, 1987, 19, 2, May, 173-190.

† In 1983/84, a quality of life (QoL) questionnaire was sent to all 1,375 faculty members at the State U of New York, Buffalo. Each was asked to judge the level of satisfaction & importance of 123 elements of campus life. Analysis of the resulting data (715 usable responses) created a complex evaluation of the U (services, offices, functions, attitudes) that was well received; it has guided policy since, & the Faculty Senate has requested that it be repeated in 3-5 years. Campus QoL was generally perceived to be better in the professional schools than in the core arts & sciences faculties. Librarians had especially low morale & QoL. Monetary & institutional barriers that frustrated faculty members in trying to fulfill their professional obligations to their own high standards were the major factors detracting from QoL (lack of secretarial help, little travel money, bureaucratic red tape, etc). This methodology would easily be transferable to other campuses. Studies conducted elsewhere would provide a basis for comparison that would enlarge the ability to assess the Us professionally & help guide their future development. 8 Tables, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4386

Moya, Ruth, Educación bilingüe. ¿Para qué? (Bilingual Education—For What?), U Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 65-72. (SPA)

† A discussion of the problems of bilingual education in Latin America, specifically in Ecuador. Four areas are investigated: (1) the characteristics of bilingualism & multiculturalism in Latin America; (2) the origins, the underlying assumptions, & the execution of various projects in bilingual education; (3) the problems that confront these projects; & (4) the lack of participation in these projects by the people most concerned, ie, the indigenous peoples. It is concluded that the basic deficiencies are in the social system rather than the educational system. C. Waters

88T4387

Mulkey, Lynn (Hunter Coll, New York NY 10021), Getting Underprivileged Children Interested in Science: Positive Effects of a New York City Experiment, U Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 43-48

† An investigation of the development of interest & ability in science & mathematics among minority high school students. Longitudinal data were collected from 606 minority sophomores in New York City high schools. 112 Rs were invited to participate in a project conducted by the City U of New York, of whom 68 accepted. Participants attained a significantly higher level of ability in mathematics & science than other minority students, comparable to that of regularly admitted community Coll students, & were more likely to remain in high school, enroll in Coll, & perform well when enrolled in the City U of New York. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 11 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4388

Nash, Roy (Education Dept Massey U, Palmerston North New Zealand), Who Gets a Choice? Some Problems with the Cultural Studies Imported from Birmingham, New Zealand Sociology, 1987, 2, 2, Nov, 80-97

† It is argued that sociological research in New Zealand has been greatly influenced, & impeded, by the "political romanticism & theoretical idealism" of the Birmingham Centre for Contemporary Cultural Studies (BCCCS) in GB. The center's approach to the culture & ideology of the Wc is marred by its limited understanding of agency & structure & how they contribute to decision-making processes & cultural choice. After examining some contributions of the BCCCS, the recent studies of Wc culture that have been heavily influenced by the collective are criticized. Bea Campbell's Wigan Pier Revisited: Poverty and Politics in the 80s (London: Virago, 1984); Anna Polleri's Girls, Wives, Factory Lives (London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1981), & Christine Griffen's Typical Girls. Young Women from School to the Job Market (London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1985). It is recommended that a more materialist conceptualization of cultural studies be adapted for New Zealand sociology. 29 References. K. Hyatt

88T4389

Newman, Barbara M. & Newman, Philip R. (1969 Chatfield Rd, Columbus OH 43221), The Impact of High School on Social Development, U Adolescence, 1987, 22, 87, fall, 525-534

† In reviewing the literature on the social impact of high school, six themes were identified. (1) students perceive strong norms for conformity to school rules, (2) the emphasis on conformity & control influence the quality of student/teacher relations, which tend to be role bound & inflexible; (3) paths to SS continue to emphasize athletic competence; (4) peer group identification has an impact on social relations within the larger community as well as in the school setting; (5) powerlessness is felt as a result of the authoritarian approach to decision making; & (6) the overall high school environment does not enhance students' beliefs in the Bill of Rights. It is concluded that high school students have limited o

& suggestions for teaching these skills are presented. It is concluded that the inserted cloze task would be useful in teaching comprehension monitoring. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 15 References. Modified HA

88T4372

Klein, Rudolf (U Bath, Claverton Down BA2 7AY England). Inside the Ivory Tower, U New Society, 1987, 80, 1268, 17 Apr, 10-12

¶ An examination of why it has been politically feasible for the British government to reduce the income of Us & to impose more central direction on them. It is argued that, in trying to explain this, social scientists need to use the same methods of analysis they apply when examining similar phenomena in other areas of public policy: the critique of the Us, implicit in British government policies, is the same as that being made of the medical, teaching, & other professions. In each case, the claim of the profession to exercise autonomy & to decide how public resources should be used is being challenged, & new mechanisms for calling professions to account for their collective performance are being devised. However, the academic profession itself has made it easier for politicians to make this challenge by: insisting on tenure as the guarantee of autonomy, resisting attempts to evaluate the performance of individual academics, & encouraging the myth that all academics should be encouraged to research. It is concluded that academics should be rewarded for taking risks, rather than being sheltered from them by the tenure system, & that the notion that the academic role is defined by participation in research needs to be revised. 1 Drawing. Modified AA

88T4373

Lawton, Johnny (Texas Women's U, Denton 76204). Family Socialization Patterns among Black, Lower-Income, Single-Mother Families as Determinants of Educational Achievement, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1024-A-1025-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715023.

88T4374

LeCompte, Margaret (7207 Edloe, Houston TX 77025). The Cultural Context of Dropping Out: Why Remedial Programs Fail to Solve the Problems, U Education and Urban Society, 1987, 19, 3, May, 232-249.

¶ A discussion of the cultural context of the school dropout problem, focusing on the school itself as a dropout & tracing the historical function of schools & its modification in the last thirty years. More recent educational innovation is depicted as a regression to Mc values of the 1950s, & sociocultural changes that have invalidated that model are discussed. No one seems pleased with schools today, & to the extent that displeasure couples with lack of promise for children, the Mc, the gifted, the nonconformist, & the very young will increasingly join the exodus from public schooling. 29 References. F. Rasmussen

88T4375

LeCompte, Margaret D. & Goebel, Stephen D. (7207 Edloe, Houston TX 77025). Can Bad Data Produce Good Program Planning? An Analysis of Record-Keeping on School Dropouts, U Education and Urban Society, 1987, 19, 3, May, 250-268.

¶ A discussion of accessible sources of data on the actual & at-risk populations of young people in schools that can be used in addressing the problem of increasing numbers of dropouts. Problems in record keeping that are common to most school districts in the US are defined, & the benefits of solving these problems for planning programs for dropout prevention are assessed. Practical suggestions for correcting the often biased & skewed data are presented. 28 References. F. Rasmussen

88T4376

Leeuw, F. L. (State U Leiden, NL-2313 AV Netherlands). Het beleid inzake taakverdeling, concentratie en zwaartepuntvorming in de sociale wetenschappen: beleids- en wetenschapssociologische kanttekeningen (Policy regarding Allocation of Tasks, Concentration, and Formation of "Centers of Excellence" in the Social Sciences. Comments on the Policy and the Social Sciences). ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 5, Sept-Oct, 370-389. (DUT)

¶ After describing the policy of the Dutch government with respect to retrenchment of Dutch Us, & in particular, of the social sciences, a short history of the retrenchment policy is given, covering the period 1981-1986. Twelve strategic assumptions underlying one specific instrument of this retrenchment policy are articulated. The instrument deals with task reduction & the formation of "centers of excellence" inside the social sciences departments. The goal of this policy is to decrease fragmentation & increase quality in social science research. However, there is doubt that Dutch social science research should be considered fragmented, & also that the retrenchment policy will be effective. 1 Figure, 25 References. Modified AA

88T4377

Levinson, Aleksey Georgievich. Starye knigi, novye chitateli (Old Books, New Readers). Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 43-49. (RUS)

¶ Since 1974, the USSR has had an ongoing experiment designed to help adjust the supply & demand of certain popular books. Predicting the potential demand for a book is a risky endeavor. Very often too many or too few books are printed. The demand for many types of books is relatively stable, so price does not affect demand to a great degree. As such, a new system was developed for instances in which demand far exceeds supply—utilizing special coupons as a rationing technique. The experiment so far is a success. Many families lacking avid readers have increased the amount of time spent reading by using the coupons. It seems that possession of coupons gives the consumer a certain thrill about having access to a commodity in short supply. 1 Photograph, 4 References. G. Prostavov

88T4378

Maheux, Brigitte & Beland, François (Dept Social & Preventive Medicine U Montreal, Quebec H3C 3J7). Changes in Students' Sociopolitical Attitudes during Medical School: Socialization or Maturation Effect?, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 7, 619-624

¶ The impact of medical training on students' sociopolitical attitudes is examined with focus on medical students' attitudes toward the issue of universal access to health care. A mailed questionnaire yielded 586 responses from students at 3 medical schools in Mich chosen for their different approaches: research-oriented, a dual emphasis on research & specialization, & a biopsychosocial emphasis. The findings indicate a conservative trend in more advanced students, regardless of the school's orientation. However, this effect cannot be attributed purely to the socialization of professional education, nor to maturation, but seems to be the result of both. In general, students' sociopolitical attitudes were more related to their personal background characteristics (ie, sex, race, geographical origin, & premedical interest) than to the orientation of their medical training. It is suggested that selection into medical school more than medical training, is the crucial determinant in influencing the sociopolitical outlook of medical graduates. 4 Tables, 18 References. Modified HA

88T4379

Mangum, Stephen L. & Ball, David E. (Ohio State U, Columbus 43210). Military Skill Training: Some Evidence of Transferability, U Armed Forces and Society, 1987, 13, 3, spring, 425-441.

¶ An examination of military-provided training & its transferability to civilian employment, using data on a sample (N = 874) drawn from the National Longitudinal Surveys-Youth Cohort. Sizeable amounts of skill transfer are documented, & the transferability of military-provided training is compared to that of nonmilitary-provided postschool occupational training. When other factors are controlled, the probability of transferring military-provided training does not differ significantly from that of nonmilitary training obtained from providers such as proprietary business Colls & vocational/technical schools. On the other hand, the probability of skill transfer for military-provided training is found to be significantly lower than that of apprenticeship & employer-provided training for both sexes, & of nursing & beauty-school training for Fs. However, these differences can be attributed to institutional linkages between training provider & employer along internal labor-market lines. 4 Tables. HA

88T4380

Marshall, James (U Auckland, 1 New Zealand). An Anti-Foundationalist Approach to Discipline and Authority, ♦ Discourse, 1987, 7, 2, Apr, 1-20.

¶ Attempts to base social behavior guidelines on firm philosophical foundations (foundationalism) within educational literature, in the name of discipline, are identified & analyzed. Michel Foucault's account of discipline & his notion of the disciplinary society (eg, see Discipline and Punish: The Birth of the Prison, New York: Vintage, 1979) are invoked to argue that such calls for discipline are calls for curing "deviance" & the socialization of governable individuals to lead useful, docile, & practical lives. 42 References. Modified AA records of the valuation of his estate at death, indicates a far greater degree of social mobility, with the bulk of elite group members drawn from the lower part of the Mc rather than from a truly privileged background. 20 Tables. AA

88T4399

Schaefer, Richard T. (Western Illinois U, Macomb 61455), Social Distance of Black College Students at a Predominantly White University, ♦ UM Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 30-32

¶ Emory Bogardus's social distance scale listing 30 racial & ethnic groups (amended to include Vietnamese) was administered by black interviewers to 130 black undergraduates at a midwestern state U. Results show a hierarchy of responses, with the least distance shown to other blacks. The overall mean is higher than that reported in other surveys using white Rs. Explanations are presented for similarities & differences with other social distance studies using white Rs. The findings indicate the need to measure the perceptions of minority groups in future replications of the social distance scale. 1 Table, 17 References. AA

88T4400

Scott, Ralph (U Northern Iowa, Cedar Falls 50614), Mandated School Busing and Student Learning: Achievement Profiles of Third, Fifth and Tenth Grade Black and White Students, The Mankind Quarterly, 1986, 27, 1, fall, 45-62

¶ US legislation mandating sweeping & costly measures designed to ensure racial integration in school classrooms was originally based on an unproven hypothesis that the wide gap between white & black pupils in scholastic achievement tests (SATs) would be reduced if blacks were to study alongside whites in classrooms. After a generation of racially integrated education, US schools still find dramatic gaps in SAT scores between whites & blacks, eg, California Achievement Test scores of third ($N = 107$), fifth ($N = 111$), & tenth ($N = 608$) grade students in a metropolitan school district differed considerably between blacks & whites. These findings indicate that the reason for the marked disparity in educational achievement has not been modified by legally enforced integration of classrooms. 6 Tables. Modified HA

88T4401

Sell, Ralph R. (U Rochester, NY 14627), International Social Distances of Students at Egyptian Elite Universities, ♦ UM Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 62-66.

¶ Social distance (SD) toward 36 nationality groups are examined for 2 samples of U students ($N = 117$ & 368) in Cairo, Egypt. These questionnaire Rs expressed considerable SD toward people from many nations, but SDs were lower among more Westernized students. Findings are discussed in terms of frequencies of foreign contact & predominant destinations for labor migration. 3 Tables, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4402

Serafini, Oscar, Notas sobre el rol de los métodos cuantitativos en investigación educacional (Notes on the Role of Quantitative Methods in Educational Investigation), ♦ UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 65, Jan-Apr, 67-76 (SPA)

¶ Some basic themes of the role of quantification in educational investigation & possible research directions are discussed. Criticisms of the epistemological presuppositions & anthropological conceptions involved in the justifications for quantification are noted. These reductionist tendencies are contrasted with dialectical thinking. Positive attributes of quantification from a nonpositivist viewpoint are also presented. A possible measurement for educational research is claimed to require (1) incorporation of temporality & change, (2) analysis of reciprocal influences; & (3) structural analysis. Some suggestions are given as to how this might work in daily practice. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 20 References. J. Anderson

88T4403

Shavit, Yossi & Featherman, David L. (Dept Sociology Haifa U, Mount Carmel 31999 Israel), Schooling, Tracking, and Teenage Intelligence, UM Sociology of Education, 1988, 61, 1, Jan, 42-51.

¶ The effects of schooling & tracking in Israeli high schools on changes in psychometric (scholastic) intelligence during adolescence are examined using longitudinal test score data for a sample of 955 Jewish Ms born in 1954. Their standardized scores on scholastic aptitude tests, administered at age 13, & scores on the military screening test of cognitive ability, administered at age 17, are compared & analyzed in conjunction with social background & educational history data obtained during retrospective interviews. Results indicate that: (1) extended schooling enhances psychometric intelligence substantially during adolescence, particularly for those enrolled in academic rather than vocational tracks; (2) the psychometric intelligence of school dropouts is more consistent than that of continuing students. Thus, school appears to provide some redistribution of cognitive (verbal) ability during adolescence. Tables, 1 Appendix, 40 References. Modified HA

88T4404

Singh, Shailendra & Sinha, Arvind K. (c/o Sinha: Dept Human & Social Sciences Indian Instit Technology, Kanpur 208016 U Pradesh India), Relative Importance of Social Deprivation, Intelligence, Punctuality, and Ethnicity in Predicting Educational Achievement, ♦ Psychologia, 1986, 29, 3, Sept, 176-181

¶ An investigation of the relative importance of social deprivation, intelligence, punctuality, & ethnicity in predicting educational achievement. A sample of 150 Indian M eighth-grade students from 4 schools equally divided into 2 ethnic groups—scheduled caste & nonscheduled caste completed a modified version of the Prolonged Deprivation & the Group Intelligence Test, data on educational achievement & punctuality were drawn from school records. Correlational & multiple regression analyses indicated that social deprivation was the most important & ethnicity the least important, predictor of educational achievement. Tables, 1 Figure, 21 References. Modified HA

88T4405

Sleap, Mike (Dept Educational Studies U Hull, HU5 2EH UK), Education for Leisure: A Suggested Approach for Schools, Leisure Studies, 1987, 6, 2, May, 167-179

¶ The present move toward a liberalization of GB school curricula affords an opportunity for leisure education to occupy a more significant role. However, most schools have spurned this opportunity & simpler pupils simulated "taster" experiences. It is argued that schools must focus more on education on the topic of leisure, a framework is suggested. 1 Table, 16 References. Modified HA

88T4406

Sørensen, Aage B. & Hallinan, Maureen T. (Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138), Effects of Ability Grouping on Growth in Academic Achievement, American Educational Research Journal, 1986, 23, winter, 519-542

¶ A theory of growth in academic achievement is applied to the study of the effects of ability grouping on reading achievement, using data from a longitudinal study of 1,477 elementary school children in northern Calif. According to the theory, students' ability & effort determine whether they utilize opportunities for learning provided by instruction. The mathematical specification of the theory allows for the estimation of models showing that (1) ability grouping provides fewer opportunities for learning than whole class instruction, but greater utilization of those opportunities; (2) high ability groups provide more opportunities than low ability groups; & (3) small homogeneous groups facilitate reading achievement more than larger, more heterogeneous groups. 4 Tables, 11 References. Modified HA

88T4407

Stewart, Martha Watson (U North Carolina, Greensboro 27402), The Effects of Self-Care and Adult-Care Arrangements on Elementary School Children's Adjustment, Achievement, and Attendance, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 488-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710676.

88T4408

Thomas, Gail E. (Texas A&M U, College Station 77843), Black Students in U. S. Graduate and Professional Schools in the 1980s: A National and Institutional Assessment, UM Harvard Educational Review, 1987, 57, 3, Aug, 261-282

¶ While educational attainment is not a single sufficient condition for black occupational attainment & upward mobility, it is argued that given the historical & persistent disadvantage of race in US society, educational investment is mandatory for blacks. The recent higher education enrollment & degree attainment status of US blacks is documented using unpublished data from the US Office of Civil Rights's biennial Higher Education General Information Survey for the period 1976-1982. Analysis indicates that: (1) black students are not advancing &, in some cases, are losing ground relative to the momentum in higher education portunities for flexible self-definition. As a result of the way they are treated by authority figures & the strong pressures toward conformity, many adolescents fail to learn the extent of their rights or effective strategies for the exercise of power. 25 References. HA

88T4390

O'Connor, Sorca M. (Dept Education Washington U, Saint Louis MO 63130), Women's Labor Force Participation and Preschool Enrollment: A Cross-National Perspective, 1965-80, U Sociology of Education, 1988, 61, 1, Jan, 15-28

¶ The worldwide expansion of preschool enrollments between 1965 & 1980 is described, & the findings of a longitudinal study linking this growth with women's increased levels of LF participation & other economic, political, & organizational factors, are summarized. Using UN-ESCO & International Labor Office statistics for 45 developed & 87 less developed countries, it is found that a floor of economic development is necessary before preschool expansion can take place. In industrialized countries, the effect of women's participation in the service & industrial sectors of the LF is evident, indicating a shift in the care & education of young children from the family to the school. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 2 Appendixes, 49 References. Modified HA

88T4391

Pajak, Edward F., Cramer, Stephen E. & Konke, Karen (Coll Education U Georgia, Athens 30602), Role Set Correlates of Teacher Reports of Classroom Behavior, U Journal of Research and Development in Education, 1986, 20, 1, fall, 37-41

¶ Social correlates of teacher reports of classroom behavior are explored based on scale data collected from 88 public school teachers involved in in-service training at 2 sessions 3-7 days apart. It was hypothesized that such reports are related to perceived needs & wants of others in the teacher's role set, ie, the perceived needs of students & the expectations of supervisors & colleagues. Correlations of teacher behavior with needs & expectations demonstrated significant moderate relationships on all dimensions. Reported behavior correlated most strongly with perceived student needs. Size of faculty & % of supervisory contact influenced relationships between behavior & perceived expectations of colleagues & supervisors. 5 Tables, 24 References. Modified AA

88T4392

Pitman, Mary Anne (Dept Educational Foundations U Cincinnati, OH 45221), Compulsory Education and Home Schooling: Truancy or Prophecy?, U Education and Urban Society, 1987, 19, 3, May, 280-289

¶ Many Me US families are choosing to teach their children at home rather than send them to public school. These home-schooled children have become the focus of truancy laws that stress attendance. There appear to be three major groups of home schoolers: fundamental Christians, academically gifted, & New Agers. Parents in these groups educate at home for various reasons, most relating to lifestyle. Home-schooled children currently do as well as or better than their peers in public school on standardized academic achievement tests. School officials tend to ignore this fact, & in so doing ignore the essential crisis in meaning facing US education today, where compulsory attendance has replaced compulsory education. 21 References. Modified AA

88T4393

Ravitch, Diane (Teachers Coll Columbia U, New York NY 10027), Tot Sociology: Or What Happened to History in the Grade Schools, U The American Scholar, 1987, 56, 3, summer, 343-354

¶ A discussion of the disappearance of historical materials & activities from the elementary school social studies curriculum in the US during the past fifty years. It attempts to show through use of historical evidence how the curriculum was changed: hero tales, stories about great historical events, myths, fairy tales, & other romantic representations of the past were eliminated & replaced with a primarily sociological emphasis on the child, the family, & the local community. It is argued that the sociological approach lacks any foundation in research, either in cognitive psychology or developmental theory. AA

88T4394

Rawkins, Phillip M. (Ryerson Polytechnic Instit, Toronto Ontario M5B 2K3), The Politics of Benign Neglect: Education, Public Policy, and the Mediation of Linguistic Conflict in Wales, U International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 66, 27-48

¶ Case studies are presented of conflicts over language use in education in two neighboring regions—South Glamorgan & Mid Glamorgan—in Wales. Focus is on the historical context of the role of Welsh in education, & the administrative framework within which conflict occurs. The regions considered are South Glamorgan & Mid Glamorgan. It is concluded that for the most part, educational decisions are made in London by policymakers who are not familiar with or who pay little attention to the specific requirements of Wales. 15 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T4395

Reimann, Bruno W. (Institut Soziologie U Gießen, D-6300 Federal Republic Germany), The Defeat of the German Universities 1933, Historical Social Research/Historische Sozialforschung, 1986, 39, July, 101-105

¶ The German Us still have difficulties when they approach their history from 1933 to 1945. Prevailing over attempts at a critical reexamination are interpretations that downplay this period of history. However, an examination of the official acts of the US & U organizations in this period indicates that institutions of higher learning were not simply subjugated through acts of coercion by National Socialism, but rather, that a process of Selbst-Gleichschaltung (self-imposed uniformity) took place, ie, a process of voluntary cooperation with an assimilation into the National Socialist machinery of state. The Us held the ideological stirrup for National Socialism, because of scientific & political traditions that they still, or once again, uphold today. 8 References. Modified HA

88T4396

Ribolzi, Luisa (Dept Sociologia U Cattolica Milano, I-20123 Italy), Strutture sociali e sistemi educativi: problemi teorici e metodologici della ricerca comparata (Social Structures and Educational Systems: Theoretical and Methodological Problems in Comparative Research), Studi di Sociologia, 1987, 25, 1, Jan-Mar, 84-85. (ITA)

¶ Some notes are presented concerning an international seminar on the sociology of education, organized by the U of Cracow & held at Rabka, near Cracow, Poland, in Sept 1986. The seminar was introduced by Jan Jerschina & Antony Halsey & consisted of the following sessions: (1) typologies of social structures & educational structures, (2) social structures & educational policies, (3) social structures & the content of education; (4) the transitions between family, school, & work, (5) school systems & cultural participation; & (6) theoretical & methodological problems of comparative research. The seminar offered an opportunity to learn about the educational systems of Eastern Europe, & included an interesting debate. C. Waters

88T4397

Rost, Detlef H. & Schermer, Franz J. (Philipps U Marburg, D-3550 Federal Republic Germany), Emotion and Cognition in Coping with Test Anxiety, U Communication and Cognition, 1987, 20, 2-3, 225-244.

¶ An examination of the interplay of emotions & cognition in coping with test anxiety, based on a questionnaire including 88 items completed by high school students in West Germany (N = 590). Principal components analysis identifies 4 clearly interpretable components that account for 32.3% of of variance. 2 scales represent palliative functions—anxiety control & anxiety repression—while the other 2 serve an instrumental function—danger control & situation control. This finding is consistent with the theories of R. S. Lazarus & R. Launier ("Stress-Related Transactions between Person and Environment," in Pervin, L. A., & Lewis, M. (Eds), Perspectives in Interactional Psychology, New York: Plenum, 1978, 287-327). 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 30 References. Modified HA

88T4398

Rubinstein, W. D. (Deakin U, Victoria 3217 Australia), Education and the Social Origins of British Elites 1880-1970, Past and Present, 1986, 112, Aug, 163-207

¶ Nearly all studies of British elite groups in modern times take education at an elite public school (eg, Eton, Harrow, Winchester, etc) as evidence of the privileged family background of the elite group member. Here, this long-held belief is questioned, arguing that it is based on a concealed circular argument. Few writers who have used this model have actually examined the true social origins of elite group members in detail, relying on public school education as evidence of privilege, & then defining the privileged group as those who attended a public school. It is argued that a comprehensive examination of the actual social origins of elite group members, based on evidence from birth certificates regarding the occupation of the father of each elite group member & the probate

1 In Equity and Excellence in Education: A Comment, Nathan Glazer (Harvard U, Cambridge, Mass) explores the conflict between "excellence" & "equity" in US education, ie, between rewarding high achievement & promoting equal racial/ethnic representation. An example is provided of how the issue is affecting various specialized high schools in NY. While it is easy to argue for equality, it is harder to justify a preference for excellence; some reasons for doing so are advanced—eg, emphasis on excellence breeds a climate that motivates students to increase their efforts & achieve. The desire for equity must be balanced with a realistic view of what the US stands to lose if it neglects the pursuit & promotion of excellence. In Remarks on Equity and Excellence in Education, Harold

Howe, II (Harvard U) expresses doubt that educational excellence can be legislated through such measures as the school reform movement. Rather, it must be nurtured in schools that are given the proper resources. In On Excellence and Goodness, Sara Lawrence Lightfoot (Harvard U) examines three practical tensions that result from contradiction inherent in the education process, contrary to idealized notions that "disciplined" education will promote excellence. In When Excellence and Equity Complement Each Other, Charles V. Willie (Harvard U) uses the example of Harvard Coll to argue that educational eminence depends on both high academic standards (excellence) & a diversified student body (equity). However, if a choice has to be made, equity should be promoted, since excellent students can learn from helping the less able. K. Hyatt

THESIS ELEVEN

Single Issue A$7
Subscriptions:
(3 issues)
Individuals A$16
(overseas) A$18
(airmail) A$30
Institutions: A$40
(airmail) A$48

Please make cheques payable to:

Thesis Eleven

Send to:
Thesis Eleven
Dept of Anthropology and Sociology
Monash University
Clayton 3168
Victoria
Australia

Current Issue, number 17, 1987 includes:

JAPAN AND MODERNISATION

ARNASON
DEUTSCHMANN
OOMS

FEMINISM AND WELFARE

M Markus on Arendt's "Anti-feminism" & Fraser on Women and the Politics of Welfare

Current Issue, number 18, 1987 on the work of Agnes Heller, includes:

The Human condition

Agnes Heller

Agnes Heller: philosophy, Rational Utopia and Praxis

Richard Bernstein

Freedom & Happiness

Peter Murphy

Agnes Heller On Rationality

Amadeo Vigorelli

Agnes Heller on our needs

David Cooper

Critical Theory of Communication

Sandor Radnoti

Plus Dick Howard's Post Marxist Radicalism, John Murphy on Australian Radical Nationalism and Francis Castle's Australia and Sweden achieved during the 1970s, (2) blacks remain underrepresented in graduate & professional degree attainment, particularly in the natural & technical sciences, & (3) those blacks who have attained degrees in these sciences have done so at a limited proportion of Colls & Us. It is suggested that a combination of individual & institutional-level efforts is needed to advance blacks' higher educational participation & success. 9 Tables, 74 References. Modified HA

88T4409

Titze, Hartmut (Pädagogisches Seminar U Göttingen, D-3400 Federal Republic Germany), The Cyclical Overproduction of Graduates in Germany in the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries, International Sociology, 1987, 2, 4, Dec, 349-371.

Translated by Elizabeth King.

¶ (An expanded German version was published in Geschichte & Gesellschaft, 1984, 10, 92-121, entitled "Die zyklische Überproduktion von Akademikern im 19. und 20. Jahrhundert.") Over the last 200 years phases of overproduction & of scarcity in academic careers have recurred with remarkable regularity. The cyclical development depends on the complex interaction between the varying determinants of growth & the varying conditions of social recruitment for special careers. If professional prospects are favorable, careers will open up into educationally uncultivated strata, if the prospects worsen, the recruitment basis narrows. The interplay of attracting & deterrence effects (push-pull) produces the remarkable long-term pulsation of student streams in the vocational subject areas. German statistics from the fields of theology, law, medicine, & higher education suggest that political control has effected little change in the cycle. Academic qualifications & limits on entry have always been introduced at times of excess supply, & the history of structural change in German education is linked to these phases. 8 Figures, 44 References. HA

88T4410

Valverde, Sylvia A. (Gardens Elementary School, 1105 East Harris Pasadena TX 77506), A Comparative Study of Hispanic High School Dropouts and Graduates: Why Do Some Leave School Early and Some Finish?, UM Education and Urban Society, 1987, 19, 3, May, 320-329.

¶ Data from structured interviews in the homes of Hispanic high school dropouts & graduates (N = 52 in each group) are used to assess similarities & differences between these two groups. Variables that most distinguish dropouts from graduates are peer groups & grades. Other distinguishing characteristics among the dropouts are feelings of alienation, rejection, isolation, & disconnectedness. Unlike the dropout, the graduate is bolstered by a support system of academically able friends. 14 References. F. Rasmussen van Doorne-Huiskes, Anneke & Luijckx, Ruud (Vakgroep Theoretische Sociologie en Methodenleer Faculteit Sociale Wetenschappen Rijks U Utrecht, NL-3508 TC Netherlands), Beloningsverschillen tussen vrouwen en mannen in een universitaire organisatie (Wage Differences in Academia between Women and Men), UM Mens en Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 4, Nov, 382-400 (DUT)

88T4411

¶ The income levels of M & F faculty members in the Netherlands are examined, based on longitudinal data ($\Sigma N = 726$ Ss) & personnel administration data (N = 697 F & 1,273 M faculty members) collected at the Rijks U of Utrecht (the Netherlands). Results show that wage differences between Ms & Fs cannot be completely explained by human capital characteristics. These differences are not caused by wage discrimination in a direct sense, but by the lower access of Fs to the higher-paying ranks, even when their formal qualifications are equal to those of their M colleagues. 9 Tables, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4412

Vincent, Trudy A. (Dept Psychology U Maryland, College Park 20742), Two into One: An Ecological Perspective on School Consolidation, Prevention in Human Services, 1986, 4, 3-4, spring-summer, 113-149.

¶ A preventive consultation guided by an ecological perspective was carried out in a suburban public school system to facilitate the closure of one public junior high school & its consolidation into another school that was quite different in terms of student body characteristics, administrative philosophy, & social & physical environment. The purposes of the consultation were to (1) serve as a source of support & information for the school administrator, who was almost single-handedly orchestrating both the closure & the consolidation; (2) illuminate potential resources to enrich the consolidation process; & (3) develop events to aid both staff & students in understanding the existing social environments of both schools & the common culture to be formed as a result of the consolidation. In addition, conclusions about the usefulness & limitations of an ecological approach to consultation are outlined, & reactions of members of the two schools involved in the consultation are presented. 1 Table, 15 References. HA

88T4413

Williams, Silvia Brooks (Houston Independent School District, 3830 Richmond Ave TX 77027), A Comparative Study of Black Dropouts and Black High School Graduates in an Urban Public School System, UM Education and Urban Society, 1987, 19, 3, May, 311-319.

¶ Questionnaire data from black Ur public high school dropouts & graduates (N = 50 each) are compared to assess differences & similarities between these groups. Similarities in demographic/personal characteristics & family characteristics are identified. The primary feature that distinguishes these two groups is the pervasive feeling of isolation, disconnectedness, & rejection that characterizes the dropouts. Implications of these findings for prevention programs are discussed. 3 References. F. Rasmussen

88T4414

Woditsch, Gary A., Schlesinger, Mark A. & Giardina, Richard C. (c/o Schlesinger-Coll Management U Massachusetts, Boston 02125), The Skillful Baccalaureate: Doing What Liberal Education Does Best, Change, 1987, 19, 6, Nov-Dec, 48-57.

¶ A discussion of the liberal arts education & increasingly specialized baccalaureate majors in the context of career potential. Research is presented supporting the notion that liberal arts graduates experience advanced career potential over more specialized baccalaureate program graduates. With improved perspectives on student needs & the role of the baccalaureate program, the four-year degree can again become the pre-eminent postsecondary option. Strategies for accomplishing this objective are introduced & analyzed. F. Rasmussen

88T4415

Yáñez Cossío, Consuelo, Curriculum escolar y educación bilingüe intercultural (School Curriculum and Intercultural Bilingual Education), UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 65, Jan-Apr, 47-65 (SPA)

¶ The bilingual school curriculum in Latin America is analyzed with regard to teachers & their qualifications, administration, & educational objectives, in order to propose alternatives in the native Indian sector. The political & social objectives of the school system, both explicit & implicit, are examined, & the various ways in which bilingual education is designed to serve the group in power are noted. The tendency to regard bicultural education as a mechanism for assimilation into the dominant culture is opposed to an alternative intercultural education that recognizes the thought structures & social systems underlying a native language. A document from a meeting conducted by the Organization of American States on school curricula respecting indigenous populations is appended. 6 References. J. Anderson

88T4416

Yogev, Abraham & Roditi, Hanna (School Education Tel-Aviv U, Ramat-Aviv 69978 Israel), School Counselors as Gatekeepers: Guidance in Poor versus Affluent Neighborhoods, Adolescence, 1987, 22, 87, fall, 625-639.

¶ It is hypothesized that school counselors in career guidance in affluent areas emphasize meritocratic criteria, while counselors in nonaffluent neighborhoods emphasize nonmeritocratic criteria. Analysis of questionnaire data, test results, school records, & counselor interviews for 210 M primary school graduates—125 from schools in affluent neighborhoods & 85 from schools in poorer neighborhoods—in a town in Israel shows that students' ethnicity & labeling as problems directly affecting guidance only in poor neighborhoods. Labeling of students as problems is based on physical or psychological traits rather than on actual behavior problems at school. These findings suggest a patronizing attitude of counselors toward lower SES students. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 15 References. Modified HA

88T4417

—, In Search of Excellence and Equity in Our Nation's Schools, UM Harvard Educational Review, 1987, 57, 2, May, 196-207.

1500 sociology of religion

35 sociology of religion

88T4418

Abelman, Robert (Cleveland State U, OH 44115), Why Do People Watch Religious TV?: A Uses and Gratifications Approach, IM Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 2, Dec, 199-210.

¶ A discussion of the viewer of religious TV as an "active audience" as defined in uses & gratifications research, focusing on the interrelated nature of TV user motives & viewing patterns. Recent research into religious TV programming suggests an expansion of the conceptual distinction drawn between ritualized (eg, habitual) & instrumental (eg, information-seeking) secular TV usage. While supporting the universality of uses & gratifications assumptions concerning the active media audience, the selectivity of viewers of this fare is also emphasized. A canonical analysis of questionnaire data from 210 adult US viewers identifies a third distinct pattern of viewing motives: reactionary TV use. 2 Tables, 34 References. Modified HA

88T4419

Abelman, Robert & Neuendorf, Kimberly (Cleveland State U, OH 44115), Themes and Topics in Religious Television Programming, IM Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 2, Dec, 152-174.

¶ Some of the major dimensions of the religious, political, & social themes & topics contained in religious TV are examined, based on a content analysis of 3 episodes of each of the top 27 most widely available programs in 40 US locales for a 2-week period in 1983. Results suggest that social themes predominate religious drama & magazine-type programs, with death & dying & the mass media being the primary focus. However, religion provides the lion's share of discussion within most programs. Political content is highly concentrated & limited to several programs, although there is an indication that programs featuring a televangelist have increased in political content over the years. 7 Tables, 5 Appendixes, 33 References. Modified HA

88T4420

Aldridge, Alan (Dept Sociology U Nottingham, NG7 2RD England), In the Absence of the Minister: Structures of Subordination in the Role of Deaconess in the Church of England, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 3, Aug, 377-392.

¶ The rank of deaconess, which survived in Western Christianity until the early eleventh century, was revived in the Church of England in 1862. This rank has been systematically compounded of anomalies that express women's otherness & subordination to men. Interview data collected in 1985 from 2 women lay workers & 16 deaconesses in one diocese reveal the dependence of deaconesses on clergy for numerous functions: task allocation, settlement of grievances, participation in decision making, career development, & role models. When a parish lacks an incumbent priest, the restricted role of the deaconess is evident. These limitations generate feelings of frustration. The recent decision to ordain women as deacons will expand their role only slightly, will preserve their anomalous status, & will confirm their subordination to the clergy. 23 References. Modified HA

88T4421

Asad, Talal (Dept Sociology & Social Anthropology U Hull, HU6 7RX England), On Ritual and Discipline in Medieval Christian Monasticism, Economy and Society, 1987, 16, 2, May, 159-203.

¶ An examination of monastic disciplinary practices & the discourses that surrounded them in medieval Europe. Three distinct historical phases are identifiable in monastic practices: (1) where the monastic community was the primary locus of Christianity; (2) where the Catholic Church extended its control to lay Christians; & (3) where Renaissance princes borrowed disciplinary practices from the Church. Rites of penance were central to discipline in all three phases. It is emphasized that the distinction between ritual & nonritual activities is largely a barrier to the understanding of medieval Christianity. 98 References. W H Stoddard

88T4422

Bahtijarević, Štefica (Institut društvena istraživanja, Zagreb

Yugoslavia), Religijska svijest društvenih grupa (Religious Consciousness of Social Groups), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4 Jan-Dec, 107-120. (SCR)

¶ Changes over time in the religious consciousness of Yugoslav social groups are examined, using questionnaire data obtained in 1972 (N not provided) & 1984 (N = 408 Rs). Analysis reveals that, for all SCs & ethnic groups, religious practices & identity diminished. The secularization process proceeds differently from that in capitalist countries: in Yugoslavia the Ucs are the least involved with church, & peasants are the most religious group, while in the capitalist West, secularization is strongest among the Lcs. In all Yugoslav SCs, however, noninstitutionalized forms of belief are widespread. 14 Tables. Modified HA

88T4423

Buryakovskiy, A. L. & Smirnov, M. Yu., Kritika vzglyadov sovremennoy khristianskoy teologii na sotsial'nye konflikty v usloviyakh kapitalizma (Critical Views of Modern Christian Theology on Social Conflicts in Capitalist Society), Vestnik Leningradskogo Universiteta. Istoriya APSS, Nauchnyi Kommunizm, Filosofiya, Pravovedeniye, 1987, 2(6), June, 103-105. (RUS)

¶ Modern capitalism lacks positive goals & orientations for the working masses. The absence of rational arguments supporting the existing structures of oppression & exploitation necessitates irrational defenses based on modern Christian theology, seeking ways to adapt archaic doctrine to modern times. Theologians seek to mystify & obscure social relationships by retreating to fantasies. They also assert that the spread of atheism intensified man's selfish nature, & that only belief in God can help man become a loving being, capable of participating in nonviolent struggle. God is seen not only as the Lord, but also as the liberator of mankind. Thus Z. G. Gutierrez's A Theology of Liberation: History, Politics, and Salvation (New York: no publisher cited, 1973) claims that the duty of Christianity toward the Latin American revolutionary process is to find the path to true prayer. By clouding political issues with superstition, theologians end up aiding reactionary forces. G. Prostavkov

88T4424

Camara, Evandro M. (Indiana U Northwest, Gary 46408), African American Religious Syncretism in Brazil and the United States: A Weberian Perspective, ♦ IM Sociological Analysis, 1988, 48, 4, winter, 299-318.

¶ A systematic exploration of the structural convergence & divergence between mainstream religions & minority ones, to develop an understanding of syncretism. Brazilian Catholicism & Evangelical Protestantism in the US are compared to West African religions, focusing on the nature of ritual life & religious belief in an attempt to illuminate areas of compatibility & antagonism, & to show the impact this structural dimension has had on the interaction between the Christian churches & West African religious culture. It is suggested that the special character of Brazilian Catholicism aided the preservation of religious Africanism via a strong structural parallelism between the two models, manifested in syncretism & greater accommodation. Evangelical Protestantism, in contrast, proved inimical to the continuation of African religious practices because of structural incompatibilities. 69 References. Modified HA

88T4425

Carroll, Michael P. (U Western Ontario, London N6A 3K7), Praying the Rosary: The Anal-Erotic Origins of a Popular Catholic Devotion, ♦ IM Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 4 Dec, 486-498.

¶ A discussion of the popular Catholic devotion of praying the rosary. The historical development of the rosary is reviewed, & Sigmund Freud's early remarks on religious devotions are merged with his later argument on neurotic obsessions & the anal personality in order to develop a psychoanalytic argument that explains the appeal of the rosary. It is hypothesized that praying the rosary is appealing because it represents the disguised gratification of repressed anal-erotic desires. The argument is based on: (1) the emphasis on excessive repetition & orderliness found in the rosary; (2) the use of beads in praying the rosary; (3) the centuries

JOURNAL

Institute of Muslim Minority Affairs

Editor: Syed Z. Abedin

HIGHLIGHTS 1987

V.N. Basilov: Popular Islam in Central Asia and Kazakhstan

Wilfred Cantwell Smith: Muslim-Christian Relations: Questions of a Comparative Religionist

Abdur Rehman Doi: Duties and Responsibilities of Muslims in non-Muslim States

Hajji Yusuf Chang: The Hui Minority in China

Ali Asani: Khojahs of Indo-Pakistan: Quest for an Islamic Identity

Tozun Bahcheli: The Muslim-Turkish Community in Greece.

David Owusu-Ansah: The State and Islamization in 19th Century Africa

R.J. May: The Philippines Under Aquino

Michael Rywkin: Russian Party Apparatus in a Muslim Republic

Erkin Alptekin: The Uyghars

Lord Ennals: Biharis in Bangladesh: The Third Great Migration

Ali Eminov: The Status of Islam and Muslims in Bulgaria

Along with Sections On

Interfaith Dialogue, An Islamic Agenda for Muslim Minorities, Research in Progress, Book-Reviews, Muslim Minority Profiles, Spectrum, Education of Muslim Minorities

Order Your Copy Now.

Institute of Muslim Minority Affairs
46 Goodge Street, London W1P 1FJ
United Kingdom

Subscription	International	India	Pakistan	Bangladesh
2yr institution	£ 20 (4 issues)	Rs. 150	Rs. 200	Tk. 350
1yr institution	£ 12 (2 issues)	Rs. 90	Rs. 120	Tk. 200
2yr individual	£ 16 (4 issues)	Rs. 120	Rs. 160	Tk. 275
1yr individual	£ 10 (2 issues)	Rs. 75	Rs. 100	Tk. 175

88T4434

Gillen, Paul (Faculty Humanities New South Wales Instit Technology, Broadway 2007 Australia), The Pleasure of Spiritualism, ♦ U The Australian and New Zealand Journal of Sociology, 1987, 23, 2, July, 217-232.

* Deprivation theories about why people become cult members fail to take sufficient account of the specific enjoyments that cult movements offer to their participants. Here, an account is given of the beliefs & practices of a group of Sydney, Australia, spiritualists, & the pleasures of spiritualism, ranging from opportunities for sociability to brainteasing attempts to decipher the worldly signs of spirit, are described. Beyond these, spiritualism also offers the gnostic prospect of potentially infinite understanding & power. 53 References. Modified HA

88T4435

Hadden, Jeffrey K. & Frankl, Razelle (U Virginia, Charlottesville 22903), Star Wars of a Different Kind: Reflections on the Politics of the Religion and Television Research Project, U Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 2, Dec, 101-110

* Even before research commenced, the 1984 Religion & Television Research Project (conducted by the Annenberg School of Communications, U of Pennsylvania, & the Gallup Organization, Inc, Philadelphia) was heralded as "the definitive" investigation of religious broadcasting. The project was initiated by an ad hoc committee representing a coalition of evangelical religious broadcasters & the "mainline" church traditions. The interorganizational tensions between the two groups are examined & it is shown how this tension contributed to a study report that failed to measure up to the lofty expectations of advance publicity. It is argued that the two major parties agreed to cooperate because each felt its position would be vindicated by research. In some measure, their mutual, though conflicting, goals were achieved, but at the price of serious compromise of the integrity of the project. 18 References. HA

88T4436

Hickey, Jo Ann S. & Hickey, Anthony Andrew (Western Carolina U, Cullowhee NC 28723), Development Activities by American Missionaries in Sub-Saharan Africa, ♦ U Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 17-19.

* A revised version of SA 34 3/86S18840/RSS/1986/1825

88T4437

Hoover, Stewart M. (Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122), The Religious Television Audience: A Matter of Significance, or Size?, U Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 2, Dec, 135-151

* Religious broadcasters & their critics alike have been guilty of misleading claims as to the actual numbers of Americans who view religious TV. Much of this disagreement can be traced to the unreliability of audience research techniques. Demand characteristics, sampling error, construct problems, & instrumentation problems all contribute to the technical difficulty of achieving a reliable estimate. More importantly, the whole question of the meaning or significance of religious TV viewing is rarely carefully addressed. Social, cultural, institutional, & theological factors all contribute to misunderstandings of viewing behavior. Defining a "religious view" is a complex question that is too frequently ignored along the way to establishment of so-called definitive audience estimates. Various studies are summarized, & it is concluded that religious TV viewing continues today to be what it has always been—a relatively infrequent behavior that is seen to be socially desirable by most Americans, & a behavior largely engaged in by sectors of society that have traditionally been the most religious. 33 References. Modified HA

88T4438

Humphrey, Michael (Dept Sociology/Anthropology Macarthur Instit Higher Education, Milperra New South Wales 2214 Australia), Community, Mosque and Ethnic Politics, ♦ U The Australian and New Zealand Journal of Sociology, 1987, 23, 2, July, 233-245

* The role of religion in organizing a Lebanese Muslim community in Sydney, Australia, is studied, focusing on the role of the mosque & its relationship to other Lebanese & Islamic organizations in Australia & on the issue of mosque leadership & the politics of appointment of Imams. The conflict over mosque leadership has drawn a culturally & politically isolated community into mainstream political & legal processes in Australia, & enhanced the position of the mosque as the central community organization in the Lebanese Sunni community. The role of immigrant culture & organization in seeking to define spheres of social & political autonomy outside the workplace is examined, & the way the state seeks to intervene in local community politics to limit that autonomy is outlined. 10 References. Modified HA

88T4439

Il'yasov, Farkhad Nazipovich (Turkmenistan Academy Sciences USSR), Religioznoe soznanie i povedenie (Religious Consciousness and Behavior), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May June, 50-55. (RUS)

* Soviet authorities are curious to learn what factors underlie the religious participation of 80%-90% of Turkmenistan youth. Traditional measures of religiosity—eg, participation in rituals or belief in the supernatural—should be augmented by a more powerful analytical framework. Questionnaire data were gathered from 46 experts on religious affairs to obtain specific information on the structural elements of religious activity (cognitive, emotional, & behavioral), the functions of religion (political, legal, ethical, aesthetic, explicatory, & integrative), the strength of conviction, & frequency of participation in ritual. Analysis indicates that only about 3% of Turkmenistan youth firmly believe in God, while 43% have some degree of belief. The majority follow rituals for a variety of social & cultural reasons. 2 Tables, 5 References. G. Prostavov

88T4440

Ji-Ming Tzern, Title appears in Chinese (The New Trend in Religious Worship as Seen from Biographical Travels, Memoirs), Chung Yang Yen Chiu Yuan Min Tsu Hsueh Yen Chiu So Chi K'a Bulletin of the Institute of Ethnology Academia Sinica, 1986, 6, spring, 105-128. (CHI)

* An analysis of recent developments in religious behavior in Taiwan is revealed by various didactic travelogues published in the past decade at local temples & worship halls. The new religion is typified by exchange of mental/spiritual complexes between worshipper & god, together with elaborate ritual & conjurers. The new religion offers tangible benefits to its adherents. A strong element of indigenous cultural restoration is also evident, though it also reflects a pioneering spirit. 6 Tables, 58 References. Modified HA

88T4441

Knight, John (Dept Education U Queensland, Brisbane 406 Australia), 'Creation-Science' in Queensland: Some Fundamental Assumptions, ♦ Social Alternatives, 1986, 5, 3, Sept, 26-31.

* Attacks on the teaching of evolution, & arguments for the presentation of "creationism" as an alternative theory of origins, in school science in Queensland, Australia, are typically grounded in religious beliefs & lifestyle prescriptions. These beliefs & prescriptions reflect a particular articulation of attitudes (religious & social fundamentalism) that has tended to support certain political & economic agendas in Queensland. In particular, social conservatism or the "New Right." These fundamental assumptions implicit or explicit in the case for "creationism," & the social sources of these assumptions, are addressed. HA

88T4442

Lawson, Paul E. & Scholes, Jennifer (Montana State U, Bozeman 59717), Jurisprudence, Peyote and the Native American Church, American Indian Culture and Research Journal, 1986, 10, 1, 13-27

* Because it is worshipped as a deity, peyote has been & continues to be important to the religious beliefs & practices of numerous Indian tribes throughout North & Central America. The history of legitimate peyote use by American Indians must be understood as a struggle to maintain tribal religious traditions against various repressive state & federal governmental practices aimed at eradicating Indian culture. The historical repression of peyote use experienced by Indians in the US is chronicled along with the Indians' responses, including the creation of the Native American Church of North America. Recent court decisions that deal with Native Americans arrested for illegal peyote possession are summarized, & linked to larger issues of religious freedom. Though much of the white opposition to Indians' peyote use has declined over recent decades & criminal prosecution has waned, the costs to individual Indians in terms of personal religious freedom & tribal self-determination have been great. Modified HA

88T4443

Lazar, M. M., Jewish Identity, Israel and the Role of Project Renewal: An Exploratory Note, ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparees, 1985, 1, 77-95.

old tendency for the Catholic mind to associate the rosary with external threats to the Church; (4) the fact that the rosary first achieved widespread popularity in the German-speaking areas of Europe; & (5) the tendency to associate the rosary with flowers & flowery garlands. 31 References Modified HA

88T4426

Cavanaugh, Michael A. (6055 Cahuenga #1, Los Angeles CA 91606), Liberalism and Rationalism in Modern Theology: The Sociological Hypothesis, UM Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 1, Sept, 25-43

¶ Ordinarily the relationship between theology & sociology is that liberalism has provided conceptual resources while rationalism is largely ignored. Here, a conception of modern theology is sought that will be more useful for sociological thought. The first task is to demarcate the contours of liberalism & rationalism as these emerged from modern religious conflict. The second is to link liberalism & rationalism to social processes of communication via a modified Darwinian strategy applied to the arguments of Alvin W. Gouldner (The Dialectic of Ideology and Technology, New York: Seabury, 1976) & E. Shils (Essays in Macrosociology, Chicago, 1975). It is proposed that liberal & rationalist mutations are selected from a universal crisis in rationalist orthodoxies; thereafter, social processes & structures of communication further select rationalism into, respectively, peripheral & central media of communication. A research program to test this hypothesis is outlined. 1 Table, 55 References HA

88T4427

Cornwall, Marle (Brigham Young U., Provo UT 84602), The Social Bases of Religion: A Study of Factors Influencing Religious Belief and Commitment, UM Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 1, Sept, 44-56

¶ Based on questionnaire data from active & inactive Mormon church members (N = 1,200), the relative influence of religious socialization, personal community relationships, & demographic characteristics on religious belief & commitment is examined. Findings indicate that personal community relationships have the strongest direct influence on belief & commitment, but that religious socialization & demographic characteristics influence religious belief & commitment indirectly because they influence personal community relationships. Religious socialization is important not only because it provides the individual with a worldview, but because it channels individuals into personal communities that sustain a particular worldview through the adult years. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 23 References Modified HA

88T4428

Crapo, Richley H. (Utah State U., Logan 84322), Grass-Roots Deviance from Official Doctrine: A Study of Latter-Day Saint (Mormon) Folk-Beliefs, UM Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 4, Dec, 465-485.

¶ Mormonism's legitimacy is based on the claim that the Latter-Day Saints (LDS) Church was instituted by divine mandate & by the authorization by God of LDS ecclesiastical leaders, whose role as the only acceptable source of doctrine is stressed by LDS leaders & members alike. Mormons hold their religious beliefs to be based on continuing, literal revelation through the LDS President, who is designated Prophet, Seer, & Revelator. Doctrine is seen as flowing from the top of the LDS hierarchy to the grass-roots level. Here, interview data pertaining to the doctrinal beliefs of a sample of LDS members in Utah (N = 60) are analyzed. Findings show that, in spite of the authority-based concept of revealed doctrine, actual beliefs at the local level may deviate from official doctrinal positions. In specific areas outside core LDS doctrines, a plurality or even majority of local members may espouse beliefs at odds with doctrines articulated by the LDS Prophet with no apparent awareness by members of their deviance from the official doctrine. The pattern of variation between LDS official positions & folk beliefs is outlined, & the processes that maintain this variation are discussed. 1 Table, 66 References Modified HA

88T4429

Dawe, Donald G. (Union Theological Seminary Virginia, Richmond 23227), Guru Nanak and Jesus Christ: A Comparative Study, Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1986, 13, 25-40.

¶ The lives of Guru Nanak & Jesus Christ are compared historically to ascertain the impact of mythological & legendary elements of their respective religions on the salvation of their communities. Two motifs are from this comparison: (1) the interpenetration of time, or the lack of temporal order to the leader's life due to his omnipotent impact on the community; & (2) the movement from the particular to the universal, such as a shift in the object of worship, from a tradition or shrine to ideals such as peace, order, & unity. It is asserted that twentieth-century man is called upon divinely to transcend the particular & local to arrive at a universal spirituality. 13 References. D. Graves

88T4430

Dugandžija, Nikola (Institut društvena istraživanja, Zagreb Yugoslavia), Društveni položaj i nacionalna religioznost u Hrvatskoj (Social Positions and National Religiosity in Croatia), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 91-106. (SCR)

¶ An investigation of the effects of social stratification on religious beliefs in Croatia based on questionnaire data (N not given). Analysis shows that the Lcs are the most religious. Similar trends were observed among Serbians & other Yugoslavs, indicating that SC membership is a larger factor in determining the level of religiosity than is ethnic membership. This may be because religion has the capacity to compensate for anxieties & crises disproportionately prevalent among the Lcs. 9 Tables Modified HA

88T4431

Falbo, Toni, New, B. Lynn & Gaines, Margie (U Texas, Austin 78712), Perceptions of Authority and the Power Strategies Used by Clergymen, UM Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 4, Dec, 499-507

¶ A test of the assumption that there is a direct correspondence between a clergyman's perception of his authority & the power strategies he uses to influence his congregation, using mail survey data obtained from Southern Baptist & Roman Catholic clergymen (N = 96). The results provide weak support for the assumption that clergymen use preferentially those strategies consistent with their basis of authority. The single incidence of a correspondence was between identifying with charismatic authority (ie, being directly chosen by God) & using charismatic strategies, eg, demonstrating that the gift of grace is within the clergyman. Identification with charismatic & traditional authority was associated with the greater use of strategies intended to influence the congregation. Findings are discussed in terms of the existence of a hierarchy of authority bases: with authority that is perceived to be more closely associated with God being related to the use of more strategies to influence congregations. 2 Tables, 12 References HA

88T4432

Faupel, Charles E., Kowalski, Gregory S. & Starr, Paul D. (Auburn U., AL 36849), Sociology's One Law: Religion and Suicide in the Urban Context, UM Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 4, Dec, 523-534

¶ Emile Durkheim's assertion that Catholicism correlates negatively with suicide, often referred to as sociology's "one law," has been seriously challenged in recent years. Here, this claim is reexamined in relation to Durkheim's observation that the greatest potential for individuals to be integrated into society is found in Ur areas. Analysis of 3,108 U counties categorized by degree of urbanization provides support for Durkheim's law & the integrative potential of Ur areas. The data also suggest that sociological explanations are perhaps best suited to explain social life in Ur rather than Ru contexts. 2 Tables, 62 References HA

88T4433

Frankl, Razelle & Hadden, Jeffrey K. (Glassboro State Coll., NJ 08028), A Critical Review of the Religion and Television Research Report, UM Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 2, Dec, 111-124.

¶ The role of religion on TV & in the lives of viewers was investigated by George Gerbner et al via content analysis of religious TV & audience surveys (Religion and Television. A Research Report by the Annenberg School of Communications, U of Pennsylvania & the Gallup Organization, Inc., 1984). A critique of the conceptual & methodological limitations of this study is offered based on sociological explanations of religion & TV. It is concluded that the study merely confirmed previous observations & analyses, but did not definitively answer their research question. However, the symbolic contribution of this project was to legitimate market research efforts for the sponsors of this enterprise. 19 References Modified HA encing interactions. Results suggest age differences in interaction patterns, with children & senior citizens having limited & unidimensional interaction. The elderly are often portrayed as conflict-producing individuals who are the frequent targets of guidance from their younger, & children have infrequent & limited interaction with their elders. Similarly, gender differences are apparent, most interactions are M-dominant. Possible consequences in terms of social learning theory are provided. 12 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 25 References. Modified HA

88T4451

Nock, David A. (Lakehead U, Thunder Bay 'P' Ontario P7B 5E1), Cult, Sect, and Church in Canada: A Re-Examination of Stark and Bainbridge, La Revue Canadienne de Sociologie et d'Anthropologie/The Canadian Review of Sociology and Anthropology, 1987, 24, 4, Nov, 514-525

* According to Rodney Stark & William S. Bainbridge (The Future of Religion. Secularization, Revival and Cult Formation, Berkeley: U of California Press, 1985), cult receptivity in Canada is highest in regions of irreligion & lowest in areas of traditional religious commitment. Their analysis was based on circuitous empirical indicators & largely ignored census data on cults. Analysis here of such census data for 1981 confirms the findings reported by Stark & Bainbridge. The further question is raised of whether sects & cults in Canada are directly or indirectly correlated with each other. 4 Tables, 19 References. Modified HA

88T4452

Ralston, Helen (Dept Sociology Saint Mary's U, Halifax Nova Scotia B3H 3C3), Models of 'Church': A Cross-Cultural Perspective, Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1985, 12, 9-37

¶ Three ideal models of "church"—traditional, liberal, & radical—are proposed to describe expressions of Roman Catholicism across different cultures & societies. It is argued that the different conceptions of church as a religious community reflect different modes of religious consciousness & orientations to social change within a world system. Roman Catholic religious organization is explored from historical & comparative perspectives in three cultural contexts: India, Latin America, & Canada. It is demonstrated that in different historical & sociopolitical conditions of the world order, different expressions of the models of church can be found. In the contemporary period, where there is increasing polarization between core & periphery areas, & a concomitant new religious consciousness of the sociopolitical implications of the gospel, the radical church is most explicitly expressed in the Latin American context & to a certain extent, in India. This radical church is the cutting-edge in promoting liberation of the Les, affirmation of indigenous cultures, & transformation of society. 74 References. AA

88T4453

Selth, Jefferson P. (Rivera Library U California, Riverside 92517), National Prominence and Religious Preference, Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 4, Dec, 547-550

¶ The relationship between national prominence & religious affiliation is examined by ascertaining the number of Who's Who in America biographees claiming affiliation with each religious body, & dividing each total by the number of members & adherents of the religious group, as indicated in the Yearbook of American & Canadian Churches (1986). The total number of biographees in each religious body, & the number per 100,000 adherents, are compared to figures obtained from a 1926 study based on Who's Who in America & one in 1927 based on American Men of Science (respectively, Huntington, Ellsworth, & Whitney, Leon F., "Religion and Who's Who" [in American Mercury, 1927, Aug, 438-443], & Lehman, Harvey C., & Witty, Paul A., "Scientific Eminence and Church Membership" [in Scientific Monthly, 1931, Dec, 544-549]). With a few exceptions, the order of prominence of the various religious groups has not substantially changed in six decades. Unitarian Universalists are still the most prominent group in relation to their numbers, followed now by the Friends, Episcopalians, & Presbyterians. 1 Table, 3 References. AA

88T4454

Singh, Harban, Quintessence of Sikh Religious Practices, Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1985, 12, 96-104

¶ The emphasis on human moral & ethical development in Indian Sikh philosophy is discussed. The requirement for entering the ethical life is to develop a spiritual attitude wherein one lives & participates in the world without being engrossed by it. This attitude is attained by following the threefold Sikh code of living: (1) one's living should be earned through honest means; (2) one's earnings should be shared; & (3) the Lord's name must always be remembered. It is noted that such Sikh values might benefit non-Sikh societies as well. 14 References. D. Graves

88T4455

Souryal, Sam S. (Criminal Justice Sam Houston State U, Huntsville TX 77340), The Religionization of a Society: The Continuing Application of Shariah Law in Saudi Arabia, Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 4, Dec, 429-449

¶ Saudi Arabia claims a high level of religiosity & benevolence due to the application of Shariah (divine) law. This claim is tested via a comparison of crime rates in Saudi Arabia with those of 6 adjacent Muslim countries that do not apply Shariah law. Analysis reveals that the Saudi crime rate is dramatically lower than the median rate among the group, as well as considerably lower than in any individual country. These results are further validated by the responses of 3 panels of judges, police officials, & laymen (N not provided). Ethnographic information collected from personal interviews (N not given) is also presented. It is concluded that the continuing application of Shariah law in Saudi Arabia has a powerful cleansing influence on society, & helps foster a noncriminogenic environment, thus confirming several major theories in the literature on religiosity & socialization. 5 Tables, 28 References. Modified HA

88T4456

Spoerer, Sergio, Las transformaciones del campo religioso en America Latina: un ensayo de interpretación (The Transformations of the Religious Field in Latin America, An Attempt at Interpretation), Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 29-37 (SPA)

¶ The current recomposition of the religious field in Latin America is examined. The crisis of the Catholic Church is discussed, & the emergence of new, minority religions is described. The latter are grouped in five categories: (1) historical, missionary, Christian churches, (2) the Pentecostal movement, (3) para-Christian churches, (4) esoteric & oriental cults, & (5) traditional cults. Three avenues of interpretation of this new situation are suggested: the disarticulation of social practices typical of the mass society, religiosity as a mode of expressive recomposition of the cultural field, & the specific characteristics of existing religiosity in Latin America, which emphasize community & ritual rather than transcendentalism or verbalization. C. Waters

88T4457

Stark, Rodney (U Washington, Seattle 98195), Correcting Church Membership Rates: 1971 and 1980, Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 1, Sept, 69-77

¶ The Glenmary Research Center (GRC) data on church membership for 1971 (Johnson, Douglas W., Picard, Paul R., & Quinn Bernard, Churches and Church Membership in the United States, Washington DC: GRC, 1974) & 1980 (Quinn, Bernard, et al, Churches and Church Membership in the United States, Washington DC: GRC, 1982) need correction for the omission of blacks & Jews in order to serve as ecological measures of church membership. Here, correction procedures are explained & assessed & an attempt is made to estimate the true % of Americans who actually belong to a church. 3 Tables, 10 References. Modified HA

88T4458

Strassberg, Barbara, Changes in Religious Culture in Post-World War II Poland, Sociological Analysis, 1988, 48, 4, winter, 342-354

¶ An assessment of significant factors contributing to the persistence of religion in post-WWII Poland, focusing on the culture & religion that have led to the unique position of Polish Roman Catholicism. Common Western assumptions about processes of secularization are discussed, & the Polish case is analyzed. Religious practice in Poland, except among the elites, has maintained an anthropocentric focus & a nondogmatic orientation, which have proved less likely to be undermined by the advance of modern scientific thought, political organization, social mobility, or humanistic ethics. Rather, religion is deeply imbedded in the culture & instead of having undergone functional separation or privatization, it has become a broad sociocultural form of Catholicism. 5 Tables, 29 References. Modified HA

¶ While a Jew is defined, in religious legal terms, as one born of a Jewish mother, many North American communities lack institutions or facilities that promote a sense of Jewish identity. Those faced with this dilemma, ie, diaspora Jews, view Israel as the source of their ethnic identity. Here, the impact of identity-seeking North American Jews on the fundraising efforts of Israel's Project Renewal, which solicited funds & labor from diaspora Jews, is examined. At the start of the project, 160 Israeli communities sought $600 million for improvements from North American Jews. A comparison of 1979 campaign pledges reveals that large cities pledged about 26% of their campaign totals, intermediate cities pledged 48%, & small cities pledged 52%. The difference in %s is attributed to a great need for ethnic identity in small cities because of a lack of Jewish organizational structures. 17 References. D. Graves

88T4444

Levine, Daniel H. (U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109). Holiness, Faith, Power, Politics. ♦ Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion 1987, 26, 4, Dec, 551-561

¶ A review essay on books by Madeleine Adriance, Opting for the Poor: Brazilian Catholicism in Transition (New York: Sheed & Ward, 1986), Fouad Ajami, The Vanished Imam: Musa al Sadr and the Shia of Lebanon (Ithaca: Cornell U Press, 1986), Phillip Berryman, Liberation Theology (Philadelphia: Temple U Press, 1987), David Latin, Hegemony and Culture: Politics and Religious Change among the Yoruba (Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1986), & Scott Mainwaring, The Catholic Church and Politics in Brazil, 1916-1985 (Stanford: Stanford U Press, 1986 (see listings in IRPS No. 42)). These works use eclectic methods of data collection to offer a phenomenological perspective to the understanding of how & why religious groups act, arguing that it is of vital importance to investigate the languages they speak & explain how ideas are worked out in organizational & institutional action. Conventional wisdom concerning religion & politics is explored, particularly the notion of any simple, direct, or univocal relation between them. Adriance reveals the central role played by pastoral agents, particularly religious women in creating & promoting innovations such as ecclesial-based communities. Ajami presents a biography of Musa al Sadr, a key Shia leader in Lebanon, & provides insights into what makes holiness powerful & how it can both change & be changed by the tenor of the times. Berryman examines how the development of new theologies offers religious legitimacy to critiques of injustice & inequality in Latin America. The emergence of Liberation Theology as part of overall changes in Catholicism is traced, with focus on its emphasis on the social centrality & religious value of poverty. Latin criticizes prevailing theories about culture & politics, particularly interpretive theories that stress identity & rational choice models that focus on instrumental & organizational issues. Modified Gramscian notions of hegemony are used to demonstrate how culture is embedded in & shaped by power & institutions. Mainwaring traces the emergence of the popular church & neo-Christendom in Brazil, outlines its social & political position, & suggests reasons for its decline since 1974. 10 References. K. Hyatt

88T4445

Lewis, James R. & Bromley, David G. (c/o Bromley-Virginia Commonwealth U, Richmond 23284). The Cult Withdrawal Syndrome: A Case of Misattribution of Cause?. ♦ Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 4, Dec, 508-522

¶ Two alternative explanations of the emotional distress suffered by former cult members are examined: (1) an "information disease" syndrome, proposed by Flo Conway & Jim Siegelman ("Information Disease: Have Cults Created a New Mental Illness," Science Digest, 1982, Jan, 86-92), which is attributed to psychologically deleterious practices in cults, & (2) a sociological role theory based explanation which suggests that the primary source of any emotional turbulence in former members of new religious groups would result from the dynamics of the exit process. Analysis of survey data on 154 members of controversial religious groups reveals no relationship between Conway's & Siegelman's predictors of information disease & the symptoms they identified. By contrast, a strong relationship was found between mode of exit & these symptoms. The data suggest, therefore, that the exit process, rather than group experiences, is the source of the kinds of emotional turbulence putatively labeled information disease. 3 Tables, 40 References. Modified HA

88T4446

Luidens, Donald A. & Nemeth, Roger J. (Hope Coll, Holland MI 49423). "Public" and "Private" Protestantism Reconsidered: Introducing the "Loyalists". ♦ Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 4, Dec, 450-464.

¶ Martin Marty's model of division in US Protestantism (Righteous Empire, New York: Dial Press, 1970) proposed the existence of two "parties": a private one that focused on individual salvation & pietism & a public one that emphasized social reform. Dean Hoge studied the condition of the two parties in the early 1970s with a series of theological indices (Division in the Protestant House, Philadelphia: The Westminster House, 1976). These findings are tested with data from a 1986 questionnaire survey of the laity (N = 1,756 Rs) of the Reformed Church in America (RCA). Analysis suggests that, while the private party is vital in the RCA, the current form of public party appears to be marginal. In addition, a third, "loyalist" party, with a limited, institutional focus, has significant support. This group has a theology akin to that of the private party, but holds a much stronger allegiance to the denomination, its traditions, & its congregations. 7 Tables, 13 References. Modified HA

88T4447

Mariante, Benjamin R. (Stonehill Coll, North Easton MA 02357). Religion and Technology. ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1986, 13, 10-24

¶ The relationship between religion & technology is explored to discuss the trend of replacing the former with the latter as the basis of man's everyday value system. Technology is defined in three ways: (1) as the organization of knowledge for the purpose of application, (2) as the application of knowledge for social control, & (3) as a dynamic process that produces new relationships. A comparison of religion & technology indicates that both rely on faith & the authority of experts, have a social organization (ie, hierarchies, control systems, heresies, etc.), & lead to social change. It is argued that if man acts in the image of his creator, his use of technology is then a form of dialogue with God. 6 References. D. Graves

88T4448

Moberg, David O. (Marquette U, Milwaukee WI 53233). Holy Masquerade: Hypocrisy in Religion. ♦ Review of Religious Research 1987, 29, 1, Sept, 3-24

¶ Defined as simulating qualities in a false pretense of being holy or virtuous, hypocrisy is widespread in all domains of life, including religion. It has played a significant role in the history of bigotry, wars, persecution, church-state relationships, & the selective indignation of Christians accusing other Christians. The Bible & the Koran refer to it often & Jesus strongly condemned it. Its impact is evident in the social & behavioral sciences. Scientific methodology aims to control it. Theoretical analyses can deal with defense mechanisms, the inconsistency of behavior with ideals, motivational analysis, deception, dramaturgical face-work, self-presentations, self-concepts, labeling, social control, societal sources, extrinsic & intrinsic commitment, & its social functions & dysfunctions. I mention only a few potential approaches. Triangulation of disciplines, methods, researchers, theories, & value orientations is desirable in the scholarly & applied investigation of hypocrisy & related topics. 102 References. Modified HA

88T4449

Nelson, Reed E. (Louisiana Tech U, Ruston 71272). Organizational Homogeneity, Growth, and Conflict in Brazilian Protestantism. ♦ Sociological Analysis, 1988, 48, 4, winter, 319-327.

¶ Three types of Brazilian Protestant churches are analyzed in terms of their rational-legal, clientelist, & patriarchal authority. Each type of authority supports important social institutions in Brazil, & the churches are therefore greatly influenced by the symbolism associated with the type of authority they employ. The performance of these churches in terms of organizational homogeneity, growth, & conflict levels is seen to be more a result of the symbolic overtones of their organizational type than inherent in the administrative efficacy of the specific form. 23 References. Modified HA

88T4450

Neuendorf, Kimberly & Abelman, Robert (Cleveland State U, OH 44115). An Interaction Analysis of Religious Television Programming. ♦ Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 2, Dec, 175-198.

¶ The J & type of interactions between people depicted in religious TV programming are examined via a content analysis of 81 episodes of 2 of the most widely available religious programs in the US in 1983/84. Demographic characteristics including age, gender, SES, occupation, race, & marital status are analyzed in terms of the role they play in influ Lerner's work, & suggests that the overall orientation may have too rational an emphasis for this subject. Jean-Pierre Deconchy explains how Lerner's studies offer a new & fruitful direction for the psychology of religion. 4 References. C. Waters

Ethnic and Racial Studies

An international journal of ethnic, cultural and race relations

Editors:

John Stone, Goldsmiths' College, University of London.

Norman Fainstein, New School for Social Research, New York.

Susan Fainstein, Rutgers University.

Henri Giordan, CNEI, Paris.

Important articles include.

- | | |
|-----------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Robert I. Rotberg | Cecil Rhodes in the cotton fields |
| Ruth Taplin | Women in world market factories |
| Paul Rich | T.H. Green, Lord Scarman and the issue of ethnic minority rights in English liberal thought |
| Hans van Amersfoort and Boudewijn Surie | Reluctant hosts: immigration into Dutch society 1970-83 |
| John Edwards and Clare Shearn | Language and identity in Belgium: perceptions of French and Flemish students |
| Sammy Smoocha | Jewish and Arab ethnocentrism in Israel |
| Rasma Karklins | Determinants of ethnic identification in the USSR: the Soviet Jewish case |
| Jeffrey Prager | American political culture and the shifting meaning of race |
| Paul White, Hilary Winchester and Michelle Guillon | South-east Asian refugees in Paris |
| Donald Rothchild | Interethnic conflict and policy analysis in Africa |
| Anthony Smith | History and liberty: dilemmas of loyalty in Western democracies |

The annual subscription rate for Volume 10, 1987 is £40 (US$65). Single issues cost £10 (US$20). Special rates are available to members of the BSA and NATFE. Subscription orders and requests for sample copies should be sent to:

Routledge Journals
11 New Fetter Lane
London EC4P 4EE

ROUTLEDGE & KEGAN PAUL

88T4459

Takayama, K. Peter (Memphis State U, TN 38152), Revitalization Movement of Modern Japanese Civil Religion, ♦ Sociological Analysis, 1988, 48, 4, winter, 328-341.

† An exploration of dynamic aspects of the religio-political problem in Japan related to the revitalization movement of modern Japanese civil religion, of which state Shinto is a vital part. The main focus is on the revitalization efforts to restore the Yasukuni Shrine as the national shrine. Efforts to revise social studies & history textbooks for the patriotic education of children are also examined. Cultural, historical, & economic reasons for the revitalization movement are discussed, & dilemmas inherent in the movement are assessed. 47 References Modified HA

88T4460

Tomka, Miklós, Társadalmi változás-vallási változás (A mai magyar katolicizmus szerkezeti transzformációi) (Social Change-Religious Change), Szociológia, 1983, 3, 253-272. (HUN)

† Hungary is currently experiencing two contradictory religious change processes, a rapid secularization that reduces external religiousness, & a slower religious revival taking place within small communities. These two tendencies lead to a reduced number of religious people but to a sustained or increased religious influence on society. Examined here is the history of changes in religious institutions since WWII. The church hierarchy has survived, despite losing earlier functions & powers, but alongside it there has grown up a system of lay believers who operate partially independently & who link religion more closely to social life generally. Modified HA

88T4461

Wallis, Roy (Queen's U, Belfast BT7 1NN Northern Ireland), Paradoxes of Freedom and Regulation: The Case of New Religious Movements in Britain and America, ♦ Sociological Analysis, 1988, 48, 4, winter, 355-371

† A comparison of new religious movements in GB & the US, focusing on the paradoxes inherent in these movements' simultaneous freedom & regulation. More radical behavior & responses are found in the US than in GB; also found in the US are an active & substantial anticult movement, extensive deprogramming & exit counseling, & an extremely high level of related litigation. Because the US government is unable to exercise effective low-level control over such movements, private enterprise entities attempting to take action are encouraged, leading to greater abuses of freedom & toleration than in GB, where freedom of religion at the state level is less clearly defined & enforced. 1 Table, 22 References Modified HA

88T4462

Wasserstrom, Jeffrey, "Civilization" and Its Discontents: The Boxers and Luddites as Heroes and Villains, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 5, Sept, 675-707

† An analysis of similarities between the aftereffects of the 1900 siege of foreign legations in Peking, China "Boxerism" & the destruction of looms by nineteenth-century English weavers "Luddism." Though profoundly different in their goals, both movements came to symbolically represent "irrational violence" & anti-foreign/technological sentiments & political action. Both struck at the central representations of Western cultural ideas & technological innovations, provoking ambivalent reactions among the traditional elites & early radicals in their respective societies. The evolution of the use of the words "Luddites" & "Boxers" as epithets is traced, along with implications of this process for the relationship between scholarship & politics, the possibility of value-free historical writing, & ideas on the value of civilization. K. Hyatt

88T4463

Watson, P. J., Morris, Ronald J. & Hood, Ralph W., Jr. (U Tennessee, Chattanooga 37401), Antireligious Humanistic Values, Guilt, and Self Esteem, ♦ Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 4, Dec, 535-546

† Questionnaire data (N = 75 Ms & 87 Fs) are used to test the possibility that empirical analyses of religiosity & self-functioning may be complicated by an ideological conflict between certain humanistic & theistic value perspectives. The findings support the hypothesis, inverse relationships were more obvious when explicitly humanistic self scales were employed & when beliefs about sin were expressed in an orthodox language emphasizing self-rejection & guilt. Factor analysis reveals some humanistic values to be clearly antithetical to an orthodox commitment, & statistical controls for these values & for the guilt language of sin yield overwhelmingly positive relationships between self-functioning & forms of religiosity related to intrinsicness. These data suggest that future research progress requires attention to the ideological context of the empirical question. 5 Tables, 50 References. Modified HA

88T4464

Wiener, Richard L. & Kramer, Thomas J. (Saint Louis U, MO 63103), Ministerial Discernment: An Application of the Lens Model to the Study of Decision Making, ♦ Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 1, Sept, 57-68.

† A modified version of the Lens model of human judgment (eg. see Hammond, Kenneth R., McClelland, Gary H., & Mumpower, Jerry, Human Judgment and Decision Making Theories, Methods and Procedures, New York: Praeger, 1980) was used to study the decision making process in ministerial discernment. Questionnaire data were used to measure beliefs & attitudes relative to ministerial discernment & reactions to the outcome of discernment in a stratified sample (N = 149) of a Catholic women's religious order in the southern US. Overall the results indicated that the sisters were satisfied with the process & outcome of discernment. In addition, the more importance assigned to prayer in discernment, the greater was the Rs' satisfaction. Other findings demonstrated that those sisters who decided to change ministries (the younger ones) held attitudes that were less resistant to change, supported the belief that possessing a social life was important, & were relatively dissatisfied with their own ministries. 2 Tables, 18 References Modified HA

88T4465

Wilson, John, Simpson, Ida Harper & Jackson, David K. (Dept Sociology Duke U, Durham NC 27706), Church Activism among Farm Couples: Measuring the Impact of the Conjugal Unit, ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 875-882.

† The impact of the conjugal unit on church activism is examined, based on telephone interviews conducted with 695 NC farm couples. Analysis reveals that church activism is a norm for wives, which only the inactivity of their husbands can radically alter. The most powerful influence on the church activism of either husband or wife is the activism of their spouse though wives have a greater impact on their husbands than vice versa. Results suggest that the system properties of the marriage are an important determinant of church activism, when other factors are controlled. 2 Tables, 16 References Modified HA

88T4466

Wuthnow, Robert (Princeton U, NJ 08544), The Social Significance of Religious Television, ♦ Review of Religious Research, 1987, 29, 1, Dec, 125-134

† Findings from the 1984 Gallup survey conducted as part of the Religion & Television Project (Gerbner, George, et al, Religion and Television. A Research Report by the Annenberg School of Communication, Philadelphia: U of Pennsylvania, 1984) provide only qualified support for the thesis that religious TV furthers the privatization that is alleged characteristic of US religion. An alternative framework is proposed that emphasizes social cleavages in US religion. The data seem to indicate that religious TV viewing falls along the lines of broader cleavages in US religion & reinforces the strength of these divisions. 7 References. H.

88T4467

----, La Psychologie de la religion: inventaire de croyance étude de représentations ou recherche de mécanismes? (The Psychology of Religion: Inventory of Beliefs, Study of Representations, or Research into Mechanisms?), ♦ Archives de sciences sociales et de religions, 1987, 32, 63-2, Apr-June, 167-176 (FRE)

† A discussion prompted by the awarding of the Fourth Quinquennial Prize for the Psychology of Religion (in Barcelona, Spain, in July 1981) to Melvin J. Lerner for his book The Belief in a Just World. A Fundamental Delusion (New York: Plenum Press, 1980). François Duyckaert introduces the topic & describes Lerner's work as experimental social psychology. In Melvin J. Lerner fait-il un apport spécifique à la psychologie de la religion? (Does Melvin J. Lerner Make a Specific Contribution to the Psychology of Religion?), Jean-Marie Jaspard acknowledges the importance of Lerner's work as regards the study of both beliefs & ethics. In A New Perspective on the Psychological Roots of Religion? Jan M. Van Der Lans shows how Lerner's experiments necessitate a reevaluation of earlier studies & illuminate the role of worldview in everyday behavior. In Quelle croyance? Pour quelles injustices? Dans quel monde? (What Belief? For What Injustices? In What World?) André Godin identifies a group of interrelated operational concepts

1600 social control

36 sociology of law

88T4468

Aubert, Vilhelm (Dept Sociology U Oslo, Blindern N-03163 Norway). Sul mutamento giuridico. Dalle pene alle ricompense? (On Legal Change. From Penalties to Rewards?). Sociologia del Diritto, 1987, 14, 2, 7-29 (ITA)

Translated by Vincenzo Ferrari & Vittorio Oligati.

¶ An analysis of the means by which laws are made operative: sanctions & penalties, rewards, & incentives. A discussion of legal theory examines especially Jeremy Bentham's ideas (Introduction to the Principles of Morals and Legislation, Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 1948) & other work. Bentham's approach is used to interpret some modern forms of governance through administrative law. However, it is shown that Bentham's notions concerning the rewards of office are inappropriate for modern government bureaucracies. Methodical individualism underlies Bentham's analysis, but this cannot take into account the broader context. These organizations must be analyzed as social systems in order to understand what is going on within them. Modified HA

88T4469

Bales, William Douglas (Florida State U, Tallahassee 32306). Race and Class Effects on Criminal Justice Prosecution and Punishment Decisions: A Test of Some Conflict Theory Propositions. Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 751-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713302.

88T4470

Bates, Frank (U Newcastle, New South Wales 2308 Australia). The Effects of Misleading and Inadequate Information Given to Australian Social Security Applicants. The Journal of Social Welfare Law, 1987, Mar, 109-122.

¶ Applicants for social security are very frequently those members of society who have the most difficulty in coping with the bureaucratic requirements of the system. Hence, applicants are necessarily reliant on advice given to them by, particularly, employees of the appropriate government office. In Australia, there are a significant number of decisions of the Administrative Appeals Tribunal which suggest that too many officials of the Dept of Social Security are careless in the advice that they give to applicants. This is particularly true in cases where applicants are significantly disadvantaged, such as handicapped or aboriginal people. It may be possible to ameliorate this situation by amendment to the Australian Social Security Act, though that task would not prove easy. The only realistic solution is appropriate doctrinal training for the employees concerned. Modified AA

88T4471

Bettini, Romano (Facoltà Magistero U Roma, I-00100 Italy). Diritto amministrativo e mutamento sociale nell'URSS (Administrative Law and Social Change in USSR). Sociologia del Diritto, 1987, 14, 2, 141-148. (ITA)

¶ An examination of the legal protection offered citizens of the USSR against the actions of the state administration. It is argued that Soviet legislation on this matter is obsolete, even as compared with that of other socialist countries. The Soviet citizen is formally invested with precise rights, according to the constitution of 1977, but no laws have been approved to enforce these rights. This is perceived as a case of imperfect modernization, the reference model for the notion of modernization is derived from the legal systems of Western countries. Legal change & the principle of legality in the USSR are discussed. Four variables are examined: legal science; the "underground" economy; tradition, & the political class ideology. Innovation seems to be engendered by the first two elements, & hindered by the latter two. Modified HA

88T4472

Bettini, Romano (U Roma, I-00100 Italy). Efficacia del diritto e mutamento socio-economico (The Effectiveness of Law and Socioeconomic Change). Sociologia e Ricerca Sociale, 1987, 8, 23, Aug, 137-150. (ITA)

¶ Conventional, negative concepts of law are challenged; law is considered as a feasible factor of SE change. A new concept of effectiveness is outlined, which distinguishes between innovative & stabilizing effects. The crisis of government in modern democracies is attributed to the ineffectiveness of law. Various possible interpretive models of this crisis are discussed. 24 References. Modified HA

88T4473

Colby, Ira C. & Colby, Deborah N. (Social Work Program U Texas, Arlington 76013). Videotaped Interviews in Child Sexual Abuse Cases: The Texas Example. Child Welfare, 1987, 66, 1, Jan-Feb, 25-34.

¶ In 1983, the Tex state legislature passed a law permitting videotaped interviews of child victims of abuse to be admissible in civil & criminal proceedings. The law's basic tenets, how it is being implemented, & how it protects the legal rights of the child victim, the alleged perpetrator, & society at large are examined. 22 References. HA de Cruz, S. P. (U Keele, Staffordshire ST5 5BG England). Parents, Doctors and Children: The Gillick Case and Beyond. The Journal of Social Welfare Law, 1987, Mar, 93-108.

88T4474

¶ A discussion of the issue of parental rights & a MD's duty to underage children with respect to contraceptive advice, examination, & treatment, in light of the Gillick case in GB. The factual background of the case & the judgments in the House of Lords are described, & concord is identified between the leading majority judgments despite differences in the judges' approaches. The dissenting judgments, which are notable for their public policy arguments, are also analyzed. Examined are three sets of guidelines for those involved with providing contraceptive advice or treatment for underage children that were issued after the decision by the Dept of Health & Social Security, the General Medical Council, & the British Medical Assoc. It is concluded that parental rights & responsibilities must be considered in relation to children's rights, & the Gillick case is a culmination of this. The decision has not ended the debate, & this matter will be a continuing problem for parents, MDs, & children. Modified AA

88T4475

Dahl, Tove Stang (Instit Women's Law U Oslo, N-0162 1 Norway). Women's Law: Methods, Problems, Values, Contemporary Crises, 1986, 10, 4, 361-371.

¶ Women's law has been taught as a legal discipline at the U of Oslo (Norway) since 1975. Methodologically, women's law is a person-directed, cross-disciplinary legal field taking its problems from women's practical experiences rather than from legal doctrines. The basic values guiding the studies are those of justice & freedom, which—when applied to empirical studies of women's legal needs—have generated four main areas of research within women's law: money law, aiming at the large & systematic differences between men's & women's access to money (mainly wages & public money coming from social insurance, etc); housewives' or caretaker's law, concerning the fact that most women care for others in addition to other work; paid-work law, concerning women's work in the labor market, & birth law, encompassing the rules regulating sex, childbirth, & infant care as related to the values of freedom through self-determination & self-realization of women as women. Ways to extend the feminist perspective applied in these areas into other fields of legal studies are discussed. AA

88T4476

Davis, Nanette J. (Dept Sociology Portland State U, OR 97207). Abortion and Legal Policy. Contemporary Crises, 1986, 10, 4, 373-397.

¶ A critical theory of law perspective is applied to an interpretation of historical changes in US abortion policy since the 1860s. Four eras are identified: criminalization in the 1860s, followed in recent decades by decriminalization, legalization, & medicalization. The creation of abortion law was embedded in structures of sexual domination; contradictions in NEW!

JOURNAL OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT IN AFRICA

All correspondence to: JOURNAL OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT IN AFRICA
SCHOOL OF SOCIAL WORK
P. BAG 66022 KOPJE, HARARE, ZIMBABWE

- Originating in Africa, distributed from Africa
- Publishing critical analyses of
 - issues affecting development and poverty
 - popular participation
 - equality and productivity
- Cross-disciplinary and essential reading for planners and policy makers, development practitioners and personnel, aid personnel, social workers, and academics in a variety of disciplines like sociology, area studies, politics, social administration, economics and so on.

VOL 1 NO 1 1986 includes:

Editorial: Participation

Catching Fish or Liberating Man: Social Development in Africa: M DE GRAAF
Zimbabwean Women: a Neglected Factor: S KACHINGWE
Role of Resettlement in Social Development: S GEZA
The Disabled and Social Development in Rural Zimbabwe: L NYATHI

SUBSCRIPTION RATES (US$)		Individual			Institutional
		1 yr	2 yr	3 yr	1 yr	2 yr	3 yr
Single copies	Third World	10	15	20	20	30	40
	Elsewhere	15	20	25	30	40	50
US$12

Published twice yearly by the School of Social Work
Harare Zimbabwe

Cases, ♦ UM Child Welfare, 1987, 66, 1, Jan-Feb, 13-24

† Testimony in court by child victims of sexual abuse results in further trauma, frequently inconsistent or retracted accusations, &, in incest cases, exacerbation of family difficulties. A number of states have liberalized rules of evidence in such instances to spare the child, some states have enacted legislation simplifying introduction of the child's out-of-court statements, although the constitutionality of these statutes has yet to be tested. HA

88T4488

Haferkamp, Hans (Katrepeler Landstr 45A, D-2800 Bremen 33 Federal Republic Germany), Effekte des Wertewandels auf Kriminalität und Strafsanktionen (The Effects of Changing Values on Criminality and Criminal Justice), Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 6, Dec, 419-433 (GER)

† An attempt is made to refine explanations of modern developments in crime & criminal justice, by introducing the effects of value change into multicausal theories. Values are defined, & the effects of values described. Based on a review of the most important recent research on value change, a new, central compromise is identified between current values of duty & acceptance & pre-existing values of self-actualization & participation. Several hypotheses concerning the effects of this value change on current tendencies in crime & criminal justice in the Federal Republic of Germany are presented & supported by empirical data from various studies. 1 Schema, 57 References. Modified HA

88T4489

Kaye, Tim (Dept Law University Coll Cardiff, CF1 1XL Wales), Natural Law Theory and Legal Positivism: Two Sides of the Same Practical Coin?, Journal of Law and Society, 1987, 14, 3, autumn, 303-320

† An exploration of the ideologies underlying natural law theory & legal positivism, considering their origins, coherence, & practical effects. It is argued that, although the ideal-types of legal positivism & natural law theory remain quite distinct, the modern theorists who propound the different conceptions of law are not so far apart as it may sometimes seem. Indeed, the practical ramifications of both concepts of law are remarkably similar. AA

88T4490

Klingemann, Harald (Dept Research Swiss Instit Prevention Alcohol & Drug Problems, PO Box 870 CH-Lausanne), From Controlling a Wayward Life to Controlled Therapeutic Measures? Changes in Swiss Commitment Laws, Contemporary Drug Problems, 1987, 14, 1, spring, 51-77.

† Proceeding from a discussion on deinstitutionalization & community treatment as alternatives to costly institutionalized forms of controlling deviant behavior—which, moreover, violate civil rights shifts in the boundaries between the legal system & the treatment sector are discussed. As in the US, statutory changes regarding involuntary commitment have also been introduced in Switzerland. Two aspects of the Swiss legislation are investigated in depth: (1) to what extent controversial changes in the draft, as well as the interpretation of indefinite legal concepts (elastic clauses), support the assumption that the medical model has become increasingly relevant for the control of deviant behavior, & (2) whether the new statutes do, in fact, effectively limit the control potential. 3 Tables, 33 References. Modified AA

88T4491

Kruitthof, C. L., Over burgerlijke immoraliteit (On Civil Immorality), ♦ Tijdschrift voor Sociale Wetenschappen, 1987, 32, 3, July-Sept, 302-306. (DUT)

† The concept of "civil immorality" indicates that the power establishment in a society legitimizes unlawful actions by the defense of the organizational system that is under their control. Civil immorality exists as a contradiction in terms that is made possible by the existence of a privileged group of decisionmakers who apparently act in favor of a social structure in which they manifestly hold power. This can be seen as an expression of their bourgeois mentality, but the use of illicit means renders this defense immoral. Modified HA

88T4492

Leonard, Arthur S., AIDS Legal Bibliography, ♦ AIDS & Public Policy Journal, 1987, 2, 2, spring-summer, 54-61

† An annotated bibliography of 164 articles on legal aspects of the acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) epidemic that have been published in academic law reviews, bar journals, legal newspapers, & books between 1983 & mid-1987. Topics include: general overviews of the problem, medical issues, criminal law & corrections concerns, employment laws, estate planning, immigration, pediatric AIDS, public health measures, military issues, insurance, school & Coll exclusionary practices, & torts involving liability for the transmission of the human immunodeficiency (HIV) virus responsible for AIDS. K. Hyatt

88T4493

Levine, Murray, Ewing, Charles Patrick & Hagar, Ronald (Research Center Children & Youth State U New York, Buffalo 14260), Juvenile and Family Mental Health Law in Sociohistorical Context, International Journal of Law and Psychiatry, 1987, 10, 2, 91-109

† Following a brief review of Babylonian, Hebrew, Roman, & Anglo-Saxon laws concerning juveniles, the historical development of juvenile & family mental health law & policy in the US is traced & positioned within the US's unique sociohistorical context. It is shown that dramatic changes have occurred concerning how & by whom "problem" children are defined & treated, resulting in an increased specialization of services for juveniles & their families & a greater complexity of legal statutes & public policies concerning them. Ways that social changes & concerns will continue to shape such laws & policies in accordance with the needs of the times are discussed. 48 References. K. Hyatt

88T4494

Lidstone, K. W. (Dept Law U Sheffield, S10 2TN England), Social Control and the Criminal Law, British Journal of Criminology, 1987, 27, 1, winter, 31-36.

† Objection is taken with the thesis that the change from "consensual" to "coercive" policing in GB is due to the broad definition of public order offenses. Rather, changes in society have caused these changes in policing, particularly (1) immigration; (2) WWI & WWII, which brought freer childrearing practices, & a demise of state ideology; & (3) the growth of travel & communications that ended British insularity. Recent riots in GB are analyzed against this background & shown to be the result of a variety of SE & political conditions, not insensitive policing. It is argued that the government's growing use of the criminal law for political purposes causes increasing disorder among those governed by the law & a greater reaction by the police to the violation of the law. K. Hyatt

88T4495

Lilles, Heino (Faculty Law Queen's U, Kingston Ontario K7L 3N6), Children as Witnesses: Some Legal and Psychological Viewpoints, ♦ Canadian Journal of Family Law/Revue Canadienne de Droit Familial, 1986, 5, 2, fall, 237-251

† Any examination of the sufficiency of intelligence of a child to give competent testimony or of the child's appreciation of the moral obligation of speaking the truth in a criminal investigation must also explore the functional abilities of a child & the psychological aspects associated with giving reliable evidence. Jean Piaget's theory of cognitive development of children & L. Kohlberg's theory of moral development are discussed (eg, see Science of Education and the Psychology of the Child [New York: Viking Press, 1970], & "Stage and Sequence: The Cognitive Developmental Approach to Socialization" [Handbook of Socialization Theory and Research, Goslin, D. (Ed), New York: Rand McNally, 1969], respectively) in addition to other sociological & psychological findings that cast new light on the child's ability to testify in court. Substantial changes in the justice system will be necessary if the perception of the reliability of children's evidence in legal proceedings is to be improved. HA

88T4496

Mann, Leon (School Social Sciences Flinders U, Bedford Park South Australia 5042), Cross-Cultural Studies of Rules for Determining Majority and Minority Decision Rights, Australian Journal of Psychology, 1986, 38, 3, Dec, 319-328

† The hypothesis is advanced that the cultural dimension of collectivism-individualism (Hofstede, G., Culture's Consequences: International Differences in Work-Related Values, Beverly Hills, Calif: Sage, 1980) influences children's choices of decision rules to resolve majority/minority competing claims. A research project is described that has been undertaken to compare children's behavior in the individualist cultures of Australia & New Zealand, the intermediate culture of Israel, & the collectivist cultures of Japan & Hong Kong. Review of research findings from several of these cultures shows evidence favorable to the hypothesis. Proposals are advanced for further cross-cultural research in this area. 5 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA abortion law express antagonisms in civil society as well as promote alliances within ruling groups. The abortion issue clarifies the failure of legality to transcend existing sexual inequalities & the resulting erosion of welfare rights for poor women & their children. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 65 References. Modified HA

88T4477

deYoung, Mary (2226 Saginaw Rd SE, Grand Rapids MI 49506), Disclosing Sexual Abuse: The Impact of Development Variables, Child Welfare, 1987, 66, 3, May-June, 217-223

¶ Despite increasing evidence that even a young child can be a competent witness in a court of law, one factor is often used to impeach the credibility of a child in a sexual abuse case: the nature & timing of the child's disclosure of the sexual victimization. Here, the impact of developmental variables on that disclosure is examined, & it is suggested that when these variables are recognized, the credibility of the young child as a witness increases. 32 References. AA

88T4478

Dobry, Silvio Victor (Fordham U, Bronx NY 10458), Common Law and Civil Law Interactions: Their Effect on Migrants within the Americas, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1021-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714579.

88T4479

Douzinas, Costas & Warrington, Ronnie (Middlesex Polytechnic, London N14 5PN England), Domination, Exploitation, and Suffering: Marxism and the Opening of Closed Systems, American Bar Foundation Research Journal, 1986, 4, fall, 801-828

¶ A review symposium on books by Hugh Collins, Marxism and Law (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1982), & Allen F. Buchanan, Marx and Justice: The Radical Critique of Liberalism (London: Methuen, 1982 [see listings in IRPS No. 42]). These works both examine Marxism's relationship to law & to justice. A preliminary review of current Marxist thought & its breakdown of confidence is offered that emphasizes the questionability of Marxist texts revealed by Marxism's own critical methods. Collins attempts to defend Marxism as a theory of law, but is left unable to resolve the base/superstructure question. Buchanan emphasizes the moral content of Marxism & especially the role of justice in Marxist thought. Both works are best viewed not merely as revealing weaknesses in Marxism but as opening new possibilities for Marxist thought that are currently closed off, & that critical legal studies may develop. W. H. Stoddard

88T4480

Dunlap, Jody (Pepperdine U, Malibu CA 90265), A Study of the Conflict between Seniority Rights and the Anti-Discrimination Goals of Title VII and Affirmative Action, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 488-A-489-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710914.

88T4481

Ellickson, Robert C. (School Law Stanford U, CA 94305), A Critique of Economic and Sociological Theories of Social Control, The Journal of Legal Studies, 1987, 16, 1, Jan, 67-99.

¶ A critique of current theories of social control focusing on shortcomings in their capacity to predict important features of social order systems. A taxonomy of various social-control systems & their components is developed. The various subsystems include not only the legal system & informal norms, but also instruments such as self-control, contracts, & organizations. Portions of the taxonomy are invoked to criticize current theories proposed by the law/economics & law/society movements. It is argued that many law/economics scholars have exaggerated the role that the legal system plays in the overall system of social control. Law/society scholars, although well aware of the importance of nonlegal rules, have been slow to develop theories of the content of norms. Modified AA

88T4482

Else, Anne (Government Printing Office, Mulgrave St Thorndon Wellington New Zealand), The Perfect Solution: Adoption Law and Practice in New Zealand, International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 3, Aug, 237-257.

¶ Reflections are offered on adoption in New Zealand from a personal perspective as an adopted child. Adoption is a relatively recent practice in New Zealand; early marriage or illegal abortion were the two common results of an unmarried woman's pregnancy. It was customary among the Maori, but had a very different character than among Pakeha (non-natives), since adoption is generally known & children grow up knowing who their natural parents are. After WWII, adoption among Pakeha rose above 3% of live births & remained that high or higher. An elaborate ideology arose to justify adoption & define it as the best choice for both the natural mother & the child. Mothers came under great institutional pressure to give up their children. Secrecy about the natural parents was maintained, even against their wishes, & natural mothers were expected simply to forget that their children had ever existed. Only recently has the law been changed to give adoptees access to information & to undo the damage caused by this supposedly perfect solution. 3 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4483

Enright, Joseph Gerard (City U New York, NY 10021), The Impact of Presentence Investigations on Plea Bargained Dispositions in King County Supreme Court, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 752-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713757.

88T4484

Figueira-McDonough, Josefina (Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824), Discrimination or Sex Differences? Criteria for Evaluating the Juvenile Justice System's Handling of Minor Offenses, Crime and Delinquency, 1987, 33, 3, July, 403-424

¶ The overrepresentation of F minor offenders in the juvenile justice system & the more severe handling of them than of Ms committing the same type of offense have come under attack as evidence of discriminatory practices. Defenders of the system claim that official statistics reflect de facto differences in the delinquent behavior of boys & girls, & that differences in treatment correspond to the different needs of each gender group. A review of recent research invalidates such justifications by showing that (1) there is no evidence of gender specialization in behavior classified as minor offenses, & (2) the causal factors explaining involvement in minor delinquency are much the same for boys & girls. Further school attachment at the peak age of involvement in minor delinquency (15-16) appears to function equally for Ms & Fs as a stronger restraint than family attachments. It is concluded that schools should play a much more central role in prevention programs for both groups. 3 Tables, Figures, 77 References. HA

88T4485

Freeman, Alan (State U New York Buffalo, Amherst 14260), The Politics of Truth: On Sugarman's Legality, Ideology and the State, American Bar Foundation Research Journal, 1986, 4, fall, 829-843

¶ A review symposium on a book edited by David Sugarman, Legality, Ideology, and the State (London: Academic Press, 1983 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). This book collects critical essays on law from varied leftist perspectives. An exploration is attempted of its relevance to the US tradition of critical legal studies. Eight major arguments are identified within it, & the recurring theme of pluralism is emphasized. W. H. Stoddard

88T4486

Furrow, Barry (Law School U Detroit, MI 48226), The Great Arc: Progress toward Total Justice, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 3, summer, 585-591

¶ A review essay on a book by Lawrence Friedman, Total Justice (New York: Russell Sage Foundation, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]), a legal historian's attempt to explain the recent explosion of lawyers in the US. Popular & media misconceptions are attacked, & it is argued that the legal system has simply responded to the public's expectations of just treatment & demands for a legal recompense for injuries & loss. Total justice is both a social norm & a principle that is capable of transforming legal & social institutions. It is suggested that this view blithely accepts the inevitability of progress without critically examining its negative effects & structural/economic impediments. 1 Graph, 16 References. H. Hyatt

88T4487

Gothard, Sol (Juvenile Court Jefferson Parish, PO Box 345 Gretna LA 70054), The Admissibility of Evidence in Child Sexual Abuse

siders three different aspects of judicial statistics: statistical-mathematical, legal, & sociological. The subject matter of social statistics is the quantitative study of collective social phenomena, judicial statistics studies specifically those social phenomena & behaviors that are regulated by law. Corrado is aware of the difference between the real world & the apparent world of statistics. The main functions of judicial statistics are their influence on the formation of positive law & on the redistribution of resources as territorial characteristics change. Two criticisms of the book are made: it does not contain a methodological chapter, & by giving too much room to criminal judicial statistics, it fails to offer a broad & complete view of the judicial situation in Italy. Modified HA

88T4506

Roth, Loren H. (Western Psychiatric Instt & Clinic, 3811 O'Hara St Pittsburgh PA 15213), Preserve but Limit the Insanity Defense, ♦ Psychiatric Quarterly, 1986-87, 58, 2, summer, 91-105

¶ Amidst pervasive negativism by the US public toward the insanity defense & psychiatry in general following the (John) Hinckley verdict, it is argued that the law needs this defense, although it should be narrowly defined & continually reevaluated through empirical research. In addition, psychiatrists should support the defense, but limit their role to that of scientific researchers & leave moral decision making to the judges & juries. A brief overview of the legal history of the insanity defense is presented, & it is demonstrated that the defense is rarely invoked & even more rarely used successfully. Media reports of a small number of sensationalized cases have served to distort these facts & misinform the public. The US Congress's passage of the Comprehensive Criminal Control Act of 1984, which includes a section on the insanity defense, is summarized & evaluated. 71 References. K. Hyatt

88T4507

Ruane, Janet M. (Rutgers State U New Jersey, New Brunswick 08903), The Behavior of Tolerance and Social Control: A Test of Social Space vs Social Learning, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1022-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714495.

88T4508

Sajo, Andras & Csillag, Gyorgy (Instt Legal & Administrative Sciences, Orságház u. 32 Budapest H-1 Hungary), Law-Making as Administrative Behaviour: The Case of Investment Regulation in Hungary, International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 2, May, 209-223

¶ Law-making is analyzed as a response of public bureaucracies to conditions of uncertainty. The socialist theory of investment that guides public administrative bodies in Hungary is reviewed, & the cyclical character of the investment process is pointed out. Case studies of regulatory processes between 1974 & 1979 (N = 29) & of investment projects carried out between 1972 & 1982 (N = 50) are supplemented by analysis of public regulations on investment (N = 136) & of decisions of competent government commissions (N = 186). Investment agencies operate under conditions of uncertainty, legal regulation is seen as a strategy for meeting this uncertainty. Three regulatory strategies are compared: control of input, of output, or of activities by those involved in a system. The effects of such regulation are often negative. 12 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4509

Santos, Boaventura de Sousa (Dept Sociology School Economics U Coimbra, P-3000 Portugal), Law: A Map of Misreading. Toward a Postmodern Conception of Law, Journal of Law and Society, 1987, 14, 3, autumn, 279-302.

¶ The conventional paradigm of the sociological study of the law is exhausted, a new one is needed. In an attempt in this direction, law is conceived as one way of imagining the reality that bears striking similarities with another way of imagining reality, ie, cartographic maps, since laws are maps in a metaphorical sense. A symbolic cartography of law is outlined, consisting of the application to law of the same mechanisms through which maps represent/distort reality, ie, scale, projection, & symbolization. The symbolic cartography of law makes it possible to develop new research questions & concepts (eg, large-scale vs small-scale legality; egocentric vs geocentric legality, Homeric vs Biblical style of law), which are fully independent from those developed by legal science. The symbolic cartography of law points to a new, postmodern social theory of law, the key concepts of which are, legal pluralism, interlegality, & a new legal commonsense. Modified AA

88T4510

Sartor, Giovanni (Istit Universitario Europeo, Florence Italy), Le regole del diritto e le regole dei giochi (The Rules of Law and the Rules of Games), Sociologia del Diritto, 1987, 14, 2, 159-162 (ITA)

¶ A review essay on Gregorio Robles's Las reglas del derecho y las reglas de los juegos (The Rules of Law and the Rules of Games), Palma de Mallorca, Spain: Faculty of Law of Palma de Mallorca, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]. Robles deals systematically with the relationships between games & law, & analyzes classical themes of legal philosophy & legal theory on the basis of analogies between these two contexts. This is an interesting study in the theory of law, & the analogy presented is a useful heuristic tool for the study of legal philosophical matters. Modified HA

88T4511

Sethi, Raj Mohini & Sibia, Kiran (Dept Sociology Panjab U, Chandigarh 160014 Union Territory India), Women and Hindu Personal Laws: A Socio-Legal Analysis, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 101-113

¶ Modern societies rely increasingly on law as a means of bringing about social change. In India, since independence, personal laws have aimed to respect the traditions of diverse religious communities, but also to encourage modernization & a uniform civil code. Four acts are examined from this perspective: the Hindu Marriage Act of 1955, the Hindu Succession Act of 1956, the Hindu Adoption & Maintenance Act of 1956, & the Dowry Prohibition Act of 1961. It is argued that these acts are expressions of the preferences of an intellectual elite & not of popular values. Analysis of interview data from 120 Fs in the village of Kokari Kulan, Punjab, shows that codified law has not affected general custom significantly & that most Rs are not even aware of it. Legal & social reforms to improve this situation are suggested. 5 Tables, 6 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4512

Skapska, Grazyna, The Sociology of Law in Poland. Problems, Polemics, Social Commitment, Journal of Law and Society, 1987, 14, 3, autumn, 353-365

¶ A discussion of the Polish sociology of law, including an analysis of the main theoretical trends represented by its most distinguished exponents. Problems on which research work has been focused are identified, & connections with other legal & social sciences detailed. Polemics characteristic of the specific stages of development in the field are analyzed. Organizational forms of the sociology of law in Poland are also referenced. F. Rasmussen

88T4513

Stavish, Frank J. (Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122), Prosecutorial Case Screening in the Office of the U.S. Attorney for the District of Columbia, Superior Court Division: An Impact Examination of Selected Defendant and Criminal Case Characteristics at the Initial and Pre-Indictment Screening Stages, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1022-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711417.

88T4514

Stolte, John F. (Dept Sociology Northern Illinois U, DeKalb 60115), The Formation of Justice Norms, AM American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 6, Dec, 774-784

¶ Joining ideas from structural exchange theory & symbolic interaction theory, two questions are addressed: (1) How does a justice norm (JN) form? & (2) Why do variations among JNs arise? Exchange theory clarifies the objective, structural, & largely "material" contexts in which JNs originate. Symbolic interaction theory illuminates the subjective, intersubjective, & mainly "ideal" process through which JNs emerge. Context variations in structural exchange (whether a setting entails distributive or productive exchange, equal or unequal power-dependence) help account for the formation of specific JNs: equal opportunity, equality, status-rank inequality, need, & equity. The theoretical account is linked to existing data, & experimental tests of its key implications are suggested. 2 Figures, 58 References. Modified HA

88T4515

Tafoya, William L. (U Maryland, College Park 20742), A Delphi Forecast of the Future of Law Enforcement, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 484-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712267.

88T4497

Miller, Leslie J. (Dept Sociology U Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4), Uneasy Alliance: Women as Agents of Social Control, ♦ Canadian Journal of Sociology/Cahiers canadiens de sociologie, 1987, 12, 4, winter, 345-361

¶ The dilemma for women created by the current "war on pornography" is examined in terms of the theories of Norbert Elias (see IRPS No. 16/83c00199 & 83c00200). Women's role as agents of social control is described, along with three related topics: the historical emergence of women as guardians of manners & morals, the shift in rhetoric that marks women's social control movements today, & the structural factors that support women's ambivalence toward this role. 25 References. Modified HA

88T4498

Milovanovic, Dragan (Long Island U, Greenvale NY 11548), Juridico-Linguistic Communicative Markets. Towards a Semiotic Analysis, Contemporary Crises, 1986, 10, 3, 281-304

¶ In recent years, much attention in criminology has been directed at the relationship between the state & law. Marxist-oriented approaches argue that the functioning of the state, law, & ideology are interconnected. Here, it is contended that the critical link in this relationship lies in language, particularly language formulated by juridical structures. It is shown how the two spheres in a capitalist mode of production/circulation/exchange & production account for two spheres from which linguistic forms & codes develop that reflect the dynamics of the respective domains. It is argued that the basis of law is ideology, which in turn is reflected in & by linguistic work. Focus is on the criminal law, labor practice, regulatory law, & the balancing interests formula used in deciding substantive rights protected by Constitutional amendments. Suggestions are offered for resolving the current juridico-linguistic crisis of advanced, state-regulated capitalism. Modified HA

88T4499

Mitra, Charlotte L. (Instit Education U London, WC1H 0AL, England), Judicial Discourse in Father-Daughter Incest Appeal Cases, International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 2, May, 121-148

¶ The criminal justice system has repeatedly been criticized for failure to protect women against sexual abuse. The validity of this charge is assessed through an examination of sentencing in incest cases. Transcripts of 63 appeals against sentence in incest cases heard by the Court of Appeal in GB between 1970 & 1980 are analyzed. Typical characteristics of the cases are described. Major aggravating & mitigating factors in sentencing of fathers for incest against daughters are identified. The evidence supports a view of court practice as supporting the dominant ideology of patriarchal power that feminists have identified as the ultimate cause of incest. 7 Tables, 63 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4500

Moody, Carlisle E., Jr. & Marvell, Thomas B. (Dept Economics Coll William & Mary, Williamsburg VA 23185), Appellate and Trial Court Caseload Growth: A Pooled Time-Series-Cross-Section Analysis, Journal of Quantitative Criminology, 1987, 3, 2, June, 143-167

¶ The dramatic growth in trial court caseloads, particularly in appellate courts, in the US since the 1950s is examined using a basic economic framework that considers commodity (court services) supply & demand as a function of the costs & benefits to potential litigants. A pooled time-series-cross-section design is used to analyze appellate court statistics for civil (32 states) & criminal (26 states) cases between 1970 & 1984, the effects of supply, cost-benefit, & dummy (control) variables are examined using a fixed-effects regression procedure. It is concluded that supply variables, eg, the economy, crime rate, & number of trial judgeships, have a much greater effect on caseloads than do cost-benefit variables, however, it cannot be assumed that cost-benefit considerations are unimportant to potential litigants. Since many supply variables have delayed impacts, results may be useful to courts in making short-term forecasts of caseloads. Policy implications for courts, judges, & lawmakers are also discussed. 6 Tables, 39 References. K. Hyatt

88T4501

Murphy-Berman, Virginia, Berman, John J., Pachauri, Anju & Kumar, Pramod (U Nebraska, Lincoln 68588), Religious Attitudes and Perceptions of Justice, ♦ Psychologia, 1985, 28, 1, Mar, 29-34

¶ Previous research on distributive justice has focused on three allocation strategies—need, merit, & equality—& shown that allocators are more sensitive to need when a cutback vs a reward is to be distributed. In an attempt to determine how an allocator's degree of religiosity would affect distribution strategy in both a budget cutback & reward situation, an experiment was conducted with a sample of 73 undergraduate students Allahabad U in India. Ss, representing the 4 major Hindu castes, completed questionnaires containing demographic items, a religiosity scale & 12 vignettes describing hypothetical allocation problems between meritorious/needy persons of differing religious affiliation. Results indicate that religious orientation was related to justice strategy selection, on those of extremely high religiosity demonstrated the previously reported pattern of being more sensitive to the needy in cutback rather than reward situations. Implications of the results are discussed, & the viability of a religiosity concept not specifically tied to Western Christian-Judaic constructs is affirmed. 7 References. Modified HA

88T4502

Pennisi, Carlo (Dept Sociologia Facoltà Scienze Politiche U Milan I-20122 Italy), La legittimazione delle norme giuridiche: modelli teorici e sociologia del diritto (Legitimation of Legal Norms. Theoretical Models and Sociology of Law), Sociologia del Diritto, 1987, 14, 31-66 (ITA)

¶ A theoretical framework is presented for examining the legitimation of law in specific areas. Theories & language used in these areas are subjected to linguistic analysis & screened by a criterion defined as "semantic referentiality." The admissible proposals & theoretical problems of the sociology of law are thus identified & distinguished from technical, incorrect usage & pseudosociological problems. The models of L. N. Friedmann, Niklas Luhmann, & Jurgen Habermas are examined. A empirically defined concept of "legitimation judgment" is presented which expresses the deepest cultural bases of norm-related action, without resorting to generic, abstract, or collective concepts to define the object of that judgment. 31 References. Modified HA

88T4503

Polk, Kenneth (Criminology Dept U Melbourne, Parkville Victoria Australia 3052), When Less Means More: An Analysis of Destructuring in Criminal Justice, Crime and Delinquency, 1987, 33, 3, Jul, 358-378

¶ Stanley Cohen (Visions of Social Control, Cambridge Polity, 1987) recently proposed a wide-ranging analysis of the phenomenon of net-widening that has been the apparent result of attempts to reduce the scope of the formal criminal justice system through such procedures as decriminalization, diversion, & deinstitutionalization. A major premise of his analysis is that net-widening is an unintended consequence of broadly based & theoretically homogeneous "destructuring" movements. Here, it is argued that there were competing & contradictory perspectives regarding how the destructuring alternatives should be constituted. While an expansion of social control might be inconsistent with the intent of a small number of writers (primarily academics) arguing for alternatives to formal justice processing, the close examination conducted here of the theoretical premises of some of those who actually controlled such programs as diversion or deinstitutionalization suggests that net-widening is a direct consequence of how programs were initially conceived, rather than being a case of good ideas that "went astray" as they were implemented. 4 Tables, 17 References. HA

88T4504

Raes, Koen (State U Ghent, B-9000 Belgium), The Law and Its Crises: Peculiarities of the Flemish Case, International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 3, Aug, 333-355

¶ As yet, no tradition of critical legal studies has emerged in Flanders (Belgium). The reasons for this are explored on the basis of an examination of Flemish legal education. The influence of the law-shop movement & the emergence of legal scholarship influenced by Marxism are discussed, & the possibilities for further development of a critical approach are assessed. 2 Tables, 58 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4505

Raiteri, Monica (Facoltà Giurisprudenza Istit Filosofia & Sociologia Diritto U Genova, I-16126 Italy), Un nuovo manuale di statistica giudiziaria (A New Handbook of Judicial Statistics), Sociologia e Diritto, 1987, 14, 2, 149-158. (ITA)

¶ A review essay on Sebastiano Corrado's Statistica giudiziaria ((Judicial Statistics), Rimini, Italy: Maggioli, 1986 [see listing in IRI No. 42]). Corrado refers to his book as "open-structured," in that it co-policing primarily involved a change in the form of class control during the Progressive era. Using data on policing & arrest rates for Toronto, Ontario, from 1859 to 1955, the findings reveal that the focus of the police varied across different types of public order offenses revealing a sustained, but complex, pattern of class control 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 60 References. HA

88T4525

Brogden, Mike (Dept Social Studies Liverpool Polytechnic, L3 5UX England), An Act to Colonise the Internal Lands of the Islands: Empire and the Origins of the Professional Police, International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 2, May, 179-208

* Police histories in the UK are ethnocentric, failing to recognize the development of other forms of policing in continental Europe. They also fail to place the British model within the context of British imperial expansion in the nineteenth century. Many of the early colonial police forces were simply part of an imperial attempt to delegitimize indigenous institutions & incorporate the colonial society within the British Empire. Under imperial rule, local policing practices were either denounced by imperial trading companies & governors as illegitimate & inefficient & replaced by a British model, or reconstructed in a form compatible with colonial rule. Current examples of this practice can be found as recently as the Palestinian mandate. Understanding the colonizing function of early police work, it is possible to reconceptualize local British provincial practices. The history of policework in GB needs to be reconstructed to emphasize its role of legitimizing rule from London over disparate regions, at home & abroad. 59 References. Modified AA

88T4526

Brogden, Mike (Dept Social Studies Liverpool Polytechnic, L3 5UX England), The Emergence of the Police-The Colonial Dimension, British Journal of Criminology, 1987, 27, 1, winter, 4-14

* A contribution to the debate about the origins of professional policing in the nineteenth century. The different traditional explanations of police origins eg. as due to crime, riots, social disorganization, organizational diffusion, & more materialist factors—are summarized, & it is argued that such explanations fail in terms of evidence & confuse intentions with eventual functions. Here, it is argued that greater attention must be paid to the colonizing context of British institutional development. The analysis leads to a different picture of police origins, with much greater symmetry between Irish & London models than previously recognized. It is concluded that policing provides one way in which central rule is established & legitimized in provincial contexts. Thus, ideological incorporation may have been one of the major *raison d'être*s of the development & spread of professional policework. Modified AA

88T4527

Brown, Lee P., Innovative Policing in Houston, ♦ UM The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 494, Nov, 129-134

* It is argued that to address crime, the SE problems facing the Ur poor & minorities must be solved. As an initial step, society might become more responsive by refining the presently reactive role of police. In Houston, Tex, police beats have been redesigned to reflect natural boundaries & officers have been assigned to specific neighborhoods on a permanent basis. Through the Directed Area Responsibility Team program, officers learn as much as they can about their neighborhoods & meet with community leaders. A complementary innovation, Project Oasis, assumes that, in a bad neighborhood, residents are good people who must take responsibility for local improvement, building on supportive services from government. In these & other new strategies in Houston, the use of community resources is the umbrella under which all policing activities are conducted. HA

88T4528

Cohen, Ben-Zion (School Social Work U Haifa, 31999 Israel), The Response of the Justice System in Israel to the Rape of Tourists and of Israeli Women, ♦ UM International Journal of Offender Therapy and Comparative Criminology, 1986, 30, 3, Dec, 213-223

* A substantial proportion of the reported cases of forcible rape in Israel are committed against young F tourists. The media provide extended coverage of these cases & emphasize the severe punishments imposed on the offenders, implying that the justice system regards raping a tourist as a more heinous crime than raping a local F. Similar statements appear in judicial decisions. Reasons offered include damage to the state & to the tourist industry as well as to the victims. An analysis is presented of sentences passed on the 164 persons charged with forcible rape who were convicted in the Israeli courts between 1979 & 1981. Findings show that none of the variables with a significant impact on the severity of the sentence is directly related to the victim. 3 Tables, 28 References. HA

88T4529

Coyle, Andrew G. (Her Majesty's Prison, Greenock Scotland), The Management of Dangerous and Difficult Prisoners, Howard Journal of Criminal Justice, 1987, 26, 2, May, 139-154

† The problem of how to manage prisoners who refuse to conform to standard prison rules & regulations has received considerable attention recently, particularly in GB & in North America. Some of the strategies adopted in Canada & the US are described & contrasted with developments in Scotland. There should be a prior statement of the objective & any alternative unit for this type of prisoner, its regime should be clearly defined, a clear definition of what constitutes a difficult or dangerous prisoner should be agreed on, & the wider implications of managing this type of prisoner should be publicly appreciated. 14 References. HA

88T4530

Ditchfield, John & Duncan, David, The Prison Disciplinary System: Perceptions of its Fairness and Adequacy by Inmates, Staff and Members of Boards of Visitors, Howard Journal of Criminal Justice, 1987, 26, 2, May, 122-138.

† A research project undertaken in 1984 for the British Departmental Committee on the Prison System (the Prior Committee) sought to investigate how the prison disciplinary system in GB was perceived by its various protagonists—157 inmates, 93 officers, 28 governors, & 30 members of Boards of Visitors, in particular, focus was on whether they perceived it to be a fair system for dealing with disciplinary offenses, their view on how serious disciplinary offenses should be dealt with, the role of informal measures for maintaining discipline, & the adequacy of existing punishments. Interview data revealed common agreement that the fairness of the system depended greatly on the extent to which it allowed the offender to present his side of the case, but views diverged as to how much this was achieved in practice. Lack of adequate facilities & privileges in prisons has resulted in the disciplinary system being too reliant on the use of forfeiture of remission as a punishment. Any approach to the problem of control based simply on the removal of existing privilege cannot be regarded as realistic. 7 Tables, 7 References. Modified HA

88T4531

Donaldson, Clinton Lavonne (Wayne State U, Detroit MI 48202), Systematic Investigation of Police Discipline in the United States of America, Toronto, Canada, and London, England: A Sociological Inquiry, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1021-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714536.

88T4532

Donnermeyer, Joseph F & Mullen, Robert E. (Dept Agricultural Economics/Ru Sociology Ohio State U, Columbus 43210), Use of Neighbors for Crime Prevention: Evidence from a State-Wide Rural Victim Study, ♦ Journal of the Community Development Society, 1987, 18, 1, 15-29

† An examination of the manner in which Ru residents use neighbors for crime prevention on an informal basis, based on data derived from a state-wide victim survey of 891 Ru residents in Ohio in 1980. The results indicate that the most important predictors were neighborhood-level variables, including trust of neighbors, acquaintance with neighbors, visibility of the residence to neighbors, & the belief that watchful neighbors can reduce crime. Both fear of crime & use of personal/home security measures also were predictive of use of neighbors for crime prevention. Implications are discussed relative to the design of neighborhood watch-type programs by Ru law enforcement & community leaders. 3 Tables, 1 Appendix, 28 References. Modified HA

88T4533

Faugeron, Claude & Houchon, Guy (c/o Houchon-Unité Criminologie U Catholique Louvain, B-1348 Louvain-La-Neuve Belgium), Prison and the Penal System: From Penology to a Sociology of Penal Policies, International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 4 Nov, 393-422

Translated by J. R. Shepherd.

† This discussion of penal policy was originally published in French in L'Année sociologique (see SA 34:1/86Q3966).

88T4516

Thomson, Douglas R. & Ragone, Anthony J. (Dept Criminal Justice U Illinois, Chicago 60680), Popular Moderation versus Governmental Authoritarianism: An Interactionist View of Public Sentiments Toward Criminal Sanctions, Crime and Delinquency, 1987, 33, 3, July, 337-357.

¶ PO polls consistently highlight discontent with criminal court sentencing practices. Generally, Rs find courts to be too lenient. Although these findings are often used in political arguments as evidence of a cogent public desire for harsher sentencing, the conclusion is suspect. Since such surveys generally do not ask Rs to consider contingencies such as offense circumstances, behavioral content of various sentences, or fiscal cost differentials, conventional assessments of PO toward sentencing are deficient in two respects: (1) they do not simulate the decision-making task facing judges, & (2) they do not allow citizens to consider the relative fiscal costs of current & alternative sentencing practices. These two elements were incorporated to approximate an interactionist approach to the issue of public sentiments toward criminal sanctions. Results of a probability sample survey of 816 Ill adult residents reveal that, on several dimensions, the public is less vengeful than typically portrayed. Central findings concern public preferences for the sentencing of residential burglars. In particular, there is a strong preference for community sentences, yet a desire for a sanction stronger than straight probation. Such findings are noteworthy given the policy context of recent mandatory incarceration legislation for this offense, & provide evidence of a previously unremarked phenomenon of legislative sanction escalation far exceeding public preferences. 3 Tables, 50 References. Modified HA

88T4517

Tripathi, Shrish Mani (Dept Political Science DAV Postgraduate Coll, Azamgarh India), The Supreme Court for Indians: Spotlight on Public Interest Litigation, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 141-161.

¶ Throughout its existence, the Supreme Court of India has been the focus of controversy. Political issues are unavoidably involved in its decisions. In recent years the Court has emerged as a defender of the poor in India through the creation of public interest litigation, in which rules of legal standing inherited from Anglo-Saxon law are relaxed. The implications of this new development in the administration of justice are examined. 5 References. W. H. Stoddard Varga, Csaba, Macroszociológiai jogelmélet: a jogászvilágképtől a jog társadalomelméleté felé (Macrosociological Theories of Law: From the Juristic World Concept to a Social Science Conception of Law), Szociológia, 1983, 1-2, 53-78. (HUN)

88T4518

¶ Distinctive concerns of a macrosociological analysis of law are examined from a theoretical standpoint. There is no permanently distinctive nature of law apart from the total historical process of social evolution within which the distinction between law & what is not law takes on meaning. The juristic world concept is not merely false consciousness, but is the professional ideology of legal specialists within the modern state, modern formal law, & modern bureaucracy. Norms & values do not exist apart from society, & this applies as well to legal norms, law itself is a form of consciousness & a medium of social activity & can only be understood in sociological terms. Modified HA

88T4519

Yates, Alayne (Dept Psychiatry Health Sciences Center U Arizona Tucson 85724), Should Young Children Testify in Cases of Sexual Abuse?, The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1987, 144, 4, Apr, 476-480.

¶ Children as young as age 3 are testifying in cases of sexual abuse & molestation. Very young children can accurately recall emotionally charged, personally significant events; however, they demonstrate more errors of omission, difficulties with time & number of concepts, & occasional misinterpretations of others' actions. Also, children's testimony can be influenced by an overly authoritative or ingratiating attorney's stance, an attorney's preconceived notions, age-inappropriate questions, & the child's limited attention span. Children may be helped or harmed by testifying. The risk of further traumatization can be minimized through the judge's use of discretionary power, inclusion of professional trained in child development in the investigative & court process, & use of videotaping or one-way screens. 33 References. HA

88T4520

---, Yuridicheskaya nauka i praktika v usloviyakh perestroyki (Juridical Science and Practice during Economic Restructuring) Kommunist, 1987, 14, Sept, 42-50. (RUS)

¶ Contemporary Soviet juridical science cannot be assessed wholly favorably or unfavorably. Along with many positive achievements (new legal studies, contributions by sociologists, draft proposals for new laws) many obstacles to improvement of juridical science & its application remain. Such negative features include narrow treatment of legal concepts, overconcentration on the concept of the norm, & terminological hair splitting. In contrast to other periods of USSR history when legal sciences were undervalued, the current stage of economic restructuring offers chances for many qualitative improvements in this field to be introduced & implemented. G. Prostakov

53 police, penology, & correctional problems

88T4521

Adler, Freda (Graduate School Criminal Justice Rutgers U, Newark NJ 07102), Jails as a Repository for Former Mental Patients, International Journal of Offender Therapy and Comparative Criminology, 1986, 30, 3, Dec, 225-236.

¶ An exploration of population shifts between mental hospitals & the criminal justice system & the implications of the confinement of former mental patients in jails. Interview data collected from 339 inmates serving time in 3 NJ penal institutions (Ur, suburban, & Ru) show that 10.9% of this sample have a history of psychiatric hospitalization; the % of former mental patients in the general jail population is believed to be much larger. Analysis of descriptive case studies suggests that the deinstitutionalization movement, marked by stringent requirements for hospitalization in mental hospitals & less onerous criteria for fitness to be discharged, has created a socially marginal class of people who are increasingly becoming a burden on lock-ups & jails. 1 Figure, 44 References. Modified HA

88T4522

Allen, G. Frederick (US District Court, Room 1100 219 South Dearborn St Chicago IL 60604), Where Are We Going in Criminal Justice? Some Insights from the Chinese Criminal Justice System, International Journal of Offender Therapy and Comparative Criminology, 1987, 31, 2, Sept, 101-110.

¶ Concepts of formal & informal crime control mechanisms in the criminal justice system of the People's Republic of China as seen during a recent tour are discussed & contrasted with the US system. Focusing on the police, courts, & corrections, it is concluded that the Chinese emphasis on informal mechanisms may have implications for crime reduction programs in the West. A critical review of Western crime reduction strategies, modification of some approaches to rule enforcement, & reevaluation of the validity of present formal enforcement mechanisms may be useful. 3 References. Modified HA

88T4523

Berkey, Francine Rousselle (U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112), TI Farm: An Organizational Cultural Analysis of the Wyoming State Honor Farm, Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 484-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710982.

88T4524

Boritch, Helen & Hagan, John (Sociology Dept U Western Ontario London N6A 5C2), Crime and the Changing Forms of Class Control: Policing Public Order in "Toronto the Good," 1859-1955, Social Forces, 1987, 66, 2, Dec, 307-335.

¶ A critical examination of recent historical research which asserts that policing underwent a major transition from a class-control to a crime control model during the late nineteenth century. Here, a revised conception of class control is developed based on an expanded definition of public order offenses to test the alternative thesis that the major shift

88T4543

Kennedy, Edward M., Law Enforcement, Social Justice, and the Legacy of Milton Eisenhower, ♦UM The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 494, Nov, 135-138

† The new policy advocated by the Milton S. Eisenhower Foundation to prevent crime is well illustrated by the neighborhood, education, & employment opportunity extended to high-risk young people by the Dorchester Youth Collaborative in Boston, Mass. Such promising programs, along with other state & local initiatives, require far more resources than they are now receiving from Washington, DC. The challenges that lie ahead include: continued deinstitutionalization of status offenders, reform of a correctional system in which minority youth are assigned to public institutions & whites are placed in private facilities, & effective control of handguns. HA

88T4544

Levy, René & Ocquetau, Frédéric (CESDIP, Paris France), Police Performance and Fear of Crime: The Experience of the Left in France between 1981 and 1986, International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 3, Aug, 259-280
Translated by J. R. Shepherd.

† An examination of the role of the police in France as a society, focused on the policies of the current leftist government. Two police forces coexist in France, the police nationale, a mainly Ur organization, & the gendarmerie nationale, which operates primarily in Ru areas. Empirical research on their roles in combatting crime is reviewed, & some theoretical issues are examined. In 1985 a bill was introduced to modernize & professionalize police activities. This law, introduced by the Left, has been extended by the Right into an expansion of police powers, justified on the basis of the need to combat terrorism. 77 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4545

McWilliams, William (Instit Criminology U Cambridge, CB1 2JQ England), Probation, Pragmatism and Policy, Howard Journal of Criminal Justice, 1987, 26, 2, May, 97-121

† An examination of the position of & justifications for the English probation system in the modern period, in which penal policy has come to be dominated by a pragmatism that is both philosophical & practical in its penetration. It plots the effects on the service of the demise of confidence in the diagnostic ideal & the subsequent dominance of policy considerations, & it identifies three schools of thought in the probation service that have emerged in recent times: the managerial, radical, & personalist schools—& identifies their unifying ideological features. 3 Tables, 64 References. Modified HA

88T4546

Miller, William Watts (Dept Philosophy & Sociology U Bristol, BS8 1TH England), Party Politics, Class Interest and Reform of the Police, 1829-56, UM Police Studies, 1987, 10, 1, spring, 42-60

† The attempt to reform policing in the UK during the early nineteenth century was met with much opposition from members of Parliament, despite the apparent benefits of such reform for both the interests of the ruling class & the overall public good. Examination of the pattern of voting & debate surrounding various reform bills reveals that there was a strong case against the new police in terms of cost, efficiency, & the interpretation of criminal statistics, & valid concerns about their use in attacking local in favor of central government & in basing the social order more on coercion than consent. These issues were responsible for the voting of both the Right (Tories) & Left (Radicals) parties against police reform, support came instead from the middle ground. It is concluded that preconceptions about the role of class interests in this matter are inaccurate, since opinions of these differed; rather, disagreements reflected concerns over party politics & the different approaches underlying them. 4 Tables. Modified HA

88T4547

Pogrebin, Mark R. (Graduate School Public Affairs U Colorado, Denver 80202), Police Responses for Mental Health Assistance, ♦ Psychiatric Quarterly, 1986-87, 58, 1, spring, 66-73

† The police have become one of the primary referral agencies for psychiatric assistance in the community. They utilize certain factors that determine the decisions affecting case disposition for every mental health assistance call they receive. An investigation of the Denver, Colo, police department's mental health responses for the year 1985 based on examination of all 60 actual incident reports, analyzes the police officers' placement decisions for the mentally ill & the criteria for which such dispositions are made. 2 Tables. Modified HA

88T4548

Post, J. B., Crime in Later Medieval England: Some Historiographical Limitations, Continuity and Change, 1987, 2, 2, Aug, 211-224

† In recent years, enthusiastic attempts have been made to apply modern techniques of social analysis to crime & criminals of past centuries. Some of the problems with such approaches are demonstrated via a discussion of crime in GB between 1200 & 1500, with focus on problems in crime reporting & legal record keeping. A critical interpretation of a wide range of sources & legal reports, rather than simply the records of felonies heard in the principal royal courts, is needed. In addition, a skeptical reading of the sometimes elaborate statistical apparatus constructed on sparse & inconsistent data is urged. Modified HA

88T4549

Rake, Douglas E., Crime Control and Police-Community Relations: Cross-Cultural Comparison of Tokyo, Japan, and Santa Ana, California, ♦UM The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 494, Nov, 148-154

† Japan has the lowest crime rates in the industrialized world because of the lack of different, conflicting population groups, relative economic equality, racial homogeneity, pressure for individual conformity, & resilience of traditional values. Here, it is suggested that community-based policing with grass-roots accountability also contributes to lower crime rates in Japan. In the US, many police resist & resent such neighborhood-based accountability; an exception is in Santa Ana, Calif, where, since the 1970s, crime rates have been cut in half through proactive, rather than reactive, community-based policing, in which relations with citizens are much like those in Japan. Although cross-cultural transfer of crime reduction strategies must be carried out with caution, there does appear to be potential for further successful adaptation of Japanese-type police community partnerships in US cities. Modified HA

88T4550

Schroeder, Donald Joseph (City U New York, NY 10021), An Investigation of the Value of Police-Related Research, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Science, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 753-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713793.

88T4551

Shapland, Joanna & Vagg, Jon (Centre Criminological Research, Oxford, OX1 2JD England), Using the Police, British Journal of Criminology, 1987, 27, 1, winter, 54-63

† The contribution of ordinary residents & business people to the policing of their area has been minimized in recent years through a focus on professional police action & "ownership" of crime & disorder. Here, residents, attitudes, & street life in both Ur & Ru areas of a Midland county of England are examined, based on data collected 1983-1985 via interviews (Σ N = 141 residents & 53 police officers) & analysis of crime reports & public requests for police action. People in all areas were engaged in watching for anything suspicious or problematic in the form of damage, the doings of teenagers, crime, noise, etc. This watching & action were, however, very localized; also, in the Ur areas, fewer such informal resources were available. The police were called on in two circumstances, when people were victimized by incidents of "real crime" (e.g. burglary, sexual assault, wounding, robbery, arson) & when they could not cope with other incidents. The police were also expected to receive information about problems & collate it, & to provide a visible reminder of order on the streets. It is argued that, currently, policing & public perceptions are not in accord, & that policing is being carried out essentially separately by police & public. The problems of closer cooperation between police & public are considered. Modified AA

88T4552

Southgate, Peter, Behaviour in Police-Public Encounters, Howard Journal of Criminal Justice, 1987, 26, 2, May, 153-163.

† Field observation data on 981 encounters in British cities between 14 uniformed police officers & members of the public are presented to throw more light on the nature of behavior in such encounters, & to provide material for the development of police training in human skills. How participants behave toward each other & whether this reflects the behavior of the other party, the nature of the encounter, & the role of the citizen involved are examined. The great majority of contacts are shown

88T4534

Fiddling, Nigel G. (Dept Sociology U Surrey, GU2 5XH England). Being Used by the Police, British Journal of Criminology, 1987, 27, 1, winter, 64-69.

¶ In "Using the Police," Joanna Shapland & Jon Vagg (see abstract in this section) utilize PO survey data to argue that much of what the police presently do could be done by citizens, & could be facilitated by closer police/public cooperation. Here, these assertions are challenged on the basis that the matters with which people reported they were prepared to help police were low seriousness offenses & order maintenance problems, also, recent British surveys & ethnographic studies of routine policing indicate that police would be reluctant to engage in greater cooperation with citizens to deal with these problems. In addition, if the police were to act more often on the suspicions of those most likely to cooperate, there would be an increase in street stops of ethnic minorities & other underprivileged groups, with a potential to aggravate problems of civil disorder. It is concluded that if closer police/public cooperation is to occur, the regard that patrol officers have for the value of information they can gain from citizens must be increased. This goal could be achieved by playing on the rivalry between patrol officers & detectives, & encouraging greater public contact as a way of counteracting the boredom of patrol. Modified AA

88T4535

Foster, D. H., Sandler, D. & Davis, D. M. (Instit Criminology U Cape Town, Rosebank 7700 South Africa). Detention, Torture and the Criminal Justice Process in South Africa, International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 2, May, 105-120

¶ Based on interview data from 175 former security law detainees in South Africa, details are given of their claims of physical & psychological torture. Findings suggest that both physical & psychological abuse are common experiences among detainees held under "interrogation" sections of South African security law. Commentary is provided in relation to certain statements about the criminal justice process. 4 Tables, 8 References. Modified AA

88T4536

Friedmann, Robert R. (Georgia State U, Atlanta 30303). The Neighborhood Police Officer and Social Service Agencies in Israel: A Working Model for Cooperation, U Police Studies, 1986, 9, 4, winter, 175-183

¶ The development of a model for cooperation between neighborhood police officers & social workers in social service agencies in Israel is described; it utilizes guidelines suggested by Harvey Treger ("Police Social Work Cooperation: Problems and Issues," Social Casework, 1981, 62(7), 426-433). The uniqueness of the Israeli model is twofold: (1) neighborhood police officers focus more on noncriminal community matters & thus are involved in "uniformed social work" more than their peers elsewhere; (2) there is a written contract between the two agencies, including operative steps for improving cooperation between the professionals in the respective agencies, as well as an ethical clause to maintain exchange of information. The model emerged to accommodate the decision by the Israel police to deploy neighborhood police officers to better reach the community, & as a result of studies reporting the positive impact of this new role on the community & police officers. The U provided a natural background for materializing this cooperative model through serving as an intermediary between the two agencies. Initial assessments of the setting are very encouraging. 2 Figures, 23 References. HA

88T4537

Gardner, Martin R. (U Nebraska, Lincoln 68583-0902). Punitive Juvenile Justice: Some Observations on a Recent Trend, International Journal of Law and Psychiatry, 1987, 10, 2, 121-151

¶ An examination of the emergence of the punitive model of juvenile justice in the US, which, by the mid-1970s, had largely replaced the earlier emphasis on rehabilitation. It is shown how the demise of the notion of parens patriae (ie, the theoretical justification for coercive court commitments for both criminal & neglected children), the rebirth of retribution, changing views of children's responsibilities, & rising rates of juvenile crime all contributed to this shift. Justifications for the punitive model are summarized along with some concerns that it has prompted, particularly the need for assurances that punishment is just & that essential procedural protections are followed. Arguments are presented in defense of maintaining the juvenile justice system in its punitive form separate from the adult criminal system. K. Hyatt

88T4538

Garland, D. (U Edinburgh, EH8 9YL Scotland). The Punitive Mentality: Its Socio-Historic Development and Decline, Contemporary Crises, 1986, 10, 3, 305-320.

¶ A review essay on a book by Pieter Spierenburg, The Spectacle of Suffering (Cambridge: Cambridge U Press, 1984 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). The development & decline of public executions in Europe from the twelfth through nineteenth centuries are traced from a sociological as well as historiographic perspective. Drawing on extensive archival research & evidence from the published literature in several languages, current sociologies of punishment are criticized & a new approach is offered in which penal change is interpreted as a function of changes in public sensibilities & social relations. An in-depth case study is presented of the situation in Amsterdam, the Netherlands, between 1650 & 1750. 10 References. K. Hyatt

88T4539

Gibbons, Don C. (Dept Sociology Portland State U, Oregon 97207). Correctional Treatment and Intervention Theory: Bringing Sociology and Criminology Back In, U International Journal of Offender Therapy and Comparative Criminology, 1986, 30, 3, Dec, 255-271.

¶ A discussion of the close ties between sociology & criminology, on the one hand, & correctional treatment, on the other, that existed between 1900 & 1950 in the US, which was followed in the 1960s & 1970s by an attitude of "nothing works." Many of the weaknesses & strengths of sociologically based treatment theory in corrections are illuminated, drawing largely on the ideas expressed in Changing the Lawbreaker (Gibbons, Don C. [see SA 14 2-3/66B9912]). Two major conclusions are warranted: diagnostic typologies have failed to reflect the diversity of offender behavior, & correctional theorizing by sociological criminologists has been unduly optimistic. At the same time, the "nothing works" or punitive approach to lawbreakers is also flawed. Reaffirmation of rehabilitation is called for, & some new directions for correctional treatment based on criminological knowledge, are explored. 1 Appendix, 51 References. Modified HA

88T4540

Grennan, Sean Anthony (City U New York, NY 10021). The Role of Officer Gender during Violent Confrontations with Citizens, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 752-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713762.

88T4541

Jefferson, Tony (Centre Criminological & Socio-Legal Studies U Sheffield, S10 2TN England). Beyond Paramilitarism, British Journal of Criminology, 1987, 27, 1, winter, 47-53.

¶ P. A. J. Waddington's analysis of paramilitary policing in GB (see abstract in this section) is criticized for being based on flawed notions of impartiality & restraint & an abstract conception of what this form of policing actually entails. It is argued that the idea of police impartially upholding the law is based on fictitious beliefs, & that the partial policing of public order is inevitable. The notions of "restraint" & "legitimacy" in the use of police force are shown to be conditional & dependent on majority definition. After situating policing within its organizational, legal, & public contexts, the feasibility of paramilitary policing is rejected. It is demonstrated that such policing has an innate capacity to exacerbate violence in public order events. K. Hyatt

88T4542

Jones, Sandra & Levi, Michael (Centre Study Community & Race Relations Brunel U, Uxbridge Middlesex UB8 3PH England). Law and Order and the Causes of Crime: Some Police and Public Perspectives, Howard Journal of Criminal Justice, 1987, 26, 1, Feb, 1-14.

¶ The degree of congruence among the public & between the police & the public attitudes toward law & order has been a matter of considerable debate in England & Wales. Survey data gathered in 1981 from police officers (N = 299) & the public (N = 768) in northern & southern areas of England & a review of research on this topic are presented, & police & public views about crime causation as a reflection of ideological "domain assumptions" about the nature of offending are discussed. It is concluded that although there are broad similarities in perspective between police & public, this homogeneity begins to break down when the data are disaggregated at a local level. The revival of a purely reactive model of policing as an ideal type for the inner city is questioned. 1 Table. 29 References. HA

1700 sociology of science

34 sociology of science

88T4558

Blakey, Michael L. (Howard U, Washington DC 20059), Skull Doctors: Intrinsic Social and Political Bias in the History of American Physical Anthropology. With Special Reference to the Work of Aleš Hrdlička, Critique of Anthropology, 1987, 7, 2, autumn, 7-35.

* Prior to WWII, research in physical anthropology functioned within its social & political context to produce an inegalitarian ideology. Aleš Hrdlička (1869-1943) held a prominent place in these developments. Subsequent contextual changes (not simply hypothesis testing) produced epistemological changes. Although the field has been liberalized, many of the research interests & beliefs regarding the concept of race of the prewar period remained for reasons having little to do with analytical efficacy. The continuing emphasis placed on naturalistic explanation in general is shown in continuity with the apologetic politics of prewar anthropology. Yet, its promise for political application has diminished. Alternatives with broader application exist in social scientific approaches to comparative human biology, but social constraints on the field limit the focus of physical anthropology to natural history. Moreover, it is shown that socioscientific articulation is intrinsic to the process of scientific discovery & change. 72 References. HA

88T4559

Braun, T., Glanzel, W. & Schubert, A. (Information Science & Scientometric Research Unit Library Hungarian Academy Sciences, PO Box 7 H-1361 Budapest), One More Version of the Facts and Figures on Publication Output and Relative Citation Impact of 107 Countries 1978-1980, Scientometrics, 1987, 11, 1-2, Jan, 9-15

* An analysis of comparative scientific publication rates in 107 nations, based on the Science Citation Index for 1978-1980. Estimates are given for total output, % of annual change in output, citation rate per publication (observed & expected), & relative citation rate. 5 Tables. W. H. Stoddard

88T4560

Cinti, Patrizia, Ricerche nella scienza (Research in Science), Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 127-133. (ITA)

* Various reflections are offered concerning the variety of organizations related to scientific work. The guiding hypothesis is that this type of work activity must be analyzed using the concepts & instruments of general sociology. The discussion examines the process & product of scientific work, & the internal & external links that condition organizational choices, ie, factors within the scientific community, & aspects of its relationship with society in general. It is concluded that, in studying scientific work, an important analytic category is the variable degree of theoretical & technical uncertainty. Modified HA

88T4561

Collins, H. M. (U Bath, Claverton Down BA2 7AY England), Classifying Rule-Based Expert Systems, ♦ Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 57-67

* Rule-based expert systems attempt to model human decision making with trees of rules. It is argued that this procedure cannot resemble human decision making; examples from several spheres of human activity show that the trees of rules needed to simulate them would be infinitely long. Thus, expert systems cannot be expected to approach human capabilities asymptotically, but will continue to need assistance from human end users. However, the concept of an infinitely long rules tree provides a useful model of expertise that leads to a classification system for expert systems. 3 Figures, 5 References. Modified HA

88T4562

Collins, H. M. (U Bath, Claverton Down BA2 7AY England), Pumps, Rock and Reality, U The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 4, Nov, 819-828

* A review essay on books by Martin J. S. Rudwick, The Great Devonian Controversy: The Shaping of Scientific Knowledge among Gentlemanly Specialists (London: U of Chicago Press, 1985); & Steven Shapin & Simon Schaffer, Leviathan and the Air-Pump: Hobbes, Boyle, and the Experimental Life (Princeton: Princeton U Press, 1985 [see listings in IRI No. 42]). These books share a sociological perspective on the history of science, one that is informed by relativism & constructivism. Rudwick discusses issues in nineteenth-century geology & paleontology; Shapin & Schaffer discuss the creation of the vacuum pump by Robert Boyle. Boyle's controversies with Thomas Hobbes. The problems of their positions in the controversy between realism & constructivism are examined. 3 References. Modified HA

88T4563

Dixon, Bernard (81 Falmouth Rd, Chelmsford Essex CM1 5J England), Books and Films: Powerful Media for Science Popularization, ♦ U Impact of Science on Society, 1986, 36, 4(14), 379-385.

* The power of books & films in science popularization is often underrated. Yet many examples attest to the strength of these media in influencing public attitudes to science & technology. From the first propaganda films designed to educate an unsophisticated public in rules of health to the most recent ones dealing with the dangers of nuclear power plant & genetic engineering, movies in particular have proved themselves force to be reckoned with in shaping PO. 11 References. HA

88T4564

Doreian, P. (Dept Sociology U Pittsburgh, PA 15260), A Revised Measure of Standing of Journals in Stratified Network, Scientometrics, 1987, 11, 1-2, Jan, 71-80

* A modified index of journal standing in a stratified journal-to-journal citation network is proposed. The original index (see SA 34:4/85Q8454) generated through input-output analysis, is used as the first step of an iterative procedure that converges on the new index, which is an eigenvector of the inverted matrix used in the input-output analysis. This index has improved validity & distributional properties. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Reference. Modified HA

88T4565

Dunwoody, Sharon & Ryan, Michael (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), The Credible Scientific Source, ♦ Journalism Quarterly, 1987, 64, 1, spring, 21-27.

* An assessment of the use of scientists as sources of media information seeking to determine why journalists do not always select credible sources. Questionnaire data from 287 scientists are analyzed to determine how frequently opinions that were outside the scientist's area of expertise were solicited by journalists. Results indicate that 33% of Rs have been asked questions outside their research area, indicating that journalists are using credibility criteria that differ from those utilized within the scientific community. 2 Tables. Modified AA

88T4566

Dyer, I. (U Aston, Birmingham B4 7ET England), The Role of Science in Policy Making, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International. C: European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 480.

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T4567

Faruqi, Akhtar Mahmud (46-F/6 PECH Society, Karachi 290 Pakistan), Science and Technology: The Third World's Dilemma, ♦ U Impact of Science on Society, 1986, 36, 1(141), 3-14.

* At present, the Third World lags behind the industrialized nations in science & technology. The possibility that this pattern will be reversed or at least that scientific & technological development will be equalized is explored in historical perspective. It is emphasized that science originated outside of the West, though with the Renaissance it became a primarily Western domain. At present, most Third World countries have few science students & lack the resources to improve scientific education & research. Common problems include: bureaucratic highhandedness; lack of implementation; faulty career patterns; educational weakness; industrial research inadequacies; inadequacies in the connection of basic be routine & mundane affairs, with dissatisfaction, rudeness, or conflict being quite rare. Various issues are raised bearing on policy, training, & future research. 3 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA

88T4553

Styles, John (School Humanities & Social Sciences U Bath, Claverton Down BA2 7AY England). The Emergence of the Police—Explaining Police Reform in Eighteenth and Nineteenth Century England, British Journal of Criminology, 1987, 27, 1, winter, 15-22.

¶ Issue is taken with some aspects of Mike Brogden's analysis (see abstract in this section) of the emergence & character of the "new" police in GB during the early nineteenth century, particularly his definitions of the terms "police" & "policing" & his understanding of the linkages between the history of policing in GB & in other countries. A comparative analysis is presented of these "new" police & their late eighteenth-century predecessors, & the chronology & characteristics of the emergence of police innovation in GB are compared to developments in other European countries. The wider administrative, institutional, & policy-forming contexts in which these events took place are explored. K. Hyatt

88T4554

Sylvester, Sherry, Crime Prevention and Criminal Justice: In Search of a Silver Bullet, ♦ UM The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 494, Nov, 119-128

¶ Current criminal justice policy in the US costs billions of dollars annually & provides little in return but despair. Ultimately, neighborhoods, jobs, & families must serve as the foundation for reform of policing methods, court processes, sentencing, & corrections. Modified HA

88T4555

Waddington, P. A. J. (Dept Sociology U Reading, RG6 2AH England). Towards Paramilitarism? Dilemmas in Policing Civil Disorder, British Journal of Criminology, 1987, 27, 1, winter, 37-46

¶ The policing of civil disorder challenges the twin bases of British police legitimacy—impartiality & restrained use of force. Containing political protest within constitutional boundaries can give the impression that police are defending the injustices about which protestors complain. Maintaining public order against a crowd reveals the police for what they ultimately are, a coercive force. The acquisition of paramilitary equipment & tactics in response to growing civil disorder poses a threat to the traditional British police advantage. However, despite its dangers, paramilitarism does allow a measure of direction & control to be exercised over disciplined units, which is not possible using more traditional methods. AA

88T4556

Ward, Tony & Benn, Melissa, Were the Police Ever Innocent?, U New Society, 1987, 80, 1277, 19 June, 14-16.

¶ Serious doubt is cast on the nostalgic belief that there was a "golden age" of policing in GB in the 1950s as epitomized by the TV policeman "Dixon of Dock Green." Sparse social science accounts exist, but data from miscellaneous fictional & autobiographical sources & impressionistic social criticism indicate that there was a high point of police legitimacy during this period. However, the image of the police held by the minorities who experienced harassment & illegal activities firsthand—the blacks, homosexual Ms, & prostitutes—is quite different from that held by those who gained their impressions from media accounts. 3 Photographs, 4 References. K. Hyatt

88T4557

Zimmer, Lynn (State U New York Coll, Geneseo 14454). How Women Reshape the Prison Guard Role, ♦ Gender & Society, 1987, 1, 4, Dec, 415-431.

¶ Innovative job performance strategies used by women who work as guards in men's prisons are explored using interview data obtained from 70 F guards in NY & RI, as well as from prison administrators, supervisors, M guards, & prisoners (N not provided). Results suggest that F guards perform their jobs differently than M guards due to structural & discriminatory barriers as well as prior experiences, skills, & abilities that they bring to the job. Women often fail to receive positive performance evaluations because they are being judged on how well their work behavior matches that of Ms doing the same work. It is argued that the different approaches used by women should be valued for their uniqueness; their impact on the prisons & the job of guarding are discussed. 71 References. Modified HA Ethics and Rationality of Techno-Science, ♦ Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 155-165.

¶ A discussion of the ethics of technoscientific activities, focusing on the emerging systemic paradigm & the manner in which this paradigm is becoming central to the identification of theories of rationality. A brief review of science, technology, & ethics is presented that examines the fundamental axiomatic changes intrinsic to the passage of science & technology from a mechanistic to a systemic paradigm. Certain ethical concerns are also illustrated. It is concluded that modern technoscientific societies constitute a novel & highly complex emergent system that requires the development of an appropriate theory of rationality. 34 References AA

88T4578

List, Elisabeth (U Graz, A-8010 Austria), Reclaiming an Undivided Human Reason, ♦ Praxis International, 1986, 6, 3, Oct, 382-390

¶ A review of two recent works by Evelyn Fox Keller Gender and Science (New Haven: Yale U Press, 1985) & A Feeling for the Organism: The Life and Work of Barbara McClintock (New York: W. H. Freeman, 1984 [see listings in IRPS No. 42]). Both works apply ideas derived from recognition of the genderization of science to the career of biologist Barbara McClintock. Keller points out the omnipresence in Western intellectual history of images of knowledge based on sexuality. The psychodynamics of the scientific mind, in her view, must be understood against the cultural background of masculinism. Keller's arguments for a critical philosophy of science, which draw on the ideas of recent philosophers of science, lead to a questioning of this masculinism, though one that should not be oversimplified into feminist science. W. H. Stoddard

88T4579

Lizón Ramón, María de los Angeles (Facultad Ciencias Políticas y Sociales U Nacional Autónoma México, 04510 México DF), Una crítica a la concepción clásica de las teorías científicas: J. D. Sneed y los estructuralistas (A Critique of the Classical Conception of Scientific Theories: J. D. Sneed and the Structuralists), ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 87-107. (SPA)

¶ A review of the different analytical conceptions concerning the structure of scientific theories. The basic positions of J. D. Sneed (eg. The Logical Structure of Mathematical Physics, Dordrecht, 1971) & his school are examined in relation to notions of theory & theoryicity & the consequences of the inclusion of intra- & intertheoretical levels in the analysis of scientific theory. The logical-empirical conception of theories is critiqued, & an alternative offered. Recent developments in philosophy & science & some metascientific reflections are introduced into the sociological debate. 22 References C. Waters

88T4580

Mahoney, Michael J. (Dept Education U California, Santa Barbara 93106), Scientific Publication and Knowledge Politics, ♦ Journal of Social Behavior and Personality, 1987, 2, 2(1), May, 165-176

¶ The relationships between scientific publication & the politics of knowledge are outlined & discussed. After a brief history of scientific publication, research on factors influencing the acceptance of manuscripts is reviewed. It is argued that many current policies related to publication & the employment/promotion of academic scientists may actually be counterproductive. The scientific journal has transcended its original function of information exchange & is now a central influence on directions & methods of scientific inquiry. 41 References HA

88T4581

Markle, Gerald E. & Chubin, Daryl E. (Western Michigan U, Kalamazoo 49008), Consensus Development in Biomedicine: The Liver Transplant Controversy, The Milbank Quarterly, 1987, 65, 1, 1-24

¶ Controversies in biomedical science are seen by some as essential to progress; most policymakers, however, find them politically disruptive. The consensus development (CD) program was initiated by the National Instts of Health to adjudicate between these views. By focusing on the liver transplantation conference, the CD program is characterized as a mechanism of social control to contain rather than to resolve controversy. This public performance has the trappings of democratic theater, but also the unmistakable mark of backstage politics. 21 References HA

88T4582

Meadows, Jack (History & Information Studies Dept Loughborough U Technology, Leicester LE11 3TU England), The Growth of Science

Popularization: A Historical Sketch, ♦ Impact of Science on Society, 1986, 36, 4(144), 341-346.

¶ The need to popularize science arose toward the end of the seventeenth century, when the emergence of a quantitative, mathematical approach to knowledge of the physical world left behind the majority of readers. Early readers of popularized accounts were easily fooled by unscrupulous writers. Science fiction later played a part, as did science lectures. The space race & the spread of TV have made more recent contributions. This thumbnail historical review of science popularization raises questions about some current media assumptions. HA

88T4583

Milic, Vojin (Faculty Philosophy U Belgrade, YU-11001 6 Yugoslavia), Sociology of Science and Science Policy, ♦ Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 141-154

¶ The interrelations between the sociology of science (SofS) & science policy (SP) are rather complex & should be approached in a comprehensive way. (1) SP, as one of the most important mediating links between social conditions & both the organization & activities of science, should be one of the permanent main topics of the SofS. (2) Trying to develop more adequate & reliable methods for the analysis of the state of science, & for the evaluation of its results, SofS might be of great help both to the general public & to the policymakers in the elaboration of SP. (3) By its rational & objective approach to science, SofS should be a barrier not only against uncritical glorification of science & its apologetic abuses but also against its ultraconservative or nihilistic rejections. (4) Of particular concern for SP are the thorough analyses of the uses & applications of scientific principles & knowledge in various professional & social activities. (5) Only a steadily developing & intellectually autonomous SofS might be truly helpful to a progressive SP. AA

88T4584

Mullins, Nicholas C. (Dept Sociology Virginia Polytechnic Instt, Blacksburg 24060), Evaluating Research Programs: Measurement and Data Sources, Science and Public Policy (SPP), 1987, 14, 2, Apr, 91-98

¶ Administrators can evaluate a scientific research program or the funding pattern of a research funding program at many different levels of completeness & sophistication. Also, the criteria for research evaluation may be more important, & more difficult to establish, than actual evaluation. Large projects, because of their high fiscal visibility, attract intensive reviews, while evaluations of smaller projects tend to address specific questions, such as cost effectiveness & applicability to program goals. Different sources of review information are needed for different types of evaluation; a routine annual report may depend on a review committee while a program review might require many other data sources. Publications, citations, & work group, both for the groups to be evaluated & comparable groups, must be established. Sources of information & the composition of comparable research groups are reported. 5 Tables Modified AA

88T4585

Narin, Francis (CHI Research/Computer Horizons Inc, 10 White Horse Pike Haddon Heights NJ 08035), Bibliometric Techniques in the Evaluation of Research Programs, Science and Public Policy (SPP), 1987, 14, 2, Apr, 99-106

¶ An examination of "evaluative bibliometrics" the use of publication & citation analysis in the evaluation of scientific activity, particularly biomedical research. Based on the assumptions that (1) publications are legitimate indicators of research productivity, & (2) citations to scientific papers are legitimate indicators of their quality or impact, some bibliometric techniques used in evaluation are reviewed. Specific illustrations are provided of its use in tracing the origins of research advances, assessing funding mechanisms, & evaluating the research performance of the National Instt of Health's intra- & extramural programs. Some minor limitations of evaluative bibliometrics are addressed. 3 Tables, 4 Figure K Hyatt

88T4586

Nickles, Thomas (U Nevada, Reno 89557), The Reconstruction of Scientific Knowledge, ♦ Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1, Jan-Dec, 91-104

¶ A program of social construction of scientific knowledge by reconstruction is suggested that would examine the social processes by which scientists themselves reconstruct previous work in the field & for what purposes. That considerable reconstruction does normally occur betw

Applied research; the brain drain; & lack of international support. Commercial interests restrict the diffusion of technology to the Third World, though the growth of Third World multinational corporations may resolve this problem eventually. W. H. Stoddard

88T4568

Gajbhiye, Hemchandra (Central Instit Cotton Research, Post Bag 125 GPO Nagpur 400001 India), Selection of Research Problem in Agricultural Sciences: An Organizational Context, ♦ Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 105-113

† A revised version of SA 34:3/86S17889/ISA/1986/4470

88T4569

Goldsmith, Maurice (International Science Policy Foundation, 29 Craven St London WC2N 5NT England), The Science of Science, Science and Public Policy (SPP), 1987, 14, 1, Feb, 12-18

† Twenty years ago, the science of science was new, as was the Science of Science Foundation. A generalized body of knowledge was being sought about science in terms of its historical, philosophical, social, & technological aspects. The climate was right for a science of science to exist: contemporary science had sufficient volume & variety to allow statistical examinations, there was a body of case histories, science was carried out in different cultural environments; & science was in an exciting state of change. The science of science is involved in the political & economic framework of research & development decision making, which should help to define the correct ratio between basic & applied research. 2 Tables, 12 References. HA

88T4570

Goonatilake, Susantha, Transfer Systems in Science and Technology and Indigenous Intellectual Initiatives, ♦ Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 9-25

† The common view of science & technology reflects the nineteenth century, a period of unquestioned European dominance in the world. Three major factors: historical changes, intermediate level changes, & the immediate social setting of research, have given European science a distinctive social epistemology. In recent years, growing recognition has been given to the achievements of non-European, especially Asian, societies in the natural sciences, reshaping the existing picture of scientific research. Asian science reflects different social epistemologies than those of the West. The creativity of Third World science requires preservation of these epistemologies, though the best means of doing this are uncertain. Possible contributions of South Asian epistemologies, in particular, to current scientific problems of the West, are noted. 28 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4571

Gray, Denis, Johnson, Elmira C. & Gidley, Teresa R. (Psychology Dept North Carolina State U, Raleigh 27650), Industry-University Projects and Centers: An Empirical Comparison of Two Federally Funded Models of Cooperative Science, Evaluation Review, 1986, 10, 6, Dec, 776-793

† It is widely held that improved industry-U (I-U) cooperation can contribute to technological innovation & productivity in the US. Here, two federally funded programs designed to foster cooperative science are evaluated & compared. Among other findings, results indicate that participants in I-U projects perceive applied objectives (eg, patent development) as the most important goal of their collaboration, whereas I-U centers promote a more basic goal of knowledge expansion. Participants within each model exhibit high agreement on the goals of their collaboration. Both programs appear to stimulate new research projects in corporate laboratories. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 15 References. HA

88T4572

Grigoryan, Ashot T. (Inst Hist Natl Sciences & Technology Academy Sciences, Staropansky per 1/5, Moscow USSR), Mikhail Vasilyevich Lomonosov: "He Was Our First University", ♦ Impact of Science on Society, 1986, 36, 4(144), 399-408

† From illiterate son of a fisherman to founder of his country's first U: this is the story of the Russian scientist & man of letters Mikhail Vasilyevich Lomonosov. A brilliant theoretician & researcher, & at the same time a renaissance man whose knowledge was so broad it seemed limitless, Lomonosov is a major figure in the development of science. Here, 275 years after his birth, Lomonosov's remarkable life & work are described. HA

88T4573

Griliches, Zvi (National Bureau Economic Research Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138), R & D and Productivity: Measurement Issues and Econometric Results, IM Science, 1987, 237, 4810, 3 July, 31-35.

† The direct successes of space, defense, & health research are not reflected in the national productivity accounts. Nor are many of the improvements in technologically complex new products. Econometric studies underestimate, therefore, the full contribution of research & development (R&D), especially since it is difficult to trace its spillover effects. Nevertheless, a recent study of about 1,000 of the largest US manufacturing firms, based on unpublished R&D data collected by the US Census Bureau, 1957-1977, finds a significant contribution of R&D to productivity growth in these corporations, with no evidence of a major decline in R&D, & a larger role for basic research & a smaller one for federally financed R&D expenditures than those implied by their relative importance in total R&D expenditures. 2 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T4574

Guthrie, William (Appalachian State U, Boone NC 28608), The Roles in Intellectual Pedigrees in Economic Science, The American Journal of Economics and Sociology, 1987, 46, 1, Jan, 49-60.

† Intellectual pedigrees, ie, reviews of the intellectual history of a theory, perform important functions in economic science. The discipline of economics comprises numerous, competing paradigm-schools, & both "normal" & "revolutionary" science occur continuously in economics. In normal science, pedigrees place current work in the context of an on-going research program, demonstrate the significance of that work, influence the process of theory appraisal, & aid in establishing professional consensus. The revolutionary functions of pedigrees are illustrated by John Maynard Keynes's The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money (1936): they establish the identity, legitimacy, relevancy, & authority of one school of economists & seek to persuade nonmembers to convert their allegiance to its disciplinary matrix. HA

88T4575

Hannerz, Ulf (Socialantropologiska Institut, S-106 91 Stockholm Sweden), Anthropology's Other Press: Training Ground, Playground Underground, Current Anthropology, 1987, 28, 2, Apr, 214-219

† An overview of the alternative press in anthropology, ie, those irregularly produced, smaller publications that exist apart from the mainstream journals. Though characterized by frequent changes in style & editorial policy/design, these journals persevere in an attempt to encourage publication by graduate students & junior professionals, as well as full-fledged professionals who wish to publish minor writings in less pretentious outlets. In addition, they aim to promote socialization among anthropologists. Their sources of publication, orientation, content, & common themes are summarized, & it is concluded that they do not represent an oppositional voice to mainstream anthropology. 4 References. K. Hyatt

88T4576

Horowitz, Irving Louis (Dept Sociology Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903), Limits of Standardization in Scholarly Journals, ♦ Scholarly Publishing, 1987, 18, 2, Jan, 125-130

† Focus is on how the evolution of journal publication, & its concentration in the hands of only a handful of publishing consortia create strong pressures toward uniformity & standardization. The limits of standardization are defined, & the continuing need for diversification is demonstrated. The limits of standardization are described as a function of ten factors: journal differences in frequency, market-size, & research area; the relation between market demand, levels of technical innovation, & price asked; format & frequency; presentation & number of graphs/charts, & numerical characteristics; the role of professional associations in setting style; the emergence of different & mutually exclusive style manuals; aesthetic demands of editors, authors, & the professional community; scholarly expectations of what a journal in a particular area should look like; the characteristics of a journal's own unique history; & contract requirements. It is concluded that issues of standardization & diversification are less matters of either/or, than they are of both/&. Each journal develops its own style, which possesses a commodity value & a marketplace function of its own. Modified AA

88T4577

Levy, Ron (Ecole dessin industriel U Montréal, Quebec H36 3J7).

† The implications of the editorial bias of academic journals for the selection of articles with apparently statistically significant findings—which will occur by chance in a certain fraction of empirical investigations—are widely recognized but largely ignored. Few worry about the incentives the publishing bias presents to researchers for empirical abuse that brings into question the basis of social science knowledge. One possible solution, desirable but probably impractical, is to review articles with statistical results & conclusions omitted. Another, more practical, approach is to guarantee journal space for replication of previously published research. Finally, editors should take greater care in warning readers about findings that implicitly make unfounded statistical claims. 10 References. Modified HA

ences. Modified HA

88T4596

Yearley, Steven (Queen's U, Belfast BT7 1NN Northern Ireland). Precambrian Studies as Interdisciplinary Science. ♦ Philosophy & Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 79-89

† The sociology of interdisciplinary basic science is examined, based on interviews with leading figures in Precambrian studies (N not provided). Sociological literature on the formation of scientific specialties is used to contrast interdisciplinary work with customary basic science. The characteristic problems that face interdisciplinary scientists in the course of their research work are reviewed. 23 References. AA

72 sociology of technology

88T4597

Adler, Paul S. (Stanford U, CA 94305). Automation et qualifications. Nouvelles orientations (Automation and Job Qualifications. New Trends). ♦ U Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 3, 289-303 (FRE). Translated by Anne Autrand.

† Problems related to the use of new technologies in the workplace are discussed. After summarizing major theses of the past thirty years concerning trends in job qualifications, recent research in Europe & in the US on the qualifications required for applying new technologies is reviewed. Some new ways of conceiving of the relationship between automation & job qualifications are suggested. Implications for public policy & for the engineers who design new systems are discussed. 1 Table, 37 References. Modified HA

88T4598

Angus, Ian H. & Cook, Peter G. (Dept Communication U Massachusetts, Amherst 01003). Nuclear Technology as Ideology. ♦ Canadian Journal of Political and Social Theory/Revue canadienne de théorie politique et sociale, 1987, 11, 1-2, winter-spring, 186-197

† Despite important internal differences, authoritarian communism & democratic capitalism have a common origin in Western humanism, which claimed to provide populations with freedom from scarcity & security (freedom from fear) in order to allow autonomous judgment at individual &/or social levels. Due to the present undermining of this goal by developments that reach a representative apex in nuclear weapons, it is necessary to rethink the institutional bases of contemporary civilization. In public discussion of nuclear weaponry, the ideological function of the public sphere in reproducing Cold War binarism & the illusion of internal cohesion becomes evident. However, nuclear technology also functions ideologically outside the realm of mass media; moreover, this ideology is inherent in nuclear weapons, due to the sociohistorical factors crystallized in them. Technology as ideology does not merely distort communication, but establishes social interaction in an exterminist framework. Instant annihilation is perfect communication: nuclear technology is the unambiguous message of a divided world. Modified AA

88T4599

Bestuzhev-Lada, Igor (Section Social Forecasting Instit Sociological Research USSR Academy Sciences, Novocheremushkinskaya ul 46 Moscow 117418). High Technology and Long-Term Global Problems. Futures, 1987, 19, 3, June, 276-281.

† It is argued that high technology has the potential to facilitate the resolution of many major global problems before the twenty-first century. The important long-term problems of the present are identified, & it is argued that the present global situation, though unprecedented, has a viable alternative, realizable with the use of high technology & social change. An approach to sociological research & social forecasting based on the modeling of global balances is identified using systems analysis methods. HA

88T4600

Derian, Jean-Claude (French Embassy, 4101 Reservoir Rd NW Washington DC 20007). La Haute Technologie américaine en déclin? (American High Technology in Decline?). ♦ Futuribles, 1987, 111, June, 3-25. (FRE)

† The weaknesses & difficulties of high technology in the US are discussed. The current threat to US industrialists is two-fold: products popular in the marketplace are now being produced by countries with cheap labor, thereby reducing production costs & undercutting US prices; & where intermediate products are concerned, Japanese firms are improving their knowledge & technology to the point of surpassing the US. These competing countries are becoming successful at penetrating & dominating the market, while the recession in the US is adversely affecting industry. 2 Tables, 5 Figures. D. Graves

88T4601

Eastman, Susan T. & Krendl, Kathy A. (3829 Laurel Ct, Bloomington IN 47401). Computers and Gender: Differential Effects of Electronic Search on Students' Achievement and Attitudes. U Journal Research and Development in Education, 1987, 20, 3, spring, 41-48

† An experiment is used to test the effects of using a microcomputer electronic search on eighth-grade boys' & girls' achievement & attitudes. Analyzed are 3 dimensions of student science paper themes, 2 sets of computer achievement measures, & 3 attitudinal dimensions for each of 3 treatment groups that comprise 26 students in a class using computers in a research project, 31 using only print materials, & 23 in a control group. Results show no unpredicted differences by treatment group, significant sex-related differences in theme writing & attitudes toward computers & gender roles. No differences in computer performance emerged in the computer group. Before the experimental treatment, girls held significantly fewer stereotypes & more positive attitudes toward their sex's potential computer abilities than boys, & the attitude gap between boys & girls that used computers emerged in the posttest. Findings indicate that (1) the computer task has greater influence on computer achievement than inherent verbal or spatial skills, & (2) experience using computers reduces sex-related stereotypes. It is suggested that new technologies can foster educational equity. 2 Tables, 31 References. Modified AA

88T4602

Grediaga, Rocio (U Autónoma Metropolitana, Del Azcapotzalco 02000 Mexico DF). Reconstrucción de la tecnología como objeto de estudio (Reconstruction of Technology as an Object of Study). ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Mar, 213-242 (SPA)

† The epistemological debate in the social sciences is discussed. Given that observable facts are relative to the point of reference adopted in each case, & considering the importance of the active role of the subject in history, an analysis is presented of the context of discovery of some important thinkers who, at different historical moments, dealt with the theme of technology &/or development. These include Karl Marx, Max Weber, the Frankfurt school, Herbert Marcuse, & Jürgen Habermas. The interests that influenced the choice of the relationship between technology development as a subject of study are explained. The concept of technology is reconstructed & a framework for the analysis of technology is outlined to provide a basis for the elaboration of viable proposals for development in Third World countries. C. Waters

88T4603

Hugentobler, Margrit (U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109). Technological Change in the Printing Industry: Workers-Unions-Companies. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 490-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712137.

publication of results & later canonical reformulations of scientific knowledge is evident from the history of the Kepler problem, of Newtonian mechanics, etc. Reconstruction is really the theme of Thomas S. Kuhn's Black-Body Theory and the Quantum Discontinuity, 1894-1912, (Oxford: Oxford U Press, 1978), the internalist focus of which disappointed sociologists more than it should have. Several loci for investigation are listed: eg, how do canonical formulations of scientific knowledge come to be written & to gain their canonical attribution by the various scientific communities? Recent sociologists have investigated the construction of scientific papers but have been less interested in what happens to knowledge claims later in their development. 30 References. Modified AA

88T4587

Pallo, Gabar (Instit Physics Budapest Technical U, H-1521 Hungary), Some Conceptual Problems of the Center-Periphery Relationship in the History of Science, ♦ Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 27-32

¶ The history of science concentrates mainly on the events taking place in the scientific centers & considers the positions of the peripheries as a kind of backwardness. The main characteristics of this competitive model of scientific progress are derived from the concept that knowledge production is similar to industrial production. On the basis that science is a cultural phenomenon, another model is suggested in which centers & peripheries represent a kind of collaboration. The concept of world science is defined, & the advantages of this framework are discussed. Modified AA

88T4588

Pepitone, Albert (U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104), Culture and the Cognitive Paradigm in Social Psychology, Australian Journal of Psychology, 1986, 38, 3, Dec, 245-256

¶ Within the historical frame of the paradigmatic change in psychology from behaviorism to cognitivism, the basic metatheoretical features of cognitive social psychology are critically examined, focusing on three major areas of that field: attribution, the impression of persons, & stereotypes. Of core concern in each theory-research enterprise are processes of the individual mind, eg, causal inference, organization of traits, retrieval of stimulus information, that are assumed to be general over content-domains & universal across cultural contexts. A critique of cognitive process theory centers on these problematic assumptions, & argues that a priori aculturism prevents falsification of the hypothesized processes. Tests of content-generality require that the meaning of varying surface content be constant, yet by ignoring culture, access to the source of meaning is precluded. Cross-cultural research is necessary to specify the shared objective basis of social cognition, which cannot be comprehended by process-theory. Finally, the results of cross-cultural experiments specify systems of beliefs & values that sufficiently account for social attribution & judgment without reference to mental processes. 25 References. HA

88T4589

Pickering, Andy (Dept Sociology U Illinois, Urbana 61801), Models in/of Scientific Practice, ♦ Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 69-77

¶ A revised version of SA 34 5/86S19207/ISA/1986/5464

88T4590

Pocock, Stuart J., Hughes, Michael D. & Lee, Robert J. (Dept Clinical Epidemiology & General Practice Royal Free Hospital School Medicine, Rowland Hill St London NW3 England), Statistical Problems in the Reporting of Clinical Trials, ♦ U The New England Journal of Medicine, 1987, 317, 7, 13 Aug, 426-432

¶ Reports of clinical trials often present a wealth of data comparing treatments, which can generate problems of interpretation, particularly when significance testing is used extensively. Examination of reports published in the British Medical Journal, the Lancet, or the New England Journal of Medicine ($\Sigma N = 45$) illustrates these problems, including analysis of multiple endpoints, analysis of repeated measurements over time, trials of multiple treatments, & overall number of significance tests in a trial report. Interpretation of large amounts of data is complicated by the common failure to specify in advance the intended size of a trial or statistical stopping rules for interim analyses. Also, summaries or abstracts of trials tend to emphasize the more statistically significant endpoints. Overall, reporting of clinical trials is biased toward exaggeration of treatment differences. A clearer predefined policy is needed for data analysis & reporting. In particular, a limited number of primary treatment comparisons should be specified in advance. Overuse of arbitrary significance levels is detrimental to good scientific reporting, more emphasis should be given to the magnitude of treatment differences & to estimation methods such as confidence intervals. 3 Tables, 28 References. Modified HA

88T4591

Sharafuddin, A. M. (Science & Technology Division Building 6 Bangladesh Secretariat, Dakha 2), Science Popularization: A View from the Third World, ♦ U Impact of Science on Society, 1986, 36, 4(144), 347-353.

¶ The popularization of science & technology presents very different problems in developing countries than in industrialized ones. Yet the need for scientific literacy is even greater in the Third World. Innovative approaches are necessary, & the adaptation of local languages & culture is important. The task is a vital one: the majority of the world's peoples are becoming increasingly aware that their poverty need not last forever. HA

88T4592

Sharma, Dharendra (c/o Philosophy & Social Action, M-120 Greater Kailash-I New Delhi 110048 India), The Critical Science Movements, ♦ Philosophy and Social Action, 1987, 13, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 5-8.

¶ Social scientists have generally given insufficient recognition to the destructive impact of science on society, in particular, they have failed to concern themselves with the alliance of science & militarism. In this situation, critical science movements have a vital role to play in protecting society from the social costs of science. This movement has achieved noteworthy successes, but has failed to change the basic functions of science in current societies. A need is seen to give critical science movements added support for the sake not only of society but of science, which vitally needs the restoration of its independence. W. H. Stoddard

88T4593

Shils, Edward (U Chicago, IL 60637), Science and Scientists in the Public Arena, U The American Scholar, 1987, 56, 2, spring, 185-202

¶ An examination of how US scientists & their work have come to assume larger roles in the public & political spheres since the 1940s. Personal experience as a social scientist working with atomic scientists in an effort to control the use of nuclear weapons & maintain world peace is described. It is shown how the Pugwash meetings between the West & the USSR in the early 1950s began to transform scientists' traditional political attitudes & furthered the growing distrust among US scientists in their government. Scientists' changing attitudes toward their work—primarily the birth of a collective self-consciousness—are investigated, along with the parallel development of an antisience attitude among the public. These changes are largely attributable to transformations in the achievements & capabilities of science itself. The effects of ethical rules on scientific actions are explored, & the responsibilities of scientists toward the scientific community, the public, & government are discussed. K. Hyatt

88T4594

Singh, Y. P. & Laharia, S. N. (Indian Agricultural Research Instit, New Delhi 110012 India), Interpersonal Communication and Scientific Productivity, ♦ Interaction, 1986, 4, 1-2, 27-32

¶ The relationship between interpersonal communication & scientific productivity is examined for a sample of 130 farm scientists working at a leading agricultural U in India. Colleagues rated each other on interpersonal communication score via a 5-point rating scale, & the publication score of the scientists was calculated as an indicator of their scientific productivity. In addition, Ss were rated by their official superiors on two dimensions: contribution to scientific knowledge & utility in the unit. High association was found between the interpersonal communication score & the publication score. Thus it is concluded that an intimate association exists between interpersonal communication & scientific productivity. 2 Tables, 12 References. Modified HA

88T4595

Weimer, David L. (Public Policy Analysis Program U Rochester, NY 14627), Collective Delusion in the Social Sciences: Publishing Incentives for Empirical Abuse, ♦ U Policy Studies Review, 1986, 5, 4, May, 705-708

1800 demography and human biology

37 demography (population studies)

88T4613

Ahmed, Ferial Abd El-Kader (U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104). Fertility Transition in Egypt. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 753-A-754-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713996.

88T4614

Ardebili, Morteza Haji (U Kansas, Lawrence 66045). The Economic Adaptation of Iranian Immigrants in the Kansas City Metropolitan Area. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 485-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711193.

88T4615

Armus, Diego (Centro Estudios Urbanos y Regionales, Buenos Aires Argentina). Diez años de historiografía sobre la inmigración masiva a la Argentina (Ten Years of Historiography on the Mass Immigration to Argentina). ♦ Estudios Migratorios Latinoamericanos, 1986, 2, 4, Dec, 431-460. (SPA)

¶ A review of historiographical works published in the last decade that deal with the period of mass immigration to Argentina, i.e. approximately 1870-1930. Three major approaches are identified (1) general economic history, including social, cultural, & demographic aspects; (2) studies of the phenomenon of immigration as a specific object of analysis; & (3) studies of the migration experiences of specific national groups & their adjustment to the host society, taking a somewhat anthropological & cultural perspective. All these works have been affected by the political upheavals of modern Argentina, which have resulted in a scarcity of resources, & relative lack of development of a tradition of systematic investigation. However, some advances have been made, & since 1983 there has been a renewal of interest in political history. Problems in dealing with the theme of mass immigration are discussed. 64 References. C. Waters

88T4616

Bailey, Mohamed & Weller, Robert H. (c/o Weller-Center Study Population Florida State U, Tallahassee 32306). Fertility Differentials in Rural Sierra Leone: A Path Analysis. Journal of Developing Areas, 1987, 21, 2, Jan, 191-207

¶ Direct & indirect effects of demographic, background, & SE variables on fertility differentials among married women in Ru Sierra Leone are investigated using data from a 1979 fertility & family planning survey in which interviews were conducted with a probability sample of 2,000 F's aged 15-49 living in 40 villages. A path analysis indicates that wife's age, age at marriage, & desired family size, & husband's education & tribal affiliation have significant effects on fertility, however, these differ as a result of whether wives had a Ru or Ur upbringing. Some policy implications for fertility control are discussed, & the need for education at both the individual & societal levels is emphasized. 1 Table, 4 Figures. K. Hyatt

88T4617

Bleek, Wolf (Anthropological-Sociological Center U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands). Lying Informants: A Fieldwork Experience from Ghana. UM Population and Development Review, 1987, 13, 2, June, 314-322.

¶ During anthropological research into birth control beliefs & practices in a Ru Ghanaian community in 1973, a coincidental event revealed the lies that informants had told the interviewers about sensitive aspects of their lives. The Rs were women attending a clinic, & the interviewers were nurses. It is argued that the informants had good reason to lie, & that demographers should be aware of the possibility that Rs are lying. 3 Tables, 7 References. Modified HA

88T4618

Curtis, S. E. (Dept Geography & Earth Science Queen Mary Coll, London E1 4NS England). Self Reported Morbidity in London and

Manchester: Intra-Urban and Inter-Urban Variations, Social Indicators Research, 1987, 19, 2, May, 255-272.

¶ Evidence of self-reported morbidity from 2 British household interviews carried out in London & Manchester (N = 896 & 1,897 Rs, respectively) is discussed. These data permit intra-Ur & inter-Ur comparisons of patterns of morbidity reporting. The morbidity reports in response to 2 different instruments are compared: for the items used in the British General Household Survey (GHS) Health Section, & for the Nottingham Health Profile (NHP). The results from the London survey are analyzed in more detail to examine the nature of self-reported morbidity in the inner & outer city. Analysis of interviewer effects shows the GHS items to be more liable to interviewer effect than the NHP. The type & number of illnesses reported in response to the GHS also vary between the inner & outer London samples: the NHP appears to be less affected by interviewer effects & variations in interpretation. 10 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA

88T4619

David, Paul A. & Sanderson, Warren C. (Dept Economics Stanford U, CA 94305). The Emergence of a Two-Child Norm among American Birth-Controllers. UM Population and Development Review, 1987, 13, 1, Mar, 1-41.

¶ A "two-child norm," which implied below-replacement fertility for the population group concerned, came to be achieved surprisingly early among native-born couples who were established Ur dwellers in the nineteenth-century US. Newly devised methods are used to analyze parity distributions among older married women recorded in the censuses of 1900, 1910, & 1940, showing the emergence of a two-child mode in that distribution early in the post-Civil War era. Although farm-dwelling couples also exercised effective fertility control, the pattern of regulated fertility among them remained different from the Ur pattern until well into the twentieth century. These findings carry implications that are important in reorienting approaches to explaining the US fertility decline. 4 Tables, 7 Figures, 45 References. Modified HA

88T4620

Goza, Franklin William (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). Adjustment and Adaptation among Southeast Asian Refugees in the United States. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 486-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8708086.

88T4621

Grundy, Emily (Age Concern Instit Gerontology King's Coll U London, 552 King's Rd SW10 0UA England). Retirement Migration and Its Consequences in England and Wales. Ageing and Society, 1987, 7, 1, Mar, 57-82.

¶ Analyses are presented of data on retirement migration from the Office of Population Censuses & Surveys Longitudinal Study, a record linkage study in which 1% of the 1971 Census population of England & Wales has been followed up using routinely collected demographic data, including 1981 census data on sample members. Results show that between 1970/71 & 1980/81, there was a fall in migration in the retirement age groups. In both periods there were differentials in rates of migration, particularly between counties, according to variables such as tenure, economic position, & SC Tenure, marital status, & economic position were together good predictors of M retirement migration in 1970/71, but not of 1980/81 migration. The drop in migration rates between the two periods was greatest among the younger retired & owner occupiers. 11 Tables, 4 Figures. Modified HA

88T4622

Haines, David W. (5730 Reading Ave #172, Alexandria VA 22331). Kinship in Vietnamese Refugee Resettlement: A Review of the US Experience. ♦ UM Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1988, 19, 1, spring, 1-16.

¶ From 1975 to 1985, approximately 500,000 refugees from Vietnam were resettled in the US. Their experience has generated a large & eclectic

88T4604

Lederman, Leonard L. (Division Science Resources Studies National Science Foundation, Washington DC 20550), Science and Technology Policies and Priorities: A Comparative Analysis, U Science, 1987, 237, 4819, 4 Sept, 1125-1133.

¶ The science & technology strategies & priorities of France, West Germany, Japan, Sweden, the UK, & the US are compared with respect to historical settings, research & development allocations, coordinating mechanisms, outputs, dissatisfactions, & recent changes. Also presented are data on performers & funding sources, the character & objectives of work, the industries involved, employment of scientists & engineers, & degrees by field. This cross-national comparison provides a way of understanding the advantages & disadvantages of different strategies & an opportunity for one country to learn from the others. 3 Tables. HA

88T4605

Moiseev, Nikita Nikolaevich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Komp'yuterizatsiya, ee sotsial'nye posledstviya (Computerization and Its Social Consequences), Voprosy filosofii, 1987, 41, 9, Sept, 103-112 (RUS)

¶ Progress in computer technology is affecting the entire character of modern society. Flexible production schedules, robotization, & changes in management, science, & design processes are in the early stages of implementation. Computer modeling processes present a broad range of experimental possibilities, which eventually will have a profound effect on man's interaction with his environment, facilitating the co-evolution of man & the biosphere. Modified HA

88T4606

Mollame, Carlo, Software houses e ambiente (Software Houses and Environment), Sociologia del Lavoro, 1986, 28, 249-260. (ITA)

¶ The role of the software house (SH) is analyzed & a typology of SHs is presented. SHs are a specialized cell of the tertiary sector, providing a link between the exigencies of extraindustrial reality & the technological factor. Modern industrial processes are typically organized in the form of projects, elements of project organization are investigated. 2 Figures. Modified HA

88T4607

Sanders, Ralph (Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218), Penetrating the Fog of Technology's Social Dimensions, U Technology in Society, 1987, 9, 2, 163-180

¶ It is argued that to gain a meaningful understanding of technology's societal connection, one must first dismantle the intricate complexity that often envelops today's technological enterprises. Growth analysis represents a heuristic device, suitable for setting aside the peripheral & enabling the analyst to focus on key points, in the process, it makes the subject under investigation simpler &, therefore, more manageable. It is shown how technology follows an S-curve, or "natural law of growth." Numerous examples are provided to illustrate how human action affects this pattern through (1) terminating growth, (2) changing growth-curve profiles, & (3) initiating quantum leaps. 11 Figures. Modified HA

88T4608

Schweitzer, Glenn, Introducing Research Results into Practice: The Bulgarian Experience, U Technology in Society, 1987, 9, 2, 141-155

¶ Introduction of a broad range of modern technologies from abroad has transformed Bulgaria into an industrialized nation during the past thirty years. Bulgaria is now committed to expanding its energy base through nuclear power, to maintaining a leadership position in Eastern Europe in the development & production of microcomputers & associated software, & to improving the international competitiveness of industrial products, including machine tools & industrial robots. The nation's evolving science & technology infrastructure is being called on to support these & other development efforts, while also developing an indigenous research capability. Meanwhile, economic reform experiments are being expanded to provide enterprises with greater incentives to introduce modern processes & improved products. The establishment of 800 out-of-plan firms, the abolition of industrial line ministries, & the increase in joint ventures reflect the devolution of planning & management authority, which the Bulgarian leadership hopes will lead to a more efficient economic system. HA

88T4609

Sethi, Amarjit S. (Faculty Administration U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5), Culture and Technology, ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1985, 12, 62-76.

¶ A revised version of SA 34:3/86S18538/ISA/1986/5119.

88T4610

Stabile, Don R. (Saint Mary's Coll, Saint Mary's City MI 20686), Veblen and the Political Economy of Technocracy: The Herald of Technological Revolution Developed an Ideology of 'Scientific Collectivism', The American Journal of Economics and Sociology, 1987, 46, 1, Jan, 35-48

¶ In the early 1900s, engineers in the US began developing their own analysis of the economy. Thorstein Veblen, in The Engineers and the Price System (1921), gave a systematic treatment of that analysis; however, Veblen's approach to political economy was broader than that of the engineers. His understanding of social change was based on a two-part research program that attempted to (1) recognize the institutional elements of social stability; (2) identify an operative force with technological values that could foster change. When applied to the US of his day, this research program resulted in Veblen's identification of a conflict between pecuniary & industrial values. Veblen believed that the triumph of industrial values held by both engineers & industrial workers was crucial for making society compatible with mass-production technology. Veblen's earlier works emphasized workers as being agents for social change, later he shifted his focus to engineers. In both cases he reacted to the social activism of each group. HA

88T4611

Tamás, Pál, Szervezeti erőviszonyok és az innováció. számítástechnika olajipari alkalmazásának példáján (Organization: Power Relations and Innovation. Example of the Application of Computer Technologies in the Oil Industry), Szociológia, 1983, 3, 359-374 (HUN)

¶ The process of organizational innovation & the ways in which power relations influence it are examined in the context of a case study of the introduction of computer technology into the Hungarian oil industry. The Hungarian system is characterized by nonmarket decision making, organizational rigidity, centralized management, & loss of functions to medium-level managers. New information technologies have led to the emergence of new organizational power centers. Innovations can be classified as possible or necessary; the former are needed only to avoid long-term structural harm, the latter to meet emergency situations. Only the latter have reasonable chances of being adopted. The relationship between actual innovators & their patrons significantly affects the innovation process as well. Modified HA

88T4612

Tate, Eugene D. (Dept Sociology Saint Thomas More Coll U Saskatchewan, Saskatoon S7N 0W6), Eugen Rosenstock-Huessy, Media, and Peace: Reassessing the Technological Advances in Communications, ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1985, 12, 38-61

¶ After surveying the developments in modern communications technology, the response of Eugen Rosenstock-Huessy (eg, see Speech at Reality, Norwich, Vt. Argo Books, 1970) to technological development is examined. Rosenstock-Huessy taught that technological advances destroy time, space, & groups within society. He distinguished between "technological time," measured in minutes, hours, days, months, years, etc., & "fruitful time," which is measured in the stages of life & religion or personal holidays. The technological advances in communications are examined in light of this distinction with the replacement of the family or religious calendar with an entertainment, commercial calendar, sports & media events (Academy Awards, Super Bowl Sunday, etc.). This destruction of time, groups within society, & social boundaries is illustrated in the effect of film & TV melodrama on interpersonal relationship development, Third World economic development, & urbanization. The effects that Rosenstock-Huessy pointed out of technological advancement hold true for the development of new communications technologies. Yet, as Rosenstock-Huessy taught, the advancement of technology cannot be stopped; hence, one must learn to live in two worlds with differing times. 2 Tables, 23 References. AA ventive Family & Rehabilitation Medicine School Medicine U Rochester, NY 14642), Infant Mortality and Economic Instability in Yugoslavia, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 11, 953-960.

† The effect of economic policies resulting from Yugoslavia's debt crisis (beginning in 1979) on the infant mortality rate is discussed. Statistics from Demography Statistics & the Statistical Yearbook of Yugoslavia, comparing real income with infant mortality rates from 1954 to 1984, show a slowing in the decline of infant mortality. There is no evidence, however, that populations in poor parts of the country experienced a more dramatic impact on infant mortality than did populations in more favored regions. It is suggested that the lack of difference is due to decreased spending for health & social services, decreased real income, increased prices, & a devaluation of the currency. 5 Tables, 3 Figures, 33 References. Modified HA

88T4630

Landers, J. (Dept Anthropology University Coll London, WC1E 6TB England), Mortality and Metropolis: The Case of London 1675-1825, ♦ Population Studies, 1987, 41, 1, Mar, 59-76

† Recent work in population history emphasizes that demographic phenomena should be seen in a wider social & economic context. This perspective is, however, more easily achieved in the case of fertility than of mortality, which is widely treated as a variable exogenous to economy & society. It is argued that the inclusion of spatial structure & migration in accounts of historical demographic regimes can restore long-term variations in mortality to an endogenous position. Within such a model, a central role is played by large metropolitan populations, which act as endemic reservoirs of infection, with high but relatively stable levels of mortality. Data from the annual London Bills of Mortality allow empirical testing for the period 1675-1825, with results that generally conform to theoretical expectations, although a substantial reduction in mortality occurred during the latter part of the period. 15 Tables. HA

88T4631

Laslett, Peter (Rank Xerox Unit Ageing Cambridge Group History Population & Social Structure, 27 Trumpington St CB2 1QA England), The Emergence of the Third Age, Ageing and Society, 1987, 7, 2, June, 133-160.

† After briefly discussing a scheme for dividing the life course into four stages, discussion is focused on the Third Age—that stage when the goal of the individual life plan is realized & personal achievement & fulfillment are at their zenith. The Third Age is a collective as well as personal affair, experienced in the company of a nationwide society of those with the disposition, freedom, health, & means to attain it. It did not emerge in GB & other Western countries until the 1950s, & did not become a settled feature of their social structures until the 1980s. Life expectations in 41 developed & developing countries are compared using official statistics, & a comparison is made between life expectation in the contemporary Third World & in GB since the sixteenth century. Implications of the results of this comparison for modernization theory in relation to aging are discussed, & the concept of modernization is shown to be unacceptable to historical sociologists. A Third Age indicator (3AI) is developed, 3AIs for a number of contemporary countries are presented, & countries that have settled into the Third Age during the 1980s are examined in depth. Past & current stereotypes of the elderly are discussed, with focus on the role these have played in delaying recognition of the arrival of the Third Age. 5 Tables. Modified HA

88T4632

Lentzner, Harold Roy (U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104), Seasonal Patterns of Infant and Child Mortality in New York, Chicago, and New Orleans: 1870-1919, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 754-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714077.

88T4633

Lewins, Frank (Australian National U, Canberra ACT 2601), The Significance of Factors Influencing Early Vietnamese Settlement in Australia, Journal of Intercultural Studies, 1984, 5, 2, 29-48

† Data gathered as part of a longitudinal study of the first 532 Vietnamese refugees to arrive in Australia (Martin, Jean, The Migrant Presence: Australian Responses 1947-1977, Sydney: George Allen & Unwin, 1978) are compared with interview data collected from 70+% of the cohort, focusing on whether settlement patterns of these refugees are a result of their identity as Indochinese, Vietnamese, refugees, migrants, or members of the Wc. These data are supplemented by official statistics

& other research. Cross-tabulations, index construction, & multiple regression analysis all point to a high degree of continuity of occupational class from Vietnam to Australia, which holds even though Mc individuals originally had long periods working in low paid process work in factor. It is concluded that occupational class is the most powerful factor shaping settlement patterns. 6 Tables, 2 Figures, 10 References. Modified AA

88T4634

Mandell, Marvin B. (Graduate School U Maryland, Baltimore 21201), The Effect of Regionalization on Infant and Early Neonatal Mortality: An Interrupted Time-Series Analysis, Evaluation Review, 1986, 10, 6, Dec, 806-829.

Comment, 830-832, Reply, 833-835.

† Data from 15 counties in central NY on infant & early neonatal mortality are examined utilizing an interrupted time-series analysis to assess the impact of regionalization of perinatal care. Mortality rates are based on computerized vital statistics data obtained from the NY Bureau of Vital Statistics for the period 1967-1981. Results indicate that regionalization has had a gradual but statistically significant permanent impact both infant & early neonatal mortality rates, with both gradually declining. In Comments on Mandell Article, Sam Shapiro, Marie C. McCormick, & Barbara Starfield (School of Hygiene & Public Health, Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore, Md) attempt to clarify some confusion arising from statements in previous research that did not identify a definite effect of regionalization on perinatal outcome. In Response to Comment on Mandell Article, Marvin B. Mandell clarifies his assertion & discusses the methodological basis for his comment. F. Rasmussen

88T4635

Marcell-Gratton, Nicole & Légaré, Jacques (Groupe recherche démographique québécoise U Montréal, Québec H3C 3J7), Vieillesse d'aujourd'hui et de demain: un même âge, une autre réalité? (Be Old Today and Tomorrow: A Same Age, Another Reality?), Futuribles, 1987, 110, May, 3-21. (FRE)

† It is argued that people of today may have already acquired certain characteristics that should modify the nature of old age tomorrow. Research is urged to determine the impact on autonomy & usefulness in age of such factors as: mortality differentials, especially according to the growing autonomy & better financial situation of women, due to higher education & greater LF participation; increased wealth & financial independence due to increased participation in retirement plans, the prospect of longer life due to healthier living habits. Marital instability is considered as a possible incentive to develop autonomy, & the facts that present demographic trends will have on kinship structure support for the future old are discussed. 4 Tables. Modified AA

88T4636

Massey, Douglas S. & García España, Felipe (Population Research Center U Chicago, IL 60637), The Social Process of International Migration, UM Science, 1987, 237, 4816, 14 Aug, 733-738.

† The social process of network growth helps to explain the rapid increase in the migration of Mexicans to the US during the 1970s. Migration networks are webs of social ties that link potential migrants in sending communities to people in receiving societies, & their existence lowers the costs of international movement. With each person who becomes a migrant, the cost of migration is reduced for a set of friends & relatives, inducing them to migrate & further expanding the network. As a result of this dynamic interaction, network connections to the US have become widespread throughout Mexico, & the probability of international migration from that country will remain high. 3 Tables. HA

88T4637

Meir, Avinoam (Dept Geography Ben-Gurion U Negev, Beer Sheva 84105 Israel), Comparative Vital Statistics along the Pastoral Nomadism-Sedentarism Continuum, Human Ecology, 1987, 15, 1, Mar, 91-107

† A discussion of some demographic dynamics of pastoral nomads in African & Middle Eastern countries that classifies different groups along a nomadism-sedentarism continuum. Using data from official government reports & previously published research, crude birth & death rates, & resulting natural increase rates are analyzed. Substantial variations between nomads, seminomads, & sedentarized nomads are revealed. Potential demographic consequences of changes along the nomadism-sedentarism continuum, & resultant economic & social structural changes, are discussed along with some implications for government development policy. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 43 References. K. H.

the body of research, one aspect of which is reviewed: the ways in which kinship changes & continues across the exodus experience, & the way it affects refugee adaptation to the US. Specifically, described are: (1) the structure of Vietnamese kinship; (2) the changes & continuities in family structure across the migration experience; (3) the interaction of kinship with refugee economic adjustment; & (4) some of the ways in which kinship conditions noneconomic aspects of adjustment. The potential of this body of research within the broader context of immigrant adaptation is considered. 47 References. HA

88T4623

Hammel, E. A. & Howell, Nancy (U California, Berkeley 94720), Research in Population and Culture: An Evolutionary Framework, Current Anthropology, 1987, 28, 2, Apr, 141-150
Comments, 150-154, Reply, 154-160

¶ Theories on the relationship between population & social evolution, such as those of Karl Marx, Thomas R. Malthus, & Edith Boserup, have disappointed analysts wishing to use them as a basis for inference in unrecorded history. Their methodological limitations are summarized, & drawing on a new level of sophistication in anthropological demography, a philosophically acceptable extension of evolutionary theory is proposed. It is asserted that demographic events are the central mechanisms & leading indicators of the coevolution of human minds, bodies, & societies. The theory permits a more complex analysis of alternative outcomes of stressful points in population history—fission, limitation, intensification, or decline & can be used to test hypotheses in more realistic contexts of continentwide examinations of populations influencing each other. It is anticipated that population fission will emerge as a particularly interesting response to population pressure in the case of relatively sparse populations & that the position of a given population (core or periphery) will be crucial in influencing the choice of alternatives. A research agenda is proposed to construct an operationalizable theory of the coevolution of human biology & culture through demographic functioning. Comments are offered by Eliane S. Azevêdo (Hospital Prof. Edgard Santos, U Federal de Bahia, Salvador, Brazil), Don E. Dumond (Dept of Anthropology, U of Oregon, Eugene), W. Penn Handwerker (Dept of Anthropology, Humboldt State U, Arcata, Calif), Henry Harpending (Dept of Anthropology, Pennsylvania State U, University Park), Marvin Harris (Dept of Anthropology, U of Florida, Gainesville), Ann V. Millard & Kim A. McBride (Dept of Anthropology, Michigan State U, East Lansing), Francisco M. Salzano (Instit de Biociências, U Federal do Rio Grande do Sul, Caixa Postal 1953, 90001 Porto Alegre RS Brazil), & John W. Sheets (Dept of History & Anthropology, Central Missouri State U, Warrensburg). In Reply, Hammel & Howell address each comment in turn & attempt to clarify their perception of evolution. 124 References. K. Hyatt

88T4624

Hiscott, Robert D., Recent Migration from Ontario to Atlantic Canada: A Comparison of Returning and Non-Return Migrants, La Revue Canadienne de Sociologie et d'Anthropologie/The Canadian Review of Sociology and Anthropology, 1987, 24, 4, Nov, 586-599

¶ An analysis of 1981 Canadian Census data on recent migration (between 1976 & 1981) from Ontario to Atlantic Canada reveals some important sociodemographic & employment differences between broadly defined groups of "return" & "nonreturn" migrants. Applications of the marginal work world model developed by Donald Clairmont & Fred Wien (Segmentation, Disadvantage and Development: An Analysis of the Marginal Work World, Its Relationship to the Central Work World and Its Role in the Evolving Maritime Provinces, Halifax, Nova Scotia, Instit Public Affairs, Dalhousie U, 1974) to the employment outcomes of recent interprovincial migrants clearly illustrates that returning migrants of both sexes are found in greater proportions in marginal, more traditional Atlantic Canada industries (such as fishing & the related fish products industry). While the Canadian Census is a particularly useful data source for constructing a statistical profile of the dominant characteristics of recent returning & nonreturning migrants, it provides a limited picture of the complex phenomenon of internal migration. Hence, it is necessary to augment census data where possible with other data sources addressing motivations for migration, decision-making processes, & other salient dimensions of the migration phenomenon. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 38 References. HA

88T4625

Hong, Lawrence K. (Dept Sociology California State U, Los Angeles 90032), Potential Effects of the One-Child Policy on Gender Equality in the People's Republic of China, Gender & Society, 1987, 1, Sept, 317-326.

Comment, 327-331.

¶ The government of the People's Republic of China has adopted a policy under which, in general, couples are permitted to have only one child. Despite such problems as F infanticide & the need for old-age security, this policy could reduce the significance of patrilineage, promote uxorial marriage, & encourage women to make nontraditional career choices. In sum, it could enable China to take major steps toward the goal of eliminating sexual inequality. In Comment on Hong, Joan D. Mandl (Pennsylvania State U, Delaware County campus) argues that Hong does not recognize the full complexity of the social/political change needed to attain sexual equality in China & also fails to recognize widespread resistance to the one-child policy. 1 Table, 23 References. Modified HA

88T4626

Joyce, Theodore (Baruch Coll City U New York, NY 10010), The Demand for Health Inputs and Their Impact on the Black Neonatal Mortality Rate in the U.S., Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 11, 911-918.

¶ The impact of availability & utilization of abortion & family planning services on the black infant death rate in the US is examined, based on an empirical analysis of a cross-section of US counties in 1977. Only teenage Ss were considered (for their high risk rates) in the birth weight & death rate statistics from the National Center for Health Statistics. SE characteristics were taken from the US Population Census (no N given). The utilization of neonatal intensive care, found to be strongly related to its availability, is an important determinant of newborn survivability, whereas early prenatal care is not. The results indicate that expanding the availability of family planning clinics increases the number of teenagers served, resulting in a lower neonatal mortality rate. Accessibility to abortion operates similarly. It is suggested that helping women avoid unwanted births may be the most cost-effective way of improving black infant health. 3 Tables. Modified HA

88T4627

Kenen, Regina & Hammerslough, Charles R. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Trenton State Coll, NJ 08625), Reservation and Non-Reservation American Indian Mortality in 1970 and 1978, U Sociobiology, 1987, 34, 1-2, spring-summer, 26-36.

¶ Mortality rates by age & sex of American Indians living in reservation & nonreservation counties were compared for 1970 & 1978, using data from the Indian Health Service (via the National Center for Health Statistics). An apparent overcount in the 1980 census enumeration of American Indians curtails rigorous comparisons, but broad differences can be delineated. The main improvement in American Indian mortality during the decade was in age group 0-4. In 1970, nonreservation death rates were not different from reservation rates. By the end of the decade, nonreservation death rates had diverged downward from reservation death rates. An analysis of 1978 death rates by poverty status showed that nonreservation death rates are sensitive to county poverty level, whereas reservation death rates are not. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 18 References. Modified HA

88T4628

Kincaid, D. Lawrence & Yum, June Ock (Dept Communication State U New York, Albany 12222), A Comparative Study of Korean Filipino and Samoan Immigrants to Hawaii: Socioeconomic Consequences, U Human Organization, 1987, 46, 1, spring, 70-77

¶ The experiences of various immigrant populations in Hawaii are examined using interview data from household heads (or their spouses) in approximately equal numbers of both sexes. Five populations were sampled: Caucasian, Filipino, Japanese, Korean, & Samoan (N = 200, 200, 203, 401, & 199, respectively). Substantial differences are evident in income & in occupational attainment & mobility. A stressful life events index is computed for each group, based on the probability of occurrence of various events; its values range widely, from 189.35 for the Samoans to 63.97 for the Filipinos. Despite high stress levels & low incomes, Samoans are relatively unaware of social service agencies & make little use of them. Recommendations for programs to meet these populations' specific needs are offered. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 20 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4629

Kunitz, Stephen J., Simić, Snežana & Odoroff, Charles L. (Dept Pr

88T4647

Therborn, Goran (Catholic U, Nijmegen Netherlands). Migration and Western Europe: The Old World Turning New. U Science, 1987, 237, 4819, 4 Sept, 1183-1188

¶ The 1960s saw a historical turn in Western Europe: it became an immigration area. Net immigration has been concentrated in the more prosperous Western European countries, & has been determined mainly by the demand of their particular national labor regimes. The size of the immigrant LF was considerably affected by the economic crisis starting in 1973, but a multiethnic society will remain a novel feature of most Western European countries. Political abdication of responsibility for full employment & technological change is likely to result in a ghetto of un(der)employment for a large part of the second generation of recent immigrants into Western Europe. 1 Table. Modified HA

88T4648

Todaro, Michael P. & Maruszko, Lydia (New York U, NY 10003). Illegal Migration and US Immigration Reform: A Conceptual Framework. U Population and Development Review, 1987, 13, 1, Mar, 101-114

¶ A conceptual framework for analyzing international illegal migration from developing countries is presented. The model postulates that the decision to migrate is some function of the expected income differential between the home & destination countries, where this differential comprises not only home & destination wage & unemployment rates, but also two new variables unique to decision making by illegal migrants: the probability of capture & deportation & the degree of wage discrimination against illegal workers. The model implies that illegal migration responds to a variety of economic & noneconomic variables that are either negligible or nonexistent in an analysis of internal domestic & legal international migration. Through a simulation that reflects the current environment in which illegal migration from Mexico into the US takes place, the model is used to evaluate the impact of the 1986 Simpson-Rodino Immigration Reform & Control Act designed to curb the inflow of illegal migrants through the imposition of employer penalties & increased border apprehension. The simulation reveals some major weaknesses of the legislation. 2 Tables, 15 References. HA

88T4649

Trovato, Frank (Sociology Dept U Alberta, Edmonton T6G 2H4). A Macrosociological Analysis of Native Indian Fertility in Canada: 1961, 1971, and 1981. ♦ U Social Forces, 1987, 66, 2, Dec, 463-485

¶ Census data are used to evaluate five hypotheses concerning Canadian native Indian fertility trends over time & in comparison to other ethnic groups in Canada: (1) the modernity thesis of fertility decline, (2) the fertility-enhancing effect of modernization thesis, (3) the characteristics-assimilation hypothesis of fertility, (4) the pronatalist subculture thesis, & (5) the minority-status insecurities hypothesis. Descriptive & multivariate analyses provide strong support for the first four hypotheses, but none for the fifth. In substantive terms, the findings suggest that while modernization generally implies long-term declines in native Indian fertility, their above average levels of reproduction are likely to persist for a considerable length of time, mostly as a function of the pronatalist subculture of Natives & the discontinuous nature of the modernization process. 7 Tables, 68 References. HA

88T4650

Vaupel, James W. (U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455). A Rejoinder to Mitra. ♦ Population Studies, 1987, 41, 1, Mar, 163

¶ A commentary on S. Mitra's "About the Effect of Changes in Age-Specific Mortality on Life Expectancy" (see abstract in this section). The overlap between S. Mitra's formulae for calculating the years of life expectancy lost as a result of death & the author's own calculation (see SA 35.4/86Q8555) is acknowledged. The use of a Gompertz curve as a simple model to gain two insights is defended: (1) if mortality rates at younger ages are low & increase exponentially at older ages, then the age at which there is the greatest potential for saving years of life is roughly equal to life expectancy at birth, & (2) steady progress against mortality may reduce H (the length of the age interval) & hence the relative increase in life expectancy each year, but the absolute increase may be constant. 6 References. K Hyatt

88T4651

Vuorinen, Heikki S. (Dept Public Health U Helsinki, SF-00290 29 Finland). Core-Periphery Differences in Infant Mortality. Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 8, 659-667

¶ Core-periphery differences in infant mortality trends in Finland from 1950 to 1984 are described at national, provincial, & local hospital level. (1) At the national level, the differences between core & periphery in infant mortality trends disappear by the mid-1960s, the diminishing postneonatal mortality stops & the diminishing of especially the first-mortality begins about the middle of 1960s, in both the core & the periphery. (2) In the province of Uudenmaan laani, there are no differences in infant mortality trends between the metropolitan area of Helsinki (core) & the rest of this province (periphery). (3) In the two local hospital regions, the diminishing of infant mortality is significantly slower in the periphery than in the core. Several possible methodological, demographic, & health care factors that may explain the difference in infant mortality trends between core & periphery at different level spatial hierarchy are discussed. 2 Tables, 7 Figures, 1 Appendix, 41 References. Modified HA

88T4652

Westlake Van Winkle, Nancy & May, Philip A. (c/o May U N Mexico, Albuquerque 87131). Native American Suicide in New Mexico, 1957-1979: A Comparative Study. U Human Organization, 1986, 45, 4, winter, 296-309

¶ A descriptive & epidemiological study of completed suicides among Apache, Navajo, & Pueblo Indians of NM from 1957 through 1979. Death certificates are the primary source of data. A number of demographic & situational variables are examined for the cultural group similarities & differences are noted. Significant findings include a 1 M to 1 F ratio, an age range of 10-39 for 75.4%-93.4% of the completed suicides, & a high % of both Ms & Fs using extremely lethal methods, ie, firearms & hanging, to commit suicide. Suicide rates for the Apache & Pueblo groups have been rising since the mid-1960s, while Navajo rates have been rising since the early 1970s. The Apache had the highest suicide rate, followed by the Pueblo & Navajo, for the period 1957-1979. The age-adjusted rates range from 1.7 to 4.9 times the US rate in recent years. Age-specific trends show an increase in youthful suicide rates similar to or greater than that of the US population, as well as some increase for those aged 55+ among Pueblo & Navajo. Traditional & contemporary forms of social integration & acculturation are discussed as possible explanations for the differential rates between groups & the increase in rates of suicides in all three groups. 8 Tables, 1 Figure, 68 References. HA

88T4653

Zakharova, O. D. & Cherednichenko, M. A., Sotsial'no-ekonomicheskaya differentsiatsiya demograficheskogo povedeniya (Social and Economic Differentiation of Demographic Behavior). Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 126-141 (RUS)

¶ At a 1987 Moscow meeting of the Social Demography Section of Soviet Sociological Assoc, I. I. Rybakovskiy spoke on problems of developing a theory for SF determination of demographic processes. V. A. Ibrisev examined the influence of changes in lifestyle on reproductive behavior. E. M. Andreev challenged current attempts by some politicians to discontinue the self-regulation of the demographic system. S. D. Zakharova stressed the importance of examining long-term & short-term changes in living situations in regard to developing a demographic policy. V. N. Arkhangel'skiy discussed the allowable limits of decrease in population for the USSR. G. Prostavov

88T4654

----, Paraguay: la mortalidad infantil según variables socioeconómicas y geográficas, 1955-1980 (Paraguay Infant Mortality according to Socioeconomic and Geographic Variables, 1955-1980). ♦ U Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 1, Sept-Dec, 73-117 (SPA)

¶ Several chapters from a study with the same title (published CELADE [the Latin American Center for Demography], Series A, N° 172, Santiago, Chile, 1986) are presented. The levels & tendencies in infant mortality among infants under one year old in Paraguay are estimated. An attempt is made to identify those groups that have a higher mortality so as to contribute to the orientation of national policies aimed at diminishing infant mortality. An indirect process, elaborated by J. Trussardi from the original method of W. Brass (UN, 1983, no further reference information given), is used to derive estimates based on data from the national censuses of 1972 & 1982, the national demographic survey of 1977, & the national survey of fertility of 1979. Overall, infant mortality has declined during the period studied, & is relatively low for Latin America. Regional differences are identified, eg, infant mortality is highest in the least urbanized areas. 41 Tables, 27 Figures. C. Waters

88T4638

Mitra, S. (Emory U, Atlanta GA 30322), About the Effect of Changes in Age-Specific Mortality on Life Expectancy. ♦ Population Studies, 1987, 41, 1, Mar, 161-162

¶ A commentary on James W. Vaupel's work (see SA 35 4/86Q8555), beginning with the observation that some of his derivations regarding measurement of change in force of mortality by age have been previously published. It has been shown previously that, as there is an age interval in which the reduction of deaths by a fixed % will result in the maximum gain in life expectancy, there is similarly another age interval where such a gain will be minimal. Unfortunately, the assumption of the Gompertz curve for the force of mortality fails to reveal the existence of the latter &, therefore, runs the risk of misrepresenting the former. It has also been noted that the standard five year age interval which shows the maximum (minimum) gain in life expectancy in comparison with the gains in the preceding & the following interval need not be the same as can be obtained by the usual maximization (minimization) procedure. An operational technique for deriving the point estimate of the age corresponding to the maximum (minimum) gain in life expectancy has been outlined. AA

88T4639

Moya, Jose C. (Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903), Notas sobre las fuentes para el estudio de la inmigración española en Buenos Aires (Notes on Sources for the Study of the Spanish Immigration in Buenos Aires), ♦ Estudios Migratorios Latinoamericanos, 1986, 2, 4, Dec, 497-503 (SPA)

¶ Scholarly publications on the Spanish immigrant community in Argentina are identified & examined. The migration statistical publications of Spain & Argentina are analyzed, with particular attention to variables considered, periods covered, where they are located, & methodological problems involved. Argentine passenger lists are also explored, along with the manuscripts returns that have been found for a Buenos Aires municipal census (1855) & for 2 Argentine national censuses (1869 & 1895). A listing of 62 Spanish immigrant newspapers & magazines published in Buenos Aires from 1818 to the 1930s is provided, indicating dates of publication, library or repository where they are located, & call numbers. 1 Table. Modified AA

88T4640

Oliveira-Roca, Maria (Institut društvena istraživanja, Zagreb Yugoslavia), Demografska struktura i prostorna pokretljivost društvenih grupa (empirijske činjenice) (Demographic Structure and Spatial Mobility of Social Groups (Some Empirical Facts)), Revija za Sociologiju, 1986, 16, 1-4, Jan-Dec, 131-144 (SCR)

¶ Yugoslav 1981 census data are analyzed to determine whether there are significant differences in the demographic structure & spatial distribution & mobility of hypothetical social groups established a priori. Results reveal that sex & age are the only significant biosocial variables differentiating social groups. The most important variables characterizing social groups as to spatial distribution & mobility include birthplace, type of residence, daily commuting, number of moves, & migration history. Other factors include demographic & SF variables, eg, economic security, sense of tradition, the labor market, education, & level of social & physical infrastructure. 7 Tables. Modified HA

88T4641

Onishi, Akira (Institut Applied Economic Research Soka U, Hachioji-Shi Tokyo 192 Japan), Global Early Warning System for Displaced Persons: Interlinkages of Environment, Development, Peace and Human Rights, UM Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1987, 31, 3, May, 269-299

¶ Described is the development of the Global Early Warning System for Displaced Persons, based on the FUGI (Future of Global Interdependence) global modeling concept. Discussed are: (1) the scope & objectives of the current project, (2) the methodology employed; (3) the main features of the model, & (4) some case studies from the Philippines & Thailand. 2 Tables, 9 Figures, 9 References. Modified AA

88T4642

Perkins, Robert A. & Abatena, Hailu (Louisiana State U, Baton Rouge 70803), Morbidity in a Systems Perspective, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 1-2, Jan-Apr, 55-79

¶ Morbidity rates have not remained constant over time, resulting in a substantial change in the pattern of illness in the populations of developed countries. A theoretical framework based on the interaction of organismic, personality, social, & cultural system levels is proposed to account for these changes, based on the ideas of Talcott Parsons (The Social System, New York: The Free Press, 1964). Data from a survey of gross morbidity among 2,169 adult heads of households are used to illustrate these relationships. 7 Tables, 1 Figure, 23 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4643

Romelsjö, Anders (Dept Social Medicine Kronan Health Centre Karolinska Institut, S-172 83 Sundbyberg Sweden), Decline in Alcohol-Related In-Patient Care and Mortality in Stockholm County, British Journal of Addiction, 1987, 82, 6, June, 653-663

¶ Changes in the utilization of inpatient care & mortality from alcohol-related diseases in Stockholm, Sweden, are investigated using data from a computer-based inpatient care register & official government statistics for 1973-1984. Analysis indicates an impressive decline in inpatient care for liver cirrhosis & pancreatitis for both sexes & for alcohol psychosis, intoxication, & alcoholism (summed) for Ms since the end of the 1970s; mortality has also dropped or leveled off. A 20%-40% decline between 1978/79 & 1983/84 is partly explained by a 20% drop in the sale of alcohol between 1976 & 1984. It can also be attributed to changes in treatment policy, primarily the increase (70%) in the sale & use of disulfiram & calcium carbimide. Additional effects of changes in alcohol policy & attitudes, care organization, & social conditions are discussed. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 34 References. Modified HA

88T4644

Rosenwajke, Ira (Populations Studies Center U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104), A Demographic Profile of the Elderly Jewish Population in the United States in 1970, ♦ The Journal of Aging and Judaism, 1987, 1, 2, spring-summer, 126-145

¶ Data from the public use samples of the 1970 US census are used to develop a SE & demographic profile of elderly (age 65+) Jews who report Yiddish as their mother tongue & of elderly members of their households (ΣN = 840,900, 1% sample). Their marital status, living arrangements, educational attainment, geographic distribution & mobility, & LF participation are discussed in detail, & found to largely parallel the patterns & characteristics of the general population of US elderly whites. Differences between younger & older members of the Jewish elderly cohort are examined, & implications for the maintenance of Jewish heritage, particularly traditional religious & ethnic values, are discussed. 5 Tables. K. Hyatt

88T4645

Stinner, William F., Mobasher, Helal, Toney, Michael B. & McKewen-Stinner, Carol (Utah State U, Logan 84322), Utah Migrants Surprisingly Similar to Natives, ♦ UM Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 67-70.

¶ Because of its unique (Mormon) religious heritage, Utah might be expected to generate public policy orientations that differ from other states. Accordingly, its natives might differ from migrants on policy matters. Data from 1984 telephone interviews with 992 adults provide evidence of striking similarities between natives, returnees, & long-term immigrants on several policy issues. Differences are observed primarily between natives & recently arriving nonreturning immigrants. 1 Table, 8 References. Modified HA

88T4646

Testa, Julio C., Calificación y ocupaciones. Una aproximación crítica en el contexto de la revisión de las categorías censales (Qualification and Occupations. A Critical Approximation in the Context of the Revision of the Census Categories), ♦ UM Revista Paraguaya de Sociología, 1986, 23, 67, Sept-Dec, 55-64. (SPA)

¶ Some proposals are made for a revision of the occupational categories in Argentina's national census. Inconsistencies in the level of job descriptions are criticized. Comparisons are made with systems of classification used by other national & international organizations, eg, UNESCO. It is argued that the nature of many jobs is changing rapidly, especially with the introduction of computerization, so that even the distinction between manual & nonmanual work is less significant than formerly. The proposals for a more systematic classification are based on the concept of qualification. 14 References. C. Waters inventories & health indices administered to a purposive "snowball" sample of 137 immigrants from a wide range of countries living in Toledo, Ohio. Findings reveal elevated blood pressure levels to be associated with individuals having difficulty in adjusting to US culture. However, this association is mediated by anomie, church attendance, & various other psychosocial variables. 3 Tables, 37 References. Modified HA

NEWS FROM ODENSE UNIVERSITY PRESS

NORTH-WESTERN EUROPEAN LANGUAGE EVOLUTION

NOWELE publishes articles dealing with all aspects of the (pre)-histories of – and with intra- and extralinguistic factors contributing to change and variation within – Icelandic, Faroese, Norwegian, Swedish, Danish, Frisian, Dutch, German, English, Gothic and the early Runic language.

Editors: Erik W. Hansen and Hans F. Nielsen,
Odense University.

VOLUME 1, NUMBER 1, 1983
NORTH-WESTERN EUROPEAN LANGUAGE EVOLUTION

NOWELE

ODENSE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contributors to the first six volumes of NOWELE (1983–) include: Harry Andersen (København), Elmer H. Antonsen (Urbana), Hreinn Benediktsson (Reykjavík), Juliette De Caluwé-Dor (Liège), Niels Danielsen (Odense), Wolfram Euler (München), Tseard de Graaf (Groningen), C. Gussenhoven and R. H. Bremmer (Nijmegen), Eric P. Hamp (Chicago), Jarich Hoekstra (Leeuwarden), Gillis Kristensson (Stockholm), Christa Kühnhold (Freiburg), T. L. Markey (Ann Arbor), Wolfgang Meid (Innsbruck), E. C. Polomé (Austin), Patrick V. Stiles (Edinburgh) and Jean-Marie Zemb (Nanterre).

Subscriptions: NOWELE appears twice a year, each issue containing approx. 112 pages. Subscription rates, two issues (one year) D.kr. 160.00/US $ 20.00, single issues D.kr. 100.00/US $ 12.00, plus postage. All subscription orders should be sent to:

Odense University Press, Pjentedamsgade 36, DK-5000 Odense C, Denmark.

44 human biology/sociobiology

88T4655

Beckstrom, John H. (357 East Chicago Ave, Chicago IL 60611), The Use of Legal Opinions to Test Sociobiological Theory: Contract Law regarding Reciprocal Relationships in a Household, *Ethology and Sociobiology, 1987, 8, 3, 221-247

¶ The use of written legal opinions to test sociobiological hypotheses is illustrated with a body of 2,000+ cases extending over 100 years in which judges from all over the US appear to have been of the unanimous opinion that close genetic & in-law relationships were positively correlated to ongoing reciprocal aid-giving relationships. The universe of the sample projected in the judicial opinions included relatives & nonrelatives all living in the same household, so the possibility that such correlations could be attributed completely to the comparative geographic proximity that would be expected between close relatives is essentially eliminated. It is suggested that similar bodies of cases, which could be used to test behavioral hypotheses, exist in the more than three million indexed US legal opinions. HA

88T4656

Beeson, R. W. (Dept Sociology/Anthropology U Idaho, Moscow 83843), The Conceptual Foundations of Sociobiology, *International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1986, 23, 3-4, July-Oct, 123-162

¶ The interdisciplinary effort of sociobiology gains considerable potential from its use of Darwinian theory, which has a long, highly integrated association with both the major themes of the history of Western thought & past scientific theorizing, & thus is uniquely capable of unifying the basic assumptions & methodology of the study of human social behavior. Presented are key Darwinian concepts, & their subsequent reformulation in the later emergence of pragmatism, classical ethology, & sociobiology. The resulting conceptual structure utilized by sociobiology is then presented & analyzed & related to current sociological theory. 5 Figures, 86 References. Modified AA

88T4657

Kitcher, Philip (Dept Philosophy U California San Diego, La Jolla 92093), Precis of Vaulting Ambition: Sociobiology and the Quest for Human Nature, *The Behavioral and Brain Sciences, 1987, 10, 1, Mar, 61-71

Comment, 71-89, Reply, 89-99

¶ The debate over the validity of sociobiology persists because scholars have failed to distinguish its varieties & because they have given too little attention to the details of the arguments for its claims about human behavior. A review of the literature shows how some studies of nonhuman behavior meet the methodological standards appropriate to evolutionary research. However, attempts to generate conclusions about human behavior apply evolutionary ideas nonrigorously & use dubious assumptions to connect their evolutionary analyses to their conclusions. Analyses of major sociobiological proposals about human behavior illustrate this claim. In Open Peer Commentary, comments are offered by: Patrick Bateson (Animal Behavior Sub-Dept, U of Cambridge, England), Jon Beckwith (Microbiology/Molecular Genetics Dept, Harvard Medical School, Boston, Mass), Irwin S. Bernstein (Psychology Dept, U of Georgia, Athens), Patricia Smith Churchland (Philosophy Dept, U of California San Diego, La Jolla), Patricia Draper (Coll of Human Development, Pennsylvania State U, University Park), John Dupré (Dept of Philosophy, Stanford U, Calif), Andrew Fetterman & Garland E. Allen (Biology Dept, Washington U, St. Louis, Mo), Michael T. Ghiselin (California Academy of Sciences, San Francisco), Henry Harpending (Anthropology Dept, Pennsylvania State U, University Park), Timothy D. Johnston (Psychology Dept, U of North Carolina, Greensboro), Michael E. Lamb (Depts of Psychology, Psychiatry, & Pediatrics, U of Utah, Salt Lake City), W. C. McGrew (Psychology Dept, U of Stirling, England), H. C. Plotkin (Psychology Dept, University Coll, London, England), Alexander Rosenberg (Philosophy Dept, U of California, Riverside), Merrilee H. Salmon (Dept of History & Philosophy of Science, U of Pittsburgh, Pa), Peter T. Saunders & Mae-Wan Ho (Mathematics Dept, King's Coll, London, England), Peter Singer (Philosophy Dept, Monash U, Clayton, Victoria, Australia), Eric Alden Smith (Anthropology Dept, U of Washington, Seattle), Peter K. Smith (Psychology Dept, U of Sheffield, England), Elliot Sober (Philosophy Dept, U of Wisconsin, Madison), Nils C. Stenseth (Biology Dept, U of Oslo, Norway), & Donald Symons (Anthropology Dept, U of California, Santa Barbara) in variously titled articles, with a response by Philip Kitcher, titled Confessions of a Curmudgeon, which inquires whether sociobiology faces a last stand, defends high research standards, examines ethical prospects, & considers possible futures for evolutionary approaches to human behavior. 163 References. Modified HA

88T4658

Littlefield, Christine & Lamden, Charles J. (Dept Psychiatry Toron to General Hospital, 200 Elizabeth St Ontario M5G 2C4), Gene-Culture Coevolution and the Strategies of Psychiatric Healing, *Ethology and Sociobiology, 1987, 8, 3(supplement), 151S-163S.

¶ Gene-culture transmission of behavior refers to a mode of psychological development through which genetic information makes certain culture traits more learnable than others. A model of psychiatric healing strategies based on this mechanism of gene-culture coevolution is presented. Evidence from ethnographic, behavior-genetic, & developmental sources indicates that three strategies of psychiatric healing are likely to have evolved from the reciprocating interaction of genotype & culture rather than from cultural factors alone: (1) rejection, in which individuals exhibiting deviant behavior are ostracized from society; (2) renewal in which deviant behavior elicits healing responses from predisposed individuals, & (3) renegotiation, in which social roles are organized in such a way as to accommodate unusual individuals. It is further likely that there are two prerequisites for the development & sustenance of these healing strategies: recognition, a perceptual capacity subtle enough to recognize behavior patterns; & rationalization, a cognitive capacity sophisticated enough to classify events & behaviors into unifying attributional systems. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 46 References. AA

88T4659

Medicus, Gerhard (University Hospital Innsbruck, Anichstr A-602 Austria), Toward an Etho-Psychology: A Phylogenetic Tree of Behavioral Capabilities Proposed as a Common Basis for Communication between Current Theories in Psychology and Psychiatry, *Ethology and Sociobiology, 1987, 8, 3(supplement), 131S-150S

¶ Behavior, emotion, & intellect are capabilities that result from physiological processes in nerve tissues, therefore, it can be argued that phylogenetic laws are valid for these capabilities as well as for the tissues themselves. Here, a phylogenetic branching tree is introduced showing the evolutionary development of behavioral & intellectual capabilities. It is pointed out how this sequence of capabilities can be understood as homologies or as convergently developed in relation to man. It is suggested that this naturalistic model can provide a common basis for communication between proponents of competing theories in the field of psychology. 1 Table, 78 References. HA

88T4660

Rowe, John W. & Kahn, Robert L. (Division on Aging Harvard Medical School, Boston MA 02115), Human Aging: Usual and Successful, *U Science, 1987, 237, 4811, 10 July, 143-149.

¶ Research in aging has emphasized average age-related losses & neglected the substantial heterogeneity of older persons. The effects of the aging process itself have been exaggerated, & the modifying effects of diet, exercise, personal habits, & psychosocial factors underestimated. Within the category of normal aging, a distinction can be made between usual aging, in which extrinsic factors heighten the effects of aging alone, & successful aging, in which extrinsic factors play a neutral or positive role. Research on the risks associated with usual aging & strategies to modify them should help elucidate how a transition from usual to successful aging can be facilitated. HA

88T4661

Walsh, Anthony & Walsh, Patricia A. (Boise State U, ID 8372), The Effects of Immigration, Stigma, and Stress on Biological Effect Blood Pressure Levels, *U International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 353-365.

¶ The morbidity-inducing effects of moving to new sociocultural environments are well documented. The effects of the stress said to be inherent in the immigration & assimilation processes, compounded by the stress of the "tribal stigma" attached to those entering the US from foreign shores, are explored using data from a variety of psychosocial scales.

1900 the family and socialization

38 sociology of the child

88T4662

Aghajanian, Akbar (Dept Sociology Coll Humanities Shiraz U, Iran). The Value of Children in Rural and Urban Iran: A Pilot Study. Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1988, 19, 1, spring, 85-97.

¶ A report on a pilot study of the value of children in Iran. Utilizing interview survey data from 607 Ur & 107 Ru currently married women in Shirez District, perceived utilities & costs of children are examined in the context of Iranian Ru & Ur social structure. Social functions of children, those which reinforce the status of parents in the community, are very important for both Ru & Ur women. Psychological utilities are expressed more by Ur women, & economic utilities by Ru women. Significant inverse relationships are observed between education, consumption of modern goods, employment out of home, & the index of perceived economic utilities of children. Ru/Ur & SE differentials in utility of children are discussed in relation to differential fertility in Iran. 8 Tables, 1 Appendix, 23 References. Modified HA

88T4663

Amato, Paul R. & Ochiltree, Gay (Australian Instit Family Studies, Lewis House 766 Elizabeth St Melbourne Victoria 3000). Child and Adolescent Competence in Intact, One-Parent, and Step-Families: An Australian Study. Journal of Divorce, 1987, 10, 3-4, spring-summer, 75-96.

¶ Five measures of competence—reading ability, everyday life skills, self-esteem, social competence, & impulse control—were investigated among children & adolescents from intact 2-parent families, 1-parent families, & stepfamilies in Australia. Interviews were conducted with 195 students aged 8-10 & 207 students aged 14-17 randomly selected from 57 primary & 57 secondary schools in Victoria in 1982/83; their parents were interviewed separately at home. Controlling for SES, students in 1-parent families were similar to those in 2-parent ones, while those in stepfamilies scored lower on reading ability, impulse control, & self-esteem. Children in intact 2-parent families scored lower on everyday skills performance than did their counterparts in the other family types. It is concluded that children in single-parent homes are not disadvantaged in the development of competence, while those in stepfamilies may experience some problems. 5 Tables, 47 References. Modified HA

88T4664

Blumenfeld, Phyllis C., Pintrich, Paul R. & Hamilton, V. Lee (School Education U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109). Children's Concepts of Ability, Effort, and Conduct. American Educational Research Journal, 1986, 23, 1, spring, 95-104.

¶ It is hypothesized that children's self-perceptions of ability may reflect assessments of their effort & good conduct as well as academic performance. Determinants of ability judgments were assessed via open-ended interviews with second & sixth graders ($\Sigma N = 158$) in Mc & Wc schools to examine intercorrelations among self-ratings of ability, effort, & conduct, & to explore criteria used for these judgments. Results indicate that the concepts are interrelated, but distinguishable, for children, regardless of gender or grade. Effort emerges as a conceptual & empirical bridge between ability & conduct, & absolute rather than comparative standards are used in making self-ratings. It is suggested that more attention be paid to the impact of classroom context on children's judgments of these concepts. 1 Table, 22 References. Modified HA

88T4665

Carlson, Bonnie E. (Nelson Rockefeller Coll Public Affairs State U New York, Albany 12222). Children's Beliefs about Punishment. American Journal of Orthopsychiatry, 1986, 56, 2, Apr, 308-312.

¶ In examination of the assertion that family violence is linked to the physical punishment of children, brief vignettes depicting a child misbehaving were presented to 201 children aged 9-12 who were asked to provide a "parental" response. Although few recommended physical punishment, the findings suggest that for some children, physical punishment & aggression are associated. It is concluded that physical punishment within families plays a prominent role in normalizing aggression against family members for some children. 1 Table, 13 References. Modified HA

88T4666

Cohn, Anne Harris & Daro, Deborah (National Committee Prevention Child Abuse, 332 South Michigan Ave Suite 950 Chicago IL 60604-4357). Is Treatment Too Late: What Ten Years of Evaluative Research Tell Us. Child Abuse and Neglect, 1987, 11, 3, 433-442.

¶ A review of data from 4 studies that evaluated the efficacy of 89 US demonstration treatment programs serving 3,253 families experiencing difficulties with child abuse & neglect between 1974 & 1982. The studies document treatment approaches that improve the client's functioning & suggest that treatment programs had greater success with clients experiencing difficulty with sexual abuse, than with clients with other difficulties. Overall the studies show that 33+% of the parents served by these projects maltreated their children while in treatment, & 50+% continued to be judged likely to mistreat their children following termination. 3 Tables. Modified HA

88T4667

Corsaro, William A. (Dept Sociology Indiana U, Bloomington 47405). Routines in the Peer Culture of American and Italian Nursery School Children. Journal of Education, 1988, 61, 1, Jan, 1-14.

¶ A comparative microethnographic study of peers & peer culture of nursery school children in the US & Italy ($\Sigma N = 60$) is reported. Data from participant observation of 1,159 interactive episodes reveals the importance of basic routines in the peer culture of young children for their development of communicative skills & social knowledge. The possibility of universal features of young children's peer cultures is explored & an interpretive perspective of childhood socialization is developed. The peer culture of preschool children is viewed as involving the children's continual communal attempts to grasp & control a social order that is first presented to them by adults but that eventually becomes their own reproduction. 41 References. Modified HA

88T4668

Domino, George & Hannah, Mo Therese (Dept Psychology U Arizona, Tucson 85721). A Comparative Analysis of Social Values of Chinese and American Children. Journal of Cross-Cultural Psychology, 1987, 18, 1, Mar, 58-77.

¶ A set of 701 stories generated by 80 Chinese & 80 US children aged 11-13 (from Beijing & Los Angeles, Calif) was submitted to content & factor analyses that yielded 4 factors common to both groups, 1 unique factor for the Chinese sample & 2 for the US sample. A stepwise discriminant function analysis of the common factors indicated significant differences between Chinese & US children, & significant sex differences in the US sample only. The results support the hypotheses that Chinese stories evidence greater social orientation, greater concern with authority & with moral-ethical rectitude, & greater saliency of the role of natural forces & chance, & contain more affective elements, fewer instances of physical aggression, & less economic orientation. The results are taken to reflect cultural differences, which in turn are the result of myriad aspects, from differential childrearing to differing sociopolitical climates. 3 Tables, 42 References. HA

88T4669

Eggebeen, David John (U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514). Parents and Siblings of America's Preschool Children: 1940-1980. Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 487-A-488-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711108.

88T4670

Fischer, Gloria J. (Washington State U, Pullman 99164). Hispanic and Majority Student Attitudes toward Forcible Date Rape as a Function of Differences in Attitudes toward Women, Sex Roles, 1987, 17, 1-2, July, 93-101.

¶ A comparison of attitudes toward date rape held by majority (Anglo) & minority (Hispanic) M & F students at the U of New Mexico ($\Sigma N = 290$). G J Fischer's survey of attitudes toward forcible date rape ("College Student Attitudes toward Forcible Date Rape. 1. Cognitive

An International Journal Focusing on Third World Development Problems

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT DIALOGUE

United Nations Centre for Regional Development Nagoya Japan

PAST ISSUES

Regional Development Planning for Disaster Prevention (Spring 1988), guest editor, E. L. Quarantelli Shelter and Services for the Poor in Metropolitan Regions (Winter 1987), guest editor, Stephen H. K. Yeh Environmental Planning and Management: Focus on Inland Waters (Autumn 1987), guest editors, Surin Setamanit and Michio Hashimoto

Planning for Local Social Development (Summer 1987), guest editors, Raymond Apthorpe and Michael M. Cernea

Training in Information Systems for Local and Regional Planning (Spring 1987), guest editor, Marvin L. Manheim

Financing Local and Regional Development (Autumn 1986), guest editor, Larry Schroeder

Local Social Development Planning (Spring 1986), guest editors, Harry
W. Blair and Diana Conyers

Services for the Urban Poor: Issues on Implementation, Access, and Participation (Autumn 1985), guest editor, John D. Montgomery

FORTHCOMING ISSUES

Eastern Africa Rural Development Experience: Issues and Strategies in Local-Level Development (Summer 1988), guest editor, Richard S.
Odingo and Achola-Pala Okeyo

Innovative Planning Strategies for Metropolitan Development and Conservation (Autumn 1988)

Employment, Livelihoods for the Urban Poor: Issues and Strategies in Metropolitan Planning (Winter 1988), guest editor, Yue-man Yeung

Regional Development Policies and Planning in Africa (Special issue 1988), guest editor, R. A. Obudho

Annual subscription: Developing countries US$20; Developed Countries
US$40

Address: United Nations Centre for Regional Development, Nagoya
1-47-1, Nakamura-ku, Nagoya 450, Japan; Phone: (052) 561-9377;
Fax: (052) 561-9375; Telex: J59620 UNCENTRE; Cable: UNCENTRE NAGOYA

cial knowledge & the social knowledge, behavior, & sociometric status of the children were also investigated, revealing significant relations. Implications of these findings in terms of the determinants of SS & preventive intervention programs are discussed. 8 Tables, 28 References. Modified HA

88T4679

Reiter, Shmrit, Mar'i, Sami & Rosenberg, Yaffa (School Education Haifa U, Mount Carmel 31999 Israel), Parental Attitudes toward the Developmentally Disabled among Arab Communities in Israel: A Cross-Cultural Study, International Journal of Rehabilitation Research/Internationale Zeitschrift für Rehabilitationsforschung/Revue Internationale de Recherches de Réadaptation, 1986, 9, 4, 355-362

* The attitudes of parents toward their developmentally disabled children were investigated. Parents (N = 184 Muslim, 106 Druze, & 68 Christian Rs) receiving services from the Child Development Clinic of Nahariya Hospital, Israel, in 1980-1982 were interviewed separately, using a questionnaire developed from H. E. Yunker's, J. R. Block's, & W. J. Campbell's A Scale to Measure Attitudes towards Disabled Persons (New York: Albertson, 1960). Attitudes were generally found to be positive, especially among the Druze. A possible explanation for this difference based on religious philosophy is suggested. More educated Rs (many of whom were Christians) showed less favorable attitudes. It is concluded that positive attitudes seem to have their roots in past traditions & to be negatively affected by modernization. The importance of enhancing modern concepts relating to the education & rehabilitation of the developmentally disabled is emphasized. 3 Tables, 27 References. Modified HA

88T4680

Scheper-Hughes, Nancy (Dept Anthropology U California, Berkeley 94720), A Children's Diary in the Strict Sense of the Term: Managing Culture-Shocked Children in Brazil, Human Organization, 1987, 46, 1, Spring, 78-83

* An exploration of a specific problem of ethnographic fieldwork—helping children learn to function in a different society based on personal experience with raising three children while doing fieldwork in a Brazilian shantytown, & on diaries & letters written by those children. Problems that are apparent in this material are settling in, dealing with differences, & working out feelings after leaving. Long-term effects include a variety of intrafamilial conflicts whose resolution is uncertain. 11 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4681

Seagull, Elizabeth A. W. (B-240 Life Sciences Coll Human Medicine Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824), Social Support and Child Maltreatment: A Review of the Evidence, Child Abuse and Neglect, 1987, 11, 1, 41-52

* A review of research on the relationship between child maltreatment & parental isolation from informal helping networks. Results indicate that there is little research evidence that lack of social support plays significant role in the etiology of physical abuse. Evidence exists that neglectful parents are socially isolated, but the data suggest that this is one of the manifestations of these parents' problems. Future research should clearly define social support & use reliable & valid instruments to measure it. 79 References. Modified HA

88T4682

Weeks, M. O'Neal & Botkin, Darla R. (U Kentucky, Lexington 40506), A Longitudinal Study of the Marriage Role Expectations College Women: 1961-1984, Sex Roles, 1987, 17, 1-2, July, 49-58

* Changing trends in marriage role expectations among US Coll women across 3 decades are explored using survey data from 1 student enrolled in an introductory marriage & family course at the U of Kentucky, 1961, 1972, 1978, & 1984 ($\Sigma N = 326$). Statistical analysis of data from the Dunn Marriage Role Expectation Inventory reveals that the most dramatic changes occurred between 1961 & 1972, primarily in the form of a shift toward more egalitarian expectations. The rate of change slowed dramatically between 1972 & 1984, & no significant changes occurred between 1978 & 1984. A trend toward more traditional role expectations appears to be developing, which reflects general US social trends. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 7 References. K. Hyatt

88T4683

Willer, Barbara Anne (Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), An Investigation of the Work-Family Interface for Families with Preschool Children, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1030-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709015.

39 adolescence & youth

88T4684

Aitken, P. P., Leather, D. S., O'Hagan, F. J. & Squair, S. I. (Dept Marketing U Strathclyde, Glasgow G4 0RQ Scotland), Children's Awareness of Cigarette Advertisements and Brand Imagery, British Journal of Addiction, 1987, 82, 6, June, 615-622

* Previous qualitative research has suggested that an adult-like perception of the imagery in cigarette advertisements develops between the ages of 10 & 14. Interview data from 726 children aged 6-17 in Glasgow, Scotland, reveal that many older primary school children have a rudimentary awareness of the "brand personalities" projected in the oblique cigarette advertisements permitted in the UK, for they are able to identify cigarette brands in "puzzle" advertisements that do not reveal brand names. Among secondary school children, proportionately more smokers than nonsmokers report that they have seen the advertisements previously & are able to correctly identify the brands. It is concluded that cigarette advertising is definitely getting through to young people, particularly underage smokers. 3 Tables, 8 References. Modified HA

88T4685

Barber, Brian K. (Brigham Young U, Provo UT 84602), Adolescent Self-Esteem in the Family System: A Cross-National Study, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 755-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713497.

88T4686

Bethune, Norma & Ballard, Keith D. (U Otago, Dunedin New Zealand), Interviews with 50 Young Job Seekers on Their Experience of Unemployment, ♦ New Zealand Journal of Educational

Studies, 1986, 21, 2, Nov, 133-144

* Four aspects of unemployment were examined in individual interview with 50 young people in Dunedin, New Zealand, who were unemployed, educational background, transition from school to work, the experience of being unemployed, & perceptions of their situation. Longer duration of unemployment were shown to be associated with lower levels of academic attainment. Disrupted daily routines & social contacts were reported, as were several indicators that these young people were feeling stressed. Unemployment was also shown to be associated with lowered levels of physical & mental health. Rs reported negative reactions from family, friends, & others in the community, as well as from government departments dealing with unemployed people, 70% attributed their unemployment to personal deficiencies, & most questioned the relevance & usefulness of work preparation programs. 2 Tables, 20 References. H.

88T4687

Brady, Sharon Craig Smith (Texas Women's U, Denton 76204), The Effects of a Pre-Parenting Information Course on the Parenting Knowledge of Pregnant Adolescents, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1027-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715025.

88T4688

Chen, Clarence L. & Yang, Dorothy C. Y. (Albert Einstein Coll Medicine, Bronx NY 10461), The Self Image of Chinese-American Adolescents: A Cross-Cultural Comparison, The International Journal of Social Psychiatry, 1986, 32, 4, winter, 19-26.

* The self-concept of a sample of 267 Chinese-American adolescents was Predictors," Archives of Sexual Behavior, 1986, 15, 457-466) was modified to measure various dimensions of ethnicity-bilingual ability & bicultural background - & was anonymously completed by Rs. Results of regression analyses reveal that, overall, Hispanics held more traditional attitudes toward women than did their Anglo counterparts & less rejecting attitudes toward forcible rape. However, these differences were not solely a function of ethnicity, but varied by gender & interethnic degree of biculturalism, bilingualism, & assimilation. It is concluded that future research investigating alleged Hispanic-Anglo differences must define "Hispanic" more specifically, i.e., include measures of biculturalism, bilingualism, & assimilation along with self-reports of ethnic status. 4 Tables, 8 References K Hyatt

88T4671

Groze, Victor (Dept Sociology U Oklahoma, Norman 73019), Special-Needs Adoption, Children and Youth Services Review, 1986, 8, 4, 363-373

¶ The last fifteen years have seen more adoptions of children with special needs, but many such adoptions are later disrupted. Here, data collected from home study reports, supervision reports, & adoption finalization/disruption reports (N = 91 cases) of a private, nonprofit agency in a large southwestern city that specializes in special-needs adoption are analyzed. Several factors are found to influence adoption outcome, including age of the child, presence of other children in the home, placement number, age of the woman, family income, & type of placement. The reasons for these findings & their implications are briefly discussed. 4 Tables, 9 References. Modified HA

88T4672

Huntington, Gertrude Enders (Dept Anthropology U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), Different Apron Strings: Children as Field Assistants, Human Organization, 1987, 46, 1, spring, 83-85

¶ Based on personal experience, described is how taking her baby with her allowed an anthropologist/mother doing fieldwork to participate both practically & emotionally in the parenting practices of the host culture, as she nursed her baby, she learned the Amish patterns & etiquette of nursing. The question is raised of whether field ethnology can ever be complete without the participation of children. However, the anthropologist/mother must carefully assess the effect her children will have on the host culture, as well as the effect the experience will have on her children & her fieldwork. These matters should be critically considered in light of the culture being studied & the age, sex, & temperament of the individual child who is tied to an anthropologist/mother's atypical apron strings. Modified AA

88T4673

Ichilov, Orit & Shadmi, Chana (Tel-Aviv U, Ramat-Aviv 69978 Israel), Working Mothers: Some Consequences from a First and Second Graders' Perspective, International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 273-289.

¶ The extent to which children whose mothers are gainfully employed outside the household feel deprivation concerning basic daily routines as compared with children whose mothers are housewives is examined, as are factors related to children's satisfaction with mothers' work, based on interview data from 150 first & second graders (of whom 98 had employed mothers) in the Tel Aviv, Israel, area. Despite differences in daily routine, the two groups of children reported similar levels of satisfaction. Children whose mothers are employed full time feel more deprived concerning feeding arrangements & time spent with mother than children whose mothers work part time. However, none of the antecedent variables is significantly related to children's overall satisfaction with mothers' employment. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 47 References. Modified HA

88T4674

Jones, David P. H. (Park Hospital Children, Old Rd Headington Oxford OX3 7LQ England), The Untreatable Family, Child Abuse and Neglect, 1987, 11, 3, 409-420.

¶ A review of studies of untreatable families—those who do not respond to rehabilitative attempts in child abuse cases. The frequency of untreatability is evaluated; the various studies report that 16%-60% of such parents continue to abuse their children. Parental factors associated with a poor outcome include (1) parental history of severe abuse, (2) persistent denial of abusive behavior, (3) refusal to accept help, (4) severe personality disorder, (5) mental handicap complicated by personality disorder, (6) parental psychosis with delusions involving the child, & (7) alcohol/drug abuse. Recognition of untreatability may help reduce burnout

& diversion of limited resources. 3 Tables, 48 References. Modified J

88T4675

Kokkevi, Anna & Agathonos, Helen (c/o Agathonos-Institut Ch Health, Athens GR-11527 Greece), Intelligence and Personality Profile of Battering Parents in Greece: A Comparative Study, Child Abuse and Neglect, 1987, 11, 1, 93-99.

¶ To assess the intelligence & personality characteristics of battering parents, the Wechsler Adult Intelligence Scale & R. B. Cattell's 16 Personality Factor Questionnaire were administered to 33 battering parents & 33 matched controls in Greece. No differences were found in the IQs of battering fathers compared with the controls, but battering mothers' IQs were significantly lower than IQs found in the control group. Battering mothers also exhibited greater shyness, restraint, timidity, threat sensitivity, lack of discipline, & self-conflict. Results are discussed & interpreted within the context of Greek cultural characteristics. 3 Tables, References. Modified HA

88T4676

Levine, Nancy E. (Dept Anthropology U California, Los Angeles 90024), Differential Child Care in Three Tibetan Communities: Beyond Son Preference, Human Population and Development Review, 1987, 13, 2, June, 281-304.

¶ An examination of the cultural & social-structural factors associated with assessments of child value, patterns of differential child care, child survival among ethnic Tibetans in northwest Nepal. Data were collected through 1982/83 fieldwork in 3 poor agricultural communities Humla District, encompassing 53 fertility histories & in-depth interview with 10 Ms & 10 Fs in each community. Factors implicated in this assessment include not only sex biases, but also child sibling positions, parents' marital stability, child legitimacy, & the state of the household economy. An evaluation of the expressed rationales for discrimination between children examines how they are supported by the notion that rights to limited household resources depend on the individual's value that household & by a complex of folk beliefs that obscure responsibility for child illness & death. Because of the complex factors involved & intra- & intercommunity variations, informant-originated models of differential child care become especially valuable for identifying potential children at risk, the mechanisms likely to be involved in differential care, the household members responsible for child value assessments & household resource allocations. 4 Tables, 54 References. HA

88T4677

Morris, Monica B. (Dept Sociology California State U, Los Angeles 90032), Children's Perceptions of Last-Chance Parents: Some Implications of Current Trends toward Late Childbearing, Child Welfare, 1987, 66, 3, May-June, 195-205.

¶ An analysis of what it means to be the child of older parents, based on interview data from 18 now-adult children of parents who were aged 52 when the Rs were born. About 50% expressed either satisfaction about being late babies or felt unaffected by it. The rest felt their parents' age affected their lives significantly & usually, negatively. On the positive side, Rs considered their parents more secure, emotionally & financially, than younger parents. Negative perceptions included: shame of older parents' appearance, inability of older fathers to join in activities; lack of communication; & concerns over parents' mortality. If Rs would choose late parenting for themselves or recommend it to others, several offered ideas about enhancing the happiness of late-born children. The quantity of time that parents—or substitutes—spend with children seems especially important in children's sense of well-being. 10 Figures. Modified AA

88T4678

Putallaz, Martha (Dept Psychology Duke U, Durham NC 27701), Maternal Behavior and Children's Sociometric Status, Child Development, 1987, 58, 2, Apr, 324-340.

¶ An examination of the relation between maternal behavior observed during the play sessions of mother-child pairs & the children's social behavior & sociometric status, based on sociometric questionnaires administered to first-graders (N not given), videotapes of pairs of children mothers interacting (N = 84), & follow-up questionnaires. In addition, the relation between the children's sociometric status & maternal behavior exhibited when interacting with another mother, as well as dyadic behavior, was assessed. Results indicated that behaviors exhibited in all 3 contexts (i.e., mother-child, mother-mother, child-child interaction) were related to one another & to sociometric status. Maternal tional Longitudinal Survey, New Youth Cohort, 1981 Panel) yields evidence that young unemployed job seekers chose higher levels of search effort (as measured by number of methods used & time spent per method) & lower reservation wages (relative to offered wages) than did comparable employed job seekers. These differences in search choices at least partly explain differences in search outcomes between the two groups: unemployed searchers apparently were more likely than employed searchers to gain new employment, & the wages they obtained were slightly lower. It is argued that the greater search effort by unemployed job seekers is due to the higher costs of search they bear because of foregone earnings. 5 Tables, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4699

Janus, Mark-David, Burgess, Anne W. & McCormack, Arlene (Saint Thomas Aquinas, 46 North Eagleville Rd Storrs CT 06268), Histories of Sexual Abuse in Adolescent Male Runaways, ♦ Adolescence, 1987, 22, 86, summer, 405-417

* Data on sexual victimization in the histories of 89 M runaways at a refugee shelter for homeless youth in Toronto, Ontario, as well as information obtained during interviews on physical victimization, family structure, family financial stability, delinquent & criminal activities, & reasons for running away from home, were evaluated. The population of M runaways evidenced dramatically higher rates of sexual & physical abuse than did randomly sampled populations in previous studies. Sexually abused & nonsexually abused M runaways shared characteristics noted in the literature as common to runaways: problem families, high rates of delinquency, depression, tension, low self-image, & history of physical abuse. Sexually abused M runaways differed from their nonabused counterparts in their reactions to their runaway event, responding in highly avoidant patterns coupled with extreme withdrawal from all types of interpersonal relationships. These differences are explained as consistent with known sequelae of sexual abuse, & the implications for treatment by runaway shelters, & for further research, are suggested. 6 Tables, 59 References. HA

88T4700

Makinen, Raimo (Kasvatustieteiden tutkimuslaitos, Seminaarink 15 SF-40100 Jyväskylä Finland), Perustutkinto-opiskelijan asenne tutkimustyöhön ammattiin (A University Student's Attitude to Research as a Profession), ♦ Kasvatus, 1986, 17, 6, 449-462 (FIN)

* An examination of attitudes toward careers in scientific research held by 556 students at the U of Jyväskylä, Finland. Overall, 36% are favorable, 51% are opposed, & 13% are neutral. Interest is highest among students in the faculty of sciences & lowest among students in the faculties of education & social sciences. Interest is unrelated to stage of studies, except in physical education, where it declines with advancement of studies. Research-oriented students tend to feel that they understand the subject matter of their field & that they are in the right field for them, but they are not the most successful in the matriculation examination & do not make the fastest progress in their studies, sex & SES differences do not affect this finding. 2 Tables, 5 Figures, 9 References. Modified HA

88T4701

Marjoribanks, Kevin (U Adelaide, South Australia 5001), Gender/Social Class, Family Environments and Adolescents' Aspirations, The Australian Journal of Education, 1987, 31, 1, Apr, 43-54

* A follow-up of a survey study of relationships between family environments & the aspirations of 516 South Australian adolescents from 6 gender/SC groups is reported. Family environments were assessed initially when the adolescents were aged 11 via survey data obtained from parents regarding their aspirations for their children & the children's instrumental & affective orientations to learning. When the adolescents were aged 16, their perceptions of their parents' support for learning & of their own aspirations were assessed via survey data. Findings suggest that parents' aspirations have a direct impact on: (1) F adolescents' educational aspirations, & (2) the educational & occupational aspirations of M & W adolescents, after considering the effect on aspirations of the adolescents' perceptions of parents' support. Results also indicate gender/SC differences in the relationships between family environments & adolescents' aspirations. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 35 References. Modified HA

88T4702

McCormack, Arlene, Burgess, Ann Wolbert & Gaccione, Peter (U Lowell, MA 01854), Influence of Family Structure and Financial Stability on Physical and Sexual Abuse among a Runaway Population, UM International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 251-262.

* Interview data from 90 adolescent M & F runaways who entered a Canadian shelter during summer 1984 are used to determine relationship among family structure, family financial stability, & physical & sexual abuse of children. Family financial stability overshadows family structure as a cause of physical abuse; the two interact in determining sexual abuse, which is most frequent in reconstituted families that are financially stable but in broken families that are financially unstable. There is also a significant relationship between family structure & family financial stability. 4 Tables, 42 References. Modified HA

88T4703

Mechanic, David & Hansell, Stephen (Instit Health/Health Care Policy & Aging Research Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903), Adolescent Competence, Psychological Well-Being, and Self-Assessed Physical Health, UM Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 21, 4, Dec, 364-374

* Longitudinal questionnaire data from 1,057 adolescents in 19 NJ public schools indicate that Rs' self-assessments of physical health were influenced by competence in several important areas of adolescent life: by psychological well-being, but not by physical symptoms. Specifically, Rs who reported higher levels of school achievement & more participation in sports & other exercise assessed their health to be better over 1-year period, when initial self-assessment was controlled, than those who reported lower achievement & less participation. Physical health status, as measured by common physical symptoms, was associated cross-sectionally with self-assessed health. Other results show that adolescents who were initially less depressed assessed their health more positively. The inclination among adolescents to associate competence & psychological well-being with self-assessed physical health may contribute to the expression of distress in somatic terms later in life, & may help explain this commonly observed pattern among adults. 3 Tables, 1 Appendix, 36 References. Modified HA

88I4704

Peters, John F. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Wilfrid Laurier U, Waterloo Ontario N2L 3C5), Youth, Family and Employment, ♦ Adolescence, 1987, 22, 86, summer, 465-473

* Some of the functions & dysfunctions of youth employment in contemporary society are discussed, with emphasis on the effects of unemployment on family dynamics. Questionnaire & interview data obtained from 120 young people (aged 15-24) who utilized youth employment center in Ontario over a 2-month period indicate that youth unemployment prolongs residence with parents. The younger the youth, the more tolerant are the parents of the unemployment. It is also found that a daughter's lack of employment in the summer months is more acceptable than a son's, debts are part of the lifestyle of youth after age 18, Ms incur more debts than do Fs, & parents are the major source of financial loans. 1 Table, 13 References. Modified HA

88I4705

Roscoe, Bruce, Goodwin, Megan P. & Kennedy, Donna (Dept Home Economics Central Michigan U, Mount Pleasant 48859), Sibling Violence and Agonistic Interactions Experienced by Early Adolescents, ♦ Journal of Family Violence, 1987, 2, 2, June, 121-137

* An anonymous questionnaire was completed by seventh graders (N = 244) at 2 junior high schools in a Rustic community & a small city to assess: (1) the sources of conflict that led to altercations between siblings; (2) the types of violent behavior exhibited; (3) the effect that sibling gender had on these variables; (4) the methods of conflict resolution employed. Results provide support for previous contentions that violence between siblings is, for the most part, normal & inevitable & represents the most common form of family violence, however, some reports did indicate victimization by siblings. In addition, the emotional climate of families that sanction the use of force against each other may have adverse effects on children's well-being. Teaching strategies of empowerment & nonaggressive conflict resolution relative to sibling interactions is offered as a possible solution. 5 Tables, 30 References. K. Hyatt

88T4706

Schulenberg, John Eugene (Pennsylvania State U, Philadelphia 19104), The Factor Structure of Work Values and Career Interests Continuity and Discontinuity during Adolescence, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1029-A-1030-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714875.

assessed using the Offer Self-Image Questionnaire, & this group was compared with standard samples of US & Chinese adolescents. As expected, the Chinese-American group very closely resembled the US group & differed markedly from the Chinese group. The few areas in which the Chinese-American group significantly differed from their US peers, such as on the Sexual Attitudes scale, appeared to be in a direction that was influenced by Chinese culture. The poorer adjustment shown on the Body & Self-Image scale by the Chinese-American adolescents points to the effect of racial stereotyping in the US. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 19 References. Modified HA

88T4689

Choudhary, Ram Krishna (Dept Sociology Centre Research Social Change Punjabi U, Patiala 147002 Punjab India), Achievement Orientation and Career Pattern of Rural Jat Youth in a Haryana Village, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 123-130

¶ Various theoretical perspectives on determinants of achievement orientations among Ru youth both in the West & in India are reviewed. Data from M youths (aged 15-35) of the Jat population of a village in Haryana State are used to identify determinants of achievement motivation. These include position within the family, birth order, social environment, & sex, socialization processes & education are also important influences. Achievement potentials are generally very low due to low family income, large families, low education, lack of job-oriented vocations, & parental attitudes. 8 References. W H Stoddard

88T4690

Clark, J. E. Bud, The Portland Formula: Family, Business, and Community, ♦UM The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 494, Nov, 145-147.

¶ The city of Portland, Ore, recognizes that past solutions to reducing crime & violence have not worked. The innovations of Mayor Bud Clark's administration are based on family, business, & community, eg, service centers provide family-like supports for high-risk youth & coordinate closely with job training & placement through one regional private industry council. Also, the Portland police are becoming more citizen-oriented & community-based. Top-down planning for youth employment through a leaders' round table is being complemented with efforts to initiate youth enterprises at the block level. HA

88T4691

Demo, David H., Small, Stephen A. & Savin-Williams, Ritch C. (Dept Sociology Virginia Polytechnic Instit, Blacksburg 24061), Family Relations and the Self-Esteem of Adolescents and Their Parents, ♦UM Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 705-715

¶ An examination of the effects of parent-adolescent communication, focusing on dimensions of parent-adolescent interaction that predict parents' self-esteem. Analysis of questionnaire data obtained from 139 parent-adolescent dyads suggests that (1) adolescents & their parents have similar but distinct perceptions of their relationships, & (2) self-perceptions of these relationships, especially self-judgments of communication, are important in predicting levels of self-esteem for both adolescents & their parents. The discussion considers gender differences in the relationships reported, the central role of communication within the family unit, & the reciprocal character of parent-adolescent socialization. 6 Tables, 39 References. Modified HA

88T4692

Ebata, Aaron Toshiaki (Pennsylvania State U, Philadelphia 19104), A Longitudinal Study of Psychological Distress during Early Adolescence, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1027-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714811.

88T4693

Eizner, Nicole (Centre national recherche scientifique, F-75700 Paris France), Les Modes de vie des jeunes ruraux (The Lifestyles of Rural Youth), ♦ Futuribles, 1987, 109, Apr, 51-65 (FRE)

¶ Transformations in the worldview of Ru Christian youth are explored using survey data from young Christians (N = 150) in 8 regions of France, indicators of social & cultural change included views on politics, leisure, values, & work. The results reveal: an interest & willingness to become involved in local problems; greater value accorded to work than to country; an interest in the Third World, an acute sense of unity with other youth, a rejection of world politics, accompanied by a feeling of inability to understand the complexities of the world; a lack of generation barriers, as indicated by the acceptance of adults; & an understanding of the transitional aspect of the status of youth. AA Tr & Modified HA D. Graves

88T4694

Eliam, Talila & Schwarzwald, Joseph (Bar-Ilan U, Ramat-Gan, 52100 Israel), Social Orientation among Israeli Youth: A Cross-Cultural Perspective, UM Journal of Cross-Cultural Psychology, 1987, 18, 1, Mar, 31-44.

¶ E. McClintock, M. Bayard, & C. G. McClintock ("The Socialization of Social Motivation in Mexican-American Families" in Garcia, F. J. (Ed), The Mexican-American Child: Language, Cognition, and Social Development, Tempe, Ariz. Center of Bilingual Education, 1983) argue that the more competitive & less cooperative orientation of Anglo-American vs Mexican-American children is a product of underlying cultural differences in mediating familial factors such as interdependence, size, & delegation of authority, as well as peer exposure. The cultural distinction between Western & Middle Eastern Jews in Israel displays parallel differences in these socialization factors, thereby offering an opportunity for cross-cultural validation of their model. G. P. Knight's & Kagan's (see SA 27 1/79J6907) social behavior scale was completed by a sample of 480 students, balanced for ethnicity (Western/Middle Eastern), age (10-11/16-17 years), & ecology (Ur/Ru). The central finding was that Middle Easterners were more cooperative than Westerners. Ru settings, but not in Ur ones. Discussion focuses on the differential pace of acculturation among Ru Middle Easterners & the implications of ethnic differences for educational programming. 2 Tables, 46 References. HA

88T4695

Ferrarotti, Franco (via Appennini 42, I-00198 Rome Italy), Riflessioni sull'adolescenza (Reflections on Adolescence), ♦UM La Critica Sociologica, 1986-87, 80, Jan-Mar, 120-129 (ITA)

¶ An evaluative interpretation of survey data gathered by AIED (the Italian Assoc for Demographic Education). Questionnaire interviews were conducted with a nationwide sample of 20,000 Italian adolescents divided into 3 age groups: under 15, 15-17, & 18-19. Survey topics included family relations & relations with peer group & the opposite sex. Some limitations of the survey method are noted. A discussion of the findings focuses on the ambiguity of adolescence, caught between the needs for self-assertion & for security, & the challenge this represents for existing institutions. As yet, the schools have failed to respond to the demand for greater flexibility & imagination. Modified HA

88T4696

Galland, Olivier (Centre national recherche scientifique, F-75700 Paris France), Une nouvelle jeunesse? (A New Youth?), Futuribles, 1987, 109, Apr, 25-49 (FRE)

¶ French national statistics are used to examine trends in the patterns of entrance into adulthood: extension of time spent in school, later entrance into the L.F., delay in leaving parents' home, postponement of marriage & appearance of intermediate ways of life (young people living alone as unmarried couples) between paternal & procreating family. The current lengthening of this transitional period between adolescence & adulthood is attributed to three economic & sociological causes, results from (1) the persisting imbalance between supply & demand in the labor market, (2) the desire to attain higher & more; & (3) the marital strategy of young girls, who, having achieved a higher educational level tend to postpone marriage to pursue professional goals. These three closely linked tendencies give shape to a new stage in the life course: a new style to youth. 1 Figure, 15 Graphs. Modified AA

88T4697

Guest, Betty Bradley Junkin (Texas Women's U, Denton 76204), The Influence of Significant Others in Adolescents' Academic Self-Concept Development, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1028-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715007.

88T4698

Holzer, Harry J. (Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824), The Search by Employed and Unemployed Youth, Industrial and Labor Relations Review, 1987, 40, 4, July, 601-611.

¶ Analysis of data on 1,047 US Ms aged 16-23 who were not enrolled in school or the military & reported actively seeking initial/new jobs (N

tacts, Archives of Sexual Behavior, 1987, 16, 1, Feb, 1-25

¶ An examination of changes in interpersonal sexual scripts for oral genital sex for cohorts of white, Coll-educated young people who entered young adulthood between 1928 & 1943 & between 1963 & 1967. Data were obtained from studies conducted by A. C. Kinsey et al in the 1940s (eg, see Sexual Behavior in the Human Male, Philadelphia: Saunders, 1948), & from interviews conducted in the 1960s with 1,200 students. Ms in the earlier cohort had an excess of fellatio during the premarital period from erotic contacts with prostitutes & transient partners. In contacts with potential marital partners & in marriage, Ms & Fs had equivalent rates of oral sex, indicating a greater sexual reciprocity in these affectional relationships. In the latter cohort, M & F rates of oral sex before marriage are substantially greater than for the earlier period, but are equivalent for both genders. In both periods oral sex is most common among the coitally experienced & is initiated by Ms. Evidence is found for an increased amount of sexual activity unlinked to marriage. M participation in oral sex seems responsive to opportunity, lowered moral inhibition, & emotional commitment while Fs' participation seems more linked to features of the ongoing relationship. In a review of studies in the 1970s & 1980s, a further major increase in the incidence of oral sex in the period before marriage can be found. It is concluded that oral sex has become, over the last 50 years, part of the sexual scripts of many young people & is a common, though not necessarily a frequent, component of sexual relations in contemporary marriage. 1 Table, 26 References. AA

88T4715

Hatfield, Elaine & Rapson, Richard L. (U Hawaii Manoa, Honolulu 96822), Passionate Love/Sexual Desire: Can the Same Paradigm Explain Both?, Archives of Sexual Behavior, 1987, 16, 3, June, 259-278.

¶ A review of research conducted by experimental social psychologists & sex researchers on passion, highlighting differences between the two groups' approaches to & definitions of the concept, particularly in their emphasis on "passionate love" & "sexual desire." The different roles that they attribute to cognitive, behavioral, & physiological factors in explaining passion are examined, with emphasis on the role of anxiety in intensifying or diminishing passion. A new paradigm of passionate love/sexual desire is advanced, & it is suggested that researchers join forces in order to more fully understand the complexities of this phenomenon. 1 Appendix, 52 References. K Hyatt

88T4716

Juhasz, Anne McCreary, Kaufman, Barry & Meyer, Harris (Loyola U, Chicago 60611), Adolescent Attitudes and Beliefs about Sexual Behavior, Child & Adolescent Social Work Journal, 1986, 3, 3, fall, 177-193.

¶ A sexual attitude questionnaire survey of 451 Chicago, Ill, teenagers (222 Ms & 229 Fs aged 15-18) is reported. Focus is on attitudes & values related to sexual activity, & to parental & school involvement & responsibility for sex education. Findings are reported as they relate to 6 important sexual decisions: whether or not to have intercourse, have children, use contraceptives, have an abortion, give the baby up for adoption, or marry. Lack of communication, feelings that parents were unaware of their teenagers' sexual behavior, & uncertainty & confusion about their sexual feelings also surfaced. 8 Tables, 1 Figure, 33 References. Modified HA

88T4717

Kelley, Jonathan (Instit Advanced Studies Australian National U, Canberra ACT 2601), A Theory of Human Sexuality, International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 1, Spring, 125-142.

¶ A systematic theory of sexual attitudes & behavior is developed that attempts to bring some theoretical order to an area that has little theory, to describe some important links between sex & social structure, & to derive some new predictions. Because sex is highly pleasurable, it reinforces everything associated with it, & so, once begun, is likely to continue, even more so in circumstances that make it especially enjoyable. Because it reinforces further contacts with the partner, sex makes formation of stable bonds, love, & eventual marriage more likely. This provides a clear incentive for people to control their sexual behavior—a way that maximizes rewards from marriage & for society to regulate it. Since marriage is more rewarding with partners who rank high in education, occupation, income, & other valued traits, social stratification crucially influences who is sexually permissive, with whom, at what stage in the life cycle, & under what circumstances. 39 References. HA

88T4718

Leavy, Richard L. & Adams, Eve M. (Ohio Wesleyan U, Delaware 43015), Feminism as a Correlate of Self-Esteem, Self-Acceptance, and Social Support among Lesbians, Journal of Psychology of Women Quarterly, 1986, 10, 4, Dec, 321-326.

¶ It was hypothesized that, among lesbians, agreement with feminist ideology & participation in feminist activities would correlate positively with self-esteem, self-acceptance, & social support. Demographic variables were also examined as correlates. Rs were contacted through 11 lesbian, gay, & feminist organizations & establishments & asked to complete a research questionnaire, yielding 123 usable responses. Age & current involvement in a lesbian relationship were significantly related to self-esteem, self-acceptance, & social support. Participation in feminist activities also correlated with self-acceptance. The results give tentative, but important, information useful in understanding the correlates of self-esteem & support among lesbians. 2 Tables, 15 References. HA

88T4719

Lee, John Alan (U Toronto, Scarborough Ontario M1C 1A4), What Can Homosexual Aging Studies Contribute to Theories of Aging?, Journal of Homosexuality, 1987, 13, 4, summer, 43-71.

¶ In the context of a review of sociological research studies of aging, the process of aging in homosexual Ms is examined on the basis of a 4-year longitudinal interview/questionnaire survey of 47 homosexual Ms aged 50-80. The question is examined of whether successful weathering of the coming-out crisis gives homosexual Ms strengths unavailable to aging heterosexuals. The question of allied & aversive relationships between young & old gay Ms is also explored. 119 References. Modified HA

88T4720

Lynch, Frederick R. (Dept Criminal Justice California State U, San Bernardino 92407), Non-Ghetto Gays: A Sociological Study of Suburban Homosexuals, Journal of Homosexuality, 1987, 13, 4, summer, 13-42.

¶ An examination of the lifestyles of white suburban Mc homosexuals, based on interview data collected in 1982 & further ethnographic field data collected through 1985. A coming-out process is typical of Ss, though younger Ss progressed through it much more rapidly than older. Mc orientation & the suburban lifestyle inhibited homosexual identity formation. A strong orientation was seen to work & career building, homeownership, & development of a long term love relationship with another M; values were individualistic & assimilationist rather than oriented to participation in collective identities, movements, or organizations. Friendship bonds compared favorably with M friendships in the general population. These findings suggest that suburban homosexuals are increasingly attracted to the suburbs rather than to large cities & gay ghettos. 35 References. Modified HA

88T4721

McCabe, Marita P. (School Behavioural Sciences Macquarie U, North Ryde New South Wales 2113 Australia), Desired and Experienced Levels of Premarital Affection and Sexual Intercourse during Dating, Journal of Sex Research, 1987, 23, 1, Feb, 23-33.

¶ Australian adolescents' & young adults' attitudes toward & experience of sexual intercourse during dating stages were investigated via a questionnaire including several scales (N = 1,637 Rs aged 16-25). The type of relationship within which intercourse occurred was examined by considering the affectional aspects of dating. Desire for & experience of high levels of caring, commitment, sincerity, & other measures of interpersonal involvement were determined. More men than women both desired & had experienced sexual intercourse, the desired level of intercourse for men was more than actual experience. With increasing involvement in the dating relationship & with increasing age, more men & women both desired & had experienced intercourse. There were no sex or age trends in either desired or experienced levels of affection during dating; these increased with increasing involvement in the relationship. Most men desire & experience sexual intercourse within a caring relationship, but women prefer a greater level of commitment within the relationship. 2 Tables, 15 References. Modified HA

88T4722

McCutcheon, Allan L. (U Delaware, Newark 19711), Sexual Morality, Pro-Life Values, and Attitudes toward Abortion: A Simultaneous Latent Structure Analysis for 1978-1983, Sociological Method

88T4707

Snarey, John (School Education Northwestern U, Evanston IL 60201), Promoting Moral Maturity among Adolescents: An Ethnographic Study of the Israeli Kibbutz, Int Comparative Education Review, 1987, 31, 2, May, 241-259

¶ Kibbutz Ramat Yedidim was the site of a 9-year longitudinal study of moral development that applied Lawrence Kohlberg's model & measure (Essays on Moral Development, Vol 2 The Psychology of Moral Development, San Francisco Harper & Row, 1984). Findings indicate that the kibbutz supported optimal moral development for both its kibbutz-born youth & its nonkibbutz-born youth who were integrated into the community (Snarey, J., "The Cross-Cultural Universality of Social-Moral Development: A Critical Review of Kohlbergian Research," Psychological Bulletin, 1985, 97, spring, 202-232). Here, results of a concurrent ethnographic study of the community's high school are reported, based on interviews with students ($N = 53$) & participant observation, & reasons for the effectiveness of kibbutz moral education are analyzed. Two primary characteristics of the kibbutz system of moral education are described: communal social equality & direct participatory democracy. Specific characteristics of their communal & democratic decision-making process include: (1) framing a problem in terms of moral issues such as equality, fairness, rights, & responsibilities, (2) encouraging an open & diverse expression of not only opinions but also reasons for why the group should decide one way or another; (3) having adult educators who, while being nonauthoritarian & keeping the discussion open, present points of view that challenge & stretch the prevailing view of the group, (4) focusing on genuine issues of daily living & conflicts that arise between group norms & personal desires, & (5) resolving each dilemma or issue in terms of a binding group decision. Modified AA

88T4708

Streetman, Lee G. (Sociology Dept U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104), Contrasts in the Self-Esteem of Unwed Teenage Mothers, Adolescence, 1987, 22, 86, summer, 459-464

¶ The self-esteem of 93 unmarried Fs aged 14-19, 75+% of whom had at least 1 child, was measured via various indices on entry into several state-sponsored training programs in Del. Some significant differences were discovered concerning the impact of early motherhood on these individuals. The symbolic importance of motherhood, as a passage into adult status, & the intervening effects of normative group anchorage may mediate between individuals' cognitive ability & their level of self-esteem. 2 Tables, 18 References. HA

40 sociology of sexual behavior

88T4711

Beis, R. H. (Dept Philosophy Saint Mary's U, Halifax Nova Scotia B3H 3C3), Pornography: The Harm It Does?, International Journal of Moral and Social Studies, 1987, 2, 1, spring, 81-92

¶ Some important criticisms of pornography are examined, & it is argued that they have not shown that pornography causes significant harm to people. Should further research establish that pornography does cause such harm, then it would merit moral condemnation; until then, pornography should be considered morally permissible. 33 References. Modified HA

88T4712

Bernache-Baker, Barbara (Science Dept Loomis Instit, Windsor CT 06095), The Sexual Attitudes and Behavior of Private and Public School Students: A Comparative Study, Adolescence, 1987, 22, 86, summer, 259-269.

¶ To test the oft-stated claims of Coll preparatory (prep) schools that they instill a system of values superior to that possible in public schools, the sexual attitudes & behavior of "preppies" & Coll-bound public school students are compared to each other & to findings from earlier studies of sexuality. Questionnaires were completed by recent graduates of 16 New England prep schools & public schools from across the US (N not provided); in addition, follow-up interviews were conducted with 100 of these Rs. Results indicate that, even when measured by the standards of the schools themselves, preppies rank lower than their public school counterparts in many areas, especially attitudinal, ie, sexual exploitiveness, F self-image, homophobia, & sexism. The sexual activity of the prep school student, both in amount & degree of sophistication, is sig-

88T4709

Sullivan, Terrence & Schneider, Margaret (Ministry Community & Social Services, 3rd Floor Hepburn Block Toronto Ontario M7 1E9), Development and Identity Issues in Adolescent Homosexuality, Child & Adolescent Social Work Journal, 1987, 4, 1, spring, 13-24.

¶ It is argued that homosexual emergence in adolescence must be viewed from a developmentally nonpejorative perspective. In attempting to respond to the special stresses in adolescents who are developing gay or lesbian identities, helping professionals need to develop a familiarity with the unique developmental tasks of gay & lesbian youth, as well as the sexual identity formation literature generally. A review of developmental issues for gay & lesbian youth leads to some thoughts regarding the development of services. 45 References. HA

88T4710

Weller, Susan C., Romney, A. Kimball & Orr, Donald P. (Dept Pediatrics School Medicine U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104), The Myth of a Sub-Culture of Corporal Punishment, Hum Organization, 1987, 16, 1, spring, 39-47

¶ Two questions are addressed: (1) whether adolescents coming from families using physical punishment have disciplinary beliefs similar to adolescents coming from families not using physical punishment; & whether different ethnic groups share similar disciplinary beliefs. An & Hispanic adolescents ($N = 29$ & 27, respectively) were asked to judge the appropriateness of certain disciplinary actions for specific teen misbehaviors, & also asked if "physical punishments" were used in their families. Individual profiles of their questionnaire responses were compared & tested for patterns of clustering indicative of attitudinal subtypes. A cultural consensus model was used to create an empirically derived description of community disciplinary standards & to calculate individual deviance from the standard. Hispanic & Anglo Rs did not differ significantly in their disciplinary attitudes; nor was there a difference in the proportion of each group reporting physical punishment at home. Rather, a single value system was detected, & adolescents reporting physical punishment were more likely to be on the periphery of that item. There appears to be a common set of beliefs concerning appropriate disciplinary actions, & adolescents reporting physical punishment create from this norm. Further, physically punished adolescents do not share a single well-defined set of values among themselves, but instead deviate in a variety of ways from the consensual view. 5 Tables, 38 References. Modified HA nificantly greater than that of public school students, as is sex-related drug use. Hypotheses are advanced to account for differences & suggestions made for further research. 2 Tables, 8 References. Modified

88T4713

Buunk, Bram & Hupka, Ralph B. (U Nijmegen, NL-6500 Netherlands), Cross-Cultural Differences in the Elicitation of Sexual Jealousy, Int Journal of Sex Research, 1987, 23, 1, Feb, 12-2

¶ It is assumed that cultures differ in: (1) incidence of sexual jealousy; (2) range of acceptable strategies for coping with a jealousy situation; (3) behavior evoking sexual jealousy. The last aspect is addressed, questionnaire data from 2,079 U students from 7 industrialized nations: Hungary, Ireland, Mexico, the Netherlands, the USSR, the US, & Yugoslavia. Results show that in nearly all these nations, kissing, flattery, & sexual involvement of one of the partners with an interloper evoke jealousy; dancing, hugging, & sexual fantasies produce a neutral reaction. There are, however, striking cross-national differences in the relative value attached to a particular behavior, & there are cross-cultural sex differences. In all 7 nations, women became more upset when their partner kissed someone else, & men reacted relatively more negatively to sexual fantasies of their partners about another person. The data are discussed in relation to the question of the degree to which human sexual behavior is genetically or culturally determined. 2 Tables, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4714

Gagnon, John J. & Simon, William (Dept Sociology State U New York, Stony Brook 11794), The Sexual Scripting of Oral Genital

41 sociology of the family

88T4730

Ahmed, Ashraf Uddin (Instat Statistical Research & Training U Dhaka, Ramna Bangladesh), Marriage and Its Transition in Bangladesh, International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 49-59

* A synthesis of many perspectives of marriage & family is presented in the context of the sociocultural & economic situation in Bangladesh, drawing on a review of various studies & a discussion of Islamic law & Hindu customs. Marriage appears to be one of the dimensions of social mobility. Evidence is presented that the society is experiencing changes in family formation, mating process, & family type. This transition reflects modern characteristics of the Western world, but in a poor economy. 1 Figure, 12 References. Modified HA

88T4731

Alexander, Pamela C. & Lupfer, Shirley L. (Dept Psychology Memphis State U, TN 38152), Family Characteristics and Long-Term Consequences Associated with Sexual Abuse, Archives of Sexual Behavior, 1987, 16, 3, June, 235-245

* A comparison of some characteristics of the families of origin of women who have experienced father-daughter incest, sexual assault by other nuclear or extended family members, & extrafamilial sexual assault. Questionnaires containing measures of sexual history, functioning, satisfaction, & orientation as well as self-concept & family background were completed by 586 F undergraduates at Memphis State U (Tenn). Results indicate significant differences in the interpersonal relationships between the family members of each group, in particular, Rs who had been abused by nuclear family members described their families as significantly more traditional relative to M-F, parent-child, & husband-wife relationships. However, all of these families were described as less cohesive & less adaptable than were those in which no abuse (either family or nonfamily) had occurred. Long-term effects of sexual abuse on self-concept & subsequent sexual functioning are evident. 3 Tables, 12 References. K. Hyatt

88T4732

Alley, Nancy M. (U Tennessee, Knoxville 37916), Predictors of Mothers' Expectations for Their Newborns' Growth and Development, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 755-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713446.

88T4733

Anderson, Barbara A. & Silver, Brian D. (Sociology Dept U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109-1382), Validity of Survey Responses: Insights from Interviews of Married Couples in a Survey of Soviet Emigrants, ♦ UM Social Forces, 1987, 66, 2, Dec, 537-554

* Data from the Soviet Interview Project General Survey, a study of recent emigrants from the USSR to the US, provide a special opportunity to test for the accuracy of recall & of reporting about others by measuring the level of agreement between the responses of 163 married emigrant couples. The response effect of 2 sources of potential contamination in the interview setting is also tested: having multiple Rs in a family who are interviewed at different times & who thus could discuss the survey, & having third parties present during the interview. The analysis shows a very high level of agreement between spouses on measures of household material status in the USSR (income, wealth, housing space), probably stemming from the high saliency of these measures as status indicators. Contrary to expectations, agreement on neither objective nor subjective questions was affected by possible contamination of the interviews. A low level of agreement on answers to some ostensibly objective questions occurred, however, because the behavior was variant over time, definitions were ambiguous, or the question was not properly administered. The analysis also shows that studying divergent answers by associated pairs of Rs to questions on which there should be substantial agreement can reveal unanticipated ambiguities in question wording & thus can be an aid in the interpretation of survey data. 3 Tables, 1 Appendix, 31 References. HA

88T4734

Arias, Ilana & Beach, Steven R. H. (Dept Psychology U Georgia, Athens 30602), Validity of Self-Reports of Marital Violence, ♦

Journal of Family Violence, 1987, 2, 2, June, 139-149

¶ An exploration of the influence of social desirability on (1) the validity of husbands' & wives' self-reports of marital violence, & (2) the relationship between their tendency to be physical aggressors or victims & previously defined correlates of physical aggression (eg, mood, relationship satisfaction, & personality variables). A demographic questionnaire & 6 standard inventories of marital violence, satisfaction, adjustment, personality, mood, & tendency to give socially desirable responses in test taking were administered to 82 married Ms & 90 married Fs. Results confirm that tendencies to present oneself in a favorable light influence reports of being physically aggressive, but not those of being physically victimized. Thus, existing estimates of the prevalence of spousal violence may be inaccurate, some methodological issues are addressed. However, it is concluded that victims' reports of spousal violence are probably accurate. 1 Table, 17 References. K. Hyatt

88T4735

Aweda, David Alhaji (U Ife, Ife-Ife Nigeria), Social and Cultural Context of Attitudes to Family and Fertility: A Case Study of Nigerian Students in the United States of America, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1986, 23, 3-4, July-Oct, 209-227

¶ Family planning attitudes held by Nigerian students (N = 120) attending US Colls & Us were investigated using mail questionnaire data collected as part of a larger 1971 study (no citation provided). Rs held innovative attitudes toward family planning & fertility control while expressing a desire to practice family planning, they reported being greatly influenced by social pressures (from parents, relatives, friends, & kinsmen) to have larger families. The influence of traditional values, however, appeared to be weak. In addition, population growth in Nigeria was viewed as a threat to the country's future food supply & standard of living, & a large population was not seen as necessary for national defense or economic development. Further research is needed to assess the views of the illiterate masses of young Nigerians. 8 Tables. K. Hyatt

88T4736

Baillargeon, Jean-Paul, Les Mariages religieux, 1976-1985 (Religious Weddings, 1976-1985), ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 341-348 (FRE)

¶ The continuing phenomenon of religious weddings in the French-Canadian population under age 25 is examined, based on 1976, 1980, & 1985 data from the Quebec Bureau of Statistics. In 1985, 75% of weddings were performed in a church, usually by a Catholic priest. Religious ceremonies are less frequent among the older population, because remarriage of divorcees is not condoned by the Catholic Church. The question is raised of whether the choice of a religious vs a civil ceremony is a sign of religious conviction, a search for security, a reaction to divorce, or the result of parental modeling. 2 Tables. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T4737

Ballweg, John A. & Pagtolun-an, Imelda (Virginia Polytechnic Instt & State U, Blacksburg 24061), A Measurement Scale for the Parental Underinvestment Concept, International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 291-305

¶ S. C. M. Scrimshaw (see SA 29 1/811.2777) proposes that parental underinvestment explains infant & child mortality when biological explanations are lacking. A scale designed to measure underinvestment is described. Results from utilization of this scale for 3,486 children in the Philippines are used to assess its validity & reliability & to generate suggestions for its improvement. The possibility of consequences of underinvestment less severe than death is also explored. 6 Tables, 23 References. Modified HA

88T4738

Basker, E. (3080-F Colony Rd, Durham NC 27705), De-Sexing Reproduction: Medical Control of Parenting, International Journal of Moral and Social Studies, 1986, 1, 3, autumn, 235-248

¶ The availability of new reproductive technologies directs attention anew to the power of the medical profession to control parenting & the constitution of the family. A study of all articles referring to ethical issues in artificial insemination by donor & in vitro fertilization in medical journals in the US, Canada, & GB in the 1980s highlights the role of MDs as arbiters, gatekeepers, & decisionmakers in reproduction for the infertile. Where the nineteenth century saw the medicalization of sex, the present issue is the de-sexing of reproduction by medical intervention. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 23 References. HA and Research, 1987, 16, 2, Nov, 256-275.

¶ A simultaneous latent class analysis of data from the 1978 & 1983 General Social Surveys (N = 2,910 Rs) is used to clarify the current controversy over whether opposition to abortion reflects a conservative sexual morality or prolife values. Results indicate that the prolife & prochoice dichotomy represents an incomplete characterization of the US public—a third group, characterized by a conservative sexual morality & opposition to discretionary abortion, but not to nondiscretionary abortion, must also be included in the classification. The evidence indicates that from 1978 to 1983, this sexually conservative group decreased from 33% to 25% of the US adult population, the prochoice increased to approximately 50%, & the prolife class remained stable at approximately 25%. 3 Tables, 26 References. Modified HA

88T4723

Richardson, Diane (Dept Sociological Studies U Sheffield, S10 2TN England), Recent Challenges to Traditional Assumptions about Homosexuality: Some Implications for Practice, Journal of Homosexuality, 1987, 13, 4, summer, 1-12

¶ Therapists in the past decade have adopted a new attitude toward homosexuality that emphasizes helping homosexuals adjust positively to their orientation rather than trying to cure them of it. This change has not questioned the basic assumptions that seek to explain homosexuality. Recent theoretical inquiries, however, have challenged the traditionally held view that people have an essential sexuality, unchanging throughout their lives, that is either heterosexual or homosexual. It is suggested that "the homosexual," as a specific type of person, is an invention. The therapeutic value & difficulties of acknowledgement that sexual preference may change over time are considered, as are the proper goals in the case of a person who seeks help in changing from a homosexual to a heterosexual orientation. 36 References. Modified HA

88T4724

Smith, Holly & Israel, Edie (3400 Broadway, Boulder CO 80302), Sibling Incest: A Study of the Dynamics of 25 Cases, Child Abuse and Neglect, 1987, 11, 1, 101-108.

¶ A study of sibling incest, based on interview & observational data collected from 25 families with open cases being monitored within the Boulder County (Colo) Dept of Social Services. A significant pattern of common dynamics was observed, including these aspects: (1) distant, inaccessible parents, (2) parental stimulation of sexual climate in the home, & (3) family secrets, especially with regard to extramarital affairs. Implications of these findings suggest predictable patterns in this type of incest, & intervention strategies & therapeutic approaches are discussed. 10 References. Modified HA

88T4725

Smith, M. Dwayne & Hand, Carl (Dept Sociology Tulane U, New Orleans LA 70118-5698), The Pornography/Aggression Linkage: Results from a Field Study, U Deviant Behavior, 1987, 8, 4, 389-399

¶ Renewed concern over the possible effects of pornography has been sparked by a "new" body of research. Foremost among these concerns is the possibility of a linkage between viewing pornography & subsequent aggressive behavior, especially toward women. However, the vast majority of this research is limited to laboratory settings. A field experiment is described that assesses the impact of presenting a pornographic movie on a southern US Coll campus. A longitudinal self-report study of 230 F students was conducted to determine any effects of the film's showing on the sample's experiences with aggression from Ms. Compared with the weeks prior to & following the movie's showing, no significant difference in reported aggression was found. Further, Fs reporting association with Ms attending the movie reported no significantly different levels of experienced aggression from Fs whose companions did not view the film. Reasons for the apparent lack of effect are discussed in light of the laboratory-based literature. 2 Tables, 31 References. HA

88T4726

Sommers-Flanagan, Rita & Walters, H. A. (Dept Clinical Psychology U Montana, Missoula 59801), The Incest Offender, Power, and Victimization: Scales on the Same Dragon, U Journal of Family Violence, 1987, 2, 2, June, 163-175.

¶ An exploration of some factors that cause & maintain incest on both the individual & societal level in the US. Based on a historical, cross-cultural analysis of sexual behaviors & mores from ancient times to the present, it is argued that a culturally sanctioned assumption of M ownership of women & children plays a major contributing role. This assumption embodies two attitudes: (1) that the "owned" are somehow different from their "owners," thus precluding emphatic feelings; & (2) a societal emphasis, particularly in the West, on individual achievement & a tolerance of the use of force against those weaker in pursuit of desired aims. The linkages between power, love, sex, & individualism are examined in depth. Ways that the development of empathy might be encouraged in children & reactivated in adults who have succumbed to the assumption of ownership are briefly explored, along with some avenues for future research & recommendations for cultural change. 39 References. K Hyatt

88T4727

Udry, J. Richard & Billy, John O. G. (Carolina Population Center U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Initiation of Coitus in Early Adolescence, U American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 6, Dec, 841-855

¶ Using a panel design on the populations of several southern US schools (N = 1,153 Rs), determinants of initiation of coitus in early adolescence are tested: motivation, social controls, & attractiveness. Measures & variables are obtained from Rs, their identified friends, parents, & interviewers. The results are interpreted within the framework of other findings from a hormone analysis of a partially overlapping sample. White Ms' initiation of coitus in early adolescence is dominated by motivation & hormone effects & social attractiveness, with no observed effects of social controls. White Fs' initiation of coitus is dominated by the effects of social controls. No attractiveness, hormone, or sexual motivation effects are observed. Black Fs' initiation of coitus is dominated by their level of pubertal development (an attractiveness variable), with no observed effects of social controls. 6 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 33 References. Modified HA

88T4728

Weinberg, Thomas S. (Dept Sociology State U New York Coll, Buffalo 14222), Sadosmochism in the United States: A Review of Recent Sociological Literature, U Journal of Sex Research, 1987, 23, Feb, 50-69

¶ In the last several years, a new body of sociological literature on sadosmochism (SM) has begun to appear. The perspective of this corpus of work is quite different from that of more traditional approaches, though differing within its own discipline in theoretical orientation & search methods, the sociological approach nevertheless shares a common ground: the idea that SM is dependent on meanings that are culturally produced, learned, & reinforced in SM subcultures. The most important sociological contributions to the SM literature in terms of temporality, theoretical issues raised, & implications for larger issues are viewed, definitional problems in the study of SM are discussed, & suggestions are made for future research. 36 References. Modified HA

88T4729

Worthman, Carol M. & Whiting, John W. M. (Dept Anthropology Emory U, Atlanta GA 30322), Social Change in Adolescent Sex Behavior, Mate Selection, and Premarital Pregnancy Rates in Kikuyu Community, U Ethos, 1987, 15, 2, June, 145-165.

¶ Probing the causes of significant change in premarital pregnancy rates in a Kikuyu community in the central highlands of Kenya, demographic & ethnographic data collected 1968-1983 were combined with pre-fertility & nuptiality data from 1940 onward. Major social changes including increased opportunities for schooling, conversion to Christianity & the introduction of wage economy, have strongly altered young people's experience. Loss of ritual & traditional adolescent sex practice altered marriage market, & changes in the structure of SE opportunities are identified as primary factors in young people's changing behavior, leading to a rise in premarital pregnancy. Premarital sex & pregnancy become part of young women's rational mating strategies, due to changes in partner availability & desirability resulting from rapid diminution of polygyny, which decreases eligible M/F ratios, & an increase in variation in partner quality, based on wage earning potential. Finally, it is shown that M reproductive life history has actually undergone quantitative change greater than that of Fs. 27 References. Modified manage this problematic. US servicemen criticized North American women, claiming that they compared unfavorably to Filipino Fs. Also, cultural differences between partners were denied or minimized. Filipino Fs reported motives such as fate & economic security. In addition to examining motives as justifications for intermarriage, they are also seen as reflecting the respective culture's vocabulary of motives. 5 Tables, 45 References. Modified HA

88T4750

Callan, Victor J. (Dept Psychology U Queensland, Saint Lucia 4067 Australia), The Personal and Marital Adjustment of Mothers and of Voluntarily and Involuntarily Childless Wives, ♦ UM Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 847-856

* Scale data are used to compare the psychological well-being & marital adjustment of 60 mothers, 36 voluntarily childless wives, & 53 infertile women. Levels of personal well-being for the 3 groups were very similar across indices. Infertile women, however, did report lower global levels of well-being & rated life as less interesting, emptier, & less rewarding. Mothers & voluntarily childless wives showed similar satisfaction with their lives. Both voluntarily & involuntarily childless women were more pleased than mothers with the amount of freedom & flexibility in their lives, especially in terms of how they could spend their time & their levels of personal privacy, relaxation, & independence. Infertile women were also more positive about the amount of love in their lives & the level of support they received from family & friends. Either because of the benefits of child-free living or because of the sharing of their trials & frustrations in trying to have a child, infertile women reported more loving marital relationships, & were generally more satisfied with their marriage than were mothers & the voluntarily childless. In contrast to other women, the voluntarily childless reported more time with their husbands, more exchanges of ideas, & higher levels of consensus. 2 Tables, 44 References. Modified HA

88T4751

Canillon, B. & Lesthaeghe, R. (Centrum Sociaal Beleid U Faculteten Sint Ignatius, B-2000 Antwerp Belgium), Generatie, gezinsvorm en inkomen: ontwikkelingen in Vlaanderen 1976-1985 (Generation, Household Type, and Income Trends in Flanders between 1976 and 1985), Tijdschrift voor Sociologie, 1987, 8, 2-3, 201-238. (DUT)

* During the period 1970-1985, a general deterioration of the income positions of young people & a marked improvement in the economic position of the elderly have been documented for the US & UK. An analysis of 1970-1985 census data shows that this same trend occurred in Flanders. Causes of changes in poverty &/or economic insecurity are analyzed in terms of the effects of new forms of household formation & dissolution. 8 Tables, 7 Figures, 1 Appendix, 53 References. Modified HA

88T4752

Cook, David Ray, Jr. (U Kansas, Lawrence 66045), Assessing the Impact of a Self-Help Intervention for Soldiers Who Have Enrolled Their Families in the Army Exceptional Family Member Program, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 480-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711209.

88T4753

Corley, Charles James, Jr. (Bowling Green State U, OH 43403), Socioeconomic and Attitudinal Correlates of Marital Instability: A Longitudinal Assessment, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 487-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710852.

88T4754

Dandurand, Renée B., Une Politique familiale: enjeux et débats (Family Policy: Interplay and Debates), ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 349-369. (FRE)

* A discussion of family orientations conducted at the winter 1985 meeting of the Consultation Committee appointed by the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs resulted in the following categorizations: reproductive, financial, feminist, conservative familial, & liberal familial. Thirteen regional forums, participated in by 2,070 individuals in 1985, led to the choice of liberal familialism, sympathetic feminism, & a family policy guide, with recommendations for: the economic support of families (welfare), reconciling work & parental responsibilities, improving relations between school & family; housing projects, cultural & leisure activities, child care; social services required for family welfare; mediation services for family rights, decreasing family violence, & an administrative structure for a department of family policy. These recommendations were criticized by intellectuals for their lack of reality, & by the Social & Family Affairs Advisor for a lack of attention to fiscal incentives. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T4755

Delage, Denys (Dept sociologie U Laval, Quebec G1K 7P4), La Sociabilité familiale en basse-ville de Québec (Familial Sociability in Downtown Québec), ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 295-316. (FRE)

¶ The family in downtown Québec, Québec, is examined as the center of social relations, based on data from interviews with parents of primary school children (N = 72). The demarcation of sex roles is found to be fundamental, social communications are exchanged by the women, & most exchanges are in regard to children or holidays, & vacations, during which the family reunites. This model of matricentric sociability varies in the absence of a father, especially through divorce. Even more than conjugal instability, the current drop in birthrate will, in the next generation, condemn this system of bloodline sociability. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T4756

DeMaris, Alfred (Bowling Green State U, OH 43403), The Efficacy of a Spouse Abuse Model in Accounting for Courtship Violence, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 3, Sept, 291-305

¶ A model consisting of SC, balance of resources between partners, & experience with violence in the family of orientation-factors that have the greatest salience to spouse abuse was tested with questionnaire data from a sample of 484 white Coll students, most of whom were currently or previously involved in heterosexual relationships. For Ms, only being punished harshly as a child was significantly related to inflicting violence on a partner, while being the recipient of violence from a partner was related to both being punished harshly & seeing one's mother hit one's father. For Fs, the only significant effect was that Fs who believed that they should have control over the M in a relationship were more likely to be violent with a partner. It is suggested that models based on marital violence may have limited predictive power in accounting for violence during courtship. 2 Tables, 22 References. Modified HA

88T4757

Dickerson, Victoria C. & Coyne, James C. (Dept Education U Santa Clara, CA 95053), Family Cohesion and Control: A Multitrait-Multimethod Study, UM Journal of Marital and Family Therapy, 1987, 13, 3, July, 275-285.

¶ The convergent & discriminant validity of various widely used measures of family cohesion & control are assessed using a multitrait, multimethod approach. Forty-two families, who had at least one adolescent & who were currently receiving family therapy, completed self-report measures of cohesion & control & engaged in D. Reiss's card sort procedure. Ratings of the families' cohesiveness were also obtained from the families & their therapists. There was a general lack of relationship between self-report measures & either the therapist rating of family cohesion or the family's performance on the card sort procedure. The results cast doubt on the construct validity of some of the best measures of family functioning currently available. Implications of this are discussed. 3 Tables, 40 References. Modified HA

88T4758

Dumon, W. (Sociologisch Onderzoeksinstituut Katholieke U Leuven, B-3000 Belgium), Gezinspolitiek in België (Family Policy in Belgium), Tijdschrift voor Sociologie, 1987, 8, 2-3, 257-271. (DUT)

¶ The term "family policy" has quite different connotations in European & US contexts. Belgian family policy is examined as an example of a more general trend in Western Europe. Family policy development was begun after WWI to establish income maintenance programs for all families, & was pronatalistic in nature. After WWII, this was supplemented by a totally different policy geared at improving the physical & psychological well-being of all family members. Points of incongruity in these aims are examined. More recently, there has been a trend toward more income-related emphases & a tendency toward transferring services from collective institutions into family care. 3 References. Modified HA

88T4739

Beck, Rubye Wilkerson (U Florida, Gainesville 32611), The Subjective Well-Being of Widowed Men and Women: The Influence of Social Support, Social Interaction and Religion, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1026-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715969.

88T4740

Berlinrood, Wendy Marcia (U Maryland, Baltimore 21201), Families and Community Participation, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 755-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711911.

88T4741

Bird, Gloria W. & Bird, Gerald A. (Virginia Polytechnic Instit & State U, Blacksburg 24061), Strategies for Reducing Role Strain among Dual-Career Couples, International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 83-94

¶ A sample of 69 dual-career couples, in which either the husband or the wife was a US Coll or U administrator, were surveyed by mail questionnaire to examine the efficacy of 8 role-management strategies in reducing role strain. Couples reported high usage of organization, empathy, & stalling, & low usage of reducing responsibilities. While wives evidenced higher levels of both internal & external role strain, only internal role strain was significantly higher than that of husbands. Separation of work from family roles (compartmentalization) & a reluctance to use participation in regularly assigned tasks to avoid involvement in other disliked tasks (legitimate excuse) reduced role strain for both wives & husbands. In addition, wives indicated that spousal empathy reduced their external role strain & husbands reported using protective barriers to reduce internal role strain. 3 Tables, 33 References HA

88T4742

Blinn, Lynn (Dept Child & Family Studies U Tennessee, Knoxville 37996-1900), The Family Photo Assessment Process (FPAP): A Method for Validating Cross-Cultural Comparisons of Family Social Identities, Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1988, 19, 1, spring, 17-35

¶ An exploration of the possible use of family photographs as sources of data on a family's social identity. An interpretation of photographs as social products is proposed. Five Japanese & 5 US families residing in Houston, Tex, were interviewed & shared their family photographs, which were rated by trained coders, all families completed the Family Environmental Scale. The coders were able to produce highly reliable assessments of 10 dimensions of family identity, which were significantly correlated with family self-assessments. These findings support further development of this method as a source of information about families. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 28 References W H Stoddard

88T4743

Bognár, Gábor, A vetességtől a közvetítésig: a válások kezelése az Egyesült Államokban (From Guiltiness to Mediation Treatment of Divorce in the United States), Szociológia, 1983, 1-2, 135-151 (HUN)

¶ Abstract not currently available.

88T4744

Bos, Eduard Ronald (Princeton U, NJ 08544), The Demographic Characteristics of Children of Divorce, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1026-A-1027-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714900.

88T4745

Bouchard, Gérard (SOREP U Québec, Chicoutimi G7H 2B1), Sur la reproduction familiale en milieu rural: systèmes ouverts et systèmes clos (On Familial Reproduction in a Rural Milieu: Open Systems and Closed Systems), Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 229-251 (FRE)

¶ Two models of familial reproduction in Ru Quebec are examined, based on a generational study of Saguenay County from 1842 to 1911. Families were historically reconstituted from birth, marriage, baptismal, & death data from the Saguenay civil register. The closed model is one of a community in a fixed space, with a stationary population interest in preserving family property, identity, & a successional household structure; the open model indicates a community in an expandable space, w mobility of individuals & families concerned with extending their property, having many children, & maintaining a nuclear structure. The evidence suggests that Ru Quebec families of that era were less interested in preserving the family heritage (in terms of property or identity) than in producing a maximum number of children, & used mobility as an essential strategy of family reproduction. 11 Tables, 1 Map, 55 References HA Tr & Modified by D Graves

88T4746

Breslau, Naomi (Dept Psychiatry Case Western Reserve U, Cleveland OH 44106), Abortion of Defective Fetuses: Attitudes of Mothers of Congenitally Impaired Children, Journal of Marriage and Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 839-845

¶ A sample of mothers of children with cystic fibrosis, cerebral palsy, myelodysplasia, & multiple physical handicaps (N = 310) was compared to a probability sample of mothers of children free of disabilities (N = 357) on their attitudes toward the availability of legal abortion. In interviews mothers were asked whether or not they approve of abortion for reasons, among them the strong probability of a defective fetus. The spouses of mothers of congenitally disabled children were indistinguishable from those of controls. The specific characteristics of her child's ability (eg, mental retardation) were unrelated to the mother's attitude toward abortion for any of the reasons examined. Whether mothers in their group approved of abortion of defective fetuses was found to be closely related to their attitudes toward abortion for the five other reasons. 8 Tables, 16 References HA

88T4747

Buchholz, Ester Schaler & Gol, Barbara (New York U, 10003), More Than Playing House: A Developmental Perspective on the Strengths in Teenage Motherhood, American Journal of Orthopsychiatry, 1986, 56, 3, July, 347-359

¶ Historically, the literature on adolescent pregnancy & motherhood focused primarily on negative outcomes. Here, review of current research reveals that outcomes for many teenage mothers & their children are not necessarily bleak, indeed, becoming a parent can stimulate positive change in the adolescent's life. It is suggested that developmental processes interact with psychological, sociocultural, economic, family, & individual variables to create a context in which teenage pregnancy can be an initiator or enhancer of maturation. 68 References HA

88T4748

Burggraf, Cynthia S. & Sillars, Alan L. (U Delaware, Newark 19716), A Critical Examination of Sex Differences in Marital Communication, Communication Monographs, 1987, 54, 3, 276-294

¶ It is proposed that interpersonally negotiated role expectations are more adequate predictors of communication styles than is gender. It is suggested that there may be sex differences within particular clusters of couples who endorse sex-differentiated role expectations. Using M A Fritsch's typology of marital relationships ("Predicting Couples' Communication from Couples' Self-Reports," in Bostrom, R, Communication Yearbook, Beverly Hills, Calif Sage, 1983, 7, 4 married couples (N = 77) were classified on 8 relationship dimensions based on data obtained from questionnaires & observations of discussions of marital conflict. Results indicate that couple type was significantly related to communication style concerning marital conflict. Clear overall sex differences in communication emerged within couple types. Mutual influence processes & mutually established beliefs and expectations appear to account for conflict styles more adequately than gender. 4 Tables, 76 References Modified HA

88T4749

Buttney, Richard (Dept Speech Communication Ithaca Co 14850), Legitimation Techniques for Intermarriage: Accounts of Legitimation from U. S. Servicemen and Philippine Veterans, Communication Quarterly, 1987, 35, 2, spring, 125-143

¶ Intermarriage between members of different cultures is often not fully evaluated. How do members attempt to neutralize or manage the activity? Motives for intermarriage, reported via questionnaire by active or retired US military personnel & 72 Filipino veterans living in the Philippines who had already entered, or were about to enter, cultural marriages, are examined as legitimations & justifications.

ter Berger & Mansfried Kellner ("Marriage and the Constructions of Reality", Diogenes, 1964, 46, summer, 1-23) as an appropriate theoretical perspective for the examination of the link between work scheduling & family interaction. Not only does this perspective allow an examination across a continuum of family member absences, but it is applicable across the family life cycle, & to increasingly evident nontraditional family structures. 49 References. HA

88T4769

Grant, Linda, Ward, Kathryn B., Brown, Donald R. & Moore, William E. (U Georgia, Athens 30602), Development of Work and Family Commitments: A Study with Women and Men Medical Students, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 2, June, 176-198

* F & M medical students' (N = 76 & 116, respectively) intended commitments to profession & family were assessed at 3 times during their training via self-administered questionnaires. At the global level, Fs & Ms anticipated giving equal balance to family & profession in the future, however, at a more specific level, there were significant sex differences in planned commitments to profession & to family. Although all students anticipated giving more hours per week to professional roles, Ms anticipated significantly more hours devoted to profession each week than did Fs, while Fs anticipated more hours devoted to family than did Ms. Over time in medical school, all students' intended hours in profession increased & hours in family decreased, pointing to an inundation of family life by professional demands. Global-level measures suggested change in division of domestic labor among Fs & Ms, but specific-level measures suggested persistence of traditional patterns. 4 Tables, 41 References. HA

88T4770

Gubrium, Jaber F. & Holstein, James A. (Dept Sociology U Florida, Gainesville 32611), The Private Image: Experiential Location and Method in Family Studies, Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 773-786

* A discussion of the methodological assumptions & implications of the private image of domestic life, in which household members' perceptions of family living are considered to be more realistic & telling than those of other persons. Recasting the assumptions in terms of descriptive practice, an alternative approach is presented that construes family order as bound to organized, collective representation. Field data are offered as illustration, & procedural & theoretical outcomes are addressed. 75 References. Modified HA

88T4771

Guest, Michael Philip (Brown U, Providence RI 02912), Household Labor Allocation and Mobility in Four Villages in Central Java, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1022-A-1023-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715501.

88T4772

Haavio-Mannila, Elina & Rannik, Erkki (U Helsinki, 00100 Finland), Family Life in Estonia and Finland, Acta Sociologica, 1987, 30, 3-4, 355-369

* Patterns of family life in Estonia & Finland, each representing different social & economic systems, are compared via statistics obtained from the Central Statistical Office of Finland, 1940-1985, & Estonia's Eesti Rahvamaajandus, 1959-1985, based primarily on interview surveys. The results indicate that Estonian family life is more traditional in the following ways: there are more extended families, children, formal marriages, & divorces, there is less unmarried cohabitation, domestic staff in educated families is less even; & there is more familial leisure time. In both countries, almost all adult women are employed outside the home. Finnish family life is more traditional in other ways: paid work is more sex-segregated; people perceive women's possibility of success to be less than that of men; & the personal efficacy of Finnish women is less than that of Estonians. Finnish husbands are as happy in their marriages as Estonian husbands, but receive less social support from their wives. 11 Tables, 10 References. Modified HA

88T4773

Haskey, John C. (Office Population Censuses & Surveys, Saint Catherine's House 10 Kingsway London England), Divorce in the Early Years of Marriage in England and Wales: Results from a Prospective Study Using Linked Records, Journal of Biosocial Science, 1987, 19, 3, July, 255-271

* A representative sample of 1,153 couples who married during 1979 in England & Wales was followed (via analysis of a governmental index of decrees made absolute) from the date of marriage until mid-1984 to investigate the characteristics of couples who divorce soon after marriage. Couples who apparently lived together before marriage had a below average chance of early divorce, whereas couples where the addresses of the partners before marriage were very close had a significantly high rate of early breakdown. The chance of early divorce was significantly above average for spouses marrying in their teens & for both husbands & wives who, at their marriage, were unskilled laborers. Couples who married with a civil ceremony had an above average (& those marrying with a religious ceremony a below average) risk of early divorce, but such differences were found to be negligible on analyzing the results from a matched case-control study. The factors controlled for in this second study: age at marriage, marital status before marriage, & the SC of both partners, are likely to be among the strongest predictors of early divorce. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4774

Hedstrom, Peter & Ringen, Stein (Inst Social Research U Stockholm, S-106 91 Sweden), Age and Income in Contemporary Society: A Research Note, Journal of Social Policy, 1987, 16, 2, Apr, 227-239

* The distribution of family income in 7 industrial nations is described: Canada, West Germany, Israel, Norway, Sweden, the UK, & US using data from the Luxembourg Income Study, a compendium of national micro data sets from surveys conducted 1979-1981. Significant differences between the countries are identified. A poverty cycle of the type identified by S. B. Rowntree (Poverty: A Study of Town Life, London: Macmillan, 1901) still describes the distribution of income over age groups, but it is neither strong nor universal. Elderly families are found to be a key group for understanding the degree of income inequality in contemporary societies. 6 Tables, 1 Diagram, 7 References. Modified HA

88T4775

Heller, Peter L., Tsai, Yung-Mei & Chalfant, H. Paul (Texas Tech U, Lubbock 79409), Voluntary and Nonvoluntary Childlessness: Personality vs Structural Implications, International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 95-110

* Many researchers have viewed childlessness as a form of deviant behavior characterized by unique personality & behavioral characteristics. It is suggested that the structural factor of childlessness itself alters family configurations in ways that cause these characteristics. Data from the 1977 & 1978 samples of the National Opinion Research Center General Social Surveys are used to contrast 106 voluntarily & 107 involuntarily childless couples in terms of 12 psychosocial characteristics. Findings show that the 2 groups of Rs do indeed differ, but in ways opposite to those predicted on the basis of past research. It is suggested that structural rather than psychological explanations may best account for these differences. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 59 References. Modified HA

88T4776

Henretta, John C. (Sociology Dept U Florida, Gainesville 32611), Family Transitions, Housing Market Context, and First Home Purchase by Young Married Households, Social Forces, 1987, 66, 2, Dec, 520-536

* An examination of the relation of family transitions & housing market context to home purchase by young married households, using data from the Panel Study of Income Dynamics. Earnings of the husband & the wife, number of children, county-level median home value, & county-level homeownership rate each predict the timing of home purchase. There is no evidence that the effects of family variables differ by housing market characteristics. It is concluded that, during the 1970s, families did not adapt to higher housing prices by different fertility or work behavior. 2 Tables, 37 References. Modified HA

88T4777

Hiller, Dana Vannoy & Dyehouse, Janice (Dept Sociology U Cincinnati, OH 45221-0378), A Case for Banishing "Dual-Career Marriages" from the Research Literature, Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 787-795

* It is argued that the concepts career & dual-career marriage are loosely defined in the literature & that this hinders the comparability of findings & accumulation of scientific knowledge. A review of recent articles on dual-career marriages supports this assertion. The absence of clear

88T4759

Edwards, John N., Johnson, David R. & Booth, Alan (Dept Sociology Virginia Polytechnic Instit & State U, Blacksburg 24061), Coming Apart: A Prognostic Instrument of Marital Breakup, UM Family Relations 1987, 36, 2, Apr, 168-170

¶ A Marital Instability Index (MI) is presented to detect the "peaks & valleys" of intact marriages & the relative severity of their instability. The development of the scale, its administration & reliability, & indicators of its validity are discussed. In view of its value in predicting actual cases of marital dissolution, the MI appears to have considerable utility for diagnostic & prognostic purposes in marital counseling & other interventionist situations. 1 Table, 6 References. HA

88T4760

Fincham, Frank D. & Bradbury, Thomas N. (Psychology Dept U Illinois, Champaign 61820), The Assessment of Marital Quality: A Re-evaluation, UM Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 797-809

¶ Based on a review of the usage of self-report measures of marriage quality, it is argued that such measures have been developed without adequate understanding & specification of the construct of "marital quality." A specific consequence of this shortcoming is that marital quality is not readily distinguished from other relevant constructs (eg, communication). This, in turn, results in measures that have a great deal of overlap in item content, thus preventing clear interpretation of the empirical relationship between the constructs. The inability to establish unambiguous empirical relationships among relevant constructs severely limits theory development in this research domain. One means of avoiding these problems is to treat marital quality solely as the global evaluation of one's marriage. The implications of this strategy are examined in regard to: (1) the association between empirical & conceptual dependence, (2) the interpretation of responses to self-report inventory, & (3) the consideration of the purposes for which marital quality is measured. The advantages of adopting this approach, & the conditions under which it is most appropriate to do so, are outlined. 1 Table, 72 References. Modified HA

88T4761

Fortin, Andree (Dept sociologie U Laval, Quebec G1K 7P4), La Famille ouvrière d'autrefois (The Working Class Family of Yesterday), Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 273-294. (FR)

¶ The identity & SS of Wc Montreal, Quebec, families are compared historically through a series of interviews (N = 73 French-Canadian workers & their wives aged 17-65) conducted in 1962/63, & a 1984 questionnaire survey conducted in Quebec City (N not given). In the early 1960s, the Wc French-Canadian family was characterized by the importance of family origin (the essence of social relations) & the geographic proximity to family, even in the workplace. Cohabitation of young marrieds with their parents was common. The development of a society more centered on the couple & friends than on family appears to be linked to income & passage to the Mc. The 1984 research suggests the family-clan is still the source of social identity, but it is suggested that this model will not be reproduced in the next generation. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T4762

Framo, Mary D'Adamo, The Adjustment of Stepchildren in Stepfamilies, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1028-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710535.

88T4763

Fuse, Akiko, Title appears in Japanese (The Process of Japanese Family Research and Today's Problems), Shakai-gaku Hyoron/ Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 2, Sept, 22-38. (JPN)

¶ The historical process of Japanese family research since WWII is examined, & divided into four distinct stages that correspond to economic, legal, & institutional reforms in Japanese society. Some unique qualities of contemporary Japanese family research are explored, including its: (1) transition from a macro- to a microperspective & back again, (2) reliance on empirical methods, (3) focus on the Ur family, (4) use of structural-functionalist & developmental approaches, (5) exclusion of value judgments, & (6) strong relationship with US sociology. The relationship between the state & the family is explored, & some problems & themes of current research are summarized. 47 References. Modified HA

88T4764

Ganong, Lawrence H. & Coleman, Marilyn (U Missouri, Colum 65211), Effects of Children on Parental Sex-Role Orientation, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 3, Sept, 278-290

¶ The bidirectional approach to sex-role socialization provided the conceptual framework for determining if the sex-role self-concept of parent was affected more by the presence of sons than of daughters. The E Sex-Role Inventory was administered to 153 parental dyads who had daughters only (N = 41), sons only (N = 41), or an equal number of sons & daughters (N = 71). Sex of children, especially sons, did appear to have an effect on parents' femininity. Fathers with sons have lower femininity scores than fathers with daughters only, & mothers with sons have higher femininity scores than mothers with daughters only. 1 Table, 33 References. HA

88T4765

Glass, Becky L. & Stolee, Margaret K. (Dept Sociology State U New York, Geneseo 14454), Family Law in Soviet Russia, 1917-1939, UM Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 893-902

¶ An examination of whether the postrevolutionary Soviet government intended to destroy the family, focusing on the intent & consequences of the various family law codes that were decreed between 1917 & 1939. Three different perspectives are identified on what the role of the family should be within the socialist state: the state as a replacement for the family, the state & the family sharing responsibility for childrearing, & children as a link between state & family. Soviet policymakers did not achieve consensus on the issue of the family's role, moreover, despite revolutionary tenor of this time period, legislation was not capable of successfully altering citizens' attitudes & behavior in the direction envisioned by early lawmakers. Implications for analysis of contemporary law are considered. 59 References. Modified HA

88T4766

Glenn, Norval D. & Kramer, Kathryn B. (Dept Sociology U Texas, Austin 78712-1088), The Marriages and Divorces of the Children, UM Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 811-825

¶ The effect of parental divorce on the divorce-proneness of offspring was estimated separately for white Ms, white Fs, black Ms, & black Fs through analysis of pooled data from 11 US national surveys conducted from 1973 to 1985. The estimated effect for white Fs was substantial & statistically significant, but any effects in the other race-sex categories appear to have been moderate. Analyses performed to test some competing & plausible explanations for an intergenerational transmission of divorce-proneness yielded indirect support for a lower-commitment marriage explanation & revealed that a small proportion of the estimated transmission effect can be explained by a tendency for the child of a divorced parent to marry at an early age. 7 Tables, 27 References. HA

88T4767

Gonzales, Juan L., Jr. (California State U, Hayward 94542), The Origins of the Chicano Family in Mexico and the American Southwest, UM International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 1, Autumn, 181-196

¶ The origins of the Chicano family can be traced to the Aztec & pre-Hispanic Mexico. The Aztec family shared many features with the present Chicano family, including patrilineality, patrilocal residence, dominance of the male, & F subordination, treatment of women & children, husband's property, a sexual double standard, & strong emphasis on family ties. The Spanish invaders brought in Roman Catholic legislation that was used not only for religious purposes but to control the population. After independence, Mexico passed new laws that even separated church & state, substantially transforming the social structure of the family. The movement of large numbers of Mexican immigrants into the US Southwest after the Mexican War significantly changed the Chicano family, which tended to be nuclear or even F-headed, small, & hence easily mobile. This history reveals the high level of adaptability of the Chicano family. 17 References. Modified HA

88T4768

Gramling, Robert & Forsyth, Craig (U Southwestern Louisiana, Lafayette 70504), Work Scheduling and Family Interaction: A Temporal Perspective, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 2, Apr, 163-175.

¶ An expansion of the construction of reality paradigm proposed cal comparisons & perceptions of equity/inequity derived from specific comparisons in an intimate relationship—influenced the psychological well-being of men & women in these families. Beyond the discomfort & unfair treatment accompanying them, both relative deprivation & inequity were associated with depression when considered in the same model. 1 Table, 15 References. HA

88T4787

Kiecolt-Glaser, Janice K., Fisher, Laura D., Ogrocki, Paula, Stout, Julie C., Speicher, Carl E., & Glaser, Ronald (Dept Psychiatry Coll Medicine Ohio State U, Columbus 43210), Marital Quality, Marital Disruption, and Immune Function. ♦ Psychosomatic Medicine, 1987, 49, 1, Jan-Feb, 13-34

* Marital disruption is associated with significant increases in a variety of psychological & physical disorders. In order to examine psychological & physiological mediators, self-report data & blood samples were obtained from 38 married women & 38 separated/divorced women. Among married Ss, poorer marital quality was associated with greater depression & a poorer response on 3 qualitative measures of immune function. Women who had been separated 1 year or less had significantly poorer qualitative & quantitative immune function than their sociodemographically matched married counterparts. Among the separated/divorced cohort, shorter separation periods & greater attachment to the (ex) husband were associated with poorer immune function & greater depression. These data are consistent with epidemiological evidence linking marital disruption with increased morbidity & mortality. 5 Tables, 3 Figures, 71 References. HA

88T4788

Klein, Thomas (Theresienstr 128, D-8000 Munich 2 Federal Republic Germany), Familiale Verarmung durch Arbeitslosigkeit. Zum Einfluss des Familienzusammenhangs auf die soziale Stellung bei Arbeitslosigkeit (Family Pauperization through Unemployment. Some Impacts of Family Structure on Social Position during Unemployment), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 3, Sept, 534-549 (GfR)

* Most theories of social stratification & social inequality focus on the individual, neglecting the impact of the family on the individual's social position. Here, an empirical analysis investigates the influence of family size & structure on the extent of downward mobility caused by unemployment. Data drawn from a 1981 income survey of 3,000 West German households show that the risk of falling below the poverty level in case of unemployment is lowest for 2-person households, it is higher for single-person households, & increases sharply with increasing size of family above 2 persons, ie, families with several children. 4 Tables, 1 Schema, 36 References. Modified HA

88T4789

Kurdek, Lawrence A. & Schmitt, J. Patrick (Dept Psychology Wright State U, Dayton OH 45435), Partner Homogamy in Married, Heterosexual Cohabiting, Gay, and Lesbian Couples, ♦ Journal of Sex Research, 1987, 23, 2, May, 212-232

* Similarity between partners has been thought to be related to relationship quality. Here, mailed questionnaire data were used to assess similarities between partners in 44 married, 35 heterosexual cohabiting, 50 gay, & 56 lesbian couples on demographic characteristics, appraisals of relationship quality, & factors predictive of relationship quality. Analysis shows that partners' age was correlated for each type of couple, partners' income, education, & job prestige were correlated only for heterosexual cohabiting couples, & gay partners had the largest discrepancies in age, income, & education. Partners' scores were correlated for each type of couple on relationship satisfaction, but for only gay & lesbian couples on love for partner, partners across all couples differed in their assessments of relationship quality, which was not related to discrepancies between partners' demographic variables but was negatively related to discrepancies in partners' dyadic attachment. In conclusion, partner homogamy was most pervasive in lesbian couples, & for all couples, homogamy on dyadic attachment was related to relationship quality. 4 Tables, 40 References. Modified HA

88T4790

Kurian, George (U Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4), Dynamics of Youth Attitudes in South Asian Families, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1986, 23, 1-2, Jan-Apr, 69-86

* Parent-child interactions in South Asian families, particularly conflicts that arise between parents' traditional values & youth's desire for change

& differences in attitudes toward heterosexual relationships & marriage, are explored using questionnaire data from a 1984 comparative analysis of immigrant Indian, Pakistani, & Fiji Coll students in Calgary, Alberta (N = 35) & their counterparts at 2 Indian Us (N = 150). Results indicate that many of the issues concerning the immigrant youth are of little relevance to those in India, since they are primarily problems of adjustment to an alien culture. However, a general tendency toward attitudinal & behavioral change as a result of modernization is evident among youth in both societies. It does not appear to be overly threatening to traditional values & practices, though, & on the whole, parent-child relations are reported to be amicable. 1 Table. K. Hyatt

88T4791

Lamarque, Hugues (CNRS-Groupe recherches sociologiques U Paris X, F-92001 Nanterre Cedex France), Crises et permanence de l'exploitation familiale en France (The Crisis and Continuity of the Family Farm in France), ♦ Journal de Sociologie du Travail, 1987, 29, 4, 443-458 (FRE)

† Models of the family farm in France are examined, from the French Revolution to the 1980s. Ownership & labor have generally been closely related through family, this unit of production became the prevailing structure during the time of the Revolution. In the 1950s, a specialized & productivist model was adopted; farms modernized production methods & increased production significantly. Currently, the family farm is constrained by an oversupply of farm commodities. The rise of agribusiness marks a new phase of capitalistic development. The topic cannot be fully analyzed, however, due to the absence of a theoretical framework. Modified HA

88T4792

Larson, Jeffrey H. & Allgood, Scot M. (Brigham Young U, Provo UT 84602), A Comparison of Intimacy in First-Married and Remarried Couples, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 3, Sept, 319-331

† A comparison of intimacy in 33 first-married & 33 remarried couples based on responses to the completed Waring Intimacy Questionnaire. No significant differences were found on total intimacy scores & 7 subscale scores. Only one type of intimacy conflict resolution was significantly lower among the remarrieds. A comparison of the intimacy scores of couples married 1 year with those married 5 years (all couples—both first-marrieds & remarrieds) revealed significant differences in total intimacy, affection, cohesion, compatibility, & expressiveness. However, among remarrieds only, no significant differences between those married 1 & 5 years were found. 2 Tables, 56 References. Modified HA

88T4793

Lavee, Yoav (Dept Family Social Science U Minnesota, Saint Paul 55108), Partner Understanding and Marital Happiness: Reestimation of Honeycutt's Model, ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 939-944. Comment, 944-947.

† James M. Honeycutt's model of marital functioning (see SA 35:3/87R6452) is critiqued on the basis that his estimation of the nonrecursive (reciprocal) relationship between partner understanding (PU) & marital happiness (MH) was underidentified & thus could not be validly tested. Problems of spuriousness & identification in nonrecursive multiequation models are identified, & sensitivity analysis using the LISREL computer program is employed to reestimate Honeycutt's model. It is concluded that the model is as yet incomplete, & some modifications are suggested. In Perceived Partner Understanding and Marital Happiness: A Reply to Lavee, Alan C. Acock & James M. Honeycutt (Center Life Cycle & Population Studies, Dept of Sociology, Louisiana State U, Baton Rouge) point out several technical errors in this analysis, & discuss implications for future applications of LISREL to models using multiple indicators. It is demonstrated that LISREL estimates can be extremely sensitive to identifying assumptions, & that minor changes in these assumptions can produce dramatically different outcomes, particularly when using nonrecursive models. The utility of partial r procedures is rejected. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 21 References. K. Hyatt

88T4794

Lavee, Yoav, McCubbin, Hamilton I., & Olson, David H. (Dept Family Social Science U Minnesota, Saint Paul 55108), The Effect of Stressful Life Events and Transitions on Family Functioning and Well-Being, ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 857-873.

† National survey data on 1,140 families, analyzed via the LISREL VI differentiation between sociological & psychological levels of analysis is an important element in the confusion. Here, interview data from a sample of 450 husbands & 344 wives are used to test the assumption that high job commitment (an attitudinal variable) correlates with high status occupations (a structural variable). Analysis provides no support for the hypothesis. A glossary of terms is proposed to clarify dual-career marriage research. 3 Tables, 72 References. Modified HA

88T4778

Hobart, Charles (U Alberta, Edmonton T6G 2E1), Parent-Child Relations in Remarried Families, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 3, Sept, 259-277

¶ Data from simultaneous, independent interviews with husbands & wives in 232 remarried & 102 first-married families are used to examine husbands' & wives' relationships with various categories of (step) children & effects of these various relationships on spousal relations. Findings may be summarized as indicating that in remarried families, there are "first-class" (shared) children, "second-class" (wives' unshared) children, & "third-class" (husbands' unshared) children. Each "class" experiences qualitatively distinctive relationships with (step) parents, & these various relationships have differing positive & negative effects on spousal relationships. 4 Tables, 28 References. HA

88T4779

Imamura, Anne E. (Dept Sociology U Maryland, College Park 20742), Husband-Wife Role Misunderstanding: The Case of International Marriage, International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 37-47

¶ The sources of role dissensus in marriage are explored, using in-depth interview data from 21 foreign women married to Nigerians & living in Nigeria in 1982. A typology of dissensus is developed & linked to marital happiness. International marriage data are particularly useful because differences in role expectation in the spouses' societies are often more readily apparent than in intranational marriage. At the same time, the typology of role dissensus applies to marriage in general. Coping patterns differ with the spouse's interpretation of where to place the blame for the misunderstanding. Conjugal power is a silent variable both in role deception & in coping with actual unanticipated roles. 4 References. AA

88T4780

Imamura, Anne E. (Dept Sociology U Maryland, College Park 20742), The Japanese Urban Housewife: Traditional and Modern Social Participation, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 2, Apr, 139-156.

¶ Do industrialization & urbanization produce uniformly intense families regardless of their original forms? Richard Sennett (Authority, New York: Knopf, 1980) suggests that they do not, & data collected via participant observation, questionnaire, & interviews from housewives (N = 284) in Tokyo, Japan, are used to validate this opinion. Focus is on the community participation of wives of white-collar & professional men. More often than their husbands, these women act as brokers between the family & the society at large. As such, they are simultaneously subject to both traditional & modern norms of public participation. Further, in contrast to Scott Greer's distinction between "elusive membership groups & inclusive spatial groups" (The Emerging City Myth and Reality, New York: Free Press, 1962), membership community appears to reinforce spatial identification for the Japanese housewife. 3 Tables. Modified HA

88T4781

Imbrogno, Salvatore (Ohio State U, Columbus 43210-1399), Family Policy in the Soviet Union, International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 165-180.

¶ In the USSR, the collective family is seen as the foundation of the Marxist-Leninist form of socialism. Constitutional revisions & statutory enactments granting legal freedom for divorce & abortions & additional SE benefits for families & working mothers have inadvertently accelerated the transformation of traditional cultural values surrounding the family. The concept of the collective family is being changed in ways that create problems in individual & family behavior. Formulation of family policy, once viewed as a matter of quantitative improvements, now must include qualitative changes based on psychological & sociological study & treatment. 2 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA

88T4782

Jamieson, Lynn (Dept Sociology U Edinburgh, EH8 9J Scotland), Theories of Family Development and the Experience of Being Brought Up, Sociology, 1987, 21, 4, Nov, 591-607

¶ Widely held theories of family development, supported by a body of historical & sociological research, are confronted through an analysis of data from interviews with men & women (N = 87) raised in Ur Scotland in the early 1900s. Traditional analyses of changes in the family household include: family as the focus of children; intensification of emotive relationships in the family; a feeling of family separation from the external world; sharper demarcation of gender roles; & loyalty to self vs family. The findings from this analysis reveal that Rs did not experience most of the traditional changes, with the exception of gender-related role: a balance between loyalty to self & family. Theoretical gains might result from further analyses of "classical" theory. 28 References. Modified HA

88T4783

Jaramillo, Patricio T. & Zapata, Jesse T. (Division Education Texas Permian Basin, Odessa 79762-8301), Roles and Alliances in Mexican-American and Anglo Families, Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 727-735.

¶ A comparison of Mexican-American & Anglo children's perceptions of roles (of siblings & parents) & alliances (between parents & siblings within their families, based on interviews conducted with 119 Mexican-American children from 35 families & 91 Anglo children from 29 families from similar SE backgrounds. Separate tests were conducted for each ethnic group to determine if family members were assigned to various roles & alliances on the basis of birth &/or sex; tests were conducted to determine ethnic differences in role assignments. Analysis reveals birth-order & sex differences when the Mexican-American & Anglo samples were treated separately. Cross-ethnic differences found only for birth-order effects. 4 Tables, 1 Appendix, 20 References. Modified HA

88T4784

Jones, F. L. (Dept Sociology Research School Social Sciences Australian National U, Canberra ACT 2601), Marriage Patterns and Stratification System: Trends in Educational Homogamy since 1930s, The Australian and New Zealand Journal of Sociology, 1987, 23, 2, July, 185-198.

¶ To date most studies of social closure in the stratification orders of industrial societies have used measures of father-to-son mobility as empirical indicator. A complementary insight into such processes is provided by tendencies toward status homogamy. Census data from 1981 Australian census for 4 birth cohorts of married couples aged (N = 23,573) provide a basis for assessing to what extent there has been any change over time in the stratification of marital choices, as reflected in the school leaving ages & postschool qualifications of spouses. Findings point to no loosening in the bonds of stratification since 1930, though there is some slight evidence of differences among those married during the 1940s. 5 Tables, 25 References. HA

88T4785

Keith, Pat M. & Schafer, Robert B. (Dept Sociology Iowa State U, Ames 50010), Mental Health of Men in One and Two-Job Families: Effects of Own and Spouses' Evaluations, International Review of Modern Sociology, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 83-94.

¶ An investigation of how husbands' & wives' assessments of family role behavior are associated with self-esteem & depression: men in 1- & 2-job (both spouses working) families. Analysis of interview data from 130 men in 1-job families & 135 men in 2-job families reveals how their evaluations of work-family role behavior affect mental health. Results indicate that: spouses' evaluations have little influence on men's mental health; men in 2-job families have more role demands but do not experience greater depression or lower self-esteem; wives' evaluations of work-family roles have greater effects on depression among men in 1-job families. 2 Tables, 19 References. Modified HA

88T4786

Keith, Pat M. & Schafer, Robert B. (Iowa State U, Ames), Relative Deprivation, Equity/Inequity, and Psychological Well-Being of Men and Women in One- and Two-Job Families, Journal of Issues, 1987, 8, 2, June, 199-211.

¶ Interview data from couples in 130 1-job & 135 2-job families are used to compare the extent to which relative deprivation-based on gen public records concerning cases of legal separation in Milan & Marche, Italy, during 2 periods-1970-1973 & 1976-1982, ie. before & after the 1975 legal reform-were scrutinized. Approximately 10% of all cases ($N = 1,530$ in Milan & 580 in Marche) were examined. Survey questionnaires were mailed to Ss in the later group, yielding responses from 93 Fs & 60 Ms. Findings suggest that conflict during the legal separation process is most acute for older, poorer, & less educated Rs. The higher social strata tend to regulate their own conflicts, in collaboration with lawyers. The lawyer's role is perceived as relevant only in "difficult" cases; however, such cases most frequently involve persons in poor social circumstances, whose relationship with their own lawyer is also difficult. These findings tend to oppose the idea that parties should enjoy self-regulation rights in separation proceedings. 6 Tables. Modified HA

88T4803

Maneker, Jerry S. & Rankin, Robert P. (Dept Sociology & Social Work California State U, Chico 95929), Correlates of Marital Duration among Those Who File for Divorce: Selected Characteristics in California, 1966-1976, Journal of Divorce, 1987, 10, 3-4, spring-summer, 97-107

† Characteristics of a 2% random sample of all couples who filed for divorce/dissolution in Calif between 1966 & 1976 (N not provided) are examined using data from the Dept of Health & Human Services' Office of Vital Statistics. Correlates of marital duration to separation (rather than divorce rates) are explored, including age at marriage, education of husbands & wives, & presence/number of children. Findings contradict many of those from research using divorce rates, specifically, duration of marriage remains much the same regardless of age at marriage or education. However, evidence that the presence of children in a marriage is related to longer duration is supported. The finding that duration of marriage decreased slightly over the period examined is discussed in terms of exchange theory & the changing rewards & deprivations of family life. Implications for premarital counseling & family life education are considered. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 12 References. Modified HA

88T4804

Marx, Emanuel (Tel Aviv U, Ramat-Aviv 69978 Israel), Relations between Spouses among the Negev Bedouin, Ethnos, 1987, 52, 1-2, 156-179

† The Negev Bedouin of the southern region of Israel have a mixed economy, the mainstay of which is cereal farming, however, they regard themselves primarily as camel & sheep raisers, & the husbandry of small stock is very important. Relations between spouses are examined in the context of the domestic developmental cycle & the varying resources available to the spouses as the family cycle changes. In certain conditions, the relative position of women improves over the years, while that of the men declines, due largely to the close links between a woman & her sons, based on joint interests, which are often directed against the father-husband. 1 Figure, 14 References. Modified HA

88T4805

Masui, M. (U Faculteiten Sint-Aloysius, B-1080 Brussels Belgium), Naar een 'ander' ongehuwd moederschap (Toward a Different Type of Unwed Motherhood), Tijdschrift voor Sociologie, 1987, 8, 2-3, 103-129 (DUT)

* An analysis of changes in the phenomenon of unwed motherhood & societal attitudes toward unmarried mothers in Belgium between 1960 & 1981, with focus on Dutch-speaking areas, using data from published studies. Changes are shown to parallel societal developments of the 1960s & 1970s, eg, the second sexual revolution, women's movement, & development of modern contraception. The woman who chooses unwed motherhood deliberately has become more prevalent since the mid-1970s, & society has developed a greater tolerance, & even acceptance under certain conditions, of unwed motherhood. 3 Tables, 43 References. Modified HA

88T4806

Matthijs, K. (Sociologisch Onderzoeksinstituut Katholieke U Leuven, B-3000 Belgium), Hetrouwen of samenwonen na echtscheiding: een statusintegratiehypothese (Remarriage or Cohabitation after Divorce: The Hypothesis of Status Integration), Tijdschrift voor Sociologie, 1987, 8, 2-3, 69-102. (DUT)

† An assessment of factors that influence remarriage or cohabitation after divorce in Belgium. Proportional hazard models & loglinear analysis are applied to life table data from 766 divorcees. Special attention is paid to the effects of the number of children & age. 12 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 25 References. Modified HA

88T4807

McKim, Margaret K. (Dept Family Studies U Guelph, Ontario N1G 2W1), Transition to What? New Parents' Problems in the First Year, Family Relations, 1987, 36, 1, Jan, 22-25

† In a Canadian study using a combined longitudinal, cross-sectional design, 184 new families in Ontario with firstborn infants were asked to complete questionnaires describing their problems, concerns, & needs at 3, 6, 9, &/or 12 months after the birth of their child. While infant illness was the single most frequently reported problem throughout the first year, infant crying, feeding & nutrition concerns, & parent-centered problems such as role conflicts were significant concerns. The latter required particular attention, since existing formal & informal support services were not viewed as satisfying these needs. Working mothers & those with "difficult" infants were more likely to report problems. Implications for educators & those in the health & social services are discussed. 4 Tables, 10 References. HA

88T4808

Messner, Michael (Program Study Women & Men in Society U Southern California, Los Angeles 90089), Men and Families, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 3, July, 337-340

† A review essay on books edited by Robert A. Lewis & Marvin B. Sussman, Men's Changing Roles in the Family (New York/London: The Haworth Press, 1986), & Robert A. Lewis & Robert F. Salt, Men in Families (Beverly Hills/London/New Delhi: Sage Publications, 1986) [see listings in IRPS No. 42]. These two collections of current research reveal both the contributions & the limits of the new areas of men's studies. In particular, while they call needed attention to men's positive roles in families, they neglect the wealth of feminist theoretical formulations that could provide them with a firmer grounding. 2 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4809

Meyer, Cynthia J. & Rosenblatt, Paul C. (U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), Feminist Analysis of Family Textbooks, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 2, June, 247-252

† Proceeding from the assumption that textbooks reflect & help to maintain societal values, family life textbooks are analyzed from a feminist viewpoint. Important issues regarding such textbooks include: the title, the definition of family, the approach to parenting, the treatment of negative elements in family life, & the approach to homosexuality. 11 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4810

Miall, Charlene E. (Dept Sociology McMaster U, Hamilton Ontario L8S 4M4), The Stigma of Adoptive Parent Status: Perceptions of Community Attitudes toward Adoption and the Experience of Informal Social Sanctioning, Family Relations, 1987, 36, 1, Jan, 34-39

† The role of informal social response in the emergence of adoptive parent status as a discreditable attribute for infertile women who adopt is examined via questionnaire &/or interview data from 71 involuntarily childless women. Rs detailed their perceptions of the societal beliefs that the biological tie is important for bonding & love, & therefore bonding & love in adoption are second best, adopted children are second rate because of their unknown genetic past, & adoptive parents are not "real" parents. Rs also provided detailed instances of perceived informal social sanctions related to their adoptive parent status. Social sanctions are shown to be relevant to an understanding of the experience of adoption. Recommendations whereby family practitioners can alleviate the stigma potential of adoption are discussed. 31 References. Modified HA

88T4811

Norris, Frederic William (U Southern California, Los Angeles 90089), Physiological, Emotional, and Self-Reported Indices of Stress Responses for Women in Dual-Career Marriages, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1029-A. Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T4812

O'Guinn, Thomas C., Imperia, Giovanna & MacAdams, Elizabeth (U Illinois, Urbana 61801), Acculturation and Perceived Family Decision-Making Input among Mexican-American Wives, Journal

program, are used to examine a multivariate model of the effect of life events & transitions, intrafamily strain, marital adjustment, & appraisal on family well-being. The model was tested & modified by using data from a random split-half of the sample & cross-validated with data from the second half by using a multisample analysis. The results show that life events & transitions had no direct effect on family well-being, but they intensified intrafamily strain, family strain, in turn, negatively affected marital adjustment & perceived well-being. Contrary to the hypothesis, family strain was positively associated with a more optimistic appraisal of the situation. Both marital adjustment & appraisal were positively related to well-being, thereby counteracting the effect of the pileup of demands. It was concluded, however, that they play different intervening roles between demands & well-being: marital adjustment is a mediating factor, whereas appraisal of the situation plays a stress-buffering role. Methodological issues & theoretical implications are discussed. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 49 References. HA

88T4795

Lee, H. Y., Rajulton, F., Wijewickrema, S. & Lesthaeghe, R. (Dept Sociology Brown U, Providence RI 02912), Gezinsvorming in Vlaanderen: nieuwe vormen, andere timing (Family Formation in Flanders: New Patterns, Different Timing), Tijdschrift voor Sociologie, 1987, 8, 2-3, 35-68. (DUT)

¶ A statistical analysis of the starting age & speed of transitions in the process of family formation among two generations in Flanders, Belgium. The influence of educational achievement & religious practice is examined using shifted proportional hazard models, with transition probabilities fed into a semi-Markovian chain. Results indicate that higher educational achievement is related to later starting points, but not in a differing pace once started. In contrast, lower religious involvement speeds up the transitions to first sexual contact & premarital cohabitation, while it considerably retards the transition to parenthood among generations born after 1950. 11 Tables, 5 Figures, 1 Appendix, 8 References. Modified HA

88T4796

Lemieux, Denise & Mercier, Lucie, Familles et destins féminins. Le Prisme de la mémoire, 1880-1940 (Families and the Destiny of Women: The Prism of Memory, 1880-1940), ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 255-271. (FRE)

¶ The life cycle of women in French Canada from 1880 to 1940 is studied based on written memoirs (N = about 30 pieces of published or unpublished writing) illustrating the functioning & variables of the old, solid Quebec culture. Despite the differences inherent in various social groups, the stages of l'existence as exemplified in writings on education, leaving home, dating, marriage, & maternity show a view of women's lives as ruled by fate, rather than by conscious control. This is especially evident in the inculcation of the social group's reproductive objectives. The global vision emerging from these memoirs is one of a society planting its roots in more than one place. 41 References. HA Tr & Modified by D Graves

88T4797

Lesthaeghe, R. (Centrum Sociologie Vrije U Brussel, B-1050 Belgium), Gezinsvorming en -ontbinding: de twee transitie's (Family Formation and Dissolution: The Two Transitions), Tijdschrift voor Sociologie, 1987, 8, 2-3, 9-33. (DUT)

¶ It is argued that changes in fertility, family formation, & marital dissolution that have occurred since the nineteenth century in Western European countries are expressions of two separate transitions. The first corresponds with a period of increased qualitative aspirations within the nuclear family, whereas the second, common to the postwar generations, is the expression of a growing secular individualism & a preoccupation with self-fulfillment. This view corresponds to that held by the French historian P. Aries (see SA 30:5/82M6492). 6 Tables, 1 Figure, 67 References. Modified HA

88T4798

Levine, David (Ontario Instit Studies Education, Toronto M5S 1V6), Industrialization and the Proletarian Family in England, Past and Present, 1985, 107, May, 168-203

¶ It has come to be recognized that Wc families in England were modern before the industrial revolution, ie, both men & women married late, were economically independent before marriage, & lived in nuclear families after marriage. The first phase of industrialization was one of handicraft manufacturing, requiring small fixed capital; during this phase the industrial population grew rapidly; children were able to become productive quite early, & were kept in the home relatively late, their wages being subsumed into family income controlled by the M head of household. The growth of industrial employment gave young people added resources that allowed earlier marriage, & reduced patriarchal control of marriage. In the second half of the nineteenth century, handicraft manufacture gave way to specialization & routinization of function; wages increased & more workers moved to cities. This resulted in the family's dependence on one, usually M, breadwinner; in the early stages of industrialization men's labor contributed only a part of family income (sometimes as little as 25%), but this increased to 67+% in later stages. This raised the age of women at first marriage, the proportion of celibate women, & the cost of children. A pressure for family size reduction came into existence, with large families reducing the parents' status by making them appear improvident. This recomposition of the family included the adoption of M goals & attitudes regarding children & was followed by the introduction of mass education. W. H. Stoddard

88T4799

Linn, J. Gary, Wilkening, Eugene A. & Husaini, Baqar A. (Cent Health Research Tennessee State U, Nashville 37203), Wife's Agricultural Work and Decision Involvement as Related to Marital Satisfaction in Wisconsin Farm Families, An International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 327-346

¶ An exploration of the effects of greater wife involvement in agricultural operations on marital satisfaction. Personal interview data from 11 Wisconsin farm couples are used to test hypotheses about the effects of wife participation in farm tasks & decision making on various dimensions: husband & wife marital commitment. Considerable evidence is found that wife's involvement in agricultural decisions is related to greater husband-wife satisfaction. This difference is explained in relation to women's household work responsibilities. 11 Tables, 16 References. Modified HA

88T4800

Lowe, George D. & Smith, Robert R. (Dept Sociology Texas Tech U, Lubbock 79409-4590), Gender, Marital Status, and Mental Well-Being: A Retest of Bernard's His and Her Marriages, Sociological Spectrum, 1987, 7, 4, 301-307

¶ In The Future of Marriage (New York: Bantam Books, 1972) J. C. Bernard states that marriage is good for men but not for women: she reports married Ms to be happier than unmarried Ms or married Fs, in turn are worse off emotionally than single Fs. Bernard's thesis is tested with a multi-item index of mental well-being using data from 10 white adults who responded to the General Social Surveys 1973-1978. Results do not substantiate the relationships stated. However, marriage is more beneficial for Ms than for Fs in that there is a greater difference in mental well-being between married & unmarried Ms than between married & unmarried Fs. 1 Table, 14 References. Modified HA

88T4801

Mackey, Wade C. (Dept Psychology Iowa Wesleyan Coll, Mt Pleasant 52641), Patterns of Adult-Child Associations in 18 Cultures: Index of the "Nuclear Family", ♦ Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1988, 19, 1, spring, 69-84

¶ The incidences during leisure time of various combinations of adult children who were associated with each other were observed & recorded in 18 cultures (Σ N = 49,000+ observations). The relative proportion of man-woman-child triads (defined as a "nuclear family template") was a particular interest. Across cultures, the predominant group was adult-child dyad, especially the woman-child dyad; in the case of 2 adults with a child, the man-woman-child triad was more common. The dynamic of preferential cross-gender association is especially prevalent in the man-child dyad (compared to the woman-child dyad). It is suggested that as a culture's reliance on traditional DoF by gender decreases, the incidence of the man-woman-child triad ("nuclear family template") increases. 6 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 30 References. Modified HA

88T4802

Maggioni, Guido & Ronfani, Paola (Facoltà Magistero U Urb 61029 Italy), L'esperienza della separazione legale. Un'indagine nell'area milanese (The Experience of Legal Separation: An Investigation in the Milan Area), Sociologia del Diritto, 1987, 14, 2, 107-114. (ITA)

¶ The current debate on the institutional treatment of marital conflict & Italian legislation in this area are reviewed. In an empirical study

88T4822

Ross, Jocelyn L., Clifford, Ruth E. & Eisenman, Russell (U Medicine & Dentistry New Jersey, Stratford 08084). Communication of Sexual Preferences in Married Couples. ♦ The Bulletin of the Psychonomic Society. 1987, 25, 1, Jan, 58-60

† The relationship between marital satisfaction & communication of sexual behavior preferences was investigated in a sample of 61 white married couples. Using a paired-reports questionnaire, two components of communication were examined: agreement (the number of similar preferences of the spouses), & understanding (accurate perception of the partner's preferences). Agreement was found to be significantly related to marital happiness of the couples, whereas understanding was found to be significantly related only to wives' marital satisfaction. Wives also demonstrated greater understanding of their husbands' sexual preferences than husbands did of their wives'. Other variables—length of marriage, frequency of coitus, number of children at home, & spouses' ages & educational levels—were not shown to be related to sexual communication or marital satisfaction. 8 References. HA

88T4823

Rothbacher, Franz (Fakultät Sozialwissenschaften U Mannheim, D-6800 1 Federal Republic Germany). Haushalt, funktionale Differenzierung und soziale Ungleichheit—Evolutionäre Wandlungsprozesse (Household, Functional Differentiation and Social Difference: Evolutionary Processes of Change). Zeitschrift für Soziologie. 1987, 16, 6, Dec, 450-466 (GER)

† The theory of functional differentiation is the most useful frame of analysis for the evolution of the household & family. Within this frame of reference, the influence of functional differentiation on the development of the household structures of different status groups is examined. Secondary analyses of statistics on German households since 1880 show that, with the growing social DofL, the plurality of different household types diminishes, & the "privatized" household of the wage-earning employee becomes the predominant model. A homogenization of both household size & structure occurs in all status groups, as a result of the homogenization of birth rates & the decrease of nonfamily household members (eg, servants). This tendency can be interpreted as an indicator of the disintegration of social milieus, implications for the future are discussed. 6 Tables, 2 Figures, 57 References. Modified HA

88T4824

Ryumina, V. P., Sotsial'nye problemy razvitiya semeynogo podryada (Social Problems of Family Work Teams), Vestnik Leningradskogo Universiteta. Istoriya KPS's. Nauchnyi Kommunizm, Filosofiya, Pravo. 1987, 3(6), Sept, 23-29 (RUS)

† Current problems in supplying Soviet citizens with adequate foodstuffs are largely due to poor administration, subjectivism, & voluntarism in the agricultural sector. Many agricultural workers lost the values of industriousness & care for the land traditionally accorded the peasantry. Now that the ideological dogmatism that spawned the old agricultural system is replaced with fresh ideas, the family is emerging as a production unit with high potential for reforming agriculture. This does not represent a radical departure from the ideals of collective agriculture, since the family is that social unit best fulfilling the collective ideals of sharing the responsibilities & rewards of labor. The shift to the family as the key agricultural unit of production must be accomplished without regressing to a system of private property. G. Prostavov

88T4825

Santi, Lawrence L. (Center Demography & Ecology U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). Change in the Structure and Size of American Households: 1970 to 1985. ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family. 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 833-837

† Although the average size of households in the US fell steadily throughout the 1970s, the relative weight of the forces leading to smaller households shifted over the decade. National surveys & census data indicate that, during 1970-1974, decreases in the size of family households were responsible for the bulk of the decrease in average household size. During 1975-1979, decreases in the proportion of married-couple households began to exert a greater impact on the downward trend in the size of households. The slower rate of decline in household size observed between 1980 & 1985 represents a continuation of these trends, according to which the living arrangements of adults seem to be exerting an increasing impact on the average size of households. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 19 References. HA

88T4826

Schroter, Michael. Marriage. ♦ Theory, Culture & Society. 1987, 4, 2-3, June, 317-322

Translated by Josef Bleicher.

† The institution of marriage at present is being steadily transformed from a relationship controlled by the state to a private relationship. This results from the loss of many earlier functions of the family, due to which both the need to reproduce & the need for children to be legitimate have diminished. The primary beneficiaries of this process have been young men. Men face increasing problems in marriage due to the removal of their power to dominate by physical force, the constant possibility of separation, & the continuation of unrealistic love ideals inherited from the more sexually inhibited nineteenth century. W. H. Stoddard

88T4827

Schultz, Martin (East Carolina U, Greenville NC 27834). Divorce in the South Atlantic States: Origins, Historical Patterns, and Recent Trends. ♦ International Journal of Sociology of the Family. 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 225-250

† Sociologists & social historians have begun to examine the extent of divorce in early North America. Examined here are divorce records from a variety of cities & counties in the southeastern US for 1790-1860, prior to the publication of governmental divorce statistics. Attention is given to legislative divorce, divorce legislation, & divorce rates; these rates are compared with other published findings & with late-nineteenth-century divorce rates. Several major differences from other regions of the US are identified. Theoretical implications of these findings are noted. 7 Tables, 2 Figures, 37 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4828

Schumm, Walter R. (Kansas State U, Manhattan 66506). Feminism and Family Studies: Another Viewpoint. Journal of Family Issues. 1987, 8, 2, June, 253-256

† Discrimination against women in family studies & family research is widely recognized, but the generally unrecognized phenomenon of discrimination against men & M experiences is also significant. Much research has in effect been concerned only with wives by not gathering data from husbands. An attempt to correct this faces varied methodological problems, including the simple possibility of collecting any data from men, the quality of data, & whether data from men support any theoretical models available. A need is evident for a fuller theorization of men's family experiences as a basis for more adequate & sexually unbiased research. 10 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4829

Severino, Sally K., Teusink, J. Paul, Pender, Vivian B. & Bernstein, Anne E. (Dept Psychiatry New York Hospital Cornell Medical Center, 21 Bloomingdale Rd White Plains 10605). Overview: The Psychology of Grandparenthood. Journal of Geriatric Psychiatry. 1986, 19, 1, 3-17

† The literature on grandparenthood as a separate & unique phase in the life cycle is reviewed & found to focus on the social, intrapsychic, & symbolic aspects of grandparenthood. Lacking is a cohesive definition of this phase in terms of its particular developmental tasks, conflicts, developmental arrests, & maturational course. Suggestions are made for how grandparenthood might be viewed in the context of important growth & development of individuals over their life cycles. 32 References. Modified AA

88T4830

Shelton, Beth Anne (Dept Sociology State U New York, Buffalo 14260). Variations in Divorce Rates by Community Size: A Test of the Social Integration Explanation. ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family. 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 827-832

† Using data from the General Social Surveys, a strong r is found between the residential mobility rate & a measure of marital dissolution from which the effects of family, religious, & SE background, & years of exposure to the divorce risk have been removed. It is concluded that the positive r between community size & marital dissolution may be at least partially explained by the higher levels of residential mobility in large cities & Ur areas than in small cities & Ru areas. Moreover, it is theorized that high residential mobility is both an indicator & a source of low social integration. 4 Tables, 15 References. Modified HA

Cross-Cultural Psychology, 1987, 18, 1, Mar, 78-92

† An investigation of the perceived decision-making roles of Mexican-American wives in the purchase of 10 different goods & services & their relation to the acculturation process. Questionnaire responses from 126 Mexican-American & 159 Anglo wives in a southwestern US city indicate that acculturation was operationalized in three different ways, one employed role-relevant attitudinal measures, the others used reading language preference & TV language preference. Perceived decision dominance was shown to be related to all three. 2 Tables, 20 References. HA

88T4813

Osborn, Albert F. (Dept Child Health U Bristol, BS2 8BJ England), Assessing the Socio-Economic Status of Families, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 3, Aug, 429-448

† The long-standing debate in recent years over the validity of conventional approaches to SC or SES classification of individuals, in which scales such as the OPCS Classification of Occupations are utilized & husbands' occupations are used to assign their wives & families to SC positions, is reviewed. An alternative method of assessing family SES is proposed, a composite social index comprising occupation & education of household heads, housing tenure, type of accommodation, persons per room, & car & telephone ownership. This is used to classify 11,231 families of children born during one week of 1970 in GB. The advantages of the index include provision of an assessment of SES for single-parent families having no relevant occupational information & increased sensitivity & reliability compared with OPCS SC. 11 Tables, 47 References. Modified HA

88T4814

Peron, Yves, Lapierre-Adamcyk, Évelyne & Morissette, Denis (Dept démographie U Montreal, Quebec H3C 3J7), Le Changement familial: aspects démographiques (Family Change: Demographic Aspects), ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 317-339 (FRE)

† The impact of decreased fertility on the institutions of family & society in Quebec are discussed, based on 1950-1984 data from the Quebec Bureau of Statistics. Factors affecting the fertility rate, which started dropping in the mid-1960s & continued throughout the 1970s, are the attraction of the two-child family, the drop in popularity of marriage, & the rise in divorce rates. This last factor also favors the early departure of children from the home. These changes in the demographic behavior of families are considered to be signs of weakening family ties, which were the basis of the social fabric. 9 Tables, 3 Graphs. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T4815

Peters, Jeanne M. & Haldeman, Virginia A. (U Nevada, Reno 89557), Time Used for Household Work: A Study of School-Age Children from Single-Parent, Two-Parent, One-Earner, and Two-Earner Families, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 2, June, 212-225

† Time-use charts & survey questionnaires were used to compare the actual & relative amounts of time spent on household work by school-age children in single-parent/1-earner, 2-parent/1-earner, & 2-parent/2-earner families ($\Sigma N = 170$). Findings reveal that employment of the homemaker did not appear to contribute to differences in children's actual time spent on individual household tasks, but it did seem to contribute to differences in the children's share of the total work load. When total time for all tasks was compared, children in 2-parent families were found to spend less actual & relative amounts of time on all household work than children in single-parent families. It was concluded that while children from single-parent families spent only a little more actual time than children from 2-parent families on individual tasks, the apparent effect was cumulative for time spent on all tasks. 3 Tables, 22 References. Modified HA

88T4816

Raab, Melinda M. (U Tennessee, Knoxville 37916), The Expression of Affection and Social Interaction in Families with Young Handicapped Children, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 757-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713477.

88T4817

Rachlin, Vicki C. (Dept Counseling & Educational Psychology State U New York, Buffalo 14260), Fair vs. Equal Role Relations in Dual-Career and Dual-Earner Families: Implications for Family Intervention, U Family Relations, 1987, 36, 2, Apr, 187-192.

† Seventy dual-career & 42 dual-earner couples participated in a questionnaire survey designed to assess the influence of perception of equity, role relations, & family type on marital & individual adjustment. Equity was found to be a significant factor affecting adjustment for both husbands & wives, while role relations was a significant factor only for wives. Dual-career & dual-earner families did not differ in likelihood to report equity or degree of overload. Husbands & wives did not differ in likelihood to report equity, but wives reported a significantly greater degree of overload. Results are discussed in terms of clinical intervention with these families. 5 Tables, 49 References. HA

88T4818

Ramu, G. N. (Dept Sociology U Manitoba, Winnipeg R3T 2N2), Indian Husbands: Their Role Perceptions and Performance in Single and Dual-Earner Families, ♦ U Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 903-915

† A revised version of SA 35 3/87S18446/ISA/1986/5027.

88T4819

Rawat, Poo Singh (U Garhwal, Srinagar Uttar Pradesh 2461 India), Migration and Fluidity in Family Structure: A Case Study Rural Society of Garhwal, U International Journal of Sociology the Family, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 143-157

† Two views of the traditional extended family in India are now coming among scholars: (1) that it is breaking down under pressure from migration, industrialization, & urbanization; & (2) that these processes are strengthening it. Data were collected from families originating in 2 villages of a hill district of Uttar Pradesh, of which 39 had provisionally migrated, 160 had migrant members, & 65 had no migrant members. Evidence shows that migration strengthened rather than weakened family solidarity of joint families. More ties are maintained between Ru & I households of a family than between distinct Ru households of a family. Further, nuclear households are more frequent among migrants, indicating greater fluidity of the joint family structure. 4 Tables, 33 References. Modified HA

88T4820

Rexroat, Cynthia & Shehan, Constance (Joint Center Political Studies, 1301 Pennsylvania Ave NW Washington DC 20004), Family Life Cycle and Spouses' Time in Housework, ♦ U Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 737-750.

† An examination of variation in husbands' & wives' participation in housework over stages of the family life cycle. It was expected that women would spend less time in housework before & after childbearing stages, while husbands would spend more time in domestic labor during periods of least occupational involvement, i.e., early in their employment career & after retirement. Multiple regression to analysis of data on 618 white couples from the 1976 wave of the Panel Study of Income Dynamics support the hypotheses that the salience of work & family roles affect the respective amounts of time that spouses allocate to household labor. The results raise broader concerns regarding the measurement of role sharing & the recent conceptual emphasis on the family work day. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 56 References. Modified HA

88T4821

Rindfuss, Ronald R., Swicegood, C. Gray & Rosenfeld, Rachel (Dept Sociology U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Disorder in the Life Course: How Common and Does It Matter?, U American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 6, Dec, 785-801.

† Many researchers conceptualize the major transitions in the life course as occurring in an orderly progression. Using data from the National Longitudinal Survey of the High School Class of 1972 (original $N = 350$) & its follow-ups, considerable disorder is found in nonfamily events. By the time Rs had been out of high school 8 years, 50+% had sequenced states that deviated from the "normal"; e.g., they returned to school moved to a category not usually included in life-course research, such as unemployment. To what extent does this disorder matter? This question is answered with respect to the transition to parenthood. A simple measure of disorder did not uniformly affect this transition. Rather, disorder has heterogeneous effects. Particular sequences of activities, some or all, some not, affect when people first became parents. For example, delaying effect of education is less powerful if that education has been interrupted by work or some other activity. 7 Tables, 5 Figures, 46 References. Modified HA

88T4840

Vileneuve, Paul & Viaud, Gilles (Dept géographique U Laval, Québec G1K 7P4). Asymétrie occupationnelle et localisation résidentielle des familles à double revenu à Montréal (Occupational Asymmetry and Residential Clustering of Two-Income Families in Montreal). ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 371-391 (FRE)

* The relationship between gender, occupational category, social stratification, & residential clustering in two-income families in Montreal, Quebec, is examined for the period 1971-1981, using data compiled by Statistique Canada. The indicator of asymmetry is calculated according to an occupational hierarchy, based on the criteria of authority, cognitive complexity, & routinization. Two interrelated results emerge: (1) the variation of asymmetry in occupational categories tends to be greater in jobs based on the exercise of authority than in those founded on the control of knowledge, & (2) where residential clustering is concerned, occupational asymmetry diminishes in central U r areas & increases in the suburbs. In families with children, wives are generally at a lower occupational level than their husbands. 3 Tables, 28 References. HA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T4841

Watson, Roy E. L. & DeMeo, Peter W. (Dept Sociology U Victoria, British Columbia V8W 2Y2). Premarital Cohabitation vs. Traditional Courtship and Subsequent Marital Adjustment: A Replication and Follow-Up. ♦ Family Relations, 1987, 36, 2, Apr, 193-197

* The replication by R. E. L. Watson (see SA 31 4/83N3476) of an earlier study by A. DeMaris & G. R. Leslie (see SA 32 2/84N8498) of couples in the first year of their marriages failed to confirm the earlier finding that couples who had not cohabited premaritally had higher marital adjustment than did cohabiters ($N = 84$ & 102 questionnaire Rs, respectively). Possible reasons for this are discussed. In addition, the results of a follow-up study of 93 couples in the fourth year of their marriages who had earlier taken part in the original or replication studies are reported. The premarital relationship of the couples, whether of cohabitation or traditional courtship, does not appear to have had a long-term effect on the marital adjustment of intact couples. 1 Table, 19 References. Modified HA

88T4842

Weigel, Randy R., Weigel, Daniel J. & Blundall, Joan (Dept Home Economics U Wyoming, Laramie 82071). Stress, Coping, and Satisfaction: Generational Differences in Farm Families. ♦ Family Relations, 1987, 36, 1, Jan, 45-48

* Questionnaire data obtained from 481 adults in 284 2-generation farm families in Iowa are used to study intergenerational relations & how generational differences are related to stress, coping, family support, & family satisfaction. Results indicate that among these families, the younger generation was the more stressed & the least satisfied with the family farm situation. Implications for practitioners & researchers studying the 2-generation farm family are discussed. 1 Table, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4843

Weingarten, Helen & Bryant, Fred B. (School Social Work U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109-1285). Marital Status and the Meaning of Subjective Well-Being: A Structural Analysis. ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 883-892

* The impact of marital status on how people organize & interpret subjective experience was investigated by comparing national survey responses of first-married, divorced, & formerly divorced-remarried adults ($N = 1,068$, 200, & 186, respectively). A 3-state confirmatory factor analysis procedure was used to examine how Rs structure judgments about personal well-being, to compare these organizational structures across groups, & to clarify the nature of any variations found. A 6-factor model, empirically validated to describe the general population as a comparative baseline, supported the notion that the meaning of similar responses to questions of well-being varies according to marital status. The way that first-married, divorced, & remarried Rs structure their subjective evaluations differed significantly not only from one another, but also, except for first-married Rs, from the general population patterns as well. Specifically, whereas divorce was associated with an increased emphasis on future morale in defining present happiness, remarriage was associated with increased emphasis on the quality of ongoing role relationships in defining present gratification. 2 Tables, 46 References. HA

88T4844

Williams, Linda Brooks (Brown U, Providence RI 02912). Migration, Women's Intra-Familial Decision-Making Power, and Fertility: The Case of Rural Central Java. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct 1024-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715583.

88T4845

Wodz, Kazimiera. Alcune riflessioni sulle trasformazioni della famiglia polacca (Some Reflections on the Transformations of the Polish Family). ♦ La Critica Sociologica, 1986, 79, Oct-Dec 140-150 (ITA)

* A review of changes in family life & the social structure in Poland since WWII that have resulted from the major economic transformation of industrialization & urbanization. Evidence is drawn from official statistics & various studies. Major trends discussed include: (1) the shift from multigeneration households to the nuclear family; (2) the increasing proportion of Fs in paid employment, & (3) the general decline in the birthrate, although this trend is subject to oscillations, & appears to be affected by, eg, changes in the maternity benefits scheme. 3 Tables, References. C. Waters

88T4846

Yelsma, Paul & Athappilly, Kurinkose (Dept Communication Arts & Sciences Western Michigan U, Kalamazoo 49008). Marital Satisfaction and Communication Practices: Comparisons among Indian and American Couples. ♦ Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1988, 19, 1, spring, 37-54.

* To examine cultural differences between India & the West in marital behavior & communication patterns, questionnaire data collected in Kerala, India, from 106 married people are compared with similar data from 62 US married persons in Mich. Indian marriages are divided in arranged & love marriages, the latter are more similar to US marriage. However, the highest levels of marital satisfaction are found in Indian arranged marriages. Some emotional advantages of arranged marriage are identified. Different attributes affect marital satisfaction in the two cultures, but in India, at least, satisfaction is not necessarily related to communication behavior. 4 Tables, 30 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4847

Zvidrin'sh, Petr Pavlovich & Ezera, Ligita Rudol'fovna (Leningrad State U, USSR). Sotsial'no-demograficheskiy sostav nepolnykh semej (The Sociodemographic Structure of Incomplete Families). ♦ Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 3, May-June, 37-41 (RUS)

* According to 1979 census data, the proportion of Soviet families lacking one parent through divorce, death, or birth out-of-wedlock is higher in the Baltic republics than for the USSR as a whole. In Latvia the proportion of births out-of-wedlock increased from 18% in 1979 to 25% in 1984. To some extent this increase is due to official measures taken to encourage higher birthrates. To obtain detailed information about this trend, questionnaire data were obtained through a mail survey of 921 Fs. About 80% of the unwed mothers had chosen to have a child, many felt the marriage with a suitable partner was not in their future, but still wanted to raise a child. Typical difficulties faced by such women include financial, housing, health, babysitting, & educational problems. 4 Tables, Reference. G. Prostikov

88T4848

Verdon, Michel. La Famille souche et l'agriculture menacée (Michel Verdon) (The Extended Family and the Threat to Agriculture [Michel Verdon]). ♦ Recherches Sociographiques, 1987, 28, 2-3, 253-254 (FRE)

* The transmission of undivided property to a sole heir is discussed in the case of extended families (defined as a residential group formed by a couple, their son & daughter-in-law) in the province of Quebec, as described by Michel Verdon. In French Canada, the sole heir is chosen on the basis of psychological & moral criteria, usually determined by his wife's (the daughter-in-law's) qualities. The parents' desire to establish the son-heir is often tinged with a fear of being rendered destitute by him. Some older couples have difficulty in recruiting a son to accept the agricultural inheritance; most young people, after marriage, have no desire to live with nor share their earnings with their parents. D. Graves

88T4831

Steinberg, Laurence & Silverberg, Susan B. (Dept Child & Family Studies U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Influences on Marital Satisfaction during the Middle Stages of the Family Life Cycle, ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 751-760

¶ Cross-sectional & short-term longitudinal survey data ($N = 129$ couples) are used to examine 3 sets of influences on marital satisfaction during the transitional period of the family life cycle between childhood & adolescence: aspects of the adolescent's development, features of the parent-adolescent relationship, & psychological characteristics of the midlife adults. Multiple regression analyses indicate that marital satisfaction during the family's adolescent years is negatively influenced by distance in the father-son or mother-daughter relationship, & by wives' concerns about midlife identity. Since previous studies indicate that the adolescent years may be a time of increased distance between parents & their children, & middle adulthood a time of increased concern about identity-related issues, the oft-reported dip in marital happiness midway through the family life cycle may be somewhat inevitable. 5 Tables, 30 References. Modified HA

88T4832

Strom, Robert, Daniels, Susan & Park, Seong (Arizona State U, Tempe 85287), The Adjustment of Korean Immigrant Families, Educational and Psychological Research, 1986, 6, 3, summer, 213-227

¶ An assessment of the childrearing expectations of Korean parents who have immigrated to the US. A sample of 118 mothers & fathers of children aged 3-5 in an Ur southwest area completed an inventory measuring childrearing attitudes. A multiple regression analysis indicates that parent gender & educational level, length of residence in the country, & amount of time spent interacting with the child were the best predictors of parent expectations. 3 Tables, 19 References. HA

88T4833

Suitor, J. Jill & Pillemer, Karl (Family Research Laboratory U New Hampshire, Durham 03824), The Presence of Adult Children: A Source of Stress for Elderly Couples' Marriages?, ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 717-725

¶ Recent national data indicate that increasing numbers of adult children continue to live or return to live in their parents' homes. Here, the effects of the presence of adult children on elderly parents' relationships are examined, based on telephone interviews conducted with a random sample of 677 elderly residents of the Boston, Mass, metropolitan area. Contrary to expectations, multiple regression analysis provides no support for the hypothesis that individuals sharing a residence with adult children experience greater marital conflict, even when age, educational attainment, health, & gender are controlled. However, among Rs sharing a residence with an adult child, the primary variable explaining conflict is f of parent-child conflict. 2 Tables, 58 References. Modified HA

88T4834

Tabory, Ephraim & Weller, Leonard (Bar-Ilan U, Ramat-Gan 52100 Israel), Residential Proximity and Mate Selection in an Israeli Town, International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 217-223

¶ The institution of universal military service in Israel ensures that both young men & young women live for several years away from their permanent homes. Marriage records of 280 couples in a centrally located town in 1974/75 are examined to test the hypothesis that, under these conditions, residential proximity has less influence on mate selection. The hypothesis is confirmed, though the impact of residential proximity is greater for Jews of Eastern origin than for Jews of Western origin, revealing an impact of cultural factors. 2 Tables, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4835

Tashakkori, Abbas, Thompson, Vaida D. & Mehryar, Amir H. (Population Center U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Iranian Adolescents' Intended Age of Marriage and Desired Family Size, ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 4, Nov, 917-927

¶ Questionnaire data pertaining to intended age of marriage & desired family size were collected from 329 F & 295 M twelfth-grade students in Shiraz, Iran. Two sets of predictor variables were used in regression analyses: distal variables, primarily family-level, including parental education, sibling size, family modernity, & parental power, & proximal, or individual-level variables, including self-concept, traditionalism, school success, & sex. In predictions addressing both dependent measures, distal factors were not as strong, direct predictors as were proximal factors. For example, with regard to desired family size, proximal variables of traditional attitudes, boy preference, & self-esteem explain the variance that is related to more distal variables of parental education & number of siblings & add to the variance explained by these distal variables. 5 Tables, 24 References. HA

88T4836

Tavittian, Mark L., Lubiner, Judith, Green, Laura, Grebstein, Laurence C. & Velicer, Wayne F. (c/o Grebstein-Dept Psychology Rhode Island Kingston 02881-0808), Dimensions of Family Functioning, ♦ Journal of Social Behavior and Personality, 1987, 2, 2(1 May), 191-204

¶ The development of a self-report scale measuring dimensions of general family functioning is described. An initial 197-item pool was generated from the theoretical family literature & previous research. A series of principal components analyses with varimax rotation were performed on the responses of 283 Ss, & a 32-item version of a preliminary inventory measuring 5 salient aspects of family functioning was developed. Cronbach alpha reliability estimates & scale intercorrelations were calculated, all data analyses were crossvalidated on a second, equivalent sample of 282 Ss. Additional studies have corroborated these dimensions & demonstrated that they can be used to discriminate between certain clinical (eg, schizophrenic & alcoholic) & nonclinical groups. 2 Tables, 47 References. Modified HA

88T4837

Thompson, Linda & Walker, Alexis J. (Dept Family & Child Development Virginia Technological Instit & State U, Blacksburg 24061), Mothers as Mediators of Intimacy between Grandmothers & Their Young Adult Granddaughters, Family Relations, 1987, 36, Jan, 72-77

¶ It was predicted that when contact is low between grandmother & granddaughter, the relationship is mediated by the mother, but when contact is high, the relationship between grandmother & granddaughter is direct & bypasses the middle generation. Questionnaire data from a sample of 126 triads (undergraduate women, their mothers, & maternal grandmothers), support the prediction when considering granddaughters' perceptions of intimacy. When considering grandmothers' perceptions of intimacy, however, the oldest generation failed to differentiate at all between their feelings for their daughter & their feelings for their granddaughter. In view of this global "family feeling," the issue of mediation for grandmothers is irrelevant. It would appear that a different model is needed to predict grandmothers' feelings for their granddaughters than to predict granddaughters' feelings for their grandmother. 2 Tables, 23 References. Modified HA

88T4838

Ulrich, Helen E. (National Humanities Center, 7 Alexander Pl. Research Triangle Park NC 27709), Marriage Patterns among Hindu Brahmins: A 20-Year Study of Change, Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 11 June, 615-635

¶ Data on 94 women gathered during 4 field trips to a village located in the Malnad area of Karnataka State, India, are used to examine changes in Hindu Brahmin marriage patterns over a 20-year period. Tested hypotheses that education & increased age at marriage provide women with increased options for personal development & professional qualifications. Four case studies of married & 2 case studies of single women illustrate that, with increases in marriage age & educational level, women have increased independence as daughters, brides, wives, & mothers. Concurrent with this is a decreased emphasis on ritual, & women become more assertive as they have perceived options. Also, the change in the ascribed status of men as superior to achieved status based on education has permitted increased opportunities for women. 4 Tables, 3 References. Modified AA van Anel, J. (Technische Hogeschool Eindhoven, NL-5600 Netherlands), Woonomgeving en kinderen (Home-Environment Children), * Dissertation Abstracts International. C: Euro Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 477. (DUT) Unavailable from UMI; published by J. van Anel, Oranjestra NL-5671 HH Nuenen, the Netherlands.

88T4839

students studying at 6 regent's institutions in Kan. Three specific attitudinal dimensions were investigated via mail questionnaire: (1) perceptions of population problems in Nigeria, (2) attitudes toward family planning, divorce, & M children; & (3) attitudes toward family size. Findings indicate that: (A) in general, Rs do not believe there is a population problem in Nigeria, & rapid population growth is not a cause of poverty, poor health, or unemployment, (2) the majority of Rs agree that a government population policy should be adopted, but do not agree with government interference in the number of children a couple desires, (3) family planning information & services should be made available to men, but women should not practice family planning without the consent of their husbands; (4) duration of stay in the US is inversely correlated with the number of children considered too many, & (5) the number of M children is an extremely important variable in regard to additional children desired. Since policies based on F fertility research do not appear to be solving the problem of rapid population growth in Nigeria & other African nations, it is hoped that the unbalanced orientation in the study of fertility can begin to be redressed by securing information from men. Implications of the findings, recommendations, & future research issues are discussed. 5 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA

88T4858

Adebayo, Akin (Dept Sociology Kansas State U, Manhattan 66506). The Masculine Side of Planned Parenthood: An Explanatory Analysis. ♦ Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1988, 19, 1, spring, 55-67

¶ Research & policy formation regarding African fertility generally assume that the behavior of women is its crucial determinant. This approach disregards the relatively high power of men in African societies & the high value men place on fertility. Family planning is a difficult political issue & arouses many fears among men. Anonymous questionnaires were used to measure fertility attitudes of 202 Nigerian men attending 6 Us located in Kan. Rs generally regard family planning as a sphere for private decisions, consider children as desirable, & do not believe that their country is overpopulated. Given these attitudes, family planning in Nigeria can be expected to have little success. 5 Tables, 13 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4859

Bart, Pauline B. (U Illinois, Chicago 60680). Seizing the Means of Reproduction: An Illegal Feminist Abortion Collective—How and Why It Worked. Qualitative Sociology, 1987, 10, 4, winter, 339-357

¶ An illegal feminist abortion collective in Chicago, Ill, called The Service is described, through whose efforts 11,000 abortions were performed between 1969 & 1973, when abortion was legalized. An analysis of interview data from 32 members of this lay group indicates how & why the collective was so effective in providing what is usually a MD-controlled medical procedure. After describing the structure of the organization & the process by which women obtained the abortion, including preabortion counseling & postabortion follow-up, two sets of reasons for the collective's effectiveness are presented: the first five reasons deal with the organization's social & historical context, illegality, charismatic leaders, member satisfaction, & financial self-sufficiency, the next nine deal with factors that made The Service a relatively typical democratic collective organization. The most important factor was its lack of concern for organizational survival per se. 19 References. Modified HA

88T4860

Batse, Zephyrinus Kofi Mensah (U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514). Interrelationships between Infant/Child Mortality and Reproductive Behavior: An Examination of Evidence from Ghana. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 485-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711079.

88T4861

Bautista-Foley, Marie Lou Frias (Dept Sociology Virginia Polytechnic Instit & State U, Blacksburg 24061). Historical Influences on Gender Preference in the Philippines. ♦ Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1988, 19, 1, spring, 143-153

¶ The status of Filipino Ms & Fs today reflects societal changes that have had a profound influence on people's perceptions of the psychological & economic benefits of having a child of a particular gender. Historically, in the Malayan period, egalitarian gender preference was observed, in the Spanish period, Ms were perceived to be superior to Fs, & there was a preference for M children, under the US regime the people's Malayan core was gradually strengthened, along with egalitarian child preference. The Philippines today continues to be influenced by Western social trends, particularly from the US, one example is the feminist movement. As a consequence of three factors—Western ideological influences, industrialization & mechanization, & nationalistic spirit—economic, political, & social opportunities are increasingly available to Fs, so parents have adopted a more egalitarian stance in gender preference. In a country with an inefficient & inadequate government welfare system, egalitarian gender preference takes on added benefits. Filipinos are likely to continue rearing their children, both M & F, to possess traits that society expects: politeness, kindness, generosity, obedience, & a sense of family commitment & obligation. 46 References. Modified AA

88T4862

Bhrolchain, Maire Ni (Centre Population Studies London School Hygiene & Tropical Medicine, WC1B 3FL England). Period Parity Progression Ratios and Birth Intervals in England and Wales, 1941-1971: A Synthetic Life Table Analysis. ♦ Population Studies, 1987, 41, 1, Mar, 103-125

¶ A method is presented for analyzing maternity history data to provide period estimates of parity progression ratios, birth intervals, & related indices, & applied to a sample of the marriage & maternity histories from the 1971 Census of England & Wales. Results indicate (1) a general increase through the 1950s & into the 1960s in period estimates of marriage & parity progression ratios, especially in the progression from first to second birth, (2) a general acceleration of fertility with, again, the second birth interval becoming particularly short & compact, & (3) very steep declines in third & fourth birth progression ratios from the mid-1960s. Birth interval distributions are also revealed to have changed during this period. Decomposition of a progression-based total fertility index shows change in the ratios for lower birth orders to have dominated the fertility upswing & declines in ratios for higher birth orders to have initiated the subsequent decline. 7 Tables, 4 Figures, 2 Appendixes. HA

88T4863

Bleek, Wolf & Asante-Darko, Nimrod K. (Antropologisch-Sociologisch Centrum U Amsterdam, 0.7 Achterburgwal 185 NI-1012 DK Netherlands). Illegal Abortion in Southern Ghana: Methods, Motives and Consequences. Human Organization, 1986, 45, 4, winter, 333-344

¶ Various aspects of illegally induced abortion among the Akan in southern Ghana are described, including the frequency of abortion, the techniques used, the social circumstances in which it takes place; its medical, juridical, & educational consequences, & value judgments about it. The most important conclusion is that the restrictiveness of Ghanaian legislation has not been able to prevent or limit the incidence of abortion. Its outlawing has rather led to the use of dubious & highly dangerous means of causing abortion. Young women are the main victims of the present situation, both in terms of unequal educational opportunities & in terms of physical damage caused to them. A more appropriate family planning policy in combination with a legalization of abortion seems a reasonable solution. 7 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 59 References. HA

88T4864

Bongaarts, John. Does Family Planning Reduce Infant Mortality Rates? Population and Development Review, 1987, 13, 2, June, 323-334

¶ Although it is widely accepted that family planning can theoretically reduce infant & child mortality, it is not clear whether the changes in family-formation patterns that typically accompany the adoption of contraception do in fact have a significant favorable effect on infant mortality rates. Here, the proportions of high-risk pregnancies in groups of developing countries at different stages of the family planning transition are compared, using UN statistics & estimates from various studies. Countries with relatively high levels of contraceptive use have fewer teenage births & fewer births of orders over six, when compared with countries in which family planning is minimal. These differentials would by themselves result in lower infant mortality rates in the later phases of the fertility transition. This effect is offset, however, by the fact that countries with higher levels of contraceptive prevalence also tend to have higher proportions of births of order one & higher proportions of births after short birth intervals, both of which are associated with higher than average mortality risks. The net effect of these two compensating sets of factors on infant mortality rates is very small. Thus, changes in the age/order/interval distributions of births do not necessarily improve the chances for survival of infants as a society moves through a fertility transition. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 1 Appendix, 30 References. HA

76 socialization

88T4849

Burleson, Brant R., Applegate, James L., Burke, Julie A., Clark, Ruth Anne, Della, Jesse G. & Kline, Susan L. (Dept Communication Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907), Communicative Correlates of Peer Acceptance in Childhood, Communication Education, 1986, 35, 4, Oct, 349-361.

¶ An attempt to determine which of several distinct communication skills is most related to peer status. Groups of rejected, neglected, & accepted first- & third-grade children were created on the basis of positive & negative peer nominations. The 73 Ss completed a persuasion task, a comforting task, a listener adaptation task, & 3 referential communication tasks. Accepted children performed significantly better on the comforting task & one of the referential tasks, & marginally better on the persuasion task. Implications of these results for intervention efforts & future research are discussed. 3 Tables, 53 References. Modified HA

88T4850

Dettwyler, Katherine A. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology U Southern Mississippi, Hattiesburg 39406-5074), Breastfeeding and Weaning in Mali: Cultural Context and Hard Data, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 8, 633-644.

¶ A methodology for determining infant feeding patterns is presented & tested using interview & observational data from a 2-year study of breastfeeding & weaning patterns among Malinese, West African, Fs (N = 116). Knowledge of both the beliefs & practices associated with infant feeding is professed as the only way to understand malnutrition & infant health in a given community. Among the Malinese sample, virtually all women breastfed their infants; bottle/formula use was rare. Infants were nursed on demand, for comfort as well as nutrition. Weaning took place at an average age of 20.8 months, with a range of 6-32 months. Breastfeeding & weaning practices affected the growth & development of infants during the first 2 years of life. In contrast to many other populations, a number of infants in this community showed improved growth after weaning. Some traditional beliefs about infant feeding are changing under the pressure of U/r norms, while others remain resistant to change, with varying effects on infant health. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 22 References. Modified HA

88T4851

Kanjirathinkal, Mathew Joseph (U Notre Dame, IN 46556), Social Limits of Moral Development: Formalistic Reduction and Devolution of Reason, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 760-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712945.

88T4852

Mao-Kuei, Chang, Title appears in Chinese (A Conflict Perspective of Socialization: Theory and Some Empirical Findings), ♦ Chung Yang Yen Chiu Yuan Min Tsu Hsueh Yen Chiu So Chi K'an/Bulletin of the Institute of Ethnology Academia Sinica, 1985, 60, autumn, 165-194 (CHI).

¶ Each of the major sociological schools implies a distinct perspective on socialization, but that of conflict theory has been relatively little developed. Randall Collins (Conflict Sociology, New York: Academic Press, 1975) argues that socialization is a process of manipulating others' subjective worlds, & that conflicts are likely to occur within it. This idea is applied to subculture of deviance studies & to the labeling perspective. Empirical research is reviewed from this viewpoint & five theoretical propositions are advanced regarding the conflictual character of socialization. 89 References. Modified HA

88T4853

Niestroj, Brigitte H. E. (Fuggerstr 4, 1 Berlin 30 Federal Republic Germany), Modern Individuality and the Social Isolation of Mother and Child, ♦ Comparative Civilizations Review, 1987, 16, fall, 23-40.

¶ An examination of attitudes toward the mother-child relationship recorded during the Renaissance (from the twelfth to the sixteenth century) & their relation to the emergence of individualism in Western culture during this period. The separate nuclear-family household appears as a distinctively modern institution. Arguments against the use of wet-nurses were common during the Renaissance & reflected M authoritarianism toward women. It came to be thought that a child's early experiences could only be beneficial if primarily determined by maternal care. In consequence, mothers were exhorted to attain a self-control that would permit them to make effective use of their influence over their children. The goal of this influence became the shaping of the child into an educated, rational, & autonomous being. W. H. Stoddard.

88T4854

Richards, Martin, Parents and Kids: The New Thinking, UM New Society, 1987, 79, 1265, 27 Mar, 12-15.

¶ A consideration of how recent changes in developmental psychology particularly its thinking on parent-child relations—have affected family policy issues. Emphasis has shifted away from the mother-child dyad to acknowledge the roles that fathers play in their children's development & the effects of nontraditional family arrangements, eg, single-parent households & new custodial relationships following divorce. The effects on children's development of paternal absence via death & divorce are examined. 4 Photographs, 1 Reference. K. Hyatt.

77 birth control (abortion, contraception, fertility, & childbearing)

88T4855

Abeykoon, A. T. P. L. (U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), Differentials in Fertility and Contraceptive Behavior in Sri Lanka: The Ethno-Religious Factor, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 484-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712063.

88T4856

Aborampah, Osei-Mensah (Dept Afro-American Studies U Wisconsin, Milwaukee 53201), Plural Marriage and Fertility Differentials: A Study of the Yoruba of Western Nigeria, UM Human Organization, 1987, 16, 1, spring, 29-38.

¶ Multiple classification & regression techniques are employed to show how matrimonial & sociodemographic variables & duration of postpartum sexual abstinence influence fertility. A distinction is made between type of marriage & the position a woman occupies in a hierarchically ordered polygynous union in explaining fertility among a sample of 300 Yoruba women of western Nigeria, interviewed in 1974/75 as part of the Nigerian Family Study conducted by J. C. & Pat Caldwell (see SA 26 5/78J6522). Among all the variables considered, age, place of residence, & age at first marriage appeared to be significantly related to individual fertility. No significant variation in the postpartum variables & fertility between monogamous & polygynous women emerged; neither was domestic hierarchy found to play any major role in childbearing & abstinence practices. The effect of contraception on the postpartum variables appeared to be a function of SES. The findings imply that (1) social change may have altered the older connection between polygyny, abstinence, & fertility; & (2) reductions in the duration of the postpartum variable, due to relative affluence, can result in significant increases in individual fertility unless effective substitutes are available & used. 3 Tables, 26 References. Modified HA

88T4857

Adamchak, Donald J. & Adebayo, Akinwumi (Dept Sociology Population Research Laboratory Kansas State U, Manhattan 66506), Male Fertility Attitudes: A Neglected Dimension in Nigerian Fertility Research, UM Social Biology, 1987, 34, 1-2, spring-summer, 57-67.

¶ An examination of the fertility attitudes of a sample of 202 M Nigerian dren per family. However, as Eaton & Meyer thought would happen, subsequent research has found that the Hutterite family is getting smaller. While part of this appears to be due to later marriage, some have suspected the use of birth control measures as well. It is demonstrated here, based on medical records at a clinic in Alberta that treats Hutterite women (N = 48 married patients), that in spite of an official opposition to birth control practices, a significant proportion of Hutterite women are artificially controlling their fertility. Reasons for this shift are suggested. 10 References. Modified AA

88T4873

Junadi, Purnawan (U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), The Effect of Village Modernization and the Family Planning & Nutrition Program on Household Knowledge and Behavior in East Java and Bali, Indonesia, * Dissertation Abstracts International 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 491-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712142.

88T4874

Kabir, M. & Uddin, M. Mosleh (Dept Statistics Jahangirnagar U, Savar Dhaka Bangladesh), Effect of Nuptiality, Contraception and Breast-Feeding on Fertility in Bangladesh, Journal of Biosocial Science 1987, 19, 3, July, 345-350

† The effects of marriage, contraception, & postpartum lactational in-fecundability on fertility in Bangladesh are assessed by applying J. Bongaarts' formula ("The Fertility Inhibiting Effects of the Intermediate Fertility Variables," Studies in Family Planning, 1982, 18, 179) to various data from surveys for the period 1975-1985. Results indicate that marriage is universal & age at marriage is low. Breast-feeding is prolonged & has a pronounced effect on fertility. The fertility-reducing effect of contraception increased over the period through increased use of modern methods. The total fertility rate declined by 24% during this period. 3 Tables, 11 References. HA

88T4875

Krishnan, Vijaya, Preferences for Sex of Children: A Multivariate Analysis, Journal of Biosocial Science, 1987, 19, 3, July, 367-376

† Using data from the 1973/74 Growth of Alberta Family Study, preferences for the sex of children among women (N = 599) in Edmonton are examined. Discriminant functions are used to compare selected characteristics of women who prefer to have sons & those who prefer to have daughters. Results show some preference for sons, although generally women prefer to have children of both sexes. The variables birthplace, number of F siblings of wife, & education of husband are found to discriminate best among the 2 groups. In general, the results suggest that sex preference among women is more heavily determined by their country of birth & number of M & F siblings. There is some evidence to suggest that preference for sex of children varies between adolescents & older women. The idea of sex predetermination is not widely favored. 7 Tables, 15 References. Modified HA

88T4876

Lavoie, Michael R. & Dever, G. E. Alan (School Medicine Mercer U, Macon GA 31207), Reproductive Mortality in Georgia: A Lifestyle and Environmental Analysis, Social Indicators Research, 1987, 19, 2, May, 191-204

† Frequencies & rates of maternal mortality in the US have declined sharply since the turn of the century. During this decline, researchers have closely examined maternal mortality relative to various risk factors. However, maternal death as currently defined & coded on death certificates may not reveal the true extent of the problem of reproductive mortality. In Ga., an analysis of death certificates of Fs aged 10-49 indicated that deaths due to pregnancy-related conditions are not being discovered by traditional underlying cause-of-death maternal mortality classification. Frequencies & rates were calculated showing the difference between the traditional International Classification of Disease codes for maternal deaths (ICD 630-676) & a reproductive mortality definition emphasizing the Health Field Concept classification of Lifestyle, Environment, Biology, & Health Care Delivery Systems (eg, as in Lalonde, M., A New Perspective on the Health of Canadians, Ottawa: Ministry of National Health & Welfare, 1974). The results suggest that a revised definition of maternal mortality be employed to take into consideration all risk factors related to reproductive mortality. 4 Tables, 7 Figures, 16 References. HA

88T4877

Lowe, Candace S. & Radius, Susan M. (Consortium Pregnant & Parenting Teens Brigham & Women's Hospital, 75 Francis St Boston MA 02115), Young Adults' Contraceptive Practices: An Investigation of Influences, ♦ Adolescence, 1987, 22, 86, summer, 291-304

† Young adults' contraceptive behaviors & attitudes are examined using a social psychological approach that incorporates the Health Belief Model (Maiman, L., & Becker, M., "The Health Belief Model: Origins and Correlations in Psychological Theory," Health Education Monographs, 1974, 2, 4, 336-353). Anonymous self-administered questionnaire data obtained from 283 unmarried students aged 18-22 at 11 Colls & Un in New England reveal the influence of individual & peer group characteristics on contraceptive behavior. Results indicate the prevalence of dangerous misinformation, underscoring the need for continuing education about sexuality & contraception. In addition, the importance of considering broad behavioral, social, & interpersonal issues as they relate to young adults' effective contraceptive behavior is demonstrated. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 27 References. Modified HA

88T4878

Nichter, Mark & Nichter, Mimi (Dept Anthropology U Arizona, Tucson 85721), Cultural Notions of Fertility in South Asia and Their Impact on Sri Lankan Family Planning Practices, UM Human Organization, 1987, 16, 1, spring, 18-28.

† Cultural perceptions of fertility are examined in regions of southern India & southwestern Sri Lanka, based on anthropological field data collected in 1974 & 1984, respectively. The notion that a woman is most fertile directly after menses is discussed in the two ethnographic contexts & documented in other geographic areas. In the Sri Lankan context, attention is paid to how health ideology affects family planning behavior. The importance of culturally appropriate family planning education in Sri Lanka is stressed in light of recent data demonstrating the underutilization of modern family planning methods. 1 Figure, 43 References. Modified HA

88T4879

Powell-Griner, Eve & Rogers, Richard G., Strong Compounding Effects of Multiple Risks during Pregnancy on Birthweight and Infant Survival, ♦ UM Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 49-54

† Evidence is offered from an analysis of data on births from 7,825 married Fs & 190 infant deaths, collected in the 1980 National Natality Survey, that babies exposed to multiple risks during pregnancy are much more likely to be of low birthweight &/or to die before age 1. This examination of multiple risks considers joint effects of a mother's consumption of alcohol, cigarettes, coffee, & aspirin, inadequate prenatal care, low prepregnant weight, & failure to take vitamins, as well as medical, social, & demographic complications & deprivations. Low birthweight & infant mortality rates increase dramatically when an infant is exposed to 4-5 risks, compared to 2-3, & the latter is far more significant than 1-2 risks. 3 Tables, 1 Appendix, 14 References. Modified HA

88T4880

Quanhe Yang, Fertility and Some Determinants of Fertility Decline in Huaibei Plain, Anhui Province, China, 1982, Journal of Biosocial Science, 1987, 19, 3, July, 323-344

† An examination of the level & trend of fertility in Huaibei Plain, Anhui Province, China, since 1950, using questionnaire data from the 1/1000 Fertility Survey conducted by the Family Planning Commission in 1982. Fertility decline among younger women (aged under 30) is found to be largely due to later age at marriage, a growing trend in Huaibei Plain. Current use of contraception suggests that the family planning program, particularly the 1979 1-child policy, has been the major determinant in fertility decline. The greatest decline in marital fertility has occurred among women aged 35+, & is primarily due to contraceptive practice & induced abortion. 16 Tables, 3 Figures, 17 References. Modified HA

88T4881

Reed, Fred W. & McBroom, William H. (Dept Sociology U Montana, Missoula 59801), The Effect of Marriage on Fertility Intentions: An Approximation with Cross-Sectional Data, UM International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 111-123.

† Cross-sectional data are used to create a quasi-longitudinal design to explore the effect of marriage on fertility intentions. Data were obtained in 1974 from mail questionnaire responses of 228 M & 165 F students.

88T4865

Carvajal, Manuel J. & Geithman, David T. (Florida International U., Miami 33199), Empirical Findings on Socioeconomic Determinants of Fertility Differentials in Costa Rica, in International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 19-35

¶ A demand-for-children model is used to identify SE variables that are expected to generate fertility differentials. Data from national surveys are used to test this model for a 10% sample of Costa Rica households during 1963 ($N = 15,924$). A statistically significant inverse relationship is found between measured fertility & current income of husband & wife, but income elasticities are low. Least-squares methods reveal significant relationships of household fertility to opportunity cost of time, parental education, occurrence of an extended family, medical care, household sanitation, economic sector of employment, & household stock of nonhuman capital. Theoretical explanations for these findings are outlined. 1 Table, 1 Appendix, 33 References. Modified HA

88T4866

Cleland, John & Wilson, Christopher (c/o Wilson London School Economics, Aldwych WC 2A 2AF England), Demand Theories of the Fertility Transition: An Iconoclastic View, in Population Studies, 1987, 41, 1, Mar, 5-30

¶ The widely held & influential view that the fertility transition is largely the consequence of changing parental demand for children brought about by changes in the economic costs & benefits entailed in childbearing is challenged. Using evidence from both historical & contemporary populations primarily drawn from the European Fertility Project & the World Fertility Survey of 41 developing countries, it is argued that demand theories do not offer a plausible explanation of the fertility transition. Instead, it is proposed that ideational, rather than structural, economic change lies at the heart of the transition. In particular, it is suggested that attitudes to birth control, broadly defined, play a crucial role. HA

88T4867

Faulkenberry, J. Ron, Vincent, Murray, James, Arnold & Johnson, Wayne (Dept Health & Education Francis Marion Coll, Florence SC 29501), Cotital Behaviors, Attitudes, and Knowledge of Students Who Experience Early Coitus, in Adolescence, 1987, 22, 86, summer, 321-332

¶ An investigation of cotital behavior, contraceptive practices, & attitudinal & knowledge differences between early & late cotital initiators (age 16 or younger vs age 17-20). Data were compiled from the results of a questionnaire administered to 929 students enrolled in personal health courses at 14 Colls & Us in South Carolina; the sample used for analysis included only the never-married cotitally experienced Ms & Fs aged 20+ ($N = 396$). The results suggest that late cotital initiators (1) were more effective contraceptors during initial coitus, (2) had more committed relationships with their initial sex partners, (3) engaged in more discussion about & planning for contraceptive use, & (4) used more authoritative & reliable sources for contraceptive information than their younger counterparts. Both groups scored very low on basic knowledge questions concerning fertility, contraception, & sexually transmitted diseases. These results mandate greater public concern & involvement to delay early cotital experiences & prevent unprotected sexual intercourse. 4 Tables, 17 References. HA

88T4868

Feeney, Griffith & Jingyuan Yu (Population Instit East-West Center, 1777 East-West Rd Honolulu HI 96849), Period Parity Progression Measures of Fertility in China, in Population Studies, 1987, 41, 1, Mar, 77-102

¶ Parity progression measures are uniquely suited to the study of fertility in China, because Chinese policies & programs focus so closely on parity & birth order. Period parity progression ratios are presented for China as a whole & for its Ur & Ru areas for the years 1955-1981, using the birth history data from the National One-Per-Thousand Fertility Survey of 1982. These period parity progression ratios differ from those introduced by L. Henry (Fertility of Marriage: A New Method of Measurement, Population Studies Translation Series No. 3, Economic & Social Commission for Asia & the Pacific, New York: UN, 1980 [1953]) in that they provide an overall level of fertility that may be compared with measures based on age-specific birthrates. The two measures are empirically compared for China, finding both similarities & divergences, & the relation between them is analyzed. It is suggested that, where fertility is low & fluctuating, as in China, parity-progression-based measures provide a substantially truer picture of fertility levels & trends than do age-based measures. 6 Tables, 8 Figures. HA

88T4869

Geronomus, Arline T. (Dept Public Health Policy/Administration Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), On Teenage Childbearing and Neonatal Mortality in the United States, in Population and Development Review, 1987, 13, 2, June, 245-279

¶ The association between teenage childbearing & neonatal mortality is often interpreted as evidence of true age effects. A corresponding expectation is that neonatal mortality will be reduced by prevention of teenage pregnancy. These views are reconsidered in light of new empirical findings & their synthesis with results of previous biomedical & social scientific investigations. An alternative hypothesis is proposed that the association between teenage childbearing & neonatal mortality reflects unobserved heterogeneity in the population of first-time mothers. Specifically, in the US, unfavorable life conditions among populations with high early fertility rates have physiological consequences that are proximate determinants of neonatal mortality. This interpretation suggests that policies promoting fertility postponement will not reduce levels of neonatal mortality, if, within target populations, the prevalence & effects of important proximate determinants of neonatal mortality are constant or increase with age. 1 Table, 122 References. HA

88T4870

Goldman, Noreen, Westoff, Charles F. & Paul, Lois E. (Office Population Research Princeton U., NJ 08544), Variations in Natural Fertility: The Effect of Lactation and Other Determinants, in Population Studies, 1987, 41, 1, Mar, 127-146

¶ An examination of average waiting times to a fertile conception in second- & higher-order birth intervals among women not using birth control. Life-table estimates of the probability of contraception by duration of exposure (time since the previous birth) are derived for the 2-year periods preceding 20 interview surveys in Africa, Asia, & Latin America undertaken between 1974 & 1982 as part of the World Fertility Survey program (N not provided). Differences in the waiting time to conception are examined as a function of the duration of lactation & postpartum abstinence. In addition, the extent to which variations in waiting times are produced by country & regional effects, & effects due to age, duration of marriage, & parity are examined. The analysis points out the dangers of deriving estimates of natural fertility from the subgroup of women who have never breastfed. 3 Tables, 6 Figures. Modified HA

88T4871

Grubb, Gary S. (Family Health International, Research Triangle Park NC 27709), Women's Perceptions of the Safety of the Pill: A Survey in Eight Developing Countries, in Journal of Biosocial Science, 1987, 19, 3, July, 313-321.

¶ Results of a 1985 Gallup poll indicated that 76% of the US women sampled (N not provided) thought that there were substantial risks with using the pill, 31% thought the pill caused cancer, & 64% thought the risk of childbearing was equal to or less than that in taking the pill. To assess Fs' perceptions of the pill's safety internationally, interviews were conducted with Mc women aged 18-45 ($N = 100-150$ in each country) from Ur & Ru areas of Thailand, Sri Lanka, Egypt, Senegal, Nigeria, Costa Rica, Chile, & Mexico. Striking similarities in perceptions of the pill's health effects between countries are revealed: (1) taking the pill is considered to have substantial health risks by 50%-75% & is thought to be more hazardous than childbearing by 40+% of Rs (except those in the African samples), (2) women who have used the pill are as unaware as those who have not of possible adverse cardiovascular effects, (3) the protective effects of the pill are virtually unknown, & (4) the greatest inconsistency with scientific evidence concerns the risks of sterility & birth defects attributed to pill use. It is hoped that this information will help family planning programs rectify almost universal misperceptions of the pill's safety when counseling new & continuing pill users. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 4 References. Modified HA

88T4872

Ingoldsby, Bron B. & Stanton, Max E. (Dept Family Science Ricks Coll, Rexburg ID 83440), The Hutterites and Fertility Control, in Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1988, 19, 1, spring, 137-142.

¶ In J. W. Eaton's & A. J. Meyer's classic study (Man's Capacity to Reproduce: The Demography of a Unique Population, Glencoe, Ill. Free Press, 1954), it was established that the Hutterite brethren probably had the highest fertility rate in the world, with Hutterites averaging 10+ chil-glect, & that the unplanned conceptions are due to failure to use, &/or ineffective use of, birth control. Discussion focuses on implications for child protective service caseworkers & family planning counselors. 3 Tables, 27 References. HA

78 sociology of death & dying

88T4892

Armstrong, David (Unit Sociology Medical School Guy's Hospital, London SE1 9RT England), Silence and Truth in Death and Dying, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 8, 651-657

‡ A discussion of the role of truth in the dialogue between dying patient & medical attendant. Since about 1960, sociomedical literature has asserted that a "regime of silence" characterized the MD-patient relationship between 1850 & 1950. The implication that truth & silence are in opposition is questioned; moreover, only since 1960 has it been socially acceptable to speak the truth about death. Rather, changes in the nature of truth itself are manifested in the shift from the "interrogation of the corpse to that of the dying patient." 45 References. Modified HA

88T4893

Bermann, Sandra & Richardson, Virginia (Dept Psychology U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109-1346), Social Change in the Salience of Death among Adults in America: A Projective Assessment, Omega, 1986-87, 17, 3, 195-207

‡ The relationship between the salience of death & decade, sex, age, & education is explored for a representative national sample of 1,428 US Ms & Fs. Responses to a thematic apperceptive test administered in 1957 & 1976 are coded for references to death, which are validated using selected variables from a research questionnaire administered during structured interviews. A significant increase over time in concerns about death is found, particularly among Fs & the young. Implications for current & past psychological research are discussed. 4 Tables, 33 References. Modified HA

88T4894

Kellehear, Sano Allan (U New South Wales, Kensington 2033 Australia), Good Death: The Social Life of the Dying Person, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 756-A Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T4895

Kraybill, D. B., Hostetler, J. A. & Shaw, D. G. (Dept Sociology Elizabethtown Coll, PA 17022), Suicide Patterns in a Religious Subculture. The Old Order Amish, International Journal of Moral and Social Studies, 1986, 1, 3, autumn, 249-263

‡ The social characteristics of 1940-1983 suicide patterns in an Old Order Amish settlement in Lancaster County, southeastern Pa, are described in contrast to those of the cultural mainstream, based on data gathered from county statistics, newspaper obituaries, & Amish informants. The rate of Amish suicides has declined over time & is presently lower than other groups in the same cultural context. The sex ratio of Amish suicides was identical to the ratio for the dominant society. However, other suicide characteristics such as method, age, marital status, & season were uniquely different in the Amish subculture. In general the results support the classical Durkheimian thesis of an inverse relationship between suicide rates & social integration & underscore the critical importance of studying suicide within the context of ethnic subcultures. 4 Tables, 15 References. HA

88T4896

Kselman, Thomas (Dept History U Notre Dame, IN 46556), Death in Historical Perspective, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 3, summer, 591-597.

‡ OA review of the work of Philippe Ariès & Michel Vovelle on the history of death, focusing on their most recent publications, respectively, Images of Man and Death (Cambridge, Harvard U Press, 1985), & La Mort et l'Occident de 1300 à nos jours ((Death and the West from 1300 to the Present Day), Paris: Gallimard, 1983 (see listings in IRPS No. 42)). Vovelle's principal achievement is the tracing of connections between demographic context, ritual behavior, & theological justification. Although Ariès's conceptualization is not as clear, he is credited with identifying the three major stages in the development of Western attitudes: the peaceful resignation of the Middle Ages is replaced by individual anxiety in the late Middle Ages; by the nineteenth century, attention has shifted from the death of self to the death of others. Although skeptical about the first stage, Vovelle generally accepts Ariès's characterization of recent centuries. Both authors rely extensively on art & literature for their evidence, although Vovelle combines this with quantitative methods of analysis. Closer attention to the institutions that manage death in the modern age, including the funeral industry & the state, will advance understanding of how death is confronted & understood in the modern world. 14 References. AA

88T4897

Prior, Lindsay (Dept Sociology & Social Anthropology U Ulster, Jordanstown County Antrim BT37 0QB Northern Ireland), Policing the Dead: A Sociology of the Mortuary, Sociology, 1987, 21, 3, Aug, 355-376

‡ An exploration of the nature of the mortuary as an institution & the discourse of pathology that operates within it. Analysis of records of 168 cases referred to the city mortuary of Belfast, Northern Ireland, during 1982 demonstrates: (1) how medical interests are frequently fused with those of the wider politico-technological system that contains them, (2) how the assumptions & investigative principles of pathology are grounded in social rather than specifically clinical concerns, & (3) how the subject population on which pathology concentrates is selected in accordance with social as well as clinical considerations. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 48 References. Modified HA

88T4898

Thompson, Thomas R. (McGill U, Montreal Quebec H3A 2T5), Childhood and Adolescent Suicide in Manitoba: A Demographic Study, Canadian Journal of Psychiatry/Revue Canadienne de Psychiatrie, 1987, 32, 4, May, 264-269

‡ All suicides for those aged 20 or younger in Manitoba from 1971 to 1982 (N = 190) were studied for demographic & risk factors. Major demographic findings for Caucasian Manitobans agreed with past studies, but native children showed several-fold the rates for Caucasian children, matched for gender & age. Both native Ms & Ru Caucasian Ms attempted suicide significantly more frequently at younger ages than their Ur counterparts. Significant risk factors & demographic clusters of suicide victims are determined by statistical means, & the results discussed in terms of a better understanding of childhood suicide, on a psychodynamic basis. 3 Tables, 15 References. Modified HA at a US U, 71 Rs were married, but none had children. It is found that as a result of marriage, men are likely to become more inclined toward fertility while women become less so. These results are in part due to differential values regarding marriage & the family. Several implications are discussed. 5 Tables, 19 References. HA

88T4882

Reynes, Josefina Francisco (Brown U, Providence RI 02912). The Determinants of Changes in Contraceptive Status: The Case of Bohol, Philippines. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1023-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715551.

88T4883

Santow, Gigi (Dept Demography Research School Social Sciences Australian National U, Canberra ACT 2601 Australia). Reassessing the Contraceptive Effect of Breastfeeding. ♦ Population Studies, 1987, 41, 1, Mar, 147-160.

¶ Much of the recent demographic interest in the proximate determinants of fertility focuses on the link between breastfeeding & postpartum amenorrhea. Most analyses are based on a causal model, which may be assumed implicitly, & in which the duration of amenorrhea is determined by the duration of breastfeeding. Objections to this approach are raised, because an extremely important cause of weaning is a new pregnancy, & hence the direction of causation may be from amenorrhea to breastfeeding. Analyses performed on prospective data gathered during interviews with 485 women in Wgaglik, Java, who bore at least 1 live child during the 1976-1978 study, illustrate how the breastfeeding/amenorrhea relation can be complicated by this mechanism & by factors related to the composition of the population & to sexual abstinence. As the Javanese experience is not unique, there are wider implications for demographic research on the spacing of births. 1 Table, 2 Figures. HA

88T4884

Shannon, Iris Reed (U Illinois, Chicago 6080), Interorganizational Coordination in Three Illinois Department of Public Health Parents Too Soon Demonstration Sites. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 489-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712045.

88T4885

Shornack, Lawrence L. (North Carolina Agricultural & Technical State U, Greensboro 27411). Teenage Pregnancy: A Problem of Sexual Decision-Making or of Social Organization? ♦ International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 2, autumn, 307-326.

Rising teenage pregnancy rates are commonly explained as products of sexual decision making. withholding of sex education & contraceptive services from a sexually active younger generation leads to pregnancy. An alternative hypothesis is developed: that when an adolescent F loses status in the family, she does not simply enter into a rational contract, but finds herself in relationships of coercion & problematic communion with Ms. A review of the literature yields evidence supporting this hypothesis of social disorganization. 1 Table, 64 References. Modified HA

88T4886

Sindiga, Isaac (Dept Geography Kenyatta U, PO Box 43833 Nairobi Kenya). Fertility Control and Population Growth among the Maasai. Human Ecology, 1987, 15, 1, Mar, 53-66.

Some reasons for the generally lower fertility of the pastoral Maasai in comparison to those in other Kenyan communities, particularly cultivators, are explored. Using limited demographic data from previous studies, Maasai fertility & population trends throughout the twentieth century are described. It is concluded that four factors are of primary importance: (1) traditional M social control of fertility, (2) environmental hazards & their health consequences, (3) sexually transmitted diseases that promote secondary sterility, & (4) persistent seasonal food shortages. 8 Tables, 1 Figure, 28 References. K. Hyatt

88T4887

Stokes, C. Shannon, LeClere, Felicia B. & Yeu-Sheng Hsieh (Population Issues Research Center Pennsylvania State U, University Park, 16802). Household Extension and Reproductive Behavior in Taiwan. Journal of Biosocial Science, 1987, 19, 3, July, 273-282. The influence of household type on reproductive behavior is examined using interview data from a 1980 national probability sample of Taiwanese married couples ($\Sigma N = 10,624$) with wives aged 15-49. In spite of remarkable SE development over the past three decades, extended families are still widely found in Taiwan. Women in extended households have only slightly higher fertility preferences & current fertility than women in nuclear families, once marital duration is controlled. Although women in extended households marry earlier & receive more family help with child care than women in nuclear households, such factors are no longer sufficient to produce major differentials in reproductive behavior. Results suggest that preferences for smaller families & low fertility need not await a transformation to a nuclear family structure. 4 Tables, 14 References. HA

88T4888

Thapa, Shyam (Family Health International, Research Triangle Park NC 27709). Determinants of Fertility in Nepal: Applications of an Aggregate Model. Journal of Biosocial Science, 1987, 19, 3, July, 351-365.

¶ J. Bongaarts' aggregate model of the proximate determinants of fertility ("The Proximate Determinants of Natural Marital Fertility" in Determinants of Fertility in Developing Countries, Vol. 1, Vulatao, R. A. & Lee, R. D., (Eds), NY: Academic Press, 1983, 103-138) is applied to interview data from the 1976 National Fertility Survey in Nepal ($N =$ nearly 6,000 women). Breast-feeding is shown to be the most important limiting factor, resulting in a reduction of about 6 children per woman. Decline in the duration of breast-feeding by 25% would increase fertility by 1 additional child per woman. The temporary separation of spouses due to migration is conjectured to be the second most important fertility-inhibiting factor, not explicitly accounted for in the standard model. Fertility differences between the three major ecological regions are found to be a function of Ur-Ru residence & educational attainment of the women. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 57 References. Modified HA

88T4889

Whicker, Marcia Lynn & Kronenfeld, Jennie Jacobs (Dept Government & International Studies U South Carolina, Columbia 29208). Men and Women Together: The Impact of Birth Control Technology on Male-Female Relationships. ♦ International Journal of Sociology of the Family, 1986, 16, 1, spring, 61-81.

¶ Four major components of M-F relationships have been love, intimacy, sex, & marriage. Through most of history, these have been structured to reflect the impossibility of separating sex from procreation reliably, with the only socially sanctioned sequences placing marriage before sex. Birth-control technology has fundamentally altered the nature of M-F relationships; new norms for such relationships are still evolving. 2 Tables, 42 References. Modified HA

88T4890

Wright, Loyd S. & Rogers, Robyn R. (Southwest Texas State U, San Marcos 78666). Variables Related to Pro-Choice Attitudes among Undergraduates. ♦ Adolescence, 1987, 22, 87, fall, 517-524.

¶ Pro-choice attitudes among undergraduates were assessed to determine the extent of anti-abortion sentiments during President Reagan's first term in office, which was marked by his support of the anti-abortion issue as well as by increased media coverage of the right-to-life movement. Self-administered questionnaires were completed by 401 M & 439 F participants enrolled in introductory psychology classes at a central Tex U during the week prior to the presidential election of 1984. Students were asked if they would approve or disapprove of abortion under 4 different circumstances. Results indicate that the majority of both M & F Rs were in favor of allowing abortion under all 4 conditions. Fs, younger Ss, Ss without personal experience with abortion, & Ss from churches opposed to abortion were less favorable to abortion, however, a majority in each of these groups favored permitting abortion in all 4 circumstances. 4 Tables, 6 References. Modified HA

88T4891

Zuravin, Susan J. (School Social Work & Community Planning U Maryland, Baltimore 21201). Unplanned Pregnancies, Family Planning Problems, and Child Maltreatment. ♦ Family Relations, 1987, 36, 2, Apr, 135-139.

¶ An interview study of 518 Ur, single-parent, public assistance mothers used measures from the National Survey of Family Growth Cycle III to examine the relationship between contraceptive problems, unplanned fertility, & child abuse/neglect. Findings reveal that increasing numbers of unplanned conceptions increase the probability of both abuse & ne-

2000 sociology of health and medicine

45 sociology of medicine (public health)

88T4899

Abel, P. Elizabeth (Emory U, Atlanta GA 30322), The Effects of Social Networks on Stress and Health in a Non-Institutionalized Population, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1019-A-1020-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8716103.

88T4900

Amir, Marianne (Dept Psychology Hebrew U Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel), Considerations Guiding Physicians When Informing Cancer Patients, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 9, 741-748

¶ A multivariate examination of the considerations that guide a MD when informing cancer patients of their diagnoses & prognoses, based on questionnaires completed by general surgeons (N = 104) in Israel. It was found that the main factor guiding MDs in informing patients about the diagnosis is their attitudes toward giving information to cancer patients. When informing about the prognosis, other factors were found relevant, primarily the seriousness of the disease. Other considerations guiding both diagnosis & prognosis were patient characteristics, eg, questions asked & intelligence of patient as perceived by MD. Senior MDs tend to give more optimistic prognoses than their junior colleagues, but not more benign diagnoses. Findings are discussed in terms of the combination of variables encouraging openness or reticence from the MD. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 26 References. Modified HA

88T4901

Annandale, Ellen Carol (Brown U, Providence RI 02912), Restructuring Maternity Care: Practice Behavior in a Midwife-Run Birth Center, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1031-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8715446.

88T4902

Atkinson, Jane Monnig (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Lewis & Clark Coll, Portland OR 97219), The Effectiveness of Shamans in an Indonesian Ritual, American Anthropologist, 1987, 89, 2, June, 342-355

¶ Healing is the ostensible purpose of the mabolong, a shamanic ceremony of the Wana of Sulawesi, Indonesia, but the ritual serves political ends as well by providing an arena for performers to establish & maintain their reputations as shamans. Shamans' attempts to attract & hold an audience can eclipse their efforts to heal. In light of this dynamic, the ritual's therapeutic potential for patients can be considered only when its symbolic & dramatic appeal for an entire community is understood. The interplay of symbolism, drama, & therapy is examined with special reference to theories of ritual & catharsis proposed by Claude Lévi-Strauss & Thomas J. Scheff. 31 References. HA

88T4903

Balzer, Marjorie Mandelstam (Kennan Instit Advanced Russian Studies Wilson Center Smithsonian Instit, Washington DC 20560), Behind Shamanism: Changing Voices of Siberian Khanty Cosmology and Politics, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 12, 1085-1093

¶ The role of shamanism in the worldview of the Siberian Khanty is discussed, based on an analysis of training procedures, seances, & the cosmology of shamans in the northern Ob River area of Siberia. It is suggested that Siberian shamanism has roots in hunting traditions, kinship organization, & soul beliefs, which have changed under Soviet rule. Aspects of shamanic epistemology & curing survive, although native medical logic sometimes clashes with modern positivist medicine. The changing social context of shamanism is explored in a framework of Soviet pressure to reject shamanic "superstition & exploitation." Modified HA

88T4904

Barer, Morris L., Evans, Robert G., Hertzman, Clyde & Lomas, Jonathan (Dept Health Care & Epidemiology U British Columbia, Vancouver V6T 1Z6), Aging and Health Care Utilization: New Evidence on Old Fallacies, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 10, 851-862.

¶ Rapid growth in the 55+ population during the next 40 years & the concomitant higher per capita utilization of health care will generate increased needs for medical services. However, this need not lead to a cost crisis in health care if per capita rates of utilization in the elderly increase no faster than in the general population, normal economic growth can support health care needs at this level. Published data from several sources favor this conclusion for British Columbia & Manitoba. The implication of this evidence for debates over the policy implications of population aging are examined. 3 Tables, 3 Figures. Modified HA

88T4905

Bastien, Joseph W. (Dept Sociology/Anthropology/Social Work U Texas, Arlington 76019), Cross-Cultural Communication between Doctors and Peasants in Bolivia, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 12, 1109-1118

¶ A method for teaching traditional Andean concepts of health & disease to practitioners of modern medicine (MDs, nurses, & assistant nurses) in Bolivia is presented. Seeking to increase the effectiveness of health care by sensitizing practitioners to native medical concepts, workshops are conducted that guide participants through a series of exercises highlighting those aspects of the traditional system that need to be changed & those that should remain untouched. Given as an example is the use of an Andean myth to teach peasants an effective means of treating diarrhea. 2 Figures. Modified HA

88T4906

Berk, Marc L., Horgan, Constance M. & Meyers, Samuel M. (National Center Health Services Research & Health Care Technology Assessment, 5600 Fishers Ln Rockville MD 20857), The Reporting of Stigmatizing Health Conditions: A Comparison of Proxy and Self-Reporting, Journal of Economic and Social Measurement, 1986, 14, 3, Oct, 197-205

¶ Previous studies have found that self-Rs tend to report a greater number of health problems than do household proxies. It has not been clear, however, if such results indicate reporting bias or reflect underlying health differences. Medical record verification data from a survey of US medical providers (N not provided) are examined in conjunction with the results of a 1977/78 national household interview survey (N = 1,344 Rs). Analysis indicates that the use of proxies does not increase misreporting. Overall, reporting error between self-Rs & proxy-Rs is comparable on reports of mental illness, when physical stigmatizing conditions are examined, the use of proxies actually appears to be preferable to interviewing Rs directly. 2 Tables, 20 References. Modified HA

88T4907

Bonsi, S. Kofi (U Jos, Plateau State Nigeria), Colonialism, Class and African Medicine in West Africa, International Journal of Contemporary Sociology, 1985, 22, 3-4, July-Oct, 289-306

¶ An examination of some historical factors that impeded the development of African medical practice. It is argued that colonialism is largely responsible for destroying the economic, political, & social development that was beginning to emerge in the late seventeenth century, & for establishing medical imperialism. However, precolonial forms of medicine have persisted, & indigenous healers continue to challenge the Euro-American medical model through political & professional activism. A historical materialist explanation is advanced to account for this, focusing on the articulation of different modes of production & their combination through a dialectical process. K. Hyatt

88T4908

Buller, Mary Klein & Buller, David B. (Arizona Cancer Center U Arizona, Tucson 85724), Physicians' Communication Style and Patient Satisfaction, U Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 4, Dec, 375-388

¶ Zeev Ben-Sira (see SA 24 5/7611708) offers a social interaction model

Journal of Ethnomedicine and Transcultural Psychiatry

Published by "Arbeitsgemeinschaft Ethnomedizin e.V." (Heidelberg)

curare encourages interdisciplinary discussion between physicians and theoretical medical branches and the cultural and social anthropologists and psychologists who treat with health, disease and healing.

Scope, discussion and popularisation of

- Medical knowledge and practice, and the often ingenious models of nature, should be taken stock of in different cultures
- Principles of preserving health and treating disease, and thus overcoming fear, should be investigated crossculturally.
- Elements of traditional medicine should be integrated into health programs, mainly in developing countries. This would help to save cultural heritage
- Doctors, nursing staff and other responsible for the sick should be initiated to understand medical systems which deviate from the western model
- A mirror should be held up in which we might be able to see clearer the shortcomings, but also the true achievements of our own medicine
- Views and procedures towards the basic needs of suffering man should be discussed curare is published since 1978 by the "working group Ethnomedicine", an interdisciplinary editorial board guarantees the scientific level of the contributions.

curare wishes to contact the public which is motivated by commitment in its objectives curare contact also for its special series "Sonderbände", since 1983

Publication and conditions of order: 4 issues per year, 64 pages each (= 1 volume) DM 82,-- (1988) plus postage and handling Editorial office: Arbeitsgemeinschaft Ethnomedizin e.V. (AGEM), Völkerkundemuseum, Hauptstr. 235, D-6900 Heidelberg.

Editors: Ekkehard Schröder, Fasanenweg 6, D-6601 Scheidt; Dr Thomas Hauschild, Blumenthalstr 60, D-5000 Köln 1; Dr. Wolfgang Bichmann, School of Tropical Medicine, Dept. Int. Common Health, Pembroke Place, Liverpool L3 5QA, England

Vieweg Publishing · P.O. Box 58 29 · D-6200 Wiesbaden 1

curare Journal of Ethnomedicine and Transcultural Psychiatry

- ☐ I/We subscribe the above mentioned journal until recalled. Quarterly, 4 issues with 64 pages each DM 82,-- (1988) plus postage and handling
- ☐ Please send me a free sample copy and your prospectus.

Address

Date

Signature

This arrangement can be recalled within one week after date of order.

Signature

viduals participate in spiritualist healing & rituals, despite the resultant reproduction of SE & political forms that are contrary to the participants' concerns & interest & that may also be illness producing, are examined. It is suggested that, on a macro level, healing systems of the spiritualist kind tend to perpetuate the SE & political systems 48 References. Modified HA

88T4919

Foster, George M. (Dept Anthropology U California, Berkeley 94720), World Health Organization Behavioral Science Research: Problems and Prospects, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 9, 709-717.

* A review of World Health Organization (WHO)-supported behavioral research suggests that much research has been of poor quality, & researchers often appear more concerned with research design elegance than with practical application of results. Professional & structural factors are posited as an explanation. MD-dominated research committees that evaluate research applications assume that quantitative hypothesis-testing investigation is the only acceptable research model, hence, in their grant applications, behavioral scientists conform to the expectations of research committees, stressing quantitative rather than qualitative methods. Research committee members also often fail to understand the scope of behavioral research possibilities. hoped-for results are limited to information on how to change community behavior more nearly to conform to the needs of health care delivery programs. To improve the quality of WHO-sponsored behavioral research, a workshop of organizational personnel & short-term consultants & temporary advisors with prior experience is proposed to evaluate past research, to identify its strengths & weaknesses, & to recommend modified research support procedures. 19 References. Modified HA

88T4920

Frankenberg, Ronald (Dept Sociology/Social Anthropology/Social Work U Keele, Staffordshire ST5 5BG UK), Sickness as Cultural Performance: Drama, Trajectory, and Pilgrimage Root Metaphors and the Making Social of Disease, International Journal of Health Services, 1986, 16, 4, 603-626.

* The use of root metaphors in the description of social activity, especially the performance of sickness, is examined, starting with a critical account of Susan Sontag's examination of the use of illness as metaphor in literature (Illness as Metaphor, London: Penguin Books, 1983). A brief analysis is made of Kenneth L. Burke's "dramatism," an account of society based on the discussion of creative literature (A Grammar of Motives, New York: Prentice Hall, 1945), which was acknowledged as a source by Erving Goffman. Goffman's own expressed reservations about his supposed use of a dramatic metaphor are extended to suggest that he was more concerned with "performance" in a broader sense. Also considered is the view of Anselm Strauss et al of sickness as manifold performances of work rather than drama, expressed in the metaphor of "trajectory" (Social Organization of Medical Work, London & Chicago, Ill: U of Chicago Press, 1985). Sickness as a process compounded of many performances is further explored using ideas developed by the anthropologist Victor Turner & his wife Edith (From Ritual to Theatre: The Human Seriousness of Play, New York: Performing Arts Journal Publications, 1982). It is suggested that sickness as cultural performance enables us to understand the dialectical relationships between expressive & instrumental activities surrounding sickness. This in turn leaves room for the nonreductionist understanding, within a sociological framework, of individual idiosyncrasy, biological accident, & the discourse of healing. 22 References. Modified HA

88T4921

Goldstein, Marc B., Goodrich, Elizabeth J. & Brown, Cheryl H. (Central Connecticut State U, New Britain 06050), Where the Group Homes Are Found, ♦ Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 72, 1, Oct, 55-56.

* Street addresses were determined for residential treatment centers (Σ N = 313) in Conn serving 5 client populations: criminal offenders, emotionally disturbed children, mentally ill adults, mentally retarded adults, & substance abusers. Characteristics of census tracts where centers were located are compared with characteristics of typical census tracts. Group homes serving the mentally retarded tend to be located in relatively advantaged communities, as compared to other types of group homes, community residences generally are located in larger Ur centers. The reasons for differing geographic distribution patterns should be explored. W. H. Stoddard

88T4922

Gostin, Larry (School Public Health Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138), Vaccination for AIDS: Legal and Ethical Challenges from the Test Tube, to the Human Subject, through to the Marketplace, ♦ AIDS & Public Policy Journal, 1987, 2, 2, spring-summer, 9-16.

¶ After examining some factors underlying the strong pressure worldwide to develop a vaccine for acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS), some risks associated with such a development are detailed, particularly in light of the insufficient time available to plan & test potential products. Legal, policy, & ethical issues surrounding the development, testing, & marketing of an AIDS vaccine are explored. The divergent interests & concerns of researchers, manufacturers, & victims of the disease are discussed. It is concluded that there is a case for moving ahead more quickly with an AIDS vaccine than would be the case with other diseases. Legal & public health measures that must be taken to minimize the financial & health risks of human trials & users of the vaccine are examined. K. Hyatt

88T4923

Greenfield, Sidney M. (Dept Anthropology U Wisconsin, Milwaukee 53201), The Return of Dr. Fritz: Spiritist Healing and Patronage Networks in Urban, Industrial Brazil, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 12, 1095-1108.

¶ The treatment modalities used by spiritualist healers in Brazil are examined on the basis of discussions with & observations of two such healers. Examples are given of surgeries performed by the healers without the use of antiseptics or anesthesia, probably with the aid of hypnosis. The sociocultural context within which the healing takes place is examined to show that spiritist healers are reconstructing networks of patronage & dependency similar to those of traditional Brazilian society to provide meaning & security for the ill in the midst of disruptive urbanization & modernization. 4 Figures. Modified HA

88T4924

Grunwald, C. (Rijks U Utrecht, Netherlands), Beheersing van de Gezondheidszorg (Controlling Health Care), * Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 478 (DUT). Unavailable from UMI; published by Vuga, Zeestraat 654, NL-2500 BK Den Haag.

88T4925

Gyarfas, Iván, Kishegyi, Júlia & Makara, Péter, Szívbetegség-kockázat-Társadalom (Heart Disease Risk-Society), Társadalomkutatás, 1986, 3-4, 15-36 (HUN).

¶ A standardized interview schedule focusing on socially determined risk factors for cardiovascular disease was administered to 1,611 adult residents of Budapest, Hungary, in 1982/83. Multiple regression analysis & multifactor discriminant analysis identify important social factors. Individual factors have only a modest impact on weight & on blood pressure, but their cumulative effect is significant. Different sexes & age groups are affected in different ways by stratification & life style. SES has major effects. Risk factors affect 80% of the population, indicating a need for preventive measures that address the whole population. 7 Tables, 41 References. Modified HA

88T4926

Harowski, Kathy J. (Dept Family Practice & Community Health Medical School U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55416), The Worried Well: Maximizing Coping in the Face of AIDS, Journal of Homosexuality, 1987, 14, 1-2, fall-winter, 299-306.

¶ The acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) epidemic is discussed in terms of its impact on the psychology of individuals & their relationships. Special emphasis is given to treatment strategies that therapists may find useful in working with the worried well presenting with psychological & sexual difficulties resulting from AIDS anxiety. Issues of denial, control, & compliance are presented as central to working with this population. 17 References. HA

88T4927

Harris, Ross D. & Finlay-Jones, Lyn M. (School Medicine Flinders U, Bedford Park South Australia 5042), Terminal Care in Australia, The Hospice Journal, 1987, 3, 1, spring, 77-90.

¶ Palliative care/hospice services in Australia are provided in three settings: the hospice ward in a general or community hospital, the home care program with institutional back-up, & free-standing hospices or cottage hospices. The development of these three approaches to the care of to explain the relationship between MD communication & patients' satisfaction with health care. This model, however, focused on a single, narrow style of communication & overlooked the broader spectrum of styles. Telephone interview data from 219 patients from 2 medical clinics were used to assess 2 general communication styles: affiliation & control, 8 social characteristics of medical interviews were also explored as possible mediators of the impact of MD's communication. Results show that affiliative styles were related positively to patients' satisfaction, whereas dominant/active styles had a negative relationship with satisfaction. Severity of the illness, MD's age, MD's specialty, & number of prior visits affected the importance of the MD's communication in the patient's evaluations of care. 3 Tables, 54 References. Modified HA

88T4909

Chavez, Leo R. (Center US-Mexican Studies U California San Diego, La Jolla 92093), Mexican Immigration and Health Care: A Political Economy Perspective, U Human Organization, 1986, 45, 4, winter, 344-352

¶ The access of Mexican immigrants in the US to medical services is examined within a political economy of health framework. Such an approach stresses that the provision of health care is independent of health factors per se & that access to health care is not equally distributed throughout a population. The three major concepts influencing medical anthropologists working within a political economy framework are (1) the social origins of illness, (2) the allocation of health resources, & (3) fieldwork in Third World countries. The reasons for limiting immigrants' access to health care are considered, followed by an examination of the impact of the SE characteristics of Mexican immigrants, including those of undocumented immigration status, on access to health care. The consequences of limited access to health services include a low utilization of preventive health services resulting from the high cost of care combined with the immigrants' generally low income, lack of medical insurance, & fear of using US health services. 1 Table, 52 References. HA

88T4910

Clausen, John A. (Inst Human Development U California, Berkeley 94720), Health and the Life Course: Some Personal Observations, U Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 4, Dec, 337-344

¶ A revised version of SA 35 3/87S19513/ASA/1987/4230

88T4911

Cohen, Lois K., Bailit, Howard L., & Barmes, David E. (Dept Health & Human Services National Instit Dental Research, Bethesda MD 20892), International Collaborative Study of Oral Health Outcomes, International Sociology, 1987, 2, 4, Dec, 419-426

¶ Building on the completed World Health Organization International Collaborative Study of Dental Manpower Systems in Relation to Oral Health Status (ICS-I), a project that extended from 1972 to 1983 & was operationalized in 10 industrialized countries, the new 5-year cross-national study of oral health outcomes (ICS-II) is described. It includes industrialized countries that participated in ICS-I, other industrialized nations, & a limited number of middle-income developing countries (Egypt, India, & Uruguay). Information on the relative contribution of environmental factors, personal life style, & care systems will be analyzed in relation to oral health status & the costs of care. Results are expected to yield refinements in strategies for improving oral health. 2 Figures, 7 References. HA

88T4912

Conti, Giuseppe Gadda, Summum jus, summa iniuria? (The Highest Law, the Greatest Injury?), U La Critica Sociologica, 1986-87, 80, Jan-Mar, 80-82. (ITA)

¶ Some reflections on media reports concerning heart transplants & similar medical "miracles," focusing on the newsworthiness of scientific achievements & the commercial aspects of medical treatment requiring the donation of human organs. Also discussed are issues regarding parents' rights over their children's bodies & the state's rights over its citizens. Implications for moral questions, eg, abortion & military service, are touched on. C. Waters

88T4913

Dorozynski, Alexander (1 rue Charles Lamoureux, F-75116 Paris France), How the New Genetic Therapy Could Change Peoples' Lives, U Impact of Science on Society, 1986, 36, 3(143), 313-319

¶ Genetic manipulations thought impossible only a few years ago are now either a reality or are within sight. The result will be a biological revolution that could change human lives as much as the industrial revolution did. Much of the change may be for the better—but there are dangers as well, some of them ethical ones, & commercial & legal problems. These should be considered now. 1 Table. HA

88T4914

Dressler, William W., Dos Santos, Jose Ernesto & Viteri, Fernando E. (College Community Health Science U Alabama, University 35486), Blood Pressure, Ethnicity, and Psychosocial Resources, U Psychosomatic Medicine, 1986, 48, 7, Sept-Oct, 509-519.

¶ Research on psychosocial factors & cardiovascular disease has shown that psychosocial resources (including social supports & coping styles) help to protect individuals from the risk associated with psychosocial stressors. The hypothesis that this protective effect may extend to standard risk factors as well was examined in detail in a study conducted in Ribeira Preto, Brazil, in which it was found that psychosocial resources modified black-white differences in blood pressure. Data obtained via interviews & physical examinations of 128 Brazilians showed the highest mean blood pressures among mixed-race & black Brazilians who had low psychosocial resources. Afro-Brazilians with high psychosocial resources had lower blood pressures than white Brazilians. Implications of these results for the mechanisms linking ethnicity, psychosocial factors, & blood pressure are discussed. 3 Tables, 51 References. Modified HA

88T4915

Dychtwald, Ken (c/o Dychtwald & Associates, 1900 Powell St Suite 700 Emeryville CA 94608), Speculations on the Future of Ageing, Wellness and Self-Care, U Impact of Science on Society, 1986, 36, 3(143), 245-254

¶ An adaptation of a chapter in Pharmacy in the 21st Century (Bezold, C., et al [Eds], Bethesda, Md: American Assoc of Colleges of Pharmacy, 1984). The great strides taken by Western medicine in recent decades have engendered new attitudes on the part of the people in industrialized countries—particularly in North America. These include a recognition that much ill health is caused by what is often referred to as "faulty lifestyles"—& that much of it is preventable. This situation is examined from the viewpoint of a US consultant in the health field. HA

88T4916

Faulstich, Michael E. (School Public Health U Alabama, Birmingham 35294), Psychiatric Aspects of AIDS, U The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1987, 144, 5, May, 551-556

¶ Acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) has neuropsychiatric & psychopathological complications: anxiety, depressive symptoms, & suicidal ideation are common. Patients may express anger toward ineffective medical care & perceived public discrimination, guilt about sexual practices or drug abuse, reactions to social isolation, & uncertainty about the implications of an AIDS diagnosis. Central nervous system dysfunction & subsequent neuropsychiatric impairment are common & are initially characterized by decreased acuity, slowed mentation, & psychomotor retardation that can resemble depression. Marked global cognitive deficits, disorientation, & delusions ensue. Case management is discussed, & future clinical & research activities are outlined. 79 References. HA

88T4917

Fielding, Stephen L. (Northeastern U, Boston MA 02115), Physicians under Crossfire: Medical Malpractice Suits and Cost Containment in Massachusetts, * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 749-A-750-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713298.

88T4918

Finkler, Kaja (Dept Anthropology U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), The Social Consequence of Wellness: A View of Healing Outcomes from Micro and Macro Perspectives, International Journal of Health Services, 1986, 16, 4, 627-642

¶ Using fieldwork data on Mexican spiritualist healing collected during 1977-1979 & 1985 from healers, adherents, & nonadherents ($\Sigma N = 814$), the relationship between treatment outcomes at the individual & social levels is examined. Two issues are explored: (1) to what degree do persons treated by spiritualist healing techniques fit into the wider society of which they are part, & (2) what effects does a given healing system exert on SE & political arrangements? Contradictions embedded in spiritualist healing techniques & rituals are identified, & reasons why indi-

88T4937

Micozzi, Marc S. (Medical Museum, Washington DC 20306), Wellness, Illness and Disease: Prevention and Intervention, U Human Organization, 1986, 45, 4, winter, 320-321

* The conceptual relationships between disease, illness, & wellness are explored in relation to health behavior in varied ethnic settings. The role of anthropology as a guide to active interventions for the prevention of illness or disease is pointed out. 14 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T4938

Moos, Gordon E., Dielman, T. E., Campanelli, Pamela C., Leech, Sharon L., Harlan, William R., Harrison, R. Van & Horvath, William J. (Dept Sociology Eastern Michigan U, Ypsilanti 48197), Demographic Correlates of SI Assessments of Type A Behavior, Psychosomatic Medicine, 1986, 48, 8, Nov-Dec, 564-574

* A survey interview & the structured Type A interview (SI) were administered to 903 residents of Washtenaw County, Mich, aged 18+, selected by a multistage probability sample of households. No bivariate relationship was found between Type A behavior (TAB) & sex or marital status. TAB was positively related to income & education, & was most prevalent among white-collar employees. There was an inverted U-shaped relationship between age & TAB. A slightly higher prevalence of TAB was noted among whites than among nonwhites. Multivariate analysis showed 7 demographic variables to account for 6.8% of the overall variation in TAB, with family income being the strongest demographic predictor. 2 Tables, 32 References. Modified HA

88T4939

Mulkay, Michael, Ashmore, Malcolm & Pinch, Trevor (Dept Sociology U York, Heslington YO1 5DD England), Measuring the Quality of Life: A Sociological Invention concerning the Application of Economics to Health Care, Sociology, 1987, 21, 4, Nov, 541-564

Comment, 565-566
The tasks & difficulties of applying social science to practical health economics issues are explored in a critique of Alan Williams's attempt to relate quality-of-life measures to British health care policy ("Economics of Coronary Bypass Grafting," British Medical Journal, 1985, 291, 3 Aug, 326-329). It is argued that quality-of-life measurements used by social scientists do not necessarily correspond to values held by the general population, may not be stable, & may not be quantifiable; socially produced & applied knowledge (rather than knowledge produced by the scientific elite) may correspond better to the needs of the population & generate more relevant policy. In Measuring Quality of Life: A Comment, Alan Williams rebuts that individual values cannot necessarily be generalized to group values, & that the only indication of the applicability of quality of life measures is empirical testing. 1 Appendix, 32 References. D. Graves

88T4940

Nievaard, A. C. (Instit Social Medicine U Amsterdam, NL-1105 AZ Netherlands), Communication Climate and Patient Care: Causes and Effects of Nurses' Attitudes to Patients, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 9, 777-784

* The hypothesis that both nurses & patients in a hospital ward would benefit from improved communication among nurses is tested, using interview data from 112 nurses & 298 patients from 6 internal medicine & surgery wards of 2 Dutch hospitals. Findings show no clear link between the communication climate on the ward & the nurses' attitudes toward patients. A link was found, however, between the extent to which the nurses experienced problems with MDs & hospital management, & the extent to which they had a negative attitude toward patients (problem shifting). Consequences for the improvement of patient care are discussed. 4 Tables, 1 Appendix, 25 References. Modified HA

88T4941

Odebiyi, A. I. & Togonu-Bickersteth, Funmi (Dept Sociology U Ife, Ife-Ife Nigeria), Concepts and Management of Deafness in the Yoruba Medical System: A Case Study of Traditional Healers in Ife-Ife, Nigeria, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 8, 645-649

* The concept & management of deafness among 98 randomly selected healers in Ife-Ife, Nigeria, is examined. Responses to structured interviews reveal that all of the healers distinguished congenital & noncongenital deafness, & were guided by experience & specialist knowledge. A higher proportion of herbalists associated congenital deafness with natural causes than did other types of healers. Babalawos (diviners) & indigenous faith healers who mentioned a natural cause of congenital deafness believed that the primary causative agents were supernatural. Also, noncongenital deafness was attributed to malevolent forces by 50% of the babalawos; only 12.5% of the herbalists made this attribution. Treatment procedures & preventive techniques were based on conceptions of causality, eg, while the majority of the herbalists prescribed an herbal ear drop, a majority of the babalawos & the indigenous faith healers prescribed sacrifices to appease the aggrieved parties. 5 Tables, 33 References. Modified HA

88T4942

Oppenheimer, Gerald M. & Padgug, Robert A. (Dept Health & Nutrition Sciences Brooklyn Coll, NY 11210), AIDS and Health Insurance: Social and Ethical Issues, AIDS & Public Policy Journal, 1987, 2, 1, winter, 11-14

* Challenges that the acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) epidemic poses to the US health care system, particularly its financial mechanisms, are discussed. It is contended that the health insurance industry is a mixture of private profit-making systems & social welfare purposes. It is generally conservative, unable to cope with exotic diseases or groups of persons who utilize higher than average levels of health care services. AIDS threatens the private health insurance systems through striking directly at its basic principles, particularly that of "sound underwriting." The conflicting interests of insurers, AIDS victims, & employers are examined, & governmental interventions on the state & federal levels are suggested. K. Hyatt

88T4943

Orolin, Zsuzsa, A tartos apolasra szorulok csaladjainak vizsgálata (Egy empirikus kutatás hipotézisei) (A Study of Families of Persons Requiring Continued Nursing), Szociológia, 1983, 4, 445-456 (HUEN)

* Abstract not currently available

88T4944

Paradis, Lenora Finn & Usul, Wayne M. (U Kentucky, Lexington 40506), Hospice Volunteers: The Impact of Personality Characteristics on Retention and Job Performance, The Hospice Journal, 1987, 3, 1, spring, 3-10

* Traits that are important for hospice volunteers who are most likely to find the work satisfying & stay in the program are described using data from 6 questionnaires completed by volunteers (N = 113) at 5 hospice programs in Ky. Results show that long-term volunteers are most likely to be middle-aged or older, from stable economic backgrounds, working, & have had previous volunteer experience. Training for workers is advocated as a way of increasing sensitivity to hospice care & weeding out those who may not find hospice work satisfying. 4 Tables, 39 References. Modified HA

88T4945

Phillips, Reed B. (U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112), Physician Selection in Low Back Pain Patients, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 756-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714243.

88T4946

Quadland, Michael C. & Shattls, William D. (69-1/2 Perry St, New York NY 10014), AIDS, Sexuality, and Sexual Control, Journal of Homosexuality, 1987, 14, 1-2, fall-winter, 277-298

* The acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) epidemic is discussed in terms of its effect on general sexual attitudes & behavior of homosexual & bisexual men &, in particular, its effect on the issue of control over one's sexual behavior. Problems encountered in the formulation of the concepts of sexual control are discussed along with relevant theoretical constructs. An experimental group treatment program for homosexual & bisexual men with problems of sexual control begun in 1982 in New York City is described, along with findings & discussions regarding the effect of such treatment on sexual behavior. 1 figure, 21 References. HA

88T4947

Queen, Carol, The Politics of AIDS: A Review Essay, The Insurgent Sociologist, 1987, 14, 2, summer, 103-124

* A review essay on books by Dennis Altman, AIDS in the Mind of America: The Social, Political, and Psychological Impact of a New dying is traced. From early initiatives in religious-sponsored institutions, the last five years have seen expansion in programs & also in geographical coverage of hospice care. State & national organizations are fostering research in care of the terminally ill, education of health professionals, & discussion of standards. The present uneven distribution of palliative care services suggests the need for research into the care of subgroups in Australia, in particular Ru dwellers, ethnic Australians, & Aborigines. 32 References. Modified HA

88T4928

Haug, Marie R. & Ory, Marcia G. (Center Aging & Health Care Western Reserve U., Cleveland OH 44106), Issues in Elderly Patient-Provider Interactions, Research on Aging, 1987, 9, 1, Mar, 3-44

¶ The current state of knowledge concerning relationships between elderly patients & their health care providers is reviewed, chiefly in terms of MDs as providers. Characteristics of MDs, including age, gender, practice styles, & psychological attitudes, are shown to be relevant to the course & content of interactions. Equally critical are characteristics of the elderly patients, such as cohort membership, health status, gender, race, & health-related attitudes & beliefs. Also significant are the organizational settings in which interactions occur. Implications for elderly patient compliance & satisfaction, as well as health services utilization, are discussed in light of communication issues. The need for according elderly patients respect & dignity is stressed, particularly in light of ageist attitudes still prevalent among health practitioners & the society at large. 167 References. HA

88T4929

Igun, U. A. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology U Maiduguri, Nigeria), Why We Seek Treatment Here: Retail Pharmacy and Clinical Practice in Maiduguri, Nigeria, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 8, 689-695

¶ The use of retail pharmacies as outpatient clinics in Maiduguri, Nigeria, is investigated, based on interview & questionnaire data from 418 persons treated for various health problems at 2 pharmacies. The most frequent reasons given for pharmacy use was "expeditious action in consultation & treatment," followed by "efficacy of treatment given," & "convenience" (nearest source). No significant relationship between the reasons given & demographic background factors was revealed except age. The single most important advantage of retail pharmacy treatment over hospital treatment cited was "expeditious treatment." Relatives & friends constituted the social network of significant influence over the decision to seek treatment at the particular retail pharmacy. The most frequent treatment given is antibiotic chemotherapy orally or by injection. Implications for the enforcement of laws concerning the practice of medicine in Nigeria are briefly discussed. 3 Tables, 32 References. Modified HA

88T4930

Johnson, Barbara Elaine Dahlin (U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), The Interruption as Moral Evaluation: An Analysis of Nursing Interactions regarding Levels of Client Care in the Midst of Conflicting Pressures of Change, Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 750-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8713076.

88T4931

Kao, Frederick F. & McRae, Ginger (PO Box 555, Garden City NY 11530), Chinese Medicine in America: The Rocky Road to Ecumenical Medicine, Impact of Science on Society, 1986, 36, 3(143), 263-273.

¶ It may seem paradoxical that the country with the world's most advanced biomedical health care system would require the help of centuries-old traditional Chinese medicine. Yet a strong demand exists among patients in the US for such techniques as acupuncture. The biomedical profession remains on the whole opposed to such practices, despite their proved efficacy. The two systems should be allowed to flourish together, but they will not until the biomedical community & governments scientifically authenticate traditional practices. HA

88T4932

Levin, Jeffrey S. & Vanderpool, Harold Y. (Dept Preventive Medicine & Community Health U Texas Medical Branch, Galveston 77550-2777), Is Frequent Religious Attendance Really Conducive to Better Health?: Toward an Epidemiology of Religion, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 7, 589-600.

¶ The impact of religious attendance on personal health is discussed theoretically, based on an examination of 27 studies that define religiosity as frequenting places of worship. Overall, this body of research points to a positive r between frequent attendance & good health. It is argued however, that there is insufficient evidence to arrive at this conclusion considering the pervasive epistemological, methodological, & analytical problems with the studies examined. A theoretical framework for considering the interaction between health & religion is presented that attempts to (1) define religion & how it relates to religiosity, (2) identify the variation of particular religious beliefs, rituals, & experiences from universal characteristics of religion; (3) describe variations in religious traditions with respect to personal health & health practices; & (4) establish a firm link between religion & health by uncovering both shared & particular features of traditions. 1 Table, 85 References. Modified HA

88T4933

Lusk, Mark W. (Dept Sociology & Social Work Utah State U, Logan 84322), Traditional Mexican American Medicine and Hospital Practice, Arête, 1986, 11, 2, winter, 1-14.

¶ Folk medicine beliefs may be declining, yet they present a challenge to the providers of health care in a segment of the population that has underutilized the formal medical system. The basis of traditional medicine among Mexican Americans is summarized, & its implications for social work practice in hospital settings are discussed. HA

88T4934

Manderson, Lenore (Dept Pacific & Southeast Asian History Research School Pacific Studies Australian National U, Canberra ACT 2601), Health Services and the Legitimation of the Colonial State: British Malaya 1786-1941, International Journal of Health Services, 1987, 17, 1, 91-112

¶ The establishment & extension of health care & medical services in British colonial Malaya are reviewed. Initially, medical care was provided for the colonial elite & those in their direct employment. With the expansion of colonial control beyond trade centers into the hinterland & with the growth of agriculture & mining, Western medicine was extended both to labor involved in these export industries & to others whose ill health might jeopardize the welfare of the colonists. Public health programs in the twentieth century continued to focus on medical problems that had direct impact on the colonial economy, but programs were extended to ensure the reproduction as well as the maintenance of the I.F. The notion of a legitimation vacuum is developed, & the role of the state provision of social services, including medical services, in legitimizing colonial presence & control is described. 75 References. HA

88T4935

Maretzki, Thomas W. (Dept Anthropology U Hawaii, Honolulu 96822), The Kur in West Germany as an Interface between Naturopathic and Allopathic Ideologies, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 12, 1061-1068

¶ The interface of contrasting ideologies in the medical system of West Germany is illustrated through a discussion of the Kur, a naturopathic system of water & environmental therapy. The Kur represents a divergent ideology firmly imbedded in the contemporary German health care system. Cultural, social, & political-economic factors, however, have allowed incorporation of Kur therapy within the fringes of the general biomedical system. Some predictions are offered regarding the future of Kur as an adjunct to modern medical practices. The Kur is but one example of naturo- & homeopathic medicines in Western cultures. R. McCarthy

88T4936

Mehta, S. R. (Dept Sociology Punjab U, Chandigarh 160014 Union Territory India), Aspects of Health and Illness: An Empirical Study in the Sociology of Health, The Journal of Sociological Studies, 1987, 6, Jan, 88-100.

¶ Interview data from 144 heads of households in 4 localities in Mauritius are used to explore conceptions of health & illness held in this society. Background characteristics, incidence of sickness, health practices, common diseases & their perceived causes, & concepts of health are identified. In addition, Rs were asked to identify factors they considered essential to the health of the community. 5 Tables, 8 References. W. H. Stoddard

† A Marxist analysis is developed of the relationships between SC position, work experience, the psychological effects of this experience, & subsequent health outcomes. Specifically, it is argued that the structural imperatives of capitalist production make work for those in Wc positions subject to greater routinization & less control than work for those in other SC positions. Routinization & control are argued, in turn, to predictably affect two key psychological variables, self-esteem & stress, which are further argued to affect health in predictable ways. Position in the capitalist labor process is thus linked to health via the psychological consequences of the immediate work experience it engenders. Self-report questionnaire data from workers, managers, supervisors, & semiautonomous employees ($\Sigma N = 253$) in 5 capitalist Calif firms are used to test the descriptive adequacy of this model. 7 Tables, 1 Appendix, 77 References. Modified HA

88T4956

Sharp, Kimberly (U Illinois, Urbana 61801). Organizational Determinants of Quality Surgical Care. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 483-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8711877.

88T4957

Sheku, Benedict Van-Alieu (U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104). Pathological Determinants of Sterility in Rural Uganda. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 4, Oct, 1023-A-1024-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8714127.

88T4958

Slagle, A. Logan & Weibel-Orlando, Joan (U California, Berkeley 94720). The Indian Shaker Church and Alcoholics Anonymous: Revitalistic Curing Cults. UM Human Organization, 1986, 45, 4, winter, 310-319.

† Chronic misuse of alcohol is a major health problem among American Indians. Growing frustration with the limited success of conventional alcoholism treatment programs in either initiating or maintaining sobriety among Indian clients has prompted the study of indigenous treatment responses to alcohol misuse. The function of the Indian Shaker Church as a culture-based alcoholism intervention is explained in terms both of those sociostructural features the Indian Shaker Church & Alcoholics Anonymous hold in common, & of those culture-specific features that appear to account for the Shakers' particular success in supporting sobriety among American Indians. 58 References. HA

88T4959

Sokolowska, Magdalena & Moskalewicz, Bozena (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Polish Academy Sciences, Nowy Swiat 72 Warsaw). Health Sector Structures: The Case of Poland. Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 9, 763-775.

† A description of the health system in Poland is presented in the context of Polish historical, political, cultural, & SE developments. Poland's health system is seen as an indicator of overall societal functioning. A review of pertinent statistics suggests that the system suffers from systemic pathologies that are reflected in rigid structures, continuous underfinancing & underinvestment, & a lack of adequate information. It is argued that (1) several problems of the Polish health system are characteristic of industrialized countries, (2) the National Health Care in Poland bears more responsibilities than the National Health Service in GB. Some future prospects are discussed. 6 Tables. Modified HA

88T4960

Taylor, Kathryn M. & Kelner, Merrijoy (Dept Behavioral Science U Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A8). Interpreting Physician Participation in Randomized Clinical Trials: The Physician Orientation Profile. UM Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 4, Dec, 389-400.

* MDs' reluctance to enter their eligible patients is cited as the most significant factor in the failure to complete randomized clinical trials successfully. Here, the reasons for this reluctance are examined, using questionnaire & structured interview data from a nonrandom sample of 484 MDs ($N = 188$ surgeons, 224 medical oncologists, & 72 radiation therapists who treat patients for breast cancer) at 57 institutions in 5 countries. Analysis shows that the implementation of randomized clinical trials has resulted in the integration of formerly separate MD functions: primary care MD & research scientist. MDs responded to the forced integration of the caregiver & research-scientist roles by adopting a treatment philosophy that ranged along a continuum from the polar extremes of "pure experimenter" (7%) to "pure therapist" (15%). Variables of the treatment philosophy that differentiate experimenters from therapists include: (1) allegiance to present or future patients, (2) interpretation of medical uncertainty as personal uncertainty or as clinical controversy, (3) viewing patients as research Ss or as clinical cases, (4) priority of published data or of personal clinical experience, (5) the view of scientific research as an outgrowth or as a part of individual patient care, & (6) willingness to share information or discomfort with professional accountability to colleagues. Ss' choices on these 6 variables reflect a significant division among MDs with regard to their overall view of the current practice of medicine. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 50 References. Modified HA

88T4961

Tedlock, Barbara (Instit Advanced Study School Social Science Princeton U, NJ 08540). An Interpretive Solution to the Problem of Humoral Medicine in Latin America. Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 12, 1069-1083.

† The proposition that the hot-cold categorization of humoral medicine is a basic cognitive principle of traditional medicine in Latin America, & that this pathology could interfere with the delivery of Western health care to the area, is questioned. A case study of the community of Momostenango, Guatemala, suggests that reification & medicalization of humoral ideology & practice are the result of field methodology. Behind the use of these reductive techniques, a belief that individuals in a culture share underlying native taxonomies is postulated. This premise blinds researchers to differences between the medical epistemologies of lay persons & curers. Such difficulties can be avoided by considering medicine as a local cultural system of symbolic meanings, anchored in institutions & interpersonal interactions, & by separating the medical beliefs & activities of laypersons from those of curers. Modified HA

88T4962

Trawick, Margaret (Hobart & William Smith Colls, Geneva NY 14456). The Ayurvedic Physician as Scientist. Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 12, 1031-1050.

† A response to Robin Horton's assertion that traditional systems of thought are less open to external challenges than modern scientific thought ("Paradox and Explanation: A Reply to Mr Skorupski," Philosophy of Social Science, 1973, 3). Horton views traditional systems of thought as past oriented & consensual rather than competitive. Conversely, modern scientific thought is presented as future-oriented & based on an ideal of progress by competition among rival paradigms. According to Horton, the relatively greater openness of modern scientific epistemology accounts for the superior quality of the knowledge that modern science has acquired. A case study of a South Indian Ayurvedic MD is presented to illuminate an alternate interpretation of Horton's premises. Although this MD employed a mode of gathering knowledge based on a belief that full truth could be found only in the past, he recognized the provisionality of the knowledge he had acquired, & adjusted his own body of medical theory to the battery of countertheories that challenged it. He did not ignore external challenges, nor was he unconscious of their effect on his thought. Traditional approaches to knowledge are thus concluded to allow for expansion & refinement of thought. Modified HA

88T4963

Turcotte, Claire Lenz (U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109). Health Care without Hospitals: A Study of Hospital Satellites in Southeastern Michigan. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 491-A-492-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712227.

88T4964

Unschuld, Paul U. (Instit History Medicine U Munich, D-8000 2 Federal Republic Germany). Traditional Chinese Medicine: Some Historical and Epistemological Reflections. Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 12, 1023-1029.

† The impact of Western values on the interpretation of "traditional Chinese" medical concepts is assessed. Currently, these concepts are presented primarily through reference to secondary literature within European languages & advocated as alternatives to Western interpretations of illness. The cognitive aesthetics of European culture & Western science are thus argued to influence the selection of specific concepts from a heterogeneous pool of traditional Chinese health care systems. A comparison of traditional Chinese, European, & Western medicine suggests few-

Epidemic (Garden City, NY: Anchor Press/Doubleday, 1987). Nancy Krieger & Rose Appleman, The Politics of AIDS (Oakland, Calif: Frontline Pamphlets, 1986). & Cindy Patton, Sex and Germs. The Politics of AIDS (Boston: South End Press, 1985 (see listings in IRPS No. 42)) AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome) is entangled with a range of issues, eg, racism, poverty, homophobia, sexism, health care costs, censorship, & drug use. These three books explore these issues & offer greater awareness of the political & cultural aspects of AIDS from a variety of leftist perspectives. W. H. Stoddard

88T4948

Rimpela, Arja H. & Pukkala, Eero I. (Dept Public Health U Helsinki, Haartmaninkatu 3 SF-00290 Finland). Cancers of Affluence: Positive Social Class Gradient and Rising Incidence Trend in Some Cancer Forms, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 7, 601-606.

¶ The rising incidence of certain cancer forms among the Ucs & the well-educated was analyzed, based on data from the Finnish Cancer Registry ($n = 36,500$ Finns aged 30-69, diagnosed as having cancer in 1971-1975) comparing cases by SES, education, gender, site of cancer, & age. Cancers related to both high SES & high level of education in men were colon, prostate, testis, kidney, & melanoma of the skin; in women, the cancer types were colon, breast, & corpus uteri. It is suggested that the reasons for this relationship are a predominance of the major etiological factors in the Uc, an increase of those factors in Finnish society as a whole, & the adoption by Lcs of Uc habits & behavior that are etiological factors, causing a rising incidence trend, but a decreasing SC difference. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 35 References. Modified HA

88T4949

Roemer, Milton (Center Health Sciences School Public Health U California, Los Angeles 90024). Proletarianization of Physicians or Organization of Health Services?, International Journal of Health Services, 1986, 16, 3, 469-471

Reply, 473-477

¶ It is argued that John B. McKinlay's & Joan Arches's "Towards the Proletarianization of Physicians" (see SA 34.1/86Q3692) distorts Marxian concepts of class exploitation & reveals a gross misunderstanding of the dynamics of health service systems. Though much of what they write about the bureaucratization of medical practice is accurate, it cannot be attributed solely to the logic of capitalist expansion. Rather, it has been the demand of people for more effective health services, mediated primarily through political processes, that is responsible for the current social organization of health care. McKinlay & Arches ignore that the effect of this increased organization (ie, bureaucratization), particularly in the areas of economic support, service delivery, & social management, has been to make health care available on the basis of real need rather than personal wealth. It is argued that the MDs' unionization movement represents an attempt to oppose socially necessary regulation & protect MDs' rights to charge exorbitant fees; greater social controls are needed. In Historical Changes in Doctoring: A Reply to Milton Roemer, McKinlay & Arches (Cambridge Research Center, American Instt Research in Behavioral Sciences, 22 Hilliard St, Cambridge, Mass 02138) take extensive issue with each point raised by Roemer, & accuse him of viewing the current health care situation with a "romantic, disturbing naivete." His arguments suggest that he is not well enough acquainted with the everyday practice of medicine, & it is surprising that, being the editor of the New England Journal of Medicine, he would espouse such disparaging views of the US medical-industrial complex. The trend toward proletarianization of MDs is reaffirmed. K. Hyatt

88T4950

Ropers, Richard H. & Boyer, Richard (Dept Behavioral & Social Sciences Southern Utah State Coll, Cedar City 84720). Perceived Health Status among the New Urban Homeless, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 8, 669-678

¶ An attempt to establish an empirical database to assess the health & social conditions of the contemporary Ur homeless. Analysis of interviews conducted with 269 homeless men & women in Los Angeles County, Calif, reveal that the homeless were younger, better educated, & disproportionately nonwhite, compared to the profiles of the skidrow homeless of the past decades. Nearly 50% of men were veterans of military services, including 30% who were veterans of the Vietnam War. Respiratory infections & hypertension were the most prevalent health problems. Multiple regression was utilized to test the validity of a perceived health status index as measured among the homeless & to identify the correlates of health. Length of unemployment, education, gender, & number of nights spent in a shelter were the best predictors of poor health in this population. The problems confronting the homeless are concluded to be multivariate in nature. Future studies are urged to develop a variety of strategies to deal with the problem. Modified HA

88T4951

Santana, Sarah M. (Columbia U, New York NY 10027). The Cuban Health Care System: Responsiveness to Changing Population Needs and Demands, U World Development, 1987, 15, 1, Jan, 113-125

¶ The health of the Cuban population has improved dramatically since 1960. The health care system has rightfully taken a share of the credit. Health services have evolved in stages corresponding to changing health needs & population pressures. Presently a program of neighborhood family MDs is being implemented simultaneously with an increased emphasis on tertiary care & basic research. Some reasons for this latest reorganization of health services & the mechanisms that have made it possible are examined, & implications for health care services in other developing countries are considered. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 41 References. HA

88T4952

Sarker, Profulla C. & Bhuiyan, Abdul Q. (Dept Social Work U Rajshahi, Bangladesh). Socio-Economic Conditions of Lathyrism Affected Families in Rajshahi and Kushtia Districts of Bangladesh, International Journal of Rehabilitation Research/Internationale Zeitschrift fur Rehabilitationsforschung/Revue Internationale de Recherches de Readaptation, 1986, 9, 4, 386-388

¶ An investigation of the SE conditions associated with lathyrism—a non-contagious crippling disease of the legs—in Bangladesh. Questionnaires were administered to heads of household in a random sample of 404 families affected by lathyrism in 2 districts; responses were supplemented by field observations. It is concluded that lathyrism is essentially a nutritional problem, caused primarily by the consumption of kheshari (a cheap type of leguminous seed) as a staple food among families too poor to afford rice, wheat, or other food. 2 References. C. Waters

88T4953

Schaufelberger, Hans Jurg, Grichting, Christoph & Junker, Christoph (Instt Ausbildungs- und Examensforschung U Bern, CH-3010 Switzerland). Handlungsentscheidungen im Bereich von Gesundheit und Krankheit am Beispiel Arztbesuch—Konstruktion eines Ordnungsrahmens (Decision Making in the Field of Health Care and Sickness: Using the Example of Consulting a Doctor—Elaboration of a Model Framework), Schweizerische Zeitschrift fur Soziologie/Revue Suisse de sociologie, 1987, 13, 2, Oct, 173-192. (GER)

¶ The interdependence of sociopsychological & sociological factors in the decision-making process is examined empirically in the case of the decision to consult a MD (research data not provided). The variables studied are: perception of illness & threat of a particular disease, knowledge of the disease; social network; demographic factors, access to health care, & attitude toward health care. It is asserted that the dynamic process evoked in individuals by the realization of an altered state of health, & the process by which they decide what they want, are as important as, & influenced by, the social framework of the moment. 1 Figure, 32 References. Modified HA

88T4954

Schell, Lawrence M. (Dept Anthropology State U New York, Albany 12222). Community Health Assessment through Physical Anthropology: Auxological Epidemiology, U Human Organization, 1986, 45, 4, winter, 321-327.

¶ Child growth & development were used as an indicator of individual & group well-being by the English health reform advocates of the nineteenth century. While epidemiology developed using mortality & morbidity rates to assess community health, anthropologists continued the study of child growth, & it is suggested that their techniques can be adapted to study today's difficult problems in community health assessment. Although morbidity & mortality measures will continue to form the basis for evaluating community health, the study of child growth may add a component to community health assessments that has been missing. 51 References. HA

88T4955

Schwalbe, Michael L. & Staples, Clifford L. (Dept Sociology U California, Riverside 92521). Class Position, Work Experience, and Health, International Journal of Health Services, 1986, 16, 4, 583-602.

88T4973

Freeman, Hugh (Hope Hospital U Manchester, Salford England), Mental Health and Urban Policy, Cities, 1987, 4, 2, May, 106-111.
The scale & accelerating rate at which urbanization is occurring, particularly in the Third World, presents a monumental problem in the need to provide an acceptable physical & mental quality of life for the inhabitants of large Ur settlements. So far as physical health is concerned, its relationship to the structural environment is now reasonably well understood—water supply, sewage disposal, protection from weather, etc.—though unpleasant surprises such as Legionnaire's Disease may still emerge from time to time. But the complex & interrelated causes of psychological & social pathologies that seem increasingly to accompany mass urbanization have yet to be fully identified, at the same time, Ur policy needs to incorporate now what is already understood about them, if even greater human problems are to be avoided in the future. 1 Figure. 1A.

88T4974

Gubman, Gayle D. & Tessler, Richard C. (Division Mental Health & Hospitals, 13 Rosal Rd Princeton NJ 08540), The Impact of Mental Illness on Families: Concepts and Priorities, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 2, June, 226-245.
A discussion of the family impact of mental illness from an illness behavior perspective. A number of substantive & methodological issues that need to be addressed are identified, including definition & measurement of burden; diagnosis & course of illness; residence & kinship; SC, content, & coping, & the evaluation of social interventions designed to reduce burden & strengthen family supports. Family burden is discussed in terms of normative forces operating at the macro level. 67 References. Modified HA.

88T4975

Hak, Tony (Instit Preventieve en Sociale Psychiatrie Erasmus U, NL-3000 DR Rotterdam Netherlands), De constructie van een psychiatisch geval, een tekstsociologische analyse van een wachtrapport (The Construction of a Psychiatric Case, a Sociological Textual Analysis of a Duty Report), ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 5, Sept-Oct, 354-369. (DUT)
It is suggested that a psychiatric judgement of a patient is not one individual's interpretation of the patient's behavior, but is a reformulation of accounts given by the patient & others. Analysis of a report from a practice of emergency psychiatry shows how a psychiatric judgment is constructed by reformulating & transforming the accounts of the patient & others, & how these reformulations are put into a psychiatric context. Analysis of this process suggests that while Harold Garfinkel's (Studies in Ethnomethodology, Prentice-Hall, 1967) thesis that a literal description of sociological evidence is impossible applies to behavior, it does not apply to textual processes. Since many sociological processes have a textual character, much sociological evidence can be described literally. 2 Figures, 1 Appendix, 8 References. Modified HA.

88T4976

Harpending, Henry C. & Sobus, Jay (Dept Anthropology Pennsylvania State U, University Park 16802), Sociopathy as an Adaptation, Ethology and Sociobiology, 1987, 8, 3(supplement), 63S-72S.
Sociopathy in Ms & hysteria (Briquet's syndrome) in Fs very closely fit predictions from a model of characteristics of cheaters or nonreciprocators in a complex social system. Such a model is discussed & characteristics of sociopaths & hysterics are described. Since a successful cheating adaptation should require, above all else, concealment of the trait, recognition & diagnosis of these traits in humans will always be difficult & ambiguous at the level of language & interpersonal interaction. 1 Figure, 29 References. HA.

88T4977

Hoffman, Harry (Southern Illinois U, Carbondale 62901), Rationalization of Insanity: An Analysis of the Guilty but Mentally Ill Provision in Illinois, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 3, Sept, 752-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712827.

88T4978

Hooks, Paul C. & Levin, Jeffrey S. (Dept Preventive Medicine & Community Health U Texas Medical Branch, Galveston 77550), The Social Identity of the Chronic Schizophrenic, The International Journal of Social Psychiatry, 1986, 32, 4, winter, 48-57.

Using ethnographic research methods to investigate a sample of institutionalized M schizophrenics (N = 40, aged 16-63), an emic typology of patient social identities was derived. Interview & observational data yielded 3 general status classes comprising 13 associated identities: killer, fighter, assaultive person, fag, rapist, doper, drunk, victim, con, nut, weirdo, snitch, & disoriented. An individual's social identity varied depending on his current setting within the hospital (official, private, patient-staff interaction, or outside). This emic-derived typology is contrasted with the etic typologies that dominate the literature (eg, those of Erving Goffman, R. Salisbury, & J. Henry), & the importance of ethnographic study in social psychiatry is highlighted. 1 Table, 24 References. Modified HA.

88T4979

Kashani, Javad H., Beck, Niels C., Hooper, Edwin W., Fallahi, Carolyn, Corcoran, Colleen M., McAllister, Jeanne A., Rosenberg, Tomas K. & Reid, John C. (Dept Psychiatry U Missouri, Columbia 65201), Psychiatric Disorders in a Community Sample of Adolescents, The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1987, 144, 5, May, 584-589.

The prevalence of psychiatric disorders diagnosed according to DSM-III in adolescents in the general population is not known, but to address this issue, structured interviews & other instruments were used to collect data from a community sample of 150 adolescents aged 14-16, of whom 28 (18.7%) were identified as having a psychiatric disorder. These 28 adolescents viewed their parents as less caring, had lower self-esteem, & resolved their conflicts through verbal aggression & physical violence more often than did the other Ss. Recommendations are made regarding the use of structured interviews in future research. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 23 References. Modified HA.

88T4980

Kirsner, Douglas (School Humanities Deakin U, Victoria 3217 Australia), The Other Psychoanalysis, Psychoanalysis and Contemporary Thought, 1986, 9, 2, 299-330.

Two critiques of psychoanalysis, the Marxist & the Lacanian, are examined. Both consider the social dimension to be an integral part of the critical foundations of psychoanalysis, a part that psychoanalysis itself has repressed. A number of recent works (eg, books by Russell Jacoby, Stuart Schneiderman, & François Roustang) are discussed that take Sigmund Freud's decentering of the S to be central to analytic understanding, & that view the society in which psychoanalysis exists, together with the structure of the analytic movement itself, as the basis of psychoanalytic theory & organization. Modified AA.

88T4981

Laor, Nathaniel & Agassi, Joseph (Medical Center Veterans Administration, West Spring St West Haven CT 06516), The Scientific Status of Psychoanalysis: Lacan contra Freud, Psychoanalysis and Contemporary Thought, 1986, 9, 3, 465-492.

Jacques Lacan's view of psychoanalysis has passed through two stages: an earlier one in which he regarded it as scientific, & a later one in which he regarded it as unscientific but as a valuable praxis. Lacan maintains that the subject matter of psychoanalysis is the Freudian unconscious, which, not being an object but a structure, cannot be the object of a science in the traditional sense; rather, psychoanalysis is a theory that organizes experiences & that cannot & need not be tested. The desire for truth, in his view, is the key characteristic of science, in psychoanalysis, the psychoanalyst's desire for truth as manifested in the psychoanalytic situation is crucial. Lacan sees the Oedipal situation as reflected in the resulting psychoanalytic situation, at the same time, Lacan's own interpretation of Freud establishes a relation between the two that also shares in this structure. Ultimately, this leads to an impasse in which psychoanalysis cannot be established as scientific, but rather is a practical rhetoric whose ultimate significance is ethical. 45 References. W. H. Stoddard.

88T4982

McKinlay, John B., McKinlay, Sonja M. & Brambilla, Donald (American Instit Research, 1100 Massachusetts Ave Cambridge MA 02138), The Relative Contributions of Endocrine Changes and Social Circumstances to Depression in Mid-Aged Women, The Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 4, Dec, 345-363.

A review of the literature on the prevalence, costs, & reasons for depression among middle-aged women reveals two predominant schools of thought with profoundly different implications for research & clinical er differences than reported in Western secondary literature. A fundamental dividing line may simply be the handling of cognitive disagreements & the preponderance of patterned knowledge of Chinese medicine & culture. 17 References. Modified HA

88T4965

Velle, Karel (Seminarie Nieuwste Geschiedenis Rijks U Gent, B-9000 Belgium), Die syfiliskwestie in België in de 19de en het begin van de 20ste eeuw (Syphilis in Belgium in the Nineteenth and Early Twentieth Centuries). ♦ Tijdschrift voor Sociale Wetenschappen, 1987, 32, 4, Oct-Dec, 331-363. (DUT)

¶ A theme in the social history of medicine is investigated: reactions to the "peril" of venereal disease, especially syphilis, in Belgium from the late nineteenth century onward. The campaigns for hygienic & moral prophylaxis are described, using as source materials medical books & journals, & also religious & moralist publications. In conclusion, the collective reaction & medical-moral discourse of that era are compared to present-day reactions to the threat of sexually transmitted disease, specifically, acquired immune deficiency syndrome. 117 References. HA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T4966

Ward, Russell A. (Dept Sociology State U New York, Albany 12222), HMO Satisfaction and Understanding among Recent Medicare Enrollees, U Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 4, Dec, 401-412

¶ Health maintenance organization (HMO) enrollment is growing substantially, with particular interest in stimulating Medicare enrollment. Here, the outcomes of this relatively novel form of health care for older persons is examined, based on a mailed questionnaire survey of 124 recent enrollees in HMO Medicare coverage, conducted as a follow-up to a study of their enrollment decision (Ward, Russell A., & Bryant, Elizabeth, "A Case Study of HMO Medicare Enrollment," The Gerontologist, 1986, 26, 655-662). Satisfaction with various dimensions of care & coverage is high, reflecting fulfillment of high expectations held at enrollment. Perceived understanding of HMO coverage & procedures is the best predictor of satisfaction. Informal ties appear to play an important role in providing orientation to the HMO model of care & coverage, echoing their role in the enrollment decision itself. The importance of understanding & lay referral is highlighted from the standpoint of a consumerist orientation to health care. 3 Tables, 25 References. HA

88T4967

Weddle, Dian O. (U Illinois, Chicago 60680), The Medicare Hospice

Benefit: Issues Influencing Utilization, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 2, Aug, 492-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8712049.

88T4968

Wilkinson, Simon R. (Psykiatrisk Poliklinikk Follo, Jernbanveien 4 1400 Ski Norway), "Pretend Illness": An Analysis of One Phase in the Development of Illness Behavior. ♦ Family Systems Medicine, 1986, 4, 4, winter, 376-384.

¶ Examined are some of the potential origins of somatoform illness behavior, used to convey discomforts of various kinds, in the decision making rules applied to children's illness behavior. The ways in which these rules become part of the children's realities highlight the communicative process occurring between people. The communicative competences required for interpreting the content of these interactions, & decision making, are analyzed. Diminished competences in particular areas are interpreted as giving rise to elements of a somatoform relationship which is most likely to arise in relatively closed family systems. 1 Figure. 24 References. HA

88T4969

Zimand, Elana & Wood, Beatrice (c/o Wood-Philadelphia Child Guidance Clinic, 2 Children's Center 34th St/Civic Center Blvd PA 19104), Implications of Contrasting Patterns of Divorce in Families of Children with Gastrointestinal Disorders, ♦ Family Systems Medicine, 1986, 4, 4, winter, 385-397

¶ A preliminary study is reported, showing differential divorce rates among families with a child having recurrent abdominal pain syndrome (N = 60), Crohn's disease (N = 59), or ulcerative colitis (n = 54), using 1983/84 hospital records & information from the patients' MDs & parents, & from the division nurse. Parents of Crohn's disease patients had a 6.8% divorce rate, 33% of that of parents in the other 2 disease groups both of which had normative divorce rates (20%). Marital status, age, race, religion, & SES were ruled out as confounding variables. The psychosomatic pattern of family functioning is proposed as an explanatory model for the aberrantly low divorce rates in parents of Crohn's disease patients. While the implication has been that this pattern of family functioning contributes to, &/or maintains, the child's disorder, a rationale is drawn for how this pattern may emerge from having a chronically ill child. An alternative & speculative model is proposed whereby a common genetic predisposition for inflammatory bowel disease may produce either Crohn's disease or ulcerative colitis in a genetically vulnerable child, according to the type of family configuration present. 3 Tables. 26 References. HA

46 social psychiatry (mental health)

88T4970

Detre, Thomas (Dept Health Sciences U Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh 15213), The Future of Psychiatry, U The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1987, 144, 5, May, 621-625

¶ A review of the vicissitudes of psychiatry's history over the past fifty years, focusing on the need for the profession to abandon false boundaries between mind & brain & to make a commitment to the scientific validation of prevailing theories of the etiology of psychiatric disorders. The separation of psychiatry & neurology is no longer justified; instead, a carefully conceived new career path leading to specialization in clinical neuroscience should be created & psychiatric training programs be restructured to focus on the critical examination of problem solving & validation methods. 14 References. HA

88T4971

Domisse, John (3706 Winchester Dr, Portsmouth VA 23707-4332), The State of Psychiatry in South Africa Today, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 9, 749-757. Comments, 758-760, Rejoinder, 760-761.

A discussion of the impact of the ideas & philosophies of the South African government's policy of apartheid on black & white individuals' personality development, & the overall result this sociopolitical climate has on the profession of psychiatry. Inpatient psychiatric facilities for blacks have shocked the world, & outpatient services for blacks are sparse. Few trained black psychiatrists are available, compounding the racial problem. The World Health Organization has taken a vocal position opposing the conditions in South Africa, however, the World Psychiatric Association which is predominately Western, has yet to speak out on the issue. In Comments, S. D. Edwards (Dept of Psychology, U of Zululand, South Africa) views this discussion as a provocative & emotive appeal, which implies that problems in South African psychiatry are basically perpetuated by the traditional apartheid system, but which fails to put forward a coherent & consistent analysis of the relationship between apartheid & psychiatry. In Rejoinder, Domisse does not agree with the criticism & contends that his analysis of South African psychiatry is quite comprehensive. F. Rasmussen

88T4972

Fishbain, David A., Fletcher, James R., Aldrich, Timothy E. & Davis, Joseph H. (U Miami Comprehensive Pain & Rehabilitation Center, South Shore Hospital 600 Alton Rd Miami Beach FL 33139), Relationship between Russian Roulette Deaths and Risk-Taking Behavior: A Controlled Study, U The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1987, 144, 5, May, 563-567

¶ A review of medical examiner records in Dade County, Fla, for 1957-1985 yielded data on 19 Ms & 1 F who died playing Russian roulette. The Ms differed significantly from 95 M suicide victims who died of gunshot wounds to the head on several variables including age, race, ethnicity, religion, citizenship, marital status, living situation, health, & the likelihood of the death being witnessed. The Russian roulette victims were significantly less likely to die in the bedroom, die in the morning, leave a suicide note, & be depressed, but they were significantly more likely to have alcohol or drugs in their body fluids & to have a previous history of drug & alcohol abuse. 1 Table, 23 References. HA

88T4991

Thompson, James W. & Blaine, Jack D. (National Instit Mental Health, Room 18C-14 5600 Fishers Ln Rockville MD 20857), Use of ECT in the United States in 1975 and 1980, Am J Psychiatry, 1987, 144, 5, May, 557-562

¶ An examination of data from the National Instit of Mental Health regarding the use of ECT (electroconvulsive therapy) in the US in 1975 & 1980. Patients treated with ECT in 1980 (N = 33,384) represent 2.4% of all patients hospitalized in psychiatric facilities. The use of ECT decreased by 46% between 1975 & 1980, only public general hospitals did not decrease their use of this therapy. Patients with affective disorders received 69.8% of the ECT given, & patients with schizophrenia received 16.6%. Although more women than men received ECT, diagnosis & age were more important factors than sex. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 23 References.

88T4992

—, Social Origins of Distress and Disease: Depression, Neurasthenia, and Pain in Modern China, Current Anthropology, 1986, 27, 5, Dec, 499-504.

¶ A review of a book by Arthur Kleinman, Social Origins of Distress and Disease (New Haven: Yale U Press, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No. 42]). In Author's Precis, Arthur Kleinman describes the work as a report of ethnographic & psychiatric research in China, focusing on the use of the diagnostic category of neurasthenia. The concept of somatization has particular relevance to this syndrome, which is illustrated by clinical data on 100 patients & case studies of 13 patients. An interpretation based on an anthropological vision of pathogenesis & epidemiology is outlined. In Reviews, Joan M. Anderson (School of Nursing, U of British Columbia, Vancouver) sees Kleinman's central point as the relation of illness labels to cultural themes & psychocultural processes. While aware that his approach could be seen as medicalization, he also offers examples of medicalization's having benefits for patients. Kaja Finkler (Dept of Anthropology, U of North Carolina, Chapel Hill) examines Kleinman's treatment of the question of universalist vs cultural relativist accounts of sickness. Kleinman points to the sociopolitical construction of diagnostic categories, but also argues that social customs work to foster real sickness, thus arguing against purely intrapsychic theories of depression. Ronald J. Frankenberg (Center for Medical Social Anthropology, U of Keele, Staffordshire, England) sees Kleinman's work as significant but flawed by failure to integrate his anthropological & psychiatric roles. Allan Young (Dept of Anthropology, Case Western Reserve U, Cleveland, Ohio) finds Kleinman's concept of somatization a useful means of overcoming Western separation of body from emotion in understanding the use of the category of neurasthenia in China. In Reply, Kleinman comments on several issues raised by these reviews, it is argued that Frankenberg's in particular largely misses the point of the book. 26 References. W. H. Stoddard

79 substance use/abuse & compulsive behaviors (drug abuse, addiction, alcoholism, gambling, eating disorders, etc.)

88T4993

Caetano, Raul (Alcohol Research Group, Francisco, 1816 Scenic Ave Berkeley CA 94709), Acculturation, Drinking and Social Settings among US Hispanics, Drug and Alcohol Dependence, 1987, 19, 3, May, 215-226

¶ Interview data from 1,453 Hispanic households in the 48 US states are analyzed to assess the acculturation of Hispanics to US society in relation to drinking. Results confirm the hypothesis that Hispanics who are more acculturated drink more frequently in a variety of social settings than less acculturated Hispanics. The effect of acculturation is shown to be independent of income & work status. 3 Tables, 7 References. Modified HA

88T4994

Edwards, Harry (U California, Berkeley 94720), Sport's Tragic Drug Connection: Where Do We Go from Here?, Journal of Sport and Social Issues, 1986, 10, 2, summer-fall, 1-5.

¶ A discussion of the drug abuse problem in US sports, addressing issues that go beyond personalities, specific circumstances, & precipitating actions associated with recent, highly publicized drug-related deaths. US pharmacopia is analyzed, & its association with the drive within sports for the winning edge is established. Steps toward resolving the drug abuse problem in sports that incorporate both prevention & treatment measures are proposed. The problem in sports is inextricably intertwined with the drug abuse problem in society & must be dealt with in this context. F. Rasmussen

88T4995

Eisenbach-Stangl, Irmgard (Ludwig Boltzmann-Institut Suchtforschung, Mackgasse 7-9 A-1237 Vienna Austria), Inebriety and Rationality: The Modernization of State Controls of Alcohol-Related Problems in Austria, Contemporary Drug Problems, 1987, 14, 1, spring, 79-112.

¶ Changes in the handling of alcohol-related problems in Austria are studied by examining criminal laws & regulations concerning commitment to psychiatric hospitals between 1918 & 1984. A dramatic extension of state control over alcohol-related problems is noted in criminal law, primarily through the criminalization of drunk driving, & in psychiatry, through the development of a special system of treatment for alcoholics. However, at the same time that legal punishments were made more severe, compulsory psychiatric treatment was eliminated. These different developments are seen as having a common root: the emphasis on individual avoidance of alcohol-related problems & on the exercise of self-control. It is suggested that these alterations in state control are accompanied by changes in drinking habits, & that the significance of alcohol as a drug is decreasing. The involvement of special interest groups in the formulation of alcohol policy is discussed. 5 Figures, 38 References. AA Tr & Modified by J. Anderson

88T4996

Elek, Zsuzsanna (Szociológiai Tanvész, Dimitrov tér 8 Budapest 1093 Hungary), Legislative Arrangements Relevant to Alcohol Treatment in Hungary, Contemporary Drug Problems, 1987, 14, 1, spring, 113-123

¶ In Hungary, care & treatment of alcoholics takes place almost exclusively within the framework of the public health system. Although health services are free, there is no choice with regard to the MD in charge or the type of treatment. The problems of the public health system are multiplied in the case of treatment for alcoholics, one of the most neglected fields of Hungarian medicine. Various types of alcohol treatment are described, including both voluntary & obligatory enrollment. The introduction of legal regulation with regard to treatment is examined, along with results of sociological research on social differences between patients undergoing different types of treatment. 5 References. Modified AA

88T4997

Ettorre, Betsy (Addiction Research Unit Instit Psychiatry, De Crespigny Park London SE5 8AF England), Drug Problems and the Voluntary Sector of Care in the U.K.: Identifying Key Issues, British Journal of Addiction, 1987, 82, 5, May, 469-476.

¶ A discussion of the Drug Agencies Information Gathering Exercise (DAIGE) study in GB, outlining the objectives of the research & reviewing information generated from voluntary agencies contacted while conducting the fieldwork. Key issues in the development of treatment & rehabilitation policy in GB are addressed, & problems confronting the voluntary drug agencies are described. It is discussed whether the dichotomy between treatment & rehabilitation is linked with old social divisions between professionalism & charity, implications of this conflict are viewed in light of the DAIGE experience. 50 References. Modified HA

88T4998

Ghodsian, M. & Power, C. (National Children's Bureau, 8 Wakley St London EC1V 7QE England), Alcohol Consumption between the Ages of 16 and 23 in Britain: A Longitudinal Study, British Journal practice The estrogen-deficiency perspective holds that depression is associated with or triggered by endocrine changes in women around age 50 (menopause). The social-circumstances perspective holds that depression is related to social circumstances encountered frequently by women aged 40-60. Mailed questionnaire or telephone interview data from a randomly selected cohort of 2,500 menopausal women in Mass show that: (1) depression is associated with a surgical menopause & may even be a cause rather than a consequence of this surgery for this atypical group of women, (2) depression is not associated with the natural changes from pre- to immediately postmenopause; & (3) the most marked increases in depression are associated with multiple causes of worry & multiple roles among currently married women (including paid work, adolescent children, ailing husbands, & aging parents or parents-in-law). Some implications of these findings are discussed in the context of a rapidly aging population. 5 Tables, 3 Figures, 107 References. Modified HA

88T4983

Melton, Gary B. (Law/Psychology Program U Nebraska, Lincoln 68588-0308), Law and Random Events: The State of Child Mental Health Policy, International Journal of Law and Psychiatry, 1987, 10, 2, 81-90

¶ Despite the critical significance of child & family policy, children's law, including child mental health policy, has been remarkable for a lack of planning & reliability. Randomness in child mental health policy results from vague, indeterminate standards, avoidance of resolution of value conflicts, diffusion of systemic boundaries, & treatment of fictional assumptions as facts. Careful interdisciplinary work is needed if child mental health policy is to be effective & just. 39 References. AA

88T4984

Meštrović, Stjepan G. (Dept Sociology Lander Coll, Greenwood SC 29646), Magic and Psychiatric Commitment in India, International Journal of Law and Psychiatry, 1986, 9, 4, 431-449

¶ A qualitative portrait of Indian psychiatric commitment & of temple healing is offered, based on participant observation research conducted at a state psychiatric hospital & at a temple used for religious healing of the mentally ill. Analysis reveals that: (1) Indians still cling to the demonological theory of the causation of mental illness in the context of an outdated lunacy law; (2) Indian psychiatrists apparently try to work within the system of Hindu superstitions; & (3) the Western, so-called "dangerousness standard" seems to be irrelevant in Indian psychiatric commitments. A theoretical formulation of the data is suggested with reference to writings of Max Weber, Sigmund Freud, & Emile Durkheim on the social theory of magic. In this formulation, magic evolves out of & in relation to religious symbolism, but is essentially the obverse of religion. It is suggested that a culture's degree of magical beliefs may serve as an index of stress, which could be tested using systematic data. Modified AA

88T4985

Namysłowska, Irena (Dept Psychiatry Academy Medicine, Nowowiejska 27 Warsaw PL-00-665 Poland), Social and Emotional Adaptation of the Families of Schizophrenic Patients, ♦ Family Systems Medicine, 1986, 4, 4, winter, 398-407.

¶ A survey of Polish families (N = 152) with a schizophrenic member is reported. The survey instrument had been standardized on a probability sample of Polish families (N = 1,832), so that the effect on family life of having a schizophrenic member could be assessed along a number of dimensions. An unexpected finding is that information about the disease negatively correlates with adaptation to it. 7 Tables, 25 References. HA

88T4986

Pecar, Janez, Poboljševanje vedenja ali (in) zdravljenje (The Improvement of Behavior or (and) Treatment), ♦ Anthropos, Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1987, 1-2, 266-280. (SLO)

¶ In this century, social control is strongly associated with the psychiatric treatment of deviant behavior, a field that has become linked to jurisprudence. Psychiatry & the supervision of criminals have a common concern with deviants. In recent decades psychiatry has also come to be employed with dissidents—a tendency that raises the question of whether the individual, the environment, or the society needs correction. The public has begun to fear psychiatry that contains ideological elements. 50 References. Modified HA

88T4987

Price, John S. & Sloman, Leon (Dept Psychiatry Milton Key, Hospital, Standing Way Eaglestone MK6 5AZ England), Depression as Yielding Behavior: An Animal Model Based on Schjelderup-Ebbe Pecking Order, Ethology and Sociobiology, 1987, 8, 3(supplement), 85S-98S.

¶ An evolutionary model of depressive mood change based on social competition is proposed which postulates that depression evolved as the yielding component, or yielding subroutine (YS), of ritual agonistic behavior (RAB). Since RAB is ubiquitous among present-day vertebrates, it likely to have been an early vertebrate behavioral adaptation; & neurochemical structures & processes that underlie yielding behavior existing species could well be similar both to each other & to the structures & processes underlying at least some forms of human depressive states. Here, T. Schjelderup-Ebbe's bird model ("Social Behaviour Birds" in Handbook of Social Psychology, Murchison, C. [Ed], Worcester, Mass: Clark U Press, 1935) is used to generate a mathematical model that describes the mutual pecking of two birds in both symmetrical asymmetrical relationships. The YS/RAB is triggered when receipt pecks in one bird reaches a predetermined level, & it takes the form of a set of instructions that alters the terms of the mutual pecking equation in such a way that extreme values are avoided; thus, ritualization of agonistic behavior is maintained. Face validity for the model is provided by the occurrence of depressive behavior in birds undergoing a YS/RAB. Structural validity is provided by the correspondence of the instructions for the YS/RAB with the clinical features of the depressive state in humans. The model predicts that in depressive states, the expression of hierarchy aggression is reduced, & down-hierarchy aggression may increase. 39 References. HA

88T4988

Prins, Herschel (1 Home Close Rd, Houghton on the Hill Leicester LE7 9GT England), Literature Review: Understanding and Managing Insanity: Some Glimpses into Historical Fact and Fiction, The British Journal of Social Work, 1987, 17, 1, Feb, 91-98

